PSI's entire theory in this case revolves around Honeywell's practices in the [**33] circuit-board repair market. As stated throughout this opinion, PSI contends that Honeywell's domination of the market for Honeywell-brand components has foreclosed PSI from the repair market for Honeywell circuit boards. Nowhere does PSI allege that Honeywell willfully sought to acquire monopoly power in the market for industrial control equipment, a market in which PSI does not compete and does not seek to enter. Nor does PSI contend that Honeywell's parts-restrictive policy has allowed Honeywell to achieve and maintain monopoly power in the market for industrial control equipment. See 3 PHILLIP AREEDA & DONALD F. TURNER, ANTITRUST LAW P 626c (1978) ("Exclusionary' behavior should be taken to mean conduct other than competition on the merits, or other than restraints reasonably 'necessary' to competition on the merits, that reasonably appears capable of making a significant contribution to creating or maintaining monopoly power.") (emphasis added). If anything, a restrictive service policy would encourage competition in the primary equipment market. PSI, therefore, cannot establish that Honeywell's practices in the parts and services markets--not relevant markets in this [**34] dispute--have contributed to Honeywell's power in the market for industrial control equipment. Therefore, PSI fails the second part, as well as the first part, of the § 2 analysis.

[***21] V. CONCLUSION

We conclude that because Honeywell's parts-restrictive policy has been consistently maintained and generally known, and because Honeywell has otherwise been forthcoming about its pricing structure and service policies, the primary equipment market in this case comprises the relevant market for purposes of both §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Accordingly, relying on these grounds, since PSI has not alleged or shown that Honeywell has market power in the relevant (primary equipment) market, we AFFIRM the judgment of the district court.

---

End of Document

Exxon Corp. v. Superior Court

Court of Appeal of California, Sixth Appellate District

January 14, 1997, Decided

No. H015001.

Reporter

51 Cal. App. 4th 1672 *; 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 195 **; 1997 Cal. App. LEXIS 22 ***; 97 Cal. Daily Op. Service 373; 97 Daily Journal DAR 558; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,677

EXXON CORPORATION, Petitioner, v. THE SUPERIOR COURT OF SANTA CLARA COUNTY, Respondent; SHIRLEY CHENG KOUTNEY et al., Real Parties in Interest.

Subsequent History: [***1] As Modified on Denial of Rehearing of February 13, 1997, Reported at: 1997 Cal. App. LEXIS 106. Review Denied May 14, 1997.

Prior History: Santa Clara County Super. Ct. No. CV 735811. Hon. Conrad L. Rushing, Judge.

Disposition: Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue as prayed, directing the respondent court to vacate its order denying summary adjudication to Exxon, and to make new and different orders granting the motions for summary adjudication as to the following claims: second cause of action (Cartwright Act--vertical restraint); third cause of action (Cartwright Act--monopolization); sixth and seventh causes of action (fraud and negligent misrepresentation--price), including any claims of gasoline price overcharging; those parts of the fourth and eleventh causes of actions alleging tortious interference with economic opportunity and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing; and those parts of the tenth cause of action for breach of contract concerning any claims arising out of the discontinuation of acceptance of the Exxon credit card and arising out of oral promises to remodel stations. Costs to petitioner.

Core Terms

---

gasoline, relevant market, antitrust, summary adjudication, vertical, trial court, cause of action, franchisees, monopoly, retail, plaintiffs', brand, cases, matter of law, consumers, dealers, jobbers, repair, market power, anticompetitive, Theatres, triable, restraint of trade, summary judgment, franchise, parties, question of fact, credit card, Cartwright Act, interchangeable

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Materiality of Facts

The trial court must grant summary adjudication where the moving party establishes the right to the entry of judgment as a matter of law. Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 437c\(c\). Summary judgment is mandatory where no triable issues exist as to a material fact, and if the documentation submitted on the motion entitles the moving party to judgment as a matter of law. Code Civ. Proc. § 437c\(c\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN2 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

When defendants seek summary judgment, their supporting documentation must either establish a complete defense to the plaintiff's action or demonstrate an absence of an essential element of the plaintiff's case. When defendants establish the foregoing, and the plaintiff's opposing documentation does not show either a triable issue of fact with respect to the defense or that an essential element exists, summary judgment should be granted. These general principles also apply to an appellate court's review of a summary judgment ruling, which is conducted de novo.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Partial Summary Judgment

HN3 Summary Judgment, Partial Summary Judgment

For summary judgment to be granted, the moving party must show that under no possible hypothesis within the reasonable purview of the allegations of the complaint is there a material question of fact which requires examination by trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Liquefied Natural Gas

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN4 Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade covered by Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, are of two types, horizontal or vertical. Horizontal combinations are cartels or agreements among competitors which restrain competition among enterprises at the same level of distribution. They are ordinarily illegal per se. Vertical restraints are imposed by persons or firms further up the chain of distribution of a specific product (or in rare cases, further down the chain) than the enterprise restrained. Vertical non-price restraints are tested under the rule of reason; that is, the plaintiff must prove that the restraint had an anticompetitive effect in the relevant market in order to prevail.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

An antitrust plaintiff attacking vertical restraints cannot make out a case unless the plaintiff can show some anticompetitive effect in the larger, interbrand market. The prevailing standard is the "rule-of-reason" which measures whether the anticompetitive aspect of a vertical restraint outweighs its procompetitive effects. And it is plaintiff's burden to make the required showing of a substantially adverse effect on competition in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN6 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Vertical restraints are permissible unless a harmful effect on interbrand competition and an anticompetitive purpose can be shown.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

A supplier cannot have a monopoly, normally, in its own product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN8 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Monopoly of a single brand is not an antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN9 [] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The need to prove market power is a threshold consideration in an antitrust case and is the sine qua non of recovery.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN10 [] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

To meet his initial burden in establishing that a practice is an unreasonable restraint of trade, a plaintiff must show that the activity is the type that restrains trade and that the restraint is likely to be of significant magnitude. Ordinarily, a plaintiff to do this must delineate a relevant market and show that the defendant plays enough of a role in that market to impair competition significantly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN11 [] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The relevant market is determined by considering commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes. Or, in other words, the relevant market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purpose for which they are produced.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN12 [] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

The issue of fact becomes one "of law" and loses its "triable" character if the undisputed facts leave no room for a reasonable difference of opinion.

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil & Petroleum Products > Gasoline Fuels > Gasoline Dealers & Distributors

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN13 [] Gasoline Fuels, Gasoline Dealers & Distributors

A court is not bound by an expert opinion that is speculative or conjectural or that is based on an incorrect legal theory.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Law > Conveyances > Franchises

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

HN14 [blue icon] Conveyances, Franchises

A franchisor's ability to "coerce" its franchisee does not show market power and does not invoke antitrust concerns.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Interference With Business Relations

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Causes of Action, Interference With Business Relations

In actions for interference with prospective economic advantage, as applied to existing contracts, a plaintiff must show that interference was wrongful by some measure beyond the interference itself.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Breach of Contract

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Types of Contracts, Covenants

An implied covenant cannot create an obligation inconsistent with an express term of the agreement.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Summary*CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS SUMMARY

Franchisee gasoline service station dealers brought an action against the franchisor, alleging that defendant compelled plaintiffs to buy all their gasoline from defendant at a price considerably higher than the "rack price" at which defendant sold the gasoline to independent jobbers, and alleging causes of action under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.), and for monopolization, price overcharging, tortious interference with business relationship, and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The trial court denied defendant's motion for summary adjudication that the relevant market was the motor fuel market (all gasoline) and not the wholesale market for defendant's brand fuel. The trial court ruled the issue was a question of fact. (Superior Court of Santa Clara County, No. CV 735811, Conrad Lee Rushing, Judge.)

The Court of Appeal ordered issuance of a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order denying summary adjudication to defendant, and to make new and different orders granting the motions as to specified causes of action. The court held that in antitrust actions under the Cartwright Act, the need to prove market power is a threshold consideration and is the sine qua non of recovery. The court held that the relevant market was a question of law and was the market of all gasoline. In the market of all gasoline, defendant's market share was less than 10 percent, which was not enough to demonstrate a restraint of trade. In a franchise relationship, the franchisee presumably accepts the burdens of the arrangement to reap some benefits, e.g., although plaintiffs had to buy their gas from defendant at its wholesale to dealer price rather than its rack price, they got in return defendant's institutional advertising, marketing support, and related benefits, as well as no transportation costs. The court further held that plaintiffs failed to raise a triable issue that the restrictions in their lease agreement prohibiting the use of defendant's tanks, lines, and equipment for the sale of any product other than defendant's brand of gasoline was an illegal tying arrangement. Defendant's lack of market power precluded plaintiffs from proving power in the tying product (here, service station sites). Furthermore, a franchisor's ability to "coerce" its franchisee does not show market power and does not invoke antitrust concerns. (Opinion by Wunderlich, J., with Elia, J., concurring. Dissenting opinion by Premo, Acting P. J.)

Headnotes

CA(1) [blue download icon] (1)

Summary Judgment § 3—Propriety—By Defendant.

--The trial court must grant summary adjudication where the moving party establishes the right to the entry of judgment as a matter of law (Code Civ. Proc., § 437c, subd. \(c\)). Summary judgment is mandatory where no triable issues exist as to a material fact, and if the documentation submitted on the motion entitles the moving party to judgment as a matter of law. When defendant seeks summary judgment, the supporting documentation must either establish a complete defense to the plaintiff's action or demonstrate an absence of an essential element of the plaintiff's case. When defendant establishes the foregoing, and the plaintiff's opposing documentation does not show either a triable issue of fact with respect to the defense or that an essential element exists, summary judgment should be granted. These general principles also apply to an appellate court's review of a summary judgment ruling, which is conducted de novo. For summary judgment to be granted, the moving party must show that under no possible hypothesis within the reasonable purview of the allegations of the complaint is there a material question of fact which requires examination by trial.

CA(2) [blue download icon] (2)

Mandamus and Prohibition § 40—Mandamus—To Courts—Summary Adjudication of Some Issues.

--Pretrial mandamus review of the denial of summary adjudication of some but not all issues in an antitrust action was appropriate, where the issues ruled on by the trial court contained the heart of plaintiffs' case and the trial might well be simplified if it was found that the trial court erred. In addition, numerous other cases in the state raised the same or similar issues.

CA(3) [blue download icon] (3)

Monopolies and Restraint of Trade § 7—Under Cartwright Act—Agreements in Restraint of Trade.

--The Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.), as was the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.), was enacted to promote free market competition and to prevent conspiracies or agreements in restraint or monopolization of trade. Contracts, combinations, and conspiracies in restraint of trade are of two types, horizontal or vertical. Horizontal combinations are cartels or agreements among competitors that restrain competition among enterprises at the same level of distribution. They are ordinarily illegal per se. Vertical restraints are imposed by persons or firms further up the chain of distribution of a specific product (or in rare cases, further down the chain) than the enterprise restrained. Vertical nonprice restraints are tested under the rule of reason; that is, the plaintiff must prove that the restraint had an anticompetitive effect in the relevant market in order to prevail. Vertical restraints are permissible unless a harmful effect on interbrand competition and an anticompetitive purpose is shown. Normally, a supplier cannot have a monopoly in its own product.

CA(4) [ ] (4)

Monopolies and Restraint of Trade § 7—Under Cartwright Act—Agreements in Restraint of Trade—Proof.

--In antitrust actions under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.), the need to prove market power is a threshold consideration and is the sine qua non of recovery. To meet this initial burden in establishing that the practice is an unreasonable restraint of trade, plaintiff must show that the activity is the type that restrains trade and that the restraint is likely to be of significant magnitude. Ordinarily, a plaintiff to do this must delineate a relevant market and show that the defendant plays enough of a role in that market to impair competition significantly.

CA(5a) [ ] (5a) CA(5b) [ ] (5b)

Monopolies and Restraint of Trade § 7—Under Cartwright Act—Agreements in Restraint of Trade—Gasoline Franchisor's Requirement That Franchisees Buy From Franchisor at Higher Price Than Paid by Jobbers—Relevant Market.

--In an antitrust action under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.) by franchisee gasoline service station dealers against the franchisor, alleging that defendant compelled plaintiffs to buy all their gasoline from defendant at a price considerably higher than the "rack price" at which defendant sold the gasoline to independent jobbers, the trial court incorrectly ruled that whether the relevant market was the motor fuel market (all gasoline), as defendant asserted, or only the wholesale market for defendant's brand fuel, was a question of fact, and erred in denying defendant's motion for summary adjudication. The relevant market was a question of law and was the market of all gasoline. An issue of fact becomes one of law and loses its triable character if the undisputed facts leave no room for a reasonable difference of opinion. In the market of all gasoline, defendant's market share was less than 10 per cent, which was not enough to demonstrate a restraint of trade. In a franchise relationship, the franchisee presumably accepts the burdens of the arrangement to reap some benefits, e.g., although plaintiffs had to buy their gas from defendant at its wholesale to dealer price rather than its rack price, they got in return defendant's institutional advertising, marketing support, and related benefits as well as no transportation costs.

[See 1 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (9th ed. 1987) Contracts, § 575 et seq.]

CA(6) [ ] (6)

Summary Judgment § 19—Hearing and Determination—Expert Opinion.

--A court hearing a summary judgment motion is not bound by an expert opinion that is speculative or conjectural or that is based on an incorrect legal theory.

CA(7) [ ] (7)

Monopolies and Restraint of Trade § 7.4—Under Cartwright Act—Agreements in Restraint of Trade—Tying Arrangements—Gasoline Franchisor's Requirement That Franchisees Buy From Franchisor at Higher Price Than Paid by Jobbers.

--In an antitrust action under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.) by franchisee gasoline service station dealers against the franchisor, alleging that defendant compelled plaintiffs to buy all their gasoline from defendant at a price considerably higher than the "rack price" at which defendant sold the gasoline to independent jobbers, plaintiffs failed to prove that the restrictions in their lease agreement prohibiting the use of defendant's tanks, lines, and equipment for the sale of any product other than defendant's brand of gasoline was an illegal tying arrangement. Defendant's lack of market power (10 percent of market) precluded plaintiffs from proving power in the tying product (here, service station sites). Furthermore, a franchisor's ability to "coerce" its franchisee does not show market power and does not invoke antitrust concerns.

CA(8) [L] (8)

Monopolies and Restraint of Trade § 5—Actions—Gasoline Franchisor's Requirement That Franchisees Buy From Franchisor at Higher Price Than Paid by Jobbers.

--In an action by franchisee gasoline service station dealers against the franchisor, alleging that defendant compelled plaintiffs to buy all their gasoline from defendant at a price considerably higher than the "rack price" at which defendant sold the gasoline to independent jobbers, and alleging causes of action for monopolization, price overcharging, tortious interference with business relationship and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, the trial court erred in denying defendant's motion for summary adjudication. Defendant, with 10 percent of the market, had no probability of obtaining a monopoly in the relevant market of all gasoline, since consumers had many interchangeable choices. Defendant presented evidence that its prices fell within the range of prices charged by other major oil companies to their dealers, which was all that was required. The claims for tortious interference and breach of covenant required finding an anticompetitive practice, even if not a statutory antitrust violation, but there was none. Moreover, defendant in fact had a clear financial interest in its dealers and therefore was privileged to "interfere" with the contract.

CA(9) [L] (9)

Summary Judgment § 24—Hearing and Determination—Partial Judgment.

--Where plaintiffs pleaded their case by splitting causes of action, defendant was entitled to present summary adjudication motions (Code Civ. Proc., § 437c, subd. \(f\)\(1\)), that were dispositive of allegations that would have formed a single cause of action if properly pleaded.

CA(10) [L] (10)

Contracts § 23—Construction and Interpretation—Implied Covenant.

--An implied covenant cannot create an obligation inconsistent with an express term of the agreement.

Counsel: Sheuerman & Martini, Alan L. Martini, McClintock, Weston, Benshoof, Rochefort, Rubalcava & MacCuish, [**2] John M. Rochefort, Kurt Osenbaugh and Eugene A. Burrus for Petitioner.

No appearance for Respondent.

Tanke & Willemsen, Tony J. Tanke, Ruby & Schofeld, Allen Ruby, Cotchett & Pitre, Joseph W. Cotchett and Bruce L. Simon for Real Parties in Interest.

Judges: Opinion by Wunderlich, J., with Elia, J., concurring. Dissenting opinion by Premo, Acting P. J.

Opinion by: ELIA

Opinion

---

[*1676] [**198] WUNDERLICH, J.

Defendant Exxon Corporation petitions for writ of mandate following the trial court's denial of its motions for summary adjudication on various causes of action, primarily antitrust violations. The key question is whether or not for purposes of the Cartwright Act the relevant market for assessing anticompetitive behavior is all gasoline or Exxon gasoline. The trial court concluded the relevant market is a factual question, such that Exxon gasoline could be shown to be the relevant market. We disagree and thus grant Exxon's petition for writ of mandate.

[*1677] BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs, 35 Exxon franchisee service station dealers, filed a complaint against Exxon stating 16 causes of action for Cartwright Act violations, business torts, and related claims. The factual essence [***3] of these claims is that the plaintiff dealers are locked into franchise relationships with Exxon and have invested considerable money and effort in acquiring their service stations, but the terms of the agreements make it difficult for them to compete both with independent dealers and with Exxon-owned stations. This is because Exxon compels the franchisees to buy all their Exxon gasoline from Exxon at a price considerably higher than the "rack price" at which Exxon sells the gasoline to independent jobbers.<sup>1</sup> The franchisees claim they are at a competitive disadvantage in competing with these jobbers, with company-owned stations, and with independent operators who can all obtain fuel more cheaply than can plaintiffs.<sup>2</sup> Further, the jobbers are forbidden to resell their Exxon fuel to plaintiffs as franchisees. Plaintiffs claim the price discrepancies between their cost and that of the jobbers have no reasonable relationship to the value of any distribution services which the jobbers perform in marketing the product. Although the agreements with Exxon do not preclude plaintiffs from selling other brands of gasoline, they may not do so unless they put in separate tanks and pumps, [***4] an economically prohibitive arrangement.

In making their Cartwright Act claims of both horizontal and vertical restraints, plaintiffs maintain that the relevant market is not the motor fuel market (all gasoline), but only the wholesale market for Exxon brand fuel. This allegation is crucial because the parties are agreed that Exxon does not own a dominating share of the petroleum market and therefore is not in a position to monopolize or dominate that market. It does, however, have a natural monopoly over its own product, and it is that dominance and control which plaintiffs challenge.

[***5] Plaintiffs also alleged violations of oral promises not to withdraw the Exxon credit card from the California market and to remodel or repair certain service stations. Exxon contends such alleged promises are inconsistent with the express language of the parties' integrated agreements.

Exxon moved for summary adjudication of several causes of action. The trial court granted summary adjudication of plaintiffs' first cause of action, [*1678] for horizontal restraint, because there was no evidence of an agreement to restrain trade between Exxon and its jobbers. However, on the other causes of action, the trial court agreed with plaintiffs that triable issues of fact existed.

The trial court denied the motion for summary adjudication of the vertical restraint claim because, in its opinion, whether the product is "all gas" or "Exxon gas" is a question of fact, and whether there is consumer preference for Exxon gas as a single brand is also a question of fact. The court [**199] cited Corwin v. Los Angeles Newspaper Service Bureau, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 842 [94 Cal. Rptr. 785, 484 P.2d 953], holding that the relevant market is a triable issue on the question of the reasonableness [***6] of restraints. For this same reason, the court also denied the motions for summary adjudication of the plaintiffs' monopoly claim and their price overcharging claim. The court similarly denied summary adjudication of the claim of tortious interference or breach of the implied covenant, because there are factual issues. (Citing [*Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc. \(1995\) 11 Cal. 4th 376 \[45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436, 902 P.2d 740.\]*](#)) The factual issues referenced are the same as those cited regarding existence of the relevant market. Plainly, the trial court believed that because the claim for tortious interference stands or falls on a showing of an antitrust violation, the same facts which produce dispute as to those issues produce dispute as to the tort claims.

<sup>1</sup>The franchisees pay Exxon the "Dealer Tank Wagon" (DTW) price for a supply of gasoline delivered to their stations. The jobbers, independent distributors who buy and transport Exxon gasoline from the refinery, pay a generally lower "rack" price.

<sup>2</sup>According to Exxon, independent service station operators, served by the jobbers, are located in rural areas, whereas the franchisees are located in metropolitan areas.

In denying the motion for summary adjudication of the claims based on the agreements of the parties, the trial court found questions of fact existed whether the claimed integrated contract was inconsistent with plaintiffs' allegations that Exxon breached promises to continue its credit card in effect and to remodel and repair certain stations. However, the court did grant Exxon's motion for summary adjudication of [***7] the Seaman's cause of action for tortious breach of implied covenant ([*Seaman's Direct Buying Service, Inc. v. Standard Oil Co. \(1984\) 36 Cal. 3d 752 \[206 Cal. Rptr. 354, 686 P.2d 1158.\]*](#)), because a franchise relationship is commercial in nature and does not give rise to tort liability for breach. ([*Harris v. Atlantic Richfield Co. \(1993\) 14 Cal. App. 4th 70 \[17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 649.\]*](#))

Exxon then filed a statutory petition for mandate, claiming the trial court erred in failing to grant summary adjudication. (*Code Civ. Proc., § 437c*, subd. (f).) We issued an alternative writ of mandate, and the parties responded. We are now called upon to determine if in fact the trial court was correct in denying Exxon's motions for summary adjudication of certain issues, or whether summary adjudication should have been granted. The definition of the relevant market is the critical issue.

[*1679] DISCUSSION

I. Summary Adjudication

CA(1)[] (1) HN1[] The trial court must grant summary adjudication where the moving party establishes the right to the entry of judgment as a matter of law. ([*Code Civ. Proc., § 437c, subd. \(c\); Union Bank v. Superior Court \(1995\) 31 Cal. App. 4th 573, 579 \[\*\*\*8\] \[37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 653.\]*](#)) "Summary judgment is mandatory where no triable issues exist as to a material fact, and if the documentation submitted on the motion entitles the moving party to judgment as a matter of law. (*Code Civ. Proc., § 437c, subd. \(c\).*) HN2[] When, as here, defendants seek summary judgment, their supporting documentation must either establish a complete defense to the plaintiff's action or demonstrate an absence of an essential element of the plaintiff's case. When defendants establish the foregoing, and the plaintiff's opposing documentation does not show either a triable issue of fact with respect to the defense or that an essential element exists, summary judgment should be granted. [Citations.] These general principles also apply to an appellate court's review of a summary judgment ruling, which is conducted de novo. [Citations.]" ([*Thompson v. Halvonik \(1995\) 36 Cal. App. 4th 657, 661 \[43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 142.\]*](#)) HN3[] For summary judgment to be granted, "[t]he moving party must show that under no possible hypothesis within the reasonable purview of the allegations of the complaint is there a material question of fact which requires examination by trial. [Citations.]" [***9] ([*Chevron U.S.A., Inc. v. Superior Court \(1992\) 4 Cal. App. 4th 544, 548 \[5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 674.\]*](#))

Although Exxon initially complains that the trial court order did not meet the requirements of *Code of Civil Procedure section 437c, subdivision \(g\)* in that it insufficiently specifies what evidence is in conflict, we believe that absent a demand for greater specificity in the trial court, the order suffices procedurally. (See [*Haskell v. Carli \(1987\) 195 Cal. App. 3d 124, 129-130 \[240 Cal. Rptr. \[\*\*200\] 439\]*](#); see also [*Miller v. Lakeside Village Condominium Assn. \(1991\) 1 Cal. App. 4th 1611, 1621 \[2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 796\].*](#))

CA(2)[] (2) We note also that plaintiffs object to consideration by writ review because certain causes of action remain, regardless of our decision, and thus a trial will go forward even if we grant the writ. However, we conclude pretrial review is appropriate here, where the issues ruled on by the trial [*1680] court contain the heart of plaintiffs' case and the trial might well be simplified if we find the trial court erred.<sup>3</sup>

---

<sup>3</sup> In addition, numerous other cases in the state raise the same or similar issues. (See also [*Ajir v. Exxon Corp.* \(N.D.Cal. No. C-93 20830 RMW PVT\) \[summary judgment granted on same issues\].](#))

[***10] Preliminarily, it is important to emphasize what this case is not about: plaintiffs have not alleged any cause of action for price discrimination (under the federal Robinson-Patman Act or the California Unfair Practices Act) nor have they sued all major oil companies in an attempt to demonstrate a conspiracy or concerted action. Nor do we have before us individual claims of unconscionable contracts (franchise agreements). And we stress that this case concerns a franchise relationship, a specific and highly regulated contractual business arrangement.

II. Antitrust Causes of Action

CA(3)[<sup>1</sup>] (3) The Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.), like the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.), was enacted to promote free market competition and to prevent conspiracies or agreements in restraint or monopolization of trade.<sup>4</sup> Restraint of trade may be horizontal or vertical. HN4[<sup>2</sup>] "Contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade covered by Section 1 of the Sherman Act are of two types, horizontal or vertical. Horizontal combinations are cartels or agreements among competitors which restrain competition among enterprises at the same level of distribution. They are ordinarily [***11] illegal per se. [Citations.] Vertical restraints are imposed by persons or firms further up the chain of distribution of a specific product (or in rare cases, further down the chain) than the enterprise restrained. Vertical non-price restraints are tested under the rule of reason; that is, the [*1681] plaintiff must prove that the restraint had an anticompetitive effect in the relevant market in order to prevail." (Muenster Butane, Inc. v. Stewart Co. \(5th Cir. 1981\) 651 F.2d 292, 295, fns. omitted (Muenster Butane)).

[***12] The United States Supreme Court has intimated that intrabrand competition is not a concern of the antitrust laws (e.g., Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc. \(1977\) 433 U.S. 36, 52, fn. 19 [53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 581, 97 S. Ct. 2549]), and a California court has held that HN5[<sup>3</sup>] an antitrust plaintiff attacking vertical restraints cannot make out a case unless the plaintiff can show some anticompetitive effect in the larger, interbrand market. (Gianelli, supra, 172 Cal. App. 3d at pp. 1044, 1048.) The Gianelli case also finds the prevailing standard to be the "rule-of-reason" which measures whether the anticompetitive aspect of a vertical restraint outweighs its procompetitive effects. (Id. at p. 1048.) [**201] And it is plaintiff's burden to make the required showing of a " 'substantially adverse effect on competition in the relevant market.' " (Id. at p. 1049.)

A long line of federal cases stands for the general proposition that HN6[<sup>4</sup>] vertical restraints are permissible unless a harmful effect on interbrand competition and an anticompetitive purpose can be shown. (E.g., O.S.C. Corp. v. Apple Computer, Inc. \(9th Cir. 1986\) 792 F.2d 1464, 1469; [Seagood Trading Corp. \[\*\*\*13\] v. Jerrico, Inc. \(11th Cir. 1991\) 924 F.2d 1555, 1569](#); Supermarket of Homes v. San Fernando Valley Bd. \(9th Cir. 1986\) 786 F.2d 1400, 1405; Ron Tonkin Gran Turismo v. Fiat Distributors \(9th Cir. 1981\) 637 F.2d 1376, 1387-1388; Red Diamond Supply, Inc. v. Liquid Carbonic Corp. \(5th Cir. 1981\) 637 F.2d 1001, 1007.) These cases are consistent with the many cases holding that HN7[<sup>5</sup>] a supplier cannot have a monopoly, normally, in its own product. (E.g., International Logistics Group v. Chrysler Corp. \(6th Cir. 1989\) 884 F.2d 904, 908 [HN8[<sup>6</sup>] monopoly of a single brand is not an antitrust violation]; Stearns v. Genrad, Inc. \(4th Cir. 1984\) 752 F.2d 942, 946; Smalley & Co. v. Emerson & Cuming, Inc. \(D.Colo. 1992\) 808 F. Supp. 1503, 1512.)

<sup>4</sup> State courts have liberally applied federal Sherman Act doctrine in interpreting the Cartwright Act. (See, e.g., Roth v. Rhodes \(1994\) 25 Cal. App. 4th 530, 542 [30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 706]; Cellular Plus, Inc. v. Superior Court \(1993\) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 1242 [18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 308]; Bert G. Gianelli Distributing Co. v. Beck & Co. \(1985\) 172 Cal. App. 3d 1020, 1042 [219 Cal. Rptr. 203] (Gianelli)).

However, in their final brief, plaintiffs insist the Cartwright Act is much broader than the Sherman Act, and thus they should not be bound by cases interpreting the Sherman Act, especially concerning vertical restraints and market definition. (See State of California ex rel. Van de Kamp v. Texaco, Inc. \(1988\) 46 Cal. 3d 1147, 1160-1164, 1168 [252 Cal. Rptr. 221, 762 P.2d 385] [Cartwright Act modeled after earlier Texas and Michigan acts, but not broader than Sherman Act].) They cite, for example, Texaco, Inc. v. Hasbrouck \(1990\) 496 U.S. 543 [110 L. Ed. 2d 492, 110 S. Ct. 2535], wherein the Supreme Court held that discounts to wholesale buyers who also resold gasoline at retail were illegal price discrimination because Texaco failed to prove the discounts were functionally related. But Hasbrouck was a price discrimination case brought under the Robinson-Patman Act, and here plaintiffs have made no Robinson-Patman (or similar California Unfair Practices Act) allegations in their complaint.

CA(4) [↑] (4) In addition, case law holds that HN9[↑] the need to prove market power is a threshold consideration in an antitrust case and is the sine qua non of recovery.<sup>5</sup> These cases are collected in O.S.C. Corp. v. Apple Computer, Inc. (C.D.Cal. 1985) 601 F. Supp. 1274, 1291, fn. 8, and include Graphic Products Distributors v. Itek Corp. (11th Cir. 1983) 717 F.2d 1560, 1568; [*1682] Muenster Butane, supra, 651 F.2d 292; General [***14] Leaseways v. National Truck Leasing Ass'n (7th Cir. 1984) 744 F.2d 588, 596; see also Rutman Wine Co. v. E. & J. Gallo Winery (9th Cir. 1987) 829 F.2d 729. In specifically interpreting the Cartwright Act, the court in Roth v. Rhodes, supra, 25 Cal. App. 4th at page 542, emphasized that since the Sylvania decision by the United States Supreme Court (Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., supra, 433 U.S. 36), federal courts applying the rule of reason to vertical restraints have required a threshold inquiry into the defendant's market power, which is usually equated with market share. HN10[↑] "To meet his initial burden in establishing that the practice is an unreasonable restraint of trade, plaintiff must show that the activity is the type that restrains trade and that the restraint is likely to be of significant magnitude. . . . Ordinarily, a plaintiff to do this must delineate a relevant market and show that the defendant plays enough of a role in that market to impair competition significantly.' . . ." (Roth v. Rhodes, supra, 25 Cal. App. 4th at p. 542 [citations omitted].)

[**15] CA(5a) [↑] (5a) Exxon has presented uncontradicted evidence that it does not have a controlling share of the petroleum gasoline market, and that therefore as a matter of law plaintiffs cannot prevail on their antitrust claims. Indeed the parties agree that Exxon accounts for less than 10 percent of the market.

The trial court apparently placed weight on the declaration of plaintiffs' expert to raise a material triable issue of fact. Although we acknowledge that in some cases, the relevant market may be a question of fact, here we find it is a matter of law, as plaintiffs' theory of relevant market has no real support in the case law.

The United States Supreme Court has declared that HN11[↑] the relevant market is determined by considering "commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes." (United States v. Du Pont & Co. (1956) 351 U.S. 377, 395 [100 L. Ed. 1264, 1280-1281, 76 S. Ct. 994].) Or, in other words, the relevant market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purpose for which they are produced. (Id. at p. 404 [100 L. Ed. at pp. 1285-1286].) The Supreme Court used the example of different soft drink formulae, noting [**202] that [***16] one can hardly say each one is an illegal monopoly. (Id. at p. 393 [100 L. Ed. at pp. 1279-1280].) Here, the reasonable interchangeability for the purpose for which gasoline is produced (use in consumers' motor vehicles) mandates the relevant market to be all gasoline, not the wholesale market for one brand of gasoline.

In Corwin v. Los Angeles Newspaper Service Bureau, Inc., supra, 4 Cal. 3d 842, the California Supreme Court concluded that the market definition (all [*1683] classes of legal advertisements versus notices of trustee sales only) was a mixed question of law and fact that could not be resolved on the limited record before it. (Id. at p. 855.) The record before us is anything but limited, and we find that the relevant market here is a question of law and is defined as the market of all gasoline. HN12[↑] "[T]he issue of fact becomes one 'of law' and loses its 'triable' character if the undisputed facts leave no room for a reasonable difference of opinion. [Citation.]" (Terry v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 962, 967 [140 Cal. Rptr. 510].) In the market of all gasoline, the parties agree that Exxon's market share is less than 10 percent. [***17] This is not enough to demonstrate a restraint of trade. Plaintiffs cannot show that Exxon's activity restrains trade and impairs competition significantly. (See Roth v. Rhodes, supra, 25 Cal. App. 4th at p. 542; Gianelli, supra, 172 Cal. App. 3d at p. 1049; Davis-Watkins Co. v. Service Merchandise (6th Cir. 1982) 686 F.2d 1190, 1202.)

Plaintiffs presented the opinion of Keith Leffler, a leading petroleum economist, who based his opinion on the premise that the relevant market was the wholesale market for Exxon brand gasoline. Thus, his opinions on the effect of Exxon's practices on the entire retail market are purely speculative. Leffler opined that the vertical restraints can have an effect on the retail price of gasoline, in that the inability of Exxon dealers to purchase Exxon products through the competitive jobber market protects a noncompetitive wholesale and retail price structure throughout the entire markets in which these dealers operate. Exxon had offered documentary evidence that the retail market for gasoline and the wholesale market for gasoline were each highly competitive and operated independently of each other. These factual showings were not [***18] rebutted. Leffler's speculations do not rise to the status of contradictory evidence. CA\(6\)↑ \(6\) And HN13↑ the court is not bound by an expert opinion that is speculative or conjectural or that is based on an incorrect legal theory. (See Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Zuckerman (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 1113, 1135 [234 Cal. Rptr. 630]; [Painter v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. \(1985\) 166 Cal. App. 3d 264, 271 \[212 Cal. Rptr. 354\]](#).) In fact, Leffler himself declared that the retail gasoline market is highly competitive: "At the retail level, consumers are very responsive to relatively small differentials in prices across gasoline brands." CA\(5b\)↑ \(5b\) This statement undermines his opinion that Exxon's vertical restraints may have an anticompetitive effect.<sup>6</sup>

---

<sup>5</sup> A leading commentator on vertical restraints has suggested that proof of the antitrust defendant's 'substantial' market power should be a preliminary hurdle in all restricted distribution (vertical restraint) cases. '[I]f a firm lacks market power, it cannot affect the price of its product,' and thus any vertical restraint could not be anticompetitive at the interbrand level. Posner, The Next Step in the Antitrust Treatment of Restricted Distribution: Per Se Legality, 48 U.Chi.L.Rev. 6, 16 (1981)." (Muenster Butane, supra, 651 F.2d at p. 298.)

[***19] We also find the major cases cited by plaintiffs are inapposite here. It is important to note that these cases do not concern franchise relationships as [*1684] does the present case. Plaintiffs rely heavily upon Redwood Theatres, Inc. v. Festival Enterprises, Inc. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 687 [248 Cal. Rptr. 189], to show that the market for a particular product may be the relevant market for antitrust purposes even when the product is part of a larger market in which the defendant does not dominate. In Redwood Theatres, the defendant distributors had a small share of the film market but a large share of "first run" films, and were therefore found to have a potential for monopoly of that market. According to plaintiffs, Exxon similarly has a small share of the gasoline market, but a dominating control over the market for Exxon gas. The court in Redwood Theatres agreed that the measure of validity of vertical [**203] restraints is the rule-of-reason and that the reasonableness of a restraint is normally a factual issue to be determined at trial. (200 Cal. App. 3d at pp. 712-713, citing Corwin v. Los Angeles Newspapers Service Bureau, supra, 4 Cal. 3d at p. 855.) [***20] However, on its facts, Redwood Theatres differs from this case in that first run films are a unique product in which the distributor defendant enjoyed a monopoly, or near monopoly, whereas here, gasoline is a commonly and widely available product which can be bought under many different brand names so that Exxon cannot be said to have a dominating market share in that market. Plaintiffs allege that there exists a consumer preference for Exxon, but they have presented no evidence to show this, and indeed Exxon's less than 10 percent market share belies their claim.

The refusal of major film distributors to deal with plaintiff Redwood Theatres could amount to an anticompetitive practice, potentially ruinous to the small theatre operator, against which the Cartwright Act is designed to guard. We question the application of the Redwood Theatres analysis to a franchise case. In a franchise relationship, the franchisee presumably accepts the burdens of the arrangement to reap some benefits. For instance, here Exxon dealers have to buy their gas from Exxon at its wholesale to dealer price rather than its rack price; but they get in return the Exxon institutional advertising, marketing [***21] support, and related benefits as well as no transportation costs. Thus they are situated differently from the jobbers, who get none of these things but buy the gasoline for less. In the film industry, there is no justification, other than personal economic benefit to the studios, in their refusal to sell a particular product to a small theater. And this refusal tends to drive small theaters out of business and thus hamper competition at the retail level, restricting the consumer to the larger theaters which have the muscle to swing the studio deals. So in Redwood Theatres, applying the Cartwright Act serves the fundamental purpose of the antitrust laws, which is to protect competition at the retail level. In a franchise situation, as here, applying the antitrust law does not serve that purpose.

---

<sup>6</sup>Leffler's statements imply that anticompetitive injury results only if all major producers use the same dual distribution system. Then, according to him, the market becomes dominated by that system in such a way that the price of gasoline is kept artificially high because all these producers keep the price higher for their franchised dealers than for the rack market. While this might be a statement of a monopoly situation, it lacks the essential element of combination or illegal agreement. There are no such allegations in the complaint. Leffler's assertion that an individual producer such as Exxon is free to use the system since it will not suffer in competition by keeping its prices high so long as everyone else does the same thing is speculative.

[*1685] Plaintiffs also rely on [*Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc. \(1992\) 504 U.S. 451 \[119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072\]*](#). In that case, the plaintiffs were independent service organizations (ISO's) that serviced copying and micrographic equipment manufactured by Kodak. Kodak adopted policies limiting availability of replacement parts for its machines [***22] to ISO's. The ISO's filed an antitrust suit contending that Kodak unlawfully tied the sale of service for its machines to the sale of parts and had unlawfully monopolized the sale of such services and parts in violation of the Sherman Act. The Supreme Court reversed a district court summary judgment for Kodak. The high court (three justices dissenting) held that there were factual issues concerning Kodak's market power in the service and parts markets, and that lack of such market power could not be assumed just because such power was absent in the total equipment market. Kodak had argued that it lacked market power in the primary equipment market; but the court said that was not dispositive. The fact that Kodak controlled nearly 100 percent of the parts market and 80 to 95 percent of the service market sufficed to withstand summary judgment on the monopoly claims. ([*Id. at pp. 481-483 \[119 L. Ed. 2d at pp. 293-294, 112 S. Ct. at p. 2090\]*](#).)

Plaintiffs point particularly to the discussion rejecting Kodak's argument that, as a matter of law, a single brand of a product can never be a relevant market. ([*504 U.S. at pp. 481-484 \[119 L. Ed. 2d at pp. 293-295, 112 S. Ct. at pp. 2090-2091\]*](#)). [***23] The relevant market for antitrust purposes, "is determined by the choices available to Kodak equipment owners." Service and parts for Kodak equipment are not interchangeable with service and parts for other manufacturer's products; therefore the relevant market from the perspective of owners of Kodak equipment consists only of those companies that service such equipment. In that market, Kodak has a monopoly. ([*Id. at pp. 481-483 \[119 L. Ed. 2d at pp. 293-294, 112 S. Ct. at p. 2090\]*](#).) The situation here is different. Exxon gas is interchangeable with other brands of gasoline. From the consumers' perspective, there is no "lock in" to Exxon gas. Therefore they are not in a similar position to the owners of Kodak equipment who must buy parts and service from Kodak ISO's. From the perspective of [***204] retail gasoline consumers, the relevant market is all gas, not just Exxon gas.

The Gianelli court summarized: "While it is true that there is generally 'a greater reluctance to uphold a grant of summary judgment when the rule of reason is the appropriate standard[,] . . . it is also true that where there exists 'no tenable per se boycott theory "appellants must evince a substantially [***24] adverse effect on competition in the relevant market to support a viable legal theory . . ." ' . . . and consequently to survive a summary judgment [*1686] motion." (*172 Cal. App. 3d at p. 1049*, [citations omitted].) No such evidence has been presented. <sup>7</sup>

[**CA\(7\)\[!\[\]\(32944c299745462efa21036107e0b331_img.jpg\)\]**](#) (7) In a related argument, plaintiffs contend the restrictions in their lease agreement prohibiting the use of Exxon's tanks, lines and equipment for the sale of any product other than Exxon brand [***25] gasoline is an illegal tying arrangement. <sup>8</sup> But Exxon's lack of market power eliminates a prerequisite to plaintiffs' success on this claim. Plaintiffs must prove power in the tying product (here, service station sites) in order to prevail. (*Grappone, Inc. v. Subaru of New England, Inc. \(1st Cir. 1988\) 858 F.2d 792.*)

Plaintiffs' real complaint is that they are being oppressed within a contractual relationship with the manufacturer. There are legal remedies for oppressive conduct regarding a contractual relationship, but they are not antitrust remedies. Cases hold that [**HN14\[!\[\]\(f8ab1d10523ac9cc5639dce07071018b_img.jpg\)\]**](#) a franchisor's ability to "coerce" its franchisee does [***26] not show market power and does not invoke antitrust concerns. (See, e.g., *Tominaga v. Shepherd \(C.D.Cal. 1988\) 682 F. Supp. 1489, 1495; Mozart Co. v. Mercedes-Benz of North America, Inc. \(9th Cir. 1987\) 833 F.2d 1342, 1346-1347*

<sup>7</sup> As plainly described by the court in Muenster Butane: "Muenster Butane's fundamental mistake throughout this case has been to view the product market as confined to Zenith sets. The record contains no suggestion that Zeniths are unique or that Zenith dealers enjoy a downward sloping demand curve for their sets. Indeed, the uncontradicted testimony of Nick Heffley indicates that competition between Zenith dealers and dealers in other brands of television sets was 'so keen' that he could not fix a minimum price for his Zeniths." (*651 F.2d at p. 296.*)

<sup>8</sup> Exxon's assertion that plaintiffs' tying claims are barred by a consent decree entered in *Bogosian v. Gulf Oil Corp. \(E.D.Pa. 1985\) 621 F. Supp. 27*, a case where such arrangements were allegedly validated as part of the consent decree and in which many plaintiffs here were class members, is unsupported by appropriate documentary evidence showing terms, identities and facts.

[analysis for vertical restraint and tying claims must be made at the precontract stage, not after a franchise agreement has been signed].)

The franchisees' "lock in" to Exxon results from a business relationship of their choosing, the franchise, whose terms were freely entered into by both parties. If the franchise agreement is unconscionable or adhesive it may be subject to rescission or reformation. However, these facts do not implicate antitrust concerns. Exxon's conduct vis-a-vis the franchisees is part of a negotiated business relationship and is not a restraint of trade; it does not directly impact the retail market. And there was no "lock in" until plaintiffs voluntarily assumed their roles as franchisees; they had the entire spectrum of gasoline sellers from which to choose in deciding how to structure their service station businesses.

Recently, a federal district court in Pennsylvania decided similar issues in an action brought against [***27] the franchisor by 40 percent of its franchisees. In [*1687] Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc. \(E.D.Pa. 1996\) 922 F. Supp. 1055, the court held that the relevant market definition that franchisees urged in support of their antitrust claims, one that encompassed the market for ingredients and supplies among franchisees, failed as a matter of law. The court concluded that the restraints at issue were, as here, vertical nonprice restraints and not price maintenance, and that market power cannot be established by showing contractual power arising out of the franchise agreement. (Id. at pp. 1060-1062.)

Similarly, we conclude the relevant market is all gasoline, and Exxon, as a matter of law, does not have significant power for antitrust purposes in that market.

III. Other Business Torts

CA(8)[<sup>8</sup>] (8) Plaintiffs also sued Exxon for monopolization, price overcharging, tortious interference [**205] with business relationship and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, all in relation to their inability to purchase Exxon gas at a lower cost from jobbers. The trial court concluded these related claims also depended on the definition of relevant market, a triable issue [***28] of fact. Again, we disagree.

As to the monopolization cause of action, Exxon has no dangerous probability of obtaining a monopoly in the relevant market of all gasoline, because consumers have many interchangeable choices. (See [Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan \(1993\) 506 U.S. 447, 454-458 \[122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 256-258, 113 S. Ct. 884, 890-891\]](#); see also Bushie v. Stenocord Corporation \(9th Cir. 1972\) 460 F.2d 116, 120 [unless manufacturer used his natural monopoly in his own product to gain control of the relevant market in which his products compete, the antitrust laws are not violated].)

As to price overcharging, Exxon presented evidence that its DTW prices fell within the range of DTW prices charged by other major oil companies to their dealers.<sup>9</sup> This is all that is required. (See Au Rustproofing Center v. Gulf Oil Corp. \(6th Cir. 1985\) 755 F.2d 1231, 1235; TCP Industries, Inc. v. Uniroyal, Inc. \(6th Cir. 1981\) 661 F.2d 542, 548-549.) Exxon distributes to two different classes, each performing different functions. Leffler's opinion that the difference in price between DTW price and rack price is not equivalent to the services performed is speculative at [***29] best.

[*1688] Plaintiffs' claims for tortious interference and breach of covenant must be tied to finding an anticompetitive practice, even if not a statutory antitrust violation. In Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc., supra, 11 Cal. 4th at page 393, the Supreme Court held that HN15[<sup>15</sup>] in actions for interference with prospective economic advantage, as applied to existing contracts, a plaintiff must show that interference was wrongful by some measure

---

<sup>9</sup> Even the trial court acknowledged that "plaintiffs have not met Exxon's assertion that the gas price was 'smack dab in the middle.'"

beyond the interference itself. Moreover, Exxon in fact has a clear financial interest in its dealers and therefore is privileged to "interfere" with the contract.<sup>10</sup> (Hamro v. Shell Oil Co. (9th Cir. 1982) 674 F.2d 784.)

[***30] IV. Breach of Contract

CA(9)[↑] (9) (See fn. 11.) Plaintiffs alleged that Exxon had no right to withdraw its Exxon credit card from the California market.<sup>11</sup> Exxon attacked that claim on the basis that it varies the express language of the parties' integrated agreement which gives Exxon the right to cancel the credit card at any time. The relevant contract provision states: "Exxon may, for any reason, upon written notice, terminate this Agreement [pertaining to its credit card] and discontinue the purchase or acceptance of Credit Sales Tickets from any Retailer or Distributor." Plaintiffs' claim violates the express language of the contract, and thus it cannot stand. CA(10)[↑] (10) HN16[↑] An implied covenant cannot create an obligation inconsistent with an express term of the agreement. (See Carma Developers (Cal.), Inc. v. Marathon Development California, Inc. (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 342, 374 [6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 467, 826 P.2d 710]; see also Slivinsky v. Watkins-Johnson Co. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 799, 806-807 [270 Cal. Rptr. 585].)

[***31] Similarly, we conclude the relevant contract language is inconsistent with plaintiffs' allegation that Exxon made collateral promises to repair or remodel certain stations. [**206] The lease is an integrated agreement, and it provides in relevant parts: Under the heading of "Repairs and Additional Facilities," the lease states that lessor shall make repairs and replacements as provided [*1689] in an attached exhibit if lessee promptly notifies lessor in writing that there is need and lessor determines that such repairs are economically justified, and lessor shall be "absolutely exempt" from making any other repair, renewal, or replacement. The lease further states that lessee shall at its own expense make all other repairs, renewals and replacements, and that lessor at its option has the "right but not the obligation" to demolish, rebuild, reconstruct, remodel, modernize, change, eliminate, replace, or make additions to the premises. This provision clearly allocates the decision to Exxon alone. Moreover, plaintiffs have pointed to no concrete evidence of specific agreements to repair or remodel. Summary adjudication was warranted.

DISPOSITION

Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue [***32] as prayed, directing the respondent court to vacate its order denying summary adjudication to Exxon, and to make new and different orders granting the motions for summary adjudication as to the following claims: second cause of action (Cartwright Act--vertical restraint); third cause of action (Cartwright Act--monopolization); sixth and seventh causes of action (fraud and negligent misrepresentation--price), including any claims of gasoline price overcharging; those parts of the fourth and eleventh causes of actions alleging tortious interference with economic opportunity and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing; and those parts of the tenth cause of action for breach of contract concerning any claims arising out of the discontinuation of acceptance of the Exxon credit card and arising out of oral promises to remodel stations. Costs to petitioner.

Elia, J., concurred.

Dissent by: PREMO

<sup>10</sup> Plaintiffs complain that their contract with Exxon specifies they are "independent" dealers. However, under the sales agreement complained of here, plaintiffs and Exxon have contracted for gasoline sold and supplied. A separate lease agreement contains a paragraph setting forth the dealers' independent status for purposes of third party liability.

<sup>11</sup> Plaintiffs argue that a summary adjudication of this point does not dispose of an entire cause of action and is therefore not a proper subject of summary adjudication under the new statute. ( Code Civ. Proc., § 437c, subd. (f)(1).) However, plaintiffs pleaded their case by combining causes of action. Exxon remains entitled to present summary adjudication motions that dispose of allegations which would have formed a single cause of action if properly pleaded. (See Lilienthal & Fowler v. Superior Court (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1848, 1854-1855 [16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 458].)

Dissent

---

PREMO, Acting P. J.

I respectfully dissent. My concern is that even if the argument put forth by Exxon, as adopted by the majority, ultimately is persuasive and carries the day, it is premature for us to draw conclusions as a matter of law at this point in the case.

My colleagues [***33] state the dispositive conclusion that the relevant market in this case is the overall retail gasoline market and not the Exxon gasoline stocks which are purportedly the subject of vertical restraints. The majority does so because of what they perceive to be unassailable case law in support of petitioner's argument. As a result the relevant market decision is herein made as a matter of law. We therefore disagree with the trial court who felt a triable question of fact was entailed.

Again, I stress my concern is the timing of these conclusions. The majority may well have stated the correct ultimate outcome. Certainly there [*1690] is a trend in the decided cases that would so indicate. But to do so in a case which at best is complex and somewhat arcane, which requires the distinguishing of Redwood Theatres, Inc. v. Festival Enterprises, Inc. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 687 [248 Cal. Rptr. 189] and Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc. (1992) 504 U.S. 451 [119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072], and which entails weighing and disregarding the proffered testimony of respondent's primary expert witness is, in my opinion, a bit of a quantum leap.

Even had these [***34] arguments been subjected to an evidentiary hearing or trial itself where the parties' entrenched positions could be illuminated or worse, exposed as unpersuasive, in the light of cross-examination this court would at least have a complete record upon which to base the comprehensive conclusions of the majority opinion.

Without such a record, I believe this case does not merit our intervention at this stage. We should deny the petition.

A petition for a rehearing was denied February 13, 1997, and the opinion was modified to read as printed. The petition of real parties in interest for review by the Supreme Court was denied May 14, 1997. Mosk, J., Chin, J., and Brown, J., were of the opinion that the petition should be granted.

---

End of Document

Westowne Shoes, Inc. v. Brown Group, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

October 31, 1996, Argued ; January 17, 1997, Decided

No. 96-1955

Reporter

104 F.3d 994 *; 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 787 **; 41 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1461 ***; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,678

WESTOWNE SHOES, INC. and CARL A. BIWER CO., Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. BROWN GROUP, INC., et al., Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [\[\*\*1\]](#) Rehearing Denied April 7, 1997, Reported at: 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 6588. Certiorari Denied October 6, 1997, Reported at: 1997 U.S. LEXIS 5340.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin. No. 93 C 720. Rudolph T. Randa, Judge.

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

---

trademark, shoes, dealers, dealership, knock-offs, antitrust, statute of limitations, promise, contracts, license, anti trust law, terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > General Overview

Trademark Law > Abandonment > General Overview

**HN1** Contracts Law, Contract Conditions & Provisions

The common law of contracts does not empower a court to write the parties' contract for them.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Promissory Estoppel

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Torts > Malpractice & Professional Liability > Attorneys

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

**HN2** [down] Consideration, Promissory Estoppel

To disguise a statutory claim as a claim for promissory estoppel in an unnecessary effort to beat a statute of limitations is a formula for confusion, and the district court is not required to tolerate it.

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

**HN3** [down] Business Torts, Fraud & Misrepresentation

Fraud is not actionable without harm.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Cancellation & Establishment > Commercial Use > Affixation Required

Trademark Law > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Law > Conveyances > Franchises

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Law > Conveyances > Licenses

**HN4** [down] Commercial Use, Affixation Required

While a trademark licensee (at least if he has an exclusive license), as well as the trademark's owner, can sue to protect the trademark from infringement, he cannot sue the trademark owner for "infringing" the trademark.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

**HN5** [down] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The decisions of the federal courts interpreting federal antitrust law shall control the interpretation of Wisconsin's antitrust law.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Likelihood of Confusion > Factors for Determining Confusion > Comparison of Advertising

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Law > Conveyances > Franchises

**HN6** [down] Likelihood of Confusion, Comparison of Advertising

A supplier is not required to allow his dealers to use his trademark to designate his competitors' products.

Counsel: For WESTOWNE SHOES, INCORPORATED, CARL A. BIWER COMPANY, Plaintiffs - Appellants: George P. Kersten, Kenan J. Kersten, KERSTEN & MCKINNON, Milwaukee, WI USA.

For BROWN GROUP, INCORPORATED, BROWN SHOE COMPANY, FAMOUS FOOTWEAR CO, BROWN GROUP RETAIL, INCORPORATED, WOHL SHOE COMPANY, BROWN GROUP INTERNATIONAL

INCORPORATED, Defendants - Appellees: Ronald M. Wawrzyn, Walter E. Zimmerman, Bryan B. House, FOLEY & LARDNER, Milwaukee, WI USA.

Judges: Before POSNER, Chief Judge, and FLAUM and EVANS, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: POSNER

Opinion

---

[***1461] [*995] POSNER, Chief Judge. In this diversity suit based on Wisconsin law, affiliated firms, now defunct, that owned retail shoe stores in Wisconsin and that we shall refer to collectively as "Westowne" fired a blunderbuss full of charges, mostly based on the common law of contracts but with trademark and antitrust allegations thrown in, against Westowne's former supplier, the Brown Shoe Company of antitrust fame. The district court granted summary judgment for Brown and we must therefore resolve factual disputes as favorably to [**2] Westowne as the record permits.

Brown manufactures a popular line of women's dressy shoes under the name "Naturalizer." Beginning in the early 1970s, Brown sold Naturalizers to Westowne for resale. It also licensed Westowne to use the name "Naturalizer" as part of Westowne's trade dress; that is, Westowne was permitted to use the name on its store signs (Brown even furnished the signs) and thus represent the stores to the consuming public as being authorized Naturalizer dealers. Westowne and the other licensees were not forbidden to sell other brands, and Westowne supplemented Naturalizers with women's casual shoes made by the San Antonio Shoe Company, but 80 to 90 percent of the shoes that it sold were Naturalizers.

In 1987 Brown instituted (actually reinstated, but that is a detail we can ignore) its curiously named "purity" program, the focus of Westowne's wrath. Under this program, any store that wanted to retain "Naturalizer" in its sign, that is, wanted to represent itself as an authorized Naturalizer dealer or Naturalizer specialty store, had to cease selling brands other than Naturalizer. Brown was willing to continue selling Naturalizers to stores that carried other brands, [**3] but it required them to delete the [***1462] word "Naturalizer" from their store signs and gave them a lower priority in the filling of orders.

The problem with "going pure" was that the Naturalizer line was not complete. It had dressy shoes, but not casual ones. So along with or as part of the purity program-- for all we know, it was a principal purpose of the program-- Brown developed a line of women's casual shoes under the Naturalizer label. It told Westowne that these shoes would be "stitch-by-stitch knock-offs"--that is, perfect imitations--of the popular SAS shoes. According to testimony that we must accept as true for purposes of this appeal, though without vouching for its truth, Brown's attempt to develop SAS "knock-offs" was a flop. They were so bad that not only was Westowne, which wanted to remain an authorized Naturalizer dealer and therefore stopped buying from SAS and began buying the knock-offs instead, unable to sell them; they also degraded the Naturalizer mark, making it difficult for Westowne to sell even the good Naturalizers--the original, dressy line--at a profit. Compounding Westowne's problems, it found it increasingly difficult to obtain the good Naturalizers. Brown [**4] has an "in stock" program, under which it maintains a large inventory of shoes from which to restock its dealers, enabling them to minimize their own inventory expense. As part of what Westowne describes as Brown's effort to monopolize the shoe business, Brown was busy buying up retail outlets and allocating all available inventory to them, thus starving independent dealers like Westowne; and it also sold to its own outlets at a lower price. Eventually Westowne went under and, owing Brown a considerable sum for shoes delivered but not paid for, brought this suit.

Westowne argues that Brown committed a breach of contract by putting Westowne to the miserable choice of losing its Naturalizer dealership (that is, the right to represent its stores as Naturalizer dealers) or replacing the SAS shoes that it carried with inferior knock-offs. The only written contract was the licensing agreement, and it does not bear on this contract claim. Westowne's argument is that the course of dealing between the parties, not any written contract, gave Westowne a contractual entitlement to remain a Naturalizer dealer indefinitely and forbade Brown to impose unreasonable [*996] conditions on the retention of [**5] the dealership, such as requiring the dealer to carry a substandard product. Westowne points out that the Wisconsin Fair Dealership Law, Wis. Stat. ch. 135, creates such an entitlement. True; but this is not a suit under the dealership act; such a suit would be barred by the act's one-year statute of limitations. Wis. Stat. § 893.93\(3\)\(b\). Westowne's argument that the act creates entitlements which can then be enforced by a suit under the common law of contracts, with its six-year statute of limitations, Wis. Stat. § 893.43, is a transparent evasion of the statute of limitations in the dealership act.

The absence of a written contract other than the irrelevant licensing agreement and the multitudinous sales contracts, also irrelevant, covering particular shipments of shoes to Westowne's stores is not critical to the common law contract claim, because Brown has not raised a statute of frauds defense. What is critical is the absence of terms. Westowne's principal testified that he had a contract with Brown, but he was unable to answer such questions as, When did the contract start? When or under what conditions does it terminate? Is the "purity" program a violation? Did Brown [**6] so far relinquish its rights over its trademark as to entitle Westowne to sell another manufacturer's shoes from a store that holds itself out to be a Naturalizer dealership? What consideration did Brown receive for this trademark-endangering concession? HN1↑ The common law of contracts does not empower a court to write the parties' contract for them, Witt v. Realist, Inc., 18 Wis. 2d 282, 118 N.W.2d 85, 93-94 \(Wis. 1962\); Messner Manor Associates v. Wisconsin Housing & Economic Development Authority, 204 Wis. 2d 492, 555 N.W.2d 156, 159 \(Wis. App. 1996\); Goldstick v. ICM Realty, 788 F.2d 456, 461-62 \(7th Cir. 1986\), but that is what Westowne is asking us to do.

Westowne also argues, however, that by promising it perfect imitations of SAS shoes, Brown induced it to forgo its remedies under the Wisconsin Fair Dealership Law until the statute of limitations ran out. (Under that law, according to Westowne, Brown could not have forced Westowne to give up its Naturalizer dealership just because Westowne insisted on continuing to carry SAS shoes.) Brown should therefore be estopped to-to what? Westowne is not very clear about this, but the only answer can be--to plead the statute of limitations in a suit under [**7] the dealership law. A defendant who takes steps to prevent the plaintiff from suing within the statute of limitations is equitably estopped to plead it. Hester v. Williams, 117 Wis. 2d 634, 345 N.W.2d 426, 431 \(Wis. 1984\); Poeske v. Estreen, 55 Wis. 2d 238, 198 N.W.2d 625, 628-29 \(Wis. 1972\); Bell v. Employers Mutual Casualty Co., 198 Wis. 2d 347, 541 N.W.2d 824, 834 \(Wis. App. 1995\); Cada v. Baxter Healthcare Corp., 920 F.2d 446, 450-51 \(7th Cir. 1990\); Tiberi v. CIGNA Corp., 89 F.3d 1423, 1429 \(10th Cir. 1996\). But this principle presupposes a suit to which the statute of limitations has been interposed as a defense, in this case a suit under the Wisconsin Fair Dealership Act. Westowne has not sued under that act. We do not think it is permitted to recycle the statutory claim that it failed to make as a common law claim of promissory estoppel in which damages are sought, much as in a suit for legal malpractice, for the loss of the statutory claim. That approach would require speculation about what Westowne's remedies under the dealership law might have been had it sued under that law. Unnecessary speculation: unlike a case of legal malpractice, where the suit the lawyer botched is gone forever, a plaintiff who [**8] claims that the defendant by promises or otherwise prevented him from bringing a timely suit can bring an untimely suit against that defendant on the identical claim on which the timely suit would have been based. HN2↑ To disguise a statutory claim as a claim for promissory estoppel in an unnecessary effort to beat a statute of limitations is a formula for confusion, and the district court is not required to tolerate it. Sams v. United Food & Commercial Workers Int'l Union, 866 F.2d 1380, 1385 \(11th Cir. 1989\).

Westowne makes the alternative argument for promissory estoppel--an argument happily free from any dependence on the unpledged dealership law--that it relied on the promise of the stitch-by-stitch knock-offs by "going pure," that is, by discontinuing [*997] its purchases of SAS shoes. Yet at the same time it argues that it had to go pure because it could not afford to give up the Naturalizer sign. This means that it would have gone pure even if Brown had not promised a perfect substitute. So the promise made no difference. The promise is also the basis for Westowne's claim of misrepresentation, and fails for the same reason. HN3↑ Fraud is not actionable without harm. If, as Westowne itself [**9] asserts, it would have gone pure to retain its dealership, regardless of any representation concerning the SAS knock-offs, those representations caused it no harm. No harm, no tort. Schicker v. Leick, 40 Wis. 2d 295, 162 N.W.2d 66, 69 \(Wis. 1968\); Olympia Hotels Corp. v. Johnson Wax Development Corp., 908 F.2d 1363, 1372 \(7th Cir. 1990\) (applying Wisconsin law).

Westowne has other arrows in its quiver. It claims that Brown violated the trademark license by degrading the Naturalizer trademark by affixing it to the unwearable, unsalable knock-offs. HN4 While a trademark licensee (at least if he has an exclusive license), as well as the trademark's owner, can sue to protect the trademark from infringement, *G.H. Mumm Champagne v. Eastern Wine Corp.*, 142 F.2d 499, 502 \(2d Cir. 1944\) (L. Hand, J.); *Norman M. Morris Corp. v. Weinstein*, 466 F.2d 137, 142 \(5th Cir. 1972\); 1a Jerome Gilson, Trademark Protection and Practice § 816[1][b], pp. 8-360 to 8-361 (1987), he cannot sue the trademark owner for "infringing" the trademark. *Silverstar Enterprises v. Aday*, 537 F. Supp. 236, 240-41 \(S.D. N.Y. 1982\). There is no basis in either the federal or the state law of unfair competition for \*\*10 such a claim. The owner can if he wants, unless contractually committed otherwise, abandon the trademark, dilute it, attach it to goods of inferior quality, attach it to completely different goods-- can, in short, take whatever steps he wants to jeopardize or even completely destroy the trademark. When cases speak of the trademark owner's "duty to ensure the consistency of the trademarked good or service," *Gorenstein Enterprises v. Quality Care-USA, Inc.*, 874 F.2d 431, 435 \(7th Cir. 1989\); see also 2 Thomas J. McCarthy, McCarthy on Trademarks and Unfair Competition § 18.14[1], pp. 18-64, 18-66 (1996), they mean that it is a condition of the continued validity of the trademark, see id., § 18.15, pp. 18-74 to 18-74.1, or a defense to a consumer's claim of having been fooled by the substitution of an inferior good, not that it is a ground for a licensee's being allowed to sue to force the trademark owner to take steps to assure the trademark's continued validity.

We think that Westowne more or less understands all this, and is making solely a contract claim--that the trademark license obligated Brown to keep the Naturalizer mark up to snuff. A licensor might so promise, \*\*11 but this licensor did not. Westowne is asking us to make such a promise an implied term of every trademark licensing agreement, and that would be absurd. It would give licensees comprehensive power over the licensor's business--in this case power to tell Brown what kind or quality of shoes it can manufacture and sell under the Naturalizer label. Few licensors would agree to that, and there is no evidence that Brown is one of them. The office of implied contractual terms is to save contracting parties costs of negotiations by interpolating terms that they are pretty sure to have agreed to had they thought about the matter, not terms that they would be almost sure to reject; for the interpolation of such terms would increase rather than decrease the costs of contracting as parties busied themselves contracting around the interpolated terms. We add that Westowne's trademark claim is inconsistent \*\*\*1464 with its other claims, all of which are premised on the continued potency of the Naturalizer mark.

Last, Westowne has an antitrust claim. It bases this claim--that Brown impaired competition by conditioning its dealers' use of the Naturalizer mark on their agreeing to carry the knock-offs, \*\*12 cf. *Jack Walters & Sons Corp. v. Morton Building, Inc.*, 737 F.2d 698, 704-06 \(7th Cir. 1984\)--on Wisconsin rather than federal antitrust law. Wis. Stat. ch. 133. Under federal law, the claim could not take one step toward first base, since Westowne is unprepared to show that Brown's effort to confine Naturalizer dealers to shoes made by Brown could have \*998 any effect on competition in the shoe business. It could have an effect, maybe, if Naturalizer dealers were the only outlets for SAS shoes in Wisconsin and if having a sign outside your store that says "Naturalizer Dealer" is such a valuable asset that you'll replace your SAS shoes with an unmarketable substitute. Neither condition is plausible, and concerning the first there is not a shred of evidence--not even the self-serving testimony of Westowne's principal, which is the only evidence for the second condition, the immense value of the Naturalizer mark that Brown with extreme perversity is (according to Westowne) doing its best to destroy.

Westowne's hope is that Wisconsin antitrust law is more archaic than federal. Since there is much more federal than state antitrust litigation, a state antitrust case is more likely to \*\*13 remain unrevisited by the court that rendered it and therefore untouched by the winds of change that have been blowing through the antitrust fields in recent decades than a federal antitrust case. Westowne relies on what it hopes is such a case, *Johnson v. Shell Oil Co.*, 274 Wis. 375, 80 N.W.2d 426 \(Wis. 1957\). The defendant refused to allow its dealers to use the Shell trademark in conjunction with the gasoline of its competitors, but did allow them to sell that gasoline from other pumps on its premises, pumps not labeled "Shell." The Supreme Court of Wisconsin held that this arrangement did not violate the state's antitrust law. The holding is obviously of no value to Westowne--in fact is adverse to it--but Westowne likes the standard used by the court--a "partial restraint of trade, where effected for a proper purpose and limited in time and scope and otherwise reasonable[, is] not invalid." 80 N.W.2d at 429. This is the same test that is used for covenants not to compete found in contracts for the sale of a business and in employment contracts. It is a part of the common law of restraint of trade rather than of statutory antitrust law, but Johnson borrowed it for use in interpreting the [**14] state's antitrust statute, as had an earlier case, Ruhland v. King, 154 Wis. 545, 143 N.W. 681 (Wis. 1913). Westowne argues that Brown had an improper, namely an anticompetitive, purpose in forbidding its Naturalizer dealers to carry its competitors' brands, failed to limit the prohibition in time or scope, and, especially considering the lousy quality of the SAS knock-offs, acted unreasonably.

The Johnson case is 40 years old, and Ruhland far older, and since then the Supreme Court of Wisconsin has ruled that HN5[↑] the decisions of the federal courts interpreting federal antitrust law shall control the interpretation of Wisconsin's antitrust law. Grams v. Boss, 97 Wis. 2d 332, 294 N.W.2d 473, 480 (Wis. 1980); Ford Motor Co. v. Lyons, 137 Wis. 2d 397, 405 N.W.2d 354, 367 (Wis. App. 1987). But we need not look beyond Johnson, because it dooms Westowne's antitrust claim. Johnson holds that HN6[↑] a supplier is not required to allow his dealers to use his trademark to designate his competitors' products. Such a requirement would diffuse the goodwill associated with his trademark by associating it with a competitor's product and would jeopardize the trademark by allowing [**15] it to stand for products of different quality.

AFFIRMED.

---

End of Document

Albani v. Southern Ariz. Anesthesia Servs., P.C.

United States District Court for the District of Arizona

January 22, 1997, Decided ; January 27, 1997, Filed

No. CIV 91-588 TUC

Reporter

1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16245 *; 1997-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,927

ROBERT ALBANI, M.D., ET AL v. SOUTHERN ARIZONA ANESTHESIA SERVICES, P.C., ET AL.

Disposition: [*1] SAA's motions denied.

Core Terms

---

monopolize, anesthesia, anesthesiology, contracts, prices, defendants', market power, antitrust, damages, argues, matter of law, Sherman Act, conspiracies, scientific, barriers, parties

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In deciding a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 50, a district court may not overturn a jury's verdict unless there was an absence of substantial evidence presented that could support a finding for the nonmoving party. Substantial evidence is such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion. While the court must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmoving party, it must be mindful of the court of appeals admonition that in the antitrust context, determining what amount of evidence will support a jury verdict and assessing the quality of the evidence from which an inference of illegal action may be drawn takes on a special importance. For a number of reasons, antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in antitrust cases. Consequently, the court must closely scrutinize the evidence in a given case to avoid the danger of improper antitrust condemnations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

To demonstrate an attempt to monopolize, a plaintiff must have proved (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct, with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous propensity of achieving monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN3 Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

While § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, forbids contracts or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce, § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, addresses the actions of single firms that monopolize or attempt to monopolize, as well as conspiracies and combinations to monopolize.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN4 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

It is through evidence of market dominance that the jury may measure the defendants' ability to lessen or destroy competition, and thus threaten the interests protected by the antitrust laws. To demonstrate market power a plaintiff must (1) define the market, (2) show that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market, and (3) show that there are significant barriers to entry and that existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run.

Counsel: For ROBERT ALBANI, MD dba Arizona Anesthesia and Analgesia, JOHN EASA, MD dba Arizona Anesthesia and Analgesia, plaintiffs: Robert Clifford Hackett, Esq, Mohr Hackett Pederson Blakley Randolph & Haga PC, Phoenix, AZ.

For SOUTHERN ARIZONA ANESTHESIA SERVICES, PC, ADMINISTRATIVE SPECIALISTS OF ARIZONA, INCORPORATED, STEVEN H BROWER, MD, BARBARA BROWER, HOWARD L EDGIN, MD, CHARLENE EDGIN, STANLEY E FOUTZ, MD, PAM FOUTZ, J ANTONIO GONZALES, MARC LIEB, J THOMAS RUBBO, MD, LAURA RUBBO, ALLEN SLOAN, MD, JANE DOE SLOAN, RONALD YAKAITIS, MD, CARROLL YAKAITIS, CHARLIE RODRIGUEZ, BARBARA RODRIGUEZ, WILLIAM M COCHRAN, MD, JANE DOE COCHRAN, JOHN W WETHERHOLD, MD, JANE DOE WETHERHOLD, defendants: Gerald S Maltz, Esq, Miller Pitt & McAnally P C, Tucson, AZ.

For SOUTHERN ARIZONA ANESTHESIA SERVICES, PC, ADMINISTRATIVE SPECIALISTS OF ARIZONA, INCORPORATED, STEVEN H BROWER, MD, BARBARA BROWER, HOWARD L EDGIN, MD, CHARLENE EDGIN, STANLEY E FOUTZ, MD, PAM FOUTZ, MARC LIEB, J THOMAS RUBBO, MD, LAURA RUBBO, ALLEN SLOAN, MD, JANE DOE SLOAN, RONALD YAKAITIS, MD, CARROLL YAKAITIS, CHARLIE RODRIGUEZ, BARBARA RODRIGUEZ, defendants: Daniel J McLoon, Jones Day Reavis & Pogue, [*2] Los Angeles, CA.

For SOUTHERN ARIZONA ANESTHESIA SERVICES, PC, STEVEN H BROWER, MD, BARBARA BROWER, HOWARD L EDGIN, MD, CHARLENE EDGIN, STANLEY E FOUTZ, MD, PAM FOUTZ, MARC LIEB, J THOMAS RUBBO, MD, LAURA RUBBO, ALLEN SLOAN, MD, JANE DOE SLOAN, RONALD YAKAITIS, MD, CARROLL YAKAITIS, CHARLIE RODRIGUEZ, BARBARA RODRIGUEZ, defendants: Phillip A Proger, Washington, DC.

For SOUTHERN ARIZONA ANESTHESIA SERVICES, PC, J ANTONIO GONZALES, defendants: John Jeffries Miles, Ober Kaler Grimes & Shriver, Washington, DC.

For SOUTHERN ARIZONA ANESTHESIA SERVICES, PC, ADMINISTRATIVE SPECIALISTS OF ARIZONA, INCORPORATED, STEVEN H BROWER, MD, BARBARA BROWER, HOWARD L EDGIN, MD, CHARLENE

EDGIN, STANLEY E FOUTZ, MD, PAM FOUTZ, J ANTONIO GONZALES, MARC LIEB, J THOMAS RUBBO, MD, LAURA RUBBO, ALLEN SLOAN, MD, JANE DOE SLOAN, RONALD YAKAITIS, MD, CARROLL YAKAITIS, CHARLIE RODRIGUEZ, BARBARA RODRIGUEZ, WILLIAM M COCHRAN, MD, JANE DOE COCHRAN, JOHN W WETHERHOLD, MD, JANE DOE WETHERHOLD, defendants: Donald E Dickerman, Esq, Dickerman & Marvin PC, Tucson, AZ.

For SOUTHERN ARIZONA ANESTHESIA SERVICES, PC, STEVEN H BROWER, MD, BARBARA BROWER, HOWARD L EDGIN, MD, CHARLENE EDGIN, STANLEY E FOUTZ, [*3] MD, PAM FOUTZ, MARC LIEB, J THOMAS RUBBO, MD, LAURA RUBBO, ALLEN SLOAN, MD, JANE DOE SLOAN, RONALD YAKAITIS, MD, CARROLL YAKAITIS, CHARLIE RODRIGUEZ, BARBARA RODRIGUEZ, defendants: Tracy P Nuckolls, Esq, Health Partners of Southern Arizona, Tucson, AZ.

For J ANTONIO GONZALES, defendant: Bob Schwartz, Tucson, AZ.

For ROBERT LOUIS SCHWARTZ, intervenor: Dennis J Clancy, Esq, The Law Firm of Raven & Kirschner PC, Tucson, AZ.

Judges: WEINER, J.<sup>1</sup>

Opinion by: WEINER

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Plaintiffs, Robert Albani, M.D., John Easa, M.D. and Arizona Anesthesia Associates (Collectively "AAA"), brought this suit against Southern Arizona Anesthesia Services, P.C., et al. (collectively SAA) alleging violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, 2, Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, and Arizona common law. The action involves the market for the provision of anesthesia services in Tucson, Arizona. AAA alleged that through its use of exclusive contracts, price differentials, control of hospital anesthesia departments and erection of [*4] entry barriers, SAA exercised market power. A bifurcated jury trial resulted in a defense verdict on all counts, with the sole exception of plaintiffs' Sherman Act Section 2 attempted monopolization claim. Presently before the court are motions by SAA for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, for summary judgment on the pending damage phase of the trial, and to strike the testimony of AAA's expert. For the reasons which follow, the motions will be denied.

We begin our analysis by noting some serious concerns with the jury's result. In effect, the jury found no improper conduct on SAA's part to support the finding of a conspiracy, combination or contract in restraint of trade. Nor did the jury find that SAA monopolized the market or conspired to monopolize the market. The jury did find, however, that this same conduct constituted an attempt to monopolize. SAA insists that these verdicts are inconsistent, and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law, because the jury found the actions which presumably constituted the anticompetitive conduct underlying the attempted monopolization claim was not illegal. After a thorough review of the record and the briefs of the parties, and [*5] applying the standard for deciding Rule 50 motions, we conclude that the verdict on the Section 2 claim cannot be overturned.

HN1 [↑] In deciding a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 50, a district court may not overturn a jury's verdict unless there was an absence of substantial evidence presented that could support a finding for the nonmoving party. Los Angeles Land Co. v. Brunswick Corp., 6 F.3d 1422, 1425 (9th Cir. 1993). Substantial evidence is such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion. Id., quoting Syufy Enters. v.

---

<sup>1</sup> United States District Judge for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, sitting by designation.

American Multicinema Inc., 793 F.2d 990, 992 (9th Cir. 1986). While we must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmoving party, we are not unmindful of the Court of Appeals admonition that

In the antitrust context, determining what amount of evidence will support a jury verdict and assessing the quality of the evidence from which an inference of illegal action may be drawn takes on a special importance. For a number of reasons, "antitrust law" limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence [in antitrust cases]." ... Consequently, the court must closely scrutinize the evidence in [*6] a given case to avoid the danger of improper antitrust condemnations.

The Jeanery, Inc. v. James Jeans, Inc., 849 F.2d 1148, 1152 (9th Cir. 1988) (internal citations omitted). Applying this standard, we find that, while the proofs adduced by AAA at trial were strongly contested and hardly overwhelming, they were sufficient to support the jury's Section 2 verdict.

HN2[] To demonstrate an attempt to monopolize, a plaintiff must have proved (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct, with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous propensity of achieving monopoly power. Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 (1993). Although SAA's review of the evidence acknowledges that AAA introduced evidence on all these elements, it essentially argues that the jury misconstrued the evidence in finding for AAA on the Section 2 attempt claim. Acknowledging that SAA's inconsistent jury verdict argument has some strength, we believe the verdicts can be reconciled since the elements of the two Sections are distinct.

HN3[] While § 1 of the Sherman Act forbids contracts or conspiracies in restraint of trade [*7] or commerce, § 2 addresses the actions of single firms that monopolize or attempt to monopolize, as well as conspiracies and combinations to monopolize. Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 454, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 (1993). Thus, given sufficient evidence on the three elements of Section 2, it would not be inconsistent for the jury to have concluded that plaintiffs made out a case under Section 2, but not Section 1, if it believed the plaintiffs failed to establish that the other entities with which SAA dealt; i.e. the HMOs and other third party payors, did not have the requisite intent to join a conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws. Section 2 requires no such intent by other parties and focuses solely upon the conduct of the defendants. Accordingly, as we must attempt to reconcile inconsistent verdicts wherever possible, we find the mere fact that the jury's verdict was split on the two claims does not render the Section 2 verdict unreasonable as a matter of law.<sup>2</sup>

[*8] Reviewing the evidence in the light most favorable to AAA, we find there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could conclude the plaintiffs showed anticompetitive conduct and the specific intent to monopolize. The problem with SAA's argument on this point is that its recitation of the evidence placed before the jury fails to account for the reasonable inferences the jury could have taken, and asks that we ignore them as well. For example, SAA concedes that evidence of its merger activities was introduced, but argues it could not constitute predatory conduct because the entities acquired by SAA "were disintegrating without any impetus from SAAS". To accept this argument would be a clear intrusion on the province of the jury. AAA placed the evidence of mergers before the jury to establish SAA's intent to eliminate competition and show its intent to dominate the market. Combined with other statements which, although refuted by SAA, would tend to show an improper motive of attempting to eliminate competition, the jury was within its province in determining from the totality of the evidence that SAA engaged in anticompetitive conduct with the specific intent to monopolize the market [*9] for anesthesia services in Tucson. It was for the jury to accept or reject defendants' argument that it had a legitimate business justification for the mergers. On a Rule 50 motion, we must respect the inferences drawn by the jury that defendants' motivation was otherwise.

<sup>2</sup> Coupled with their response to defendants' motion is a motion by the plaintiffs pursuant to Rule 15(b) to amend their Second Amended Complaint to conform to the evidence adduced at trial. Essentially, this motion seeks to make clear that all the defendants' overt acts that made up the Section 1 claim constituted predatory conduct under Section 2. Rule 15(b) is intended to promote the objective of deciding cases on their merits rather than in terms of the relative pleading skills of counsel, or on the basis of a statement of the claim that was made at a preliminary point. Consequently, courts should interpret subdivision (b) liberally and permit an amendment whenever doing so will effectuate the underlying purpose of the rule. 6A Wright, et al., Federal Practice & Procedure, § 1491. Accordingly, the motion will be granted.

SAA likewise argues that its "control" over hospital anesthesia departments was a simple result of its size, rather than evidence of its specific intent to erect entry barriers and decrease competition. It points to a stipulation by the parties that hospital boards of directors, rather than departments, had the power to grant permanent privileges. Again this argument ignores other evidence of record that the departments granted provisional privileges, and that its control of the departments permitted SAA to "harass" surgeons into using only SAA doctors and to control staffing.

The final element of the attempt claim, a dangerous probability of success, generally requires a definition of the relevant market and examination of market power. Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 455. HN4<sup>1</sup> It is through evidence of market dominance that the jury may measure the defendants' ability to lessen or destroy competition, *Id. at [*10] 456*, and thus threaten the interests protected by the antitrust laws. To demonstrate market power a plaintiff must (1) define the market, (2) show that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market, and (3) show that there are significant barriers to entry and that existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run. Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1434 \(9th Cir. 1995\).<sup>3</sup>

[*11] The evidence construed most favorably to plaintiffs was that SAA controlled as much as 71% of the market for private practice anesthesiology in Tucson, defined as the provision of services at the five private hospitals servicing Tucson; 100% of anesthesia services at the two large surgical outpatient facilities servicing Tucson; and 100% of the market at the smaller miscellaneous facilities. While the parties stipulated that Tucson was the relevant geographic market, there was a dispute over the definition of the relevant product market. Plaintiffs defined the product as the private practice of anesthesiology, which excluded anesthesiology services provided at Kino Hospital, the public hospital in Tucson owned by Pima County, and at the University Medical Center, which is owned by the University of Arizona. SAA defined the product as all anesthesia services performed in Tucson. Under its definition, SAA controlled between 40 and 44% of the market. For the purpose of the instant motion, we must accept that the definition proffered by plaintiffs, and the evidence to support it, was accepted by the jury since that definition was not invalid as a matter of law.

A "market" is a group [*12] of sellers or producers who have the "actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business". Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1434. The evidence of record showed that anesthesiology services performed at Kino and UMC were exclusively provided by public salaried staff anesthesiologists at Kino and the university medical faculty at UMC, and thus were not open to SAA or AAA. The evidence also showed that the private anesthesiology industry recognized the remaining five private hospitals and the outpatient facilities as the relevant market. The jury was well within its province to determine that Kino and UMC were not part of the relevant market because there was no potential ability by either party to take that business away from the other. Thus plaintiffs presented substantial evidence to demonstrate the first two criteria of market power.

Plaintiffs also presented substantial evidence to show that there were significant barriers to entry into the market for anesthesiology in Tucson. No other entity other than SAA and Old Pueblo Associates ever achieved higher than a 5% share of the relevant market. Exclusive contracts with HMOs and other third party payors, SAA's [*13] control of the hospital departments, the State's education and licensing requirements and capitol and equipment costs were all shown by the evidence to be barriers to entry. Indeed, the evidence showed that no new competitors entered the market after 1988, the period of time plaintiffs argued to the jury that SAA exercised market power. Thus, the evidence before the jury was sufficient to establish all the elements of the Section 2 attempt claim. Again, although we harbor some trepidations about the result reached by the jury, given the record presented on all these points, it would not be appropriate for the court to overturn this verdict. Accordingly, SAA's motion for judgment as a matter of law must be denied.

<sup>3</sup> We note that the Court of Appeals used the conjunctive "and", rather than the disjunctive "or" when restating the third criterion. The authority cited by the Rebel Oil court, Ryko Mfg. Co. v. Eden Serv., 823 F.2d 1215, 1232 \(8th Cir. 1987\) and Ball Memorial Hosp., Inc. v. Mutual Hosp. Ins., 784 F.2d 1325, 1335 \(7th Cir. 1986\), both state the test in the disjunctive, i.e., plaintiff must show significant barriers either to the entry of new competitors or to increased output by existing competitors. We need not ponder this discrepancy at any length. In the instant situation, where we deal with the provision of a licensed professional service, entry barriers and the ability to increase output are the same. In cases dealing with the manufacture of goods, an increase in output is dependent upon idle capacity or the ability of competitors to quickly retool existing capacity to provide the goods in short supply due to the actions of the monopolist. An increase in capacity to provide a licensed professional service is dependent primarily upon staffing. Thus, while anesthesiologists use machines and other equipment in the provision of their services, the ability to increase output is limited primarily by the entry barriers we discuss below.

For similar reasons, we will deny the defendants' motion for summary judgment on the damages phase of this case, with leave to renew after plaintiffs have presented their proofs. The action was bifurcated before the jury and the issue of damages remains to be tried. SAA seeks summary judgment arguing that AAA has failed to demonstrate any damages that are related to the Sherman Act Section 2 claim, upon which they prevailed. Rather, SAA contends, all the damages evidence [*14] will relate to the claims upon which the jury found no liability, and thus is insufficient as a matter of law.

Specifically, SAA argues that one of the underlying assumptions contained in the damage study prepared by AAA's expert Glenn Wilt, Ph.D. is that the contracts between SAA and various HMOs constituted unlawful conspiracies in violation of Sherman Act Section 1, a claim rejected by the jury. In response to the motion, AAA has submitted an affidavit of Dr. Wilt in which he avers he did not make such an assumption. He claims he analyzed all of SAA's "practice patterns" which resulted in AAA being denied access to certain patient populations. He avers he referred generally to this conduct as "market restrictions", intending to reference any illegal conduct of the defendants, not just putative violations of Section 1.

Having reviewed the moving papers and Dr. Wilt's affidavit, we will deny the motion at this time with leave to renew at the close of AAA's damages case. In so doing, we admonish all counsel that they must specifically tie all damage evidence to the one claim remaining in this action. We will not permit either party to retry the claims already adjudicated during [*15] the liability phase.

Dr. Wilt was never deposed. Although we assume he will testify from his expert report, it is not clear at this point that AAA should be precluded from presenting damage evidence to the jury. As AAA points out, the Supreme Court has repeatedly held that in the absence of more precise proof, the factfinder may "conclude as a matter of just and reasonable inference from the proof of defendants' wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiffs' business, and from the evidence of the decline in prices, profits and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, that defendants' wrongful acts have caused damage to the plaintiffs.... Juries are allowed to act upon probable and inferential, as well as direct and positive proof....

Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, 395 U.S. 100, 124, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 (1969), citing Bigelow v. RKO Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251, 264, 90 L. Ed. 652, 66 S. Ct. 574 (1946). We believe it prudent to permit the AAA an opportunity to tie the expert evidence to the Section 2 claim upon which it prevailed. However, in order to ensure that the evidence is relevant to the one remaining claim, [*16] in the order which follows, we will direct that all damage experts be deposed at the same time prior to the damages trial, so that each will know the testimony of the others and insure there are no surprises during their trial testimony.

SAA also argues that there is no evidence that, in the absence of SAA's exclusive contracts with the HMOs, these HMOs would have contracted with the AAA. Even were this true, granting a motion on this ground would be an improper invasion of the province of the jury. First, we note that the evidence showed AAA had an exclusive contract with the Department of Corrections to provide anesthesia services and also included statements by Dr. Easa that the only reason AAA did not get HMO contracts was the interference by SAA. While this evidence was disputed, the jury was certainly entitled to consider it. Second, we cannot discount the inference advanced by AAA, that but for the defendants' conduct, AAA would have grown large enough to service the HMO's needs. While the HMOs are not parties before the court, and thus we cannot grant injunctive relief that binds them to doing business with the plaintiffs, AAA is entitled to present evidence of money damages [*17] arising from its inability to get HMO contracts. Of course, such evidence may not be speculative and we leave open to the time of trial a final ruling on this issue.<sup>4</sup> Accordingly, the motion for summary judgment on damages must be denied with leave to renew at the close of AAA's case.

[*18] Finally, SAA renews its motion to strike the trial testimony of AAA's liability expert, Dr. Ronald Vogel. It argues that his opinions were devoid of any scientific knowledge or methodology. Because the objection was not timely raised at trial, we find the issue has been waived. Dr. Vogel testified on Wednesday, May 15, 1996. Defendants asked him no questions on his qualifications. Dr. Vogel then testified without objection to his opinions regarding the market for anesthesiology services in Tucson and a "pricing study" he conducted, drawing references to the market for similar services in Florida. He concluded his testimony that day. SAA made no motion to strike his testimony at that time. AAA rested its case on Friday, May 17. At that time, SAA moved to strike portions of the testimony of several witnesses, but did not make a similar request regarding Dr. Vogel's expert testimony. SAA did not move to strike Vogel's testimony until Monday, May 20. At that time, AAA had rested its case and presumably Dr. Vogel was no longer available. At oral argument, defendants explained that it took the weekend for the problem with Dr. Vogel's testimony, i.e. its alleged complete lack of scientific [*19] foundation, to "sink in".

If their problem with Dr. Vogel was so fundamental, we scarcely think it should have taken defendants five days to realize the testimony was objectionable. SAA had at least three occasions to object to Dr. Vogel: when he was qualified as an expert, at the close of his direct testimony, and at the close of AAA's case in chief. Instead they waited to the following week to raise the issue for the first time. It was counsel's responsibility to bring the issue to the court's attention at a time when the plaintiffs could have cured any defect in Dr. Vogel's testimony. See generally, Marbled Murrelet v. Babbitt, 83 F.3d 1060, 1066 (9th Cir. 1996). Making their objection after the plaintiff rested deprived them that opportunity.

Even if the issue was not waived, we do not think that Vogel's testimony was subject to be stricken. Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469, 113 S. Ct. 2786 (1993) requires that an expert's testimony reflect scientific knowledge derived from the scientific method to establish evidentiary reliability. SAA bases its argument on Vogel's statements on cross examination that he did not directly investigate [*20] the pricing structure of anesthesiology services in Florida, but instead inferred that the prices there were close to the Medicare established prices because of that State's large population of elderly. Rather than directly investigating raw date, Vogel made his inference from published statistics.

The fact that Vogel inferred results from published statistics does not violate the Daubert standard. Daubert does not require that an expert personally conduct research to accumulate the data upon which his opinion is based. The use of recognized statistical compilations is part of the scientific method. So to is the process of inference. Indeed this may be the only way to reach conclusions on subjects that are not directly observable. Vogel's testimony was that he conducted a study of SAA's pricing structure, finding that it charged twenty-four different prices. He also looked at SAA's market share and concluded that its ability to charge differentiated prices was due to market power. While defendants were well within their bounds to challenge Vogel's inferences on cross examination, which they clearly did, this was an issue of weight, not admissibility. Accordingly, the motion [*21] to strike will also be denied.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>4</sup>We observe in passing that, to a great extent, the "real" parties in interest in this matter are the HMO's and third party payors who let the contracts for the provision of anesthesia services. Plaintiffs brought this suit presumably to get a bigger piece of that market. Given the jury's verdict on the conspiracy claims, it is problematic whether plaintiffs could have received injunctive relief against the HMOs even if they been parties. We wait to see how plaintiffs will prove to the jury they would have received a part of this income stream, but for the conduct of the defendants, since the HMOs were free to contract with whomever they chose to provide the services they required. Anything less than direct testimony that the HMOs were prepared to give them contracts, but for the defendants' illegal conduct, might not be sufficient. It is not enough to ask the jury to speculate; plaintiffs must demonstrate actual antitrust injury.

United States v. Time Warner

United States District Court for the District of Columbia

January 22, 1997, Decided ; January 22, 1997, FILED

Misc. Action No.94-338 (HHG)

Reporter

1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2752 *; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,702

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Petitioner, v. TIME WARNER INC., et al., Respondents.

Disposition: [*1] Petition to enforce the civil investigative demands granted.

Core Terms

---

music video, music, antitrust, exporters, investigate, rights, exemption, licenses, price-fixing, programming, anti trust law, domestic, broadcast, subpoena, boycott, effects, Press, respondents', commerce, legislative history, joint venture, prerecorded, programmers, television, violations, documents, worldwide, markets, comity

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Administrative Law > Agency Investigations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Search Warrants > Probable Cause > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Wage & Hour Laws > Administrative Proceedings > Enforcement Provisions

Administrative Law > ... > Scope of Authority > Methods of Investigation > Subpoenas

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Subpoenas

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > Search Warrants > General Overview Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Wage & Hour Laws > Administrative Proceedings > Investigative Authority

HN1[] Administrative Law, Agency Investigations

In contrast to the showing of probable cause required for issuance of a search warrant, a court may enforce an administrative subpoena upon a showing only that the investigation is authorized by Congress, is for a purpose Congress can order, and the documents sought are relevant to the inquiry.

Administrative Law > ... > Scope of Authority > Methods of Investigation > Subpoenas

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > Investigations

HN2 Methods of Investigation, Subpoenas

There is little, if any, difference between the standards that have been traditionally applied in subpoena enforcement cases and those that should be applied to civil investigative demands under the Antitrust Civil Process Act.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > Investigations

HN3 Separation of Powers, Jurisdiction

Barring a patent lack of jurisdiction, courts do not uphold jurisdictional challenges to civil investigative demands.

Administrative Law > ... > Scope of Authority > Methods of Investigation > Subpoenas

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > Investigations

Criminal Law & Procedure > Commencement of Criminal Proceedings > Grand Juries > General Overview

HN4 Methods of Investigation, Subpoenas

Courts indicate the standard for enforcement of regulatory subpoenas is the same as that applied to grand jury investigations. The Justice Department is to be given wide latitude when issuing civil investigative demands as the unmistakable purpose of the Antitrust Civil Process Act is to facilitate the Justice Department's efforts to obtain evidence during the course of a civil investigation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

Under the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act, conduct is exempt from the Sherman Act if it does not have a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on United States commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. § 6a.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Entities > Cable Systems > Cable & Video Competition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN6** [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

Foreign corporations are not exempt from the Sherman Act if their export-oriented conduct has the direct effect of injuring competing United States exporters.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

**HN7** [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

The Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act confers jurisdiction for a foreign corporation's boycott activity that excludes United States exports.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

**HN8** [down] Horizontal Refusals to Deal, Boycotts

While not every price-fix is a boycott, the fact that boycott activity implements a price-fixing arrangement does not preclude antitrust jurisdiction over such activity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > Investigations

**HN9** [down] US Department of Justice Actions, Investigations

In determining whether a request for information under a civil investigative demand (CID) is unreasonable, the question is whether the demand is unduly burdensome or unreasonably broad. The burden of demonstrating that the CIDs are unreasonable is on the subpoenaed party.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Executive Controls

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Act of State Doctrine

HN10 [ ] Separation of Powers, Executive Controls

The executive branch, of which the United States Justice Department is a part, is charged with determining whether the importance of antitrust enforcement outweighs any relevant foreign policy concerns. It is not a court's role to second-guess the executive branch's judgment as to the proper role of comity concerns in this area.

Counsel: Counsel for Government: Robert P. Faulkner, Antitrust Division, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, D.C.

Counsel for Time Warner Inc.: Stuart Robinowitz, Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison, New York, NY. Robert D. Joffe, Cravath, Swaine & Moore, New York, NY.

Counsel for Sony Corporation of America: James J. Calder, Rosenman & Colin, New York, NY.

Counsel for Bertelsmann Inc.: Robert E. Bloch, Mayer, Brown & Platt, Washington, D.C.

Counsel for EMI Music Inc.: William D'Amico, Chadbourne & Parke, Washington, D.C.

Counsel for Polygram Holding, Inc.: Harvey I. Saferstein, Steven A. Marenberg, Stephanie Kaufman Hernand Irell & Manella, Los Angeles, CA.

Judges: HAROLD H. GREENE, United States District Judge

Opinion by: HAROLD H. GREENE

Opinion

---

OPINION

Before the Court is the petition of the United States to enforce civil investigative demands (CIDs) issued by the Department of Justice under the Antitrust Civil Process Act (ACPA). 15 U.S.C. § 1312 \(1994\). The CIDs seek information located in the United States relating to "restraints or monopolization of domestic and international markets for cable, [*2] wire and satellite-delivered music programming through price-fixing cartels and overbroad joint ventures." Respondents are the world's major producers of prerecorded music and music videos: Time Warner Inc., Sony Corporation of America, MCA, PolyGram Holding Inc., EMI Music Inc., and Bertelsmann, Inc. Time Warner is an American company; the other respondents are American subsidiaries of foreign parents.

The basic issue is whether under the circumstances here presented the United States is entitled to investigate the factual basis for possible antitrust claims. Under the ACPA, the Department of Justice has the authority to conduct such an investigation if it has "reason to believe" that the requested information is "relevant to a civil antitrust investigation." 15 U.S.C. § 1312.

Respondents seek to set aside the CIDs insofar as they relate to their foreign activities, contending that the Department lacks jurisdiction to investigate this conduct for three reasons: (1) respondents are exempt from the antitrust laws under the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act (FTAIA), 15 U.S.C. § 6a; (2) the transactions sought to be investigated are moot; and (3) principles of comity bar the [*3] Department's investigation.

I

Factual Background

The CIDs seek information related to an antitrust investigation of respondents' potentially anticompetitive conduct in the United States and abroad. The Justice Department claims that such an investigation might uncover possible violations of the Sherman Act in the form of a worldwide price-fixing conspiracy or a monopoly of music programming markets with respect to several areas, as follows.

First, the major focus of the antitrust investigation is on access to prerecorded music and music videos. Respondents control at least 80 per cent of the market for prerecorded music<sup>1</sup> and music videos. They market their music videos to music video programmers who broadcast the videos over cable and satellite television. The music companies control the intellectual property rights that attach to their prerecorded music and music videos. These property rights vary from country to country, but in many foreign countries it is not permitted to broadcast a music video without a license for the right to perform the video--the "public performance right"--typically held by the music company.

[*4] Respondents control various "performance rights societies," which act as collective licensing bodies for performance rights. At the time the government issued its civil investigative demands, respondents licensed the rights to their music and music videos exclusively through such societies, including both national performance right societies, such as Video Performance, Ltd. (VPL) in Britain, and umbrella international copyright societies, such as the International Federation of the Phonographic Industry, (IFPI). In order to broadcast any music videos produced by respondents on their networks outside of the United States, music programming services (such as MTV or Country Music Television) must pay a blanket licensing fee to the national performance rights society of the country in which the music videos would be broadcast (although such videos could be broadcast for free on networks in the United States). The Justice Department seeks to investigate whether these performance rights societies have impeded U.S. exporters of music videos and original non-music programming (i.e., traditional television programming) from entering foreign markets.

Respondents claim that VPL and several [*5] other performance rights societies in Europe have been restructured so that they no longer hold the exclusive rights to their members' music and music videos, and that foreign record companies may now negotiate individually with music programmers. However, because respondents have refused to produce documents related to their foreign conduct, the Department asserts that it is unable to determine precisely how the performance right societies have been restructured.<sup>2</sup> Indeed, based upon an examination of some documents related to the restructuring of VPL, the Department claims to have reason to believe that the exclusivity may not have been terminated. It appears to be certain that access to the withheld documents would enable the Department to investigate "the existence, scope and likely permanence of such restructurings, the existence or likelihood of de facto exclusivity, and the possibility of continued collusion through participation in such societies." Petitioner's Memorandum in Support of Motion to Set a Hearing Date, at 5.

[*6] Second, the Department seeks to investigate the European performance rights society, Phonographic Performance, Ltd. (PPL), that collectively licenses broadcasting rights to digital radio programmers and digital radio programming joint ventures formed by respondents. The Department posits that these activities may have raised the price of foreign and domestic digital radio broadcasting rights and reduced United States exports of digital radio programming.<sup>3</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> Prerecorded music consists of records, tapes, and compact discs.

<sup>2</sup> Of course, the Court is likewise unable to do so.

<sup>3</sup> Since the Justice Department issued the CIDs at issue, Congress enacted a compulsory digital radio licensing system pursuant to which, in the absence of an agreement between a licensor and licensee, domestic licenses are set by arbitration. Digital Performance Right in Sound Recordings Act of 1995, (codified at 17 U.S.C. § 115). Accordingly, the Court is requiring that the CIDs shall be modified to preclude investigation into any effects, occurring after the effective date of this Act, of the digital radio performance rights society on the price of domestic digital radio broadcasting rights. However, for the reasons outlined infra, the Justice Department may investigate the effect of the digital radio-related activities on U.S. exports of digital radio programming.

[*7] Third, the Department also seeks to inquire into joint ventures for programming services. One such joint venture, formed to produce a United States music video channel, has been terminated since the CIDs were issued, and respondents argue that any such investigation into this venture therefore is moot. However, the Department seeks to investigate also whether respondents are likely to re-form a similar joint venture in the United States, as has apparently been reported in the music industry press, and whether respondents have agreed to provide exclusive licenses for music videos to this venture in order to boycott competitors such as MTV. See, e.g., Brett Atwood, Majors Eye New Options for Vid Channel, THE BILLBOARD, July 22, 1995. The Department also claims to be concerned that American programmers may have been denied access to music videos in an Asian venture formed by some of respondents.

Fourth, the Department seeks to investigate possible antitrust violations in various worldwide license agreements entered into by some of the respondents that may have extracted higher than competitive fees for such licenses from American programmers, and it has submitted to the Court [*8] one such worldwide agreement. See Exhibit 1B to United States' Reply in Support of Petition to Enforce CIDs, December 22, 1994 (filed under seal).

II

General Legal Principles

Oklahoma Press Publishing Co. v. Walling, 327 U.S. 186, 209, 90 L. Ed. 614, 66 S. Ct. 494 (1946), the seminal case on administrative subpoenas, held that, HN1[ in contrast to the showing of probable cause required for issuance of a search warrant, a court may enforce an administrative subpoena upon a showing only that "the investigation is authorized by Congress, is for a purpose Congress can order, and the documents sought are relevant to the inquiry." Oklahoma Press concerned the authority of the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor to issue subpoenas duces tecum to secure evidence in an investigation of a possible violation of the Fair Labor Standards Act by a publishing company. The company refused to comply, but the Supreme Court held that "Congress has authorized the Administrator, rather than the district courts in the first instance, to determine the question of coverage in the preliminary investigation of possibly existing violations." Id. at 214.

Judge [*9] June Green of this Court previously held that HN2[ there is "little, if any, difference between the standards that have been traditionally applied in subpoena enforcement cases such as Oklahoma Press . . . and those that should be applied to CIDs under the ACPA." Australia/Eastern U.S.A. Shipping Conference v. United States, 1982-1 Tr. Cas. (CCH) P64,721, at 74,063 (D.D.C. 1981). The undersigned agrees with this statement of the principle.

Like this case, which involves an asserted exemption under the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act for foreign conduct that has no substantial effect on domestic commerce, Australia/Eastern involved a Justice Department investigation into alleged antitrust violations <sup>4</sup> which had been given statutory exemption from the antitrust laws in some circumstances. The court ruled that because "it is possible that factual development proceeding from the investigation will uncover non-exempt conduct, the CIDs should be enforced." Id. at 74,063.

[*10] The short of it is that, HN3[ barring a patent lack of jurisdiction, courts have not upheld jurisdictional challenges to CIDs. Respondents rely essentially only on an out-of-context snippet of the legislative history of the ACPA. The House Report on this statute indicates that "CID recipients may . . . refuse to comply with any CID if the Division has no jurisdiction to conduct an investigation—which will be the case if the activities at issue enjoy a clear exemption for the antitrust laws." H.R. Rep. No. 1343, 94th Cong., 2d Sess. 11. However, the same House Report goes on to state: the "Committee stresses that the scope of many antitrust exemptions is not precisely clear . . . In these many cases, the applicability of an asserted exemption may well be a central issue in the case. If so, the mere assertion of the exemption should not be allowed to halt the investigation." Id. at n. 30. So, too, here, it would be premature to halt the investigation unless it is clear that the Antitrust Division has no jurisdiction to investigate this conduct. This, patently, is not the case.

---

<sup>4</sup> Those violations involved the ocean shipping industry.

Respondents argue that the government must affirmatively establish the basis for its subject matter jurisdiction [*11] in order to conduct an investigation. But this would rewrite Oklahoma Press and the legislative history of the ACPA, both of which suggest that HN4<sup>1</sup> the standard for enforcement of regulatory subpoenas is the same as that applied to grand jury investigations. Oklahoma Press, 327 U.S. at 216 (citing Blair v. United States, 250 U.S. 273, 282, 63 L. Ed. 979, 39 S. Ct. 468 (1919)); Associated Container Transp. (Australia) Ltd. v. United States, 705 F.2d 53, 58 (2d Cir. 1983) ("the House report accompanying the 1976 amendments to the ACPA reveals a preference for the less stringent grand jury subpoena standard"). The grand jury historically has had the "authority and jurisdiction to investigate the facts in order to determine the question whether the facts show a case within [its] jurisdiction." Blair, 250 U.S. at 283. And as the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has said, "the ACPA's legislative history indicates that the Justice Department is to be given wide latitude when issuing CIDs, . . . [and] the unmistakable purpose of the ACPA was to facilitate the Justice Department's efforts to obtain evidence during the course of a civil investigation." Associated [*12] Container, 705 F.2d at 58.

Although the Oklahoma Press doctrine does not require the Department to establish its ultimate subject matter jurisdiction at the outset of its investigation, respondents argue that the Department does not have the authority to conduct an unlimited fishing expedition. This is clearly true. However, for the reasons cited supra, this situation is far from that.

The Court now turns to the one issue which respondents have expressly identified as a possible exemption under the antitrust laws: respondents' foreign activities.

III

Foreign Activities

HN5<sup>1</sup> Under the FTAIA, conduct is exempt from the Sherman Act if it does not have a "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on United States commerce. 15 U.S.C. § 6a. Respondents argue that even if one assumes the Department's assertions are true--that the performance right societies operate as price-fixing cartels--the Justice Department does not have jurisdiction to investigate this conduct because respondents' conduct abroad produces merely "ordinary" export effects. This argument is grounded in a reference in the House Report on the FTAIA: "[A] price-fixing conspiracy directed solely [*13] to exported products or services absent a spillover effect on the domestic marketplace . . . would normally not have the requisite effects on domestic or import conduct." H.R. Rep. No. 686, 97th Cong. 2d Sess. 10 (1982). Respondents argue that "normally" refers to the "ordinary" effects of price-fixing, and that accordingly, the FTAIA confers jurisdiction over foreign price-fixing only in the exceptional case when there is a "spillover effect" in domestic markets, such as was true with respect to the OPEC cartel.

However, neither the plain language of the FTAIA, which does not identify particular categories of exempted conduct, nor its legislative history considered in full supports respondents' argument about the restrictive scope of the FTAIA. The purportedly dispositive sentence about "spillover" effects appears in a section of the legislative history referring to the standing of injured foreign buyers, not injured U.S. exporters. Moreover, as the late Professor Areeda (formerly of counsel to respondent PolyGram Holding, Inc. in this matter) noted in his treatise:

... this conclusion [that "normally" excludes from the U.S. antitrust laws all "ordinary" export effects] [*14] is not absolutely certain, for the paragraph containing the "normally" quote is followed immediately by . . .

"If such solely export-oriented conduct affects export commerce of another person doing business in the United States . . . [jurisdiction is preserved] insofar as there is injury to that person. Thus a domestic exporter is assured a remedy under our antitrust laws for injury caused by a competing United States exporter. But a foreign firm whose non-domestic operations were [thus injured] . . . would have no remedy under our antitrust laws."

Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P236', at 337 (1996 supp.) (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 686, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. at 10-11 (1982)).

In short it is clear that HN6[<sup>15</sup>] respondents are not exempt from the Sherman Act if their export-oriented conduct had the direct effect of injuring competing U.S. exporters. This is the question that the Justice Department is in the midst of investigating: Did foreign price-fixing affect access to music videos and prerecorded music; and if so, did such price-fixing injure American exporters, such as Country Music Television, which provide music programming services abroad by beaming their signal [*15] unchanged from the United States to foreign countries?

This case is unlike Eurim-Pharm GmbH v. Pfizer Inc., 593 F. Supp. 1102 (S.D.N.Y. 1984), where the district court dismissed a complaint for failing to allege any effect on U.S. trade or commerce. The plaintiff in Pfizer argued that defendants' activities had a "spillover effect" on domestic commerce, but the plaintiff could not allege any facts causally linking a price increase in the United States with the defendants' foreign conduct. Here, as outlined above, the Justice Department has identified several possible effects on United States commerce from respondents' foreign activities: (1) by fixing prices and thereby increasing the price for music videos abroad, the copyright societies' collective licensing scheme may have delayed or deterred American exporters from entering foreign markets; (2) these copyright societies may have limited exports of non-music, traditional television programming (such as "Beavis and Butt-head"); and (3) respondents may have extracted higher than competitive fees for world-wide licenses. The Department's conclusions are, of course, speculative at this stage because respondents have precluded [*16] them from examining documents related to these activities. The point of the CIDs is to determine whether the facts support the government's theory.

Even if this Court were to agree with respondents that the "ordinary" effects of foreign price-fixing are exempt from the Sherman Act, HN7[<sup>16</sup>] the FTAIA would still confer jurisdiction for boycott activity that excludes other United States exports. See Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P236', at 338. The Department alleges that these performance-rights societies engaged in boycott activity by collectively refusing to deal except through a common agent and collectively refusing to grant world-wide licenses. See Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 118, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 (1969) (conspiring to deny licenses to foreign intellectual property rights is a group boycott). Further, respondents allegedly formed downstream programming services in Europe and Asia, to which they may have agreed to grant exclusive music video rights--a group boycott that may violate the antitrust laws. See United States v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc., 507 F. Supp. 412, 428 (S.D.N.Y. 1980). Finally, although the [*17] Court recognizes HN8[<sup>17</sup>] that not every price-fix is a boycott, Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, 509 U.S. 764, 800-811, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612, 113 S. Ct. 2891 (1993)(opinion of Scalia, J.), the fact that boycott activity implements a price-fixing arrangement does not preclude jurisdiction over such activity. See F.T.C. v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n, 493 U.S. 411, 423, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851, 110 S. Ct. 768 (1990).

Interwoven with respondents' jurisdictional arguments is the claim that compliance with the CIDs would be burdensome. HN9[<sup>18</sup>] "The question is whether the demand is unduly burdensome or unreasonably broad." F.T.C. v. Texaco, Inc., 180 U.S. App. D.C. 390, 555 F.2d 862, 882 (D.C. Cir.) (emphasis in original), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 974 (1977). The burden of demonstrating that the CIDs are unreasonable is on the subpoenaed party. United States v. Powell, 379 U.S. 48, 58, 13 L. Ed. 2d 112, 85 S. Ct. 248 (1964). Respondents have not met this standard for showing undue burden or unreasonable breadth. As to subsequent, more specific objections to burdensomeness and ambiguity, the Court encourages the parties to attempt to resolve such objections through negotiation.

[*18] IV

Comity

Finally, it is premature to consider the issue of international comity at this stage of the investigation. See Associated Container, 705 F.2d at 61 (declining to halt investigation under act of state doctrine where Justice Department had met Oklahoma Press standard of demonstrating reasonable basis to believe that requested information was relevant to a legitimate antitrust investigation). HN10[<sup>19</sup>] The Executive Branch, of which the Justice Department is a part, is charged with determining whether "the importance of antitrust enforcement outweighs any relevant foreign policy concerns: "It is not the Court's role to second-guess the executive branch's judgment as to the proper role of comity concerns under these circumstances." United States v. Baker Hughes, Inc., 731 F. Supp. 3, 6 n.5 (D.D.C. 1990), aff'd, 285 U.S. App. D.C. 222, 908 F.2d 981 (D.C. Cir. 1990). To that end, the Court defers to the executive branch's judgment as to comity and declines to halt an on-going investigation.

The decision that the Oklahoma Press doctrine and the FTAIA do not bar enforcement of the challenged CIDs merely means that the investigation may go forward. The Court in no [*19] way indicates how it or any other court would rule on the merits after the investigation is completed, in the event that the Justice Department decides to charge respondents with antitrust violations.

The petition to enforce the civil investigative demands will be granted.

HAROLD H. GREENE

United States District Judge

ORDER

For the reasons stated in the opinion issued on this same date, it is:

ORDERED that the petition of the United States to enforce the civil investigative demands issued by the Department of Justice is GRANTED.

January 22, 1997

HAROLD H. GREENE

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

Yeager's Fuel v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

January 27, 1997, Decided

CIVIL ACTION NO. 91-5176, CIVIL ACTION NO. 92-2359

Reporter

953 F. Supp. 617 *; 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1134 **; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,739

YEAGER'S FUEL, INC., et al. v. PENNSYLVANIA POWER & LIGHT COMPANY; LOSCH BOILER SALES & SERVICE COMPANY v. PENNSYLVANIA POWER & LIGHT COMPANY

Disposition: [**1] Defendant's Motion GRANTED with respect to (a.) Plaintiffs' claim of actual monopolization under § 2 of Sherman Act; (b.) Plaintiffs' claims involving conversion grants under both § 1 of Sherman Act and § 3 of Clayton Act; (c.) Plaintiffs' claim under § 2\(c\) of Robinson-Patman Act and (d.) Plaintiffs' common-law restraint of trade claim (conversion grants only). Defendant's Motion DENIED in all other respects.

Core Terms

---

heating, all-electric, electricity, installation, relevant market, monopolize, conversion, oil, market share, new home, submarket, monopoly power, developers, customers, remarking, residential, Sherman Act, heat pump, heating system, prices, market power, competitor, homeowners, marketing, monopoly, costs, antitrust, specific intent, barriers, buyer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN1 [?] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

In a motion for summary judgment in an antitrust case, the United States Supreme Court applies the standard used under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

953 F. Supp. 617, *617L<sup>A</sup> 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1134, **1

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

HN2 [down] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

Rule 56(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides for summary judgment if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). An issue is "genuine" only if there is sufficient evidence for a reasonable jury to find for the non-movant. Bearing in mind that all uncertainties are resolved in favor of the non-movant, a factual dispute is only "material" if it might affect the outcome of the case. Rule 56\(c\) directs summary judgment after adequate time for discovery against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to its case, and on which it will bear the burden of proof at trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

HN3 [down] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN4 [down] Sherman Act, Claims

To establish a successful claim under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 of the Sherman Act for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must present concrete evidence that: (1) defendant engaged in predatory conduct or anticompetitive conduct with (2) specific intent to monopolize, and with (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Plaintiffs alleging attempted monopolization under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 must produce intent evidence. Specific intent is the intent to accomplish the forbidden objective, an intent that goes beyond the mere intent to do the act. Intent may be inferred by anticompetitive practices or proven by direct evidence. In establishing specific intent, a mere intention to prevail over rivals or improve market position is insufficient. Even an intent to perform acts that can be objectively viewed as tending toward the acquisition of monopoly power is insufficient, unless it also appears that the acts were not predominantly motivated by legitimate business aims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > Fruit of the Poisonous Tree > Derivative Evidence

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN6 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In evaluating a claim of attempted monopolization under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, when direct evidence of specific intent is marginal, a court examines indicia of anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct as indirect, corroborating evidence of specific intent to supplement the direct evidence proffered.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN7 [down] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Under antitrust law, predatory or anticompetitive conduct is that which unfairly tends to be exclusionary or tends to destroy competition. The question of whether the court may consider conduct exclusionary cannot be answered by simply considering its effect on the plaintiff. In addition, it is relevant to consider its impact on consumers and whether it has impaired competition in an unnecessarily restrictive way.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

HN8 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Evaluation of an attempted monopolization claim involves a finding of a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. This determination requires an inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market and the defendant's economic power in that market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN9 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

In order to determine the dangerous probability of monopoly power in antitrust law, a court must first establish the definition of the relevant market. A plaintiff bears the burden of defining the relevant market. The relevant product market consists of commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes. Factors to be considered include price, use, and qualities. Accordingly, the products in a relevant product market are characterized by a cross-elasticity of demand. Courts also examine the relevant "geographic" market that includes the area in which a potential buyer may rationally look for the goods or services he or she seeks. Within the relevant market, a "submarket" may exist, evidenced by such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the "submarket" as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN10[ Regulated Practices, Market Definition

In determining whether a dangerous probability of monopoly power exists requisite to a claim of attempted monopolization under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, market definition presents a question of fact for jury resolution that a court may resolve on a motion for summary judgment if the record does not present any material factual disputes. Similarly, whether a "submarket" exists within the relevant market presents a factual dispute for jury resolution.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN11[ Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

In determining whether a defendant possesses enough monopoly power to come dangerously close to success in establishing a monopoly within the relevant market and "submarket," several factors are applicable: 1) the strength of the competition, 2) probable development of the industry, 3) the barriers to entry, 4) the nature of the anticompetitive conduct, and 5) the elasticity of consumer demand. Most significant, however, is the defendant's share of the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN12[ Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

In a claim of attempted monopolization under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, a dangerous probability of monopoly power exists where the defendant possesses a significant market share when it undertakes the challenged anticompetitive conduct. Nonetheless, while the size of a defendant's market share is a significant determinant of whether the defendant has a dangerous probability of successfully monopolizing the relevant market, it is not exclusive.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN13[ Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Courts will typically be able to find a dangerous probability of success at monopolization where defendants have a 50 percent or more share of the relevant market. Defendants with shares less than 30 percent are rarely determined to possess a dangerous probability. Those with a share between 30 and 50 will have a dangerous probability if other factors are present.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

In antitrust law, entry barriers refer either to long-run costs that were not incurred by incumbent firms but must be incurred by new entrants or to factors in the market that deter entry while permitting incumbent firms to earn monopoly returns.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN15 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The offense of monopoly under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: 1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and 2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of superior product, business acumen, or historical accident. Plaintiffs must also establish that they suffered antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Monopoly power is the power to control prices or exclude competition. The United States Third Judicial Circuit examines these two factors conjunctively. The size of market share is a primary determinant of whether monopoly power exists.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Market Definition, Relevant Market

The same tests used to determine the relevant market in cases of actual monopolization are applied in attempted monopolization actions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

In the United States Third Judicial Circuit, a market share of 31 percent is insufficient as a matter of law to establish monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

**HN19** [down] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Leveraging involves the use of monopoly power in one market to gain an advantage in another market, and the use of such power violates 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 of the Sherman Act. The essence of a leveraging claim is the use of monopoly power at one stage of production or in one market to gain a monopoly or a competitive advantage at another stage of production or in another, related market. In the United States Third Judicial Circuit, a plaintiff must show that the defendant gained more than a mere competitive advantage in the residential heating market. Rather, in order to prevail upon a theory of monopoly leveraging, a plaintiff must prove threatened or actual monopoly in the leveraged market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

**HN20** [down] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

**HN21** [down] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In order to present a valid claim for illegal restraint of trade under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must prove: 1) the defendants contracted, combined or conspired among each other, 2) the combination or conspiracy produced anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; 3) the objects of the conduct pursuant to that contract or conspiracy were illegal; and 4) the plaintiffs were injured as a result of that conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

953 F. Supp. 617, *617L<sup>A</sup> 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1134, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

**HN22** [] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

Since virtually all business agreements restrain trade to some extent, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act is construed to make illegal only those contracts that constitute unreasonable restraints of trade. Certain agreements, because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use. Such plainly anticompetitive agreements are illegal per se. Examples of per se violations include tying agreements and group boycotts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

**HN23** [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Under antitrust law, in a tying arrangement, the seller sells one item, known as the tying product, on the condition that the buyer also purchases another item, known as the tied product. Before a court can conclude that a tying arrangement exists, however, it must find that the "tied" product and the "tying" product are two separate products.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Electricity Transmission

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

**HN24** [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

In analyzing whether two products are separate for purposes of determining the existence of a tying arrangement, the fact that there are not dual markets strongly suggests that there are not separate products.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

**HN25** [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

A group boycott is a concerted effort by a group of competitors at one level to protect themselves from competition from non-group members who seek to compete at that level. Typically, the boycotting group combines to deprive would-be competitors of a trade relationship that they need in order to enter, or survive in, the level wherein the group operates.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electricity Distribution & Transmission > General Overview

953 F. Supp. 617, *617L<sup>A</sup> 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1134, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

**HN26** [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Under antitrust law, a vertical restraint of trade is between entities operating at different levels of the market structure, such as manufacturers and distributors. A horizontal restraint of trade is among competitors at the same level of distribution. A purely vertical arrangement, by which, for example, a supplier or dealer makes an arrangement exclusively to supply or serve a manufacturer, is not a group boycott.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

**HN27** [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

A mere promotional incentive which may tend to persuade economic actors to choose one product or service over another cannot be classified as a group boycott under antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

**HN28** [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

In determining whether restraints of trade violate antitrust law, the "quick look" rule of reason analysis applies where per se condemnation is inappropriate, but a full-blown industry analysis is not required to demonstrate the anticompetitive character of an inherently suspect restraint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Contract Terms > Gap Filler Provisions > Output, Exclusive & Requirements Agreements

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

**HN29** [blue icon] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

In antitrust law, an exclusive dealing agreement requires the purchaser not to deal in the goods of a competitor of the seller. Generally, the seller agrees to sell to a buyer on the condition that the buyer agrees not to deal in competitive products.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

HN30 [+] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

Under antitrust law, an exclusive dealing contract conditions future dealing on the purchaser's agreement not to deal with the supplier's competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN31 [+] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

In applying antitrust law, a court evaluates both exclusive dealing arrangements and vertical restraints under the "rule of reason" analysis. The inquiry mandated by the rule of reason is whether the challenged agreement is one that promotes competition or one that suppresses competition. The rule of reason analysis requires a court to consider all relevant factors in examining a defendant's purpose in implementing a restraint and the restraint's effect on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN32 [+] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Under the rule of reason analysis in antitrust law, a plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the alleged combination or agreement produced adverse, anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets. The adverse impact must be on competition, not on any individual competitor or plaintiff's business. A plaintiff satisfies this burden by proving the existence of actual anticompetitive effects, such as reduction of output, increase in price, or deterioration in quality of goods and services. Due to the difficulty of isolating the market effects of the challenged conduct, however, such proof is often impossible to make. Accordingly, the courts allow proof of the defendant's "market power" instead. Market power -- the ability to raise prices above those that would prevail in a competitive market -- is essentially a surrogate for detrimental effects.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN33** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Under the traditional rule of reason, the true test of illegality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question, a court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be obtained, and all relevant facts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN34** Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Under the rule of reason analysis in antitrust law, once the plaintiff meets the initial burden of adducing adequate evidence of defendant's market power or actual anticompetitive effects, the burden shifts to defendant to show that the challenged conduct promotes a sufficiently pro-competitive objective. To rebut, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the restraint is not reasonably necessary to achieve the stated objective.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN35** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

In applying the rule of reason analysis under antitrust law, while not controlling, an examination of a defendant's market power provides a starting point for a court's evaluation of the challenged restraint's impact on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN36** Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In determining market power requisite to analyzing a claim under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 under the Sherman Act, when considered in conjunction with other factors like barriers to entry, control over a superior resource, relative size, strength of the competition, and other market specific characteristics, market share may indicate market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN37** Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

A declining market share may reflect an absence of market power for purposes of a claim under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act, but it does not foreclose a finding of such power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

**HN38** Sherman Act, Defenses

In applying the rule of reason, when a plaintiff presents a pro-competitive justification to rebut a claim of illegal trade agreements under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a court must then examine the pro-competitive justification's anticompetitive effects.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN39** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

In applying the rule of reason to determine whether trade agreements are illegal under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a court must take into account whether the competition eliminated by the clause is significant within the context of the total competition extant in the industry and attempt to measure the effect of the challenged restriction on the market structure.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

**HN40** Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In determining whether antitrust injury exists requisite to a claim of illegal restraint of trade under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a court must analyze the antitrust injury from the viewpoint of the consumer. An antitrust plaintiff must prove the challenged conduct affected the prices, quantity, or quality of goods or services, not just his own welfare.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN41 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 14.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

HN42 [blue icon] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 14, establishing liability for certain restrictive trade agreements, applies to a narrower range of transactions than does 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act, including goods or commodities but not including real property, advertising, or services. Furthermore, a lesser degree of anticompetitive injury need be demonstrated under section 3 of the Clayton Act than section 1 of the Sherman Act. While section 1 of the Sherman Act applies to actual restraints of trade, section 3 of the Clayton Act condemns sales or agreements where the effect of such sale or contract would, under the circumstances disclosed, probably lessen competition or create an actual tendency to monopoly. The legality of an exclusive dealing arrangement under the Clayton Act depends on whether the competition foreclosed constitutes a substantial share of the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil & Petroleum Products > Franchising & Marketing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil & Petroleum Products > Processing & Refining > General Overview

HN43 [blue icon] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

Under a "quantitative substantiality" test to determine liability under section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 14, a case will be made out upon a showing that the exclusive dealing arrangement involved a significant share of the relevant market, or possibly even upon a showing that the arrangement involved a substantial volume of commerce.

Under this test, the only relevant economic indicator is the percentage of the market the contracts foreclose. While the United States Supreme Court relaxes this analysis under the "qualitative substantiality" test, the United States Supreme Court's holding applying the quantitative test remains viable authority.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN44[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The manner in which the relevant market is identified under section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 14 is the same under the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Administrative Proceedings > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Requirements Contracts

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > Output, Exclusive & Requirements Agreements

HN45[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

In determining whether a violation of 15 U.S.C.S. § 14 exists, the qualitative substantiality test examines three factors. The test weighs the probable effect of the contract on the relevant area of effective competition, taking into account the relative strength of the parties, the proportionate volume of commerce involved in relation to the total volume of commerce in the relevant market area, and the probable immediate and future effects which preemption of that share of the market might have on effective competition therein. Under this test, the degree of market foreclosure is only one of the factors involved in determining the legality of an exclusive dealing arrangement. The United States Third Judicial Circuit applies the qualitative substantiality test.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN46[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

A considerable number of courts hold that electricity is a commodity for purposes of the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN47 [ ] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(c\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN48 [ ] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The provisions of 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(c\) of the Robinson-Patman Act are designed to eliminate the competitive advantage large buyers and sellers attained over their smaller competitors by virtue of their economic clout and bargaining power. The section forbids payment of unearned monies to the other party to a transaction or to an agent who is subject to the control of a person other than the one making the payment. Although the purpose of that section is to eliminate unfair price discrimination, existence of that factor is not a prerequisite to liability.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Exports & Imports > Duties, Fees & Taxes > Duty Free Merchandise

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Fiduciaries > Fiduciary Duties

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Fiduciaries > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Performance > General Overview

Governments > Fiduciaries

HN49 [ ] Duties, Fees & Taxes, Duty Free Merchandise

15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(c\) encompasses cases of commercial bribery tending to undermine the fiduciary relationship between a buyer and its agent, representative, or other intermediary in a transaction involving the sale or purchase of goods. For a finding of commercial bribery, a plaintiff must show that the illegal payments in question crossed the line from buyer to seller or vice-versa.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

**HN50** [] Commercial Interference, Contracts

Under an action for tortious interference with contractual relations at Pennsylvania common-law, one who intentionally and improperly interferes with the performance of a contract between another and a third person by inducing or otherwise causing the third person not to perform the contract, is subject to liability to the other for the pecuniary loss resulting to the other from the failure of the third person to perform the contract.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

**HN51** [] Commercial Interference, Contracts

In analyzing a claim for tortious interference with contractual relations, the plaintiff's interest in his contractual rights and expectancies must be weighed against the defendant's interest in freedom of action. If the defendant's conduct is predatory, the scale on his side may weigh very lightly, but if his conduct is not predatory, it may weigh heavily. The issue is whether in the given circumstances his interest and the social interest in allowing the freedom claimed by him are sufficient to outweigh the harm that his conduct is designed to produce. In deciding the issue, the nature of his conduct is an important factor.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

**HN52** [] Commercial Interference, Contracts

In determining the impropriety of an actor's conduct in a claim of tortious interference of contractual relations, Pennsylvania courts consider seven factors: 1) the nature of the actor's conduct; 2) the actor's motive; 3) the interests of the other with which the actor's conduct interferes; 4) the interests sought to be advanced by the actor; 5) the social interests in protecting the freedom of action of the actor and the contractual interests of the other; 6) the proximity or remoteness of the actor's conduct to the interference, and 7) the relations between the parties.

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

**HN53** [] Torts, Business Torts

A defendant's actions need not be unlawful under federal antitrust statutes to be tortious.

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

**HN54** [] Torts, Business Torts

Under a common-law claim of unfair competition, one who causes harm to the commercial relations of another by engaging in a business or trade is not subject to liability to the other for harm unless: 1) the harm results from other actions or practices of the actor determined to be actionable as an unfair method of competition, taking into account the nature of the conduct and its likely effect on both the person seeking relief and the public; or 2) the acts or practices of the actor are actionable by the other under federal or state statutes. This includes a residual category encompassing other business practices determined to be unfair. An act or practice is likely to be judged unfair only if it substantially interferes with the ability of others to compete on the merits of their products.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN55 [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act is merely the application of the common-law doctrine concerning the restraint of trade to the field of interstate commerce.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > Elements

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN56 [+] Conspiracy, Elements

To establish civil conspiracy, a plaintiff must demonstrate that two or more persons combined or agreed with the intent to do an unlawful act or to do an otherwise lawful act by unlawful means. Proof of malice, i.e., an intent to injure, is essential in proof of a conspiracy. This unlawful intent must be absent justification.

Counsel: For YEAGER'S FUEL, INC., ATLANTIC OIL AND HEATING COMPANY, RALPH D. WEAVER, INC., HARNED DURHAM OIL COMPANY, INC., DESOUSA OIL AND SERVICE CORP., APGAR OIL COMPANY, INC., PLAINTIFFS (91-CV-5176): DAVID L. PENNINGTON, CATHERINE PANCHOU COX, BRIAN P. KIRBY, GLENN C. EQUI, ROBERT THOMAS CONNOR, ELIZABETH MC KENNA, HARVEY, PENNINGTON, HERTING & RENNEISEN, LTD., PHILA, PA USA. For MANSFELD FUEL OIL COMPANY, DEITER BROTHERS FUEL COMPANY, INC., C.A. LESSIG, INC., SCHWANGER BROTHERS & COMPANY, INC., SICO COMPANY, WHITLOCK & WOERTH, INC., ZONGORA FUEL, INC., SENICK, INC., CARLOS R. LEFFLER, INC., H. JOHN DAVIS, INC., ARTHUR J. ULRICH, INC., UNION FUEL COMPANY, W.C. REICHENBACH & SONS, INC., FREYMAN'S FUEL OIL COMPANY, INC., PLAINTIFFS (91-CV-5176): BRIAN P. KIRBY, (See above), [**2] ROBERT THOMAS CONNOR, (See above). WAYNE M. THOMAS, KOHN, SAVETT, KLEIN & GRAF, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA USA. For GUY HEAVENER, INC., PLAINTIFF (91-CV-5176): DAVID L. PENNINGTON, (See above), BRIAN P. KIRBY, (See above), GLENN C. EQUI, (See above), ROBERT THOMAS CONNOR, (See above), ELIZABETH MC KENNA, (See above). For LOSCH BOILER SALES & SERVICE CO., Individually and on Behalf of All Persons Similarly Situated, PLAINTIFF (92-CV-2359): GLENN C. EQUI, ELIZABETH MC KENNA, HARVEY, PENNINGTON, HERTING & RENNEISEN, LTD., PHILA, PA USA. WAYNE M. THOMAS, KOHN, SAVETT, KLEIN & GRAF, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA USA.

For PENNSYLVANIA POWER & LIGHT COMPANY, DEFENDANT (91-CV-5176): KENT A. GARDINER, CHRISTOPHER C. FENNELL, JEFFREY H. HOWARD, CROWELL & MORING, WASHINGTON, DC USA. ROBERT D. ROWE, CROWELL & MORING, WASHINGTON, DC USA. PETER B. WORK, BRADLEY S. ALBERT, CROWELL AND MORING, WASHINGTON, DC USA. For PENNSYLVANIA POWER & LIGHT CO., DEFENDANT (92-CV-2359): KENT A. GARDINER, CHRISTOPHER C. FENNELL, JEFFREY H. HOWARD, CROWELL & MORING, WASHINGTON, DC USA. ROBERT D. ROWE, CROWELL & MORING, WASHINGTON, DC USA. PETER B. WORK, CROWELL AND MORING, WASHINGTON, DC USA.

For OIL HEAT COUNCIL OF [**3] LANCASTER CO., INC., MOVANT (91-CV-5176): HAROLD E. KOHN, KOHN, SAVETT, KLEIN & GRAF, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA USA. For PENNSYLVANIA PETROLEUM ASSOCIATION, MOVANT (91-CV-5176): WAYNE M. THOMAS, HAROLD E. KOHN, KOHN, SAVETT, KLEIN & GRAF, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA USA. KIRCOFF, INC., MOVANT (91-CV-5176), Pro se, C/O JOSEPH T. COLON, LANCASTER, PA USA. KIRCOFF, INC., MOVANT (92-CV-2359), Pro se, C/O JOSEPH T. COLON, PRESIDENT, LANCASTER, PA.

For YEAGER FUEL, INC., RESPONDENT (92-CV-2359): CATHERINE PANCHOU COX, HARVEY, PENNINGTON, HERTING & RENNEISEN, LTD., PHILA, PA USA.

Judges: John R. Padova, J.

Opinion by: John R. Padova

Opinion

---

[*630] Table of Contents

I. Introduction

A. Procedural History

1. The Initial Complaint
2. PP&L's First Motion for Summary Judgment
3. The Utility
4. The Amended and Consolidated Complaint
5. Scope of the Remand

B. Factual Background

1. Plaintiffs' Position
  - (a). Costs and Efficiency
  - (b). Programs and Initiatives
  - (c). Specific Anticompetitive Conduct
2. PP&L's Position
  - (a). Gas Utility
  - (b). All-Electric Development Agreements
  - (c). Market Reaction

II. Standard of Review

III. Federal Antitrust Laws

A. Sherman Act [**4] § 2

1. Attempted Monopolization

- [*631] (a). Specific Intent
(b). Predatory Conduct
(c). Dangerous Probability of Success
(i). The Relevant Market
(ii). Market Share
(iii). Pricing
(iv). Barriers to Entry & Competition
(v). Probability Conclusion

2. Actual Monopolization

- (a). Monopoly Power

3. Monopoly Leveraging

B. Sherman Act § 1

1. Per Se Illegality of the Contested Agreements
2. The Agreements are Exclusive Dealing Contracts

3. Application of the Rule of Reason
4. Conversion Grants
5. Conclusion -- Sherman Act § 1

C. Clayton Act § 3

1. Distinguished from Sherman Act § 1
2. Quantitative Substantiality Test
3. Qualitative Substantiality Test
4. Conclusion -- Clayton Act § 3

D. Robinson-Patman Act § 2\(c\)

E. State-Law Claims

1. Tortious Interference with Contractual Relations
2. Unfair Competition
3. Restraint of Trade
4. Civil Conspiracy

F. Conclusion

OPINION

Padova, J.

January 27, 1997

The Court commences another chapter in this protracted and multifarious litigation. Defendant, Pennsylvania Power and Light ("PP&L"), operates an electric utility in central and northeastern Pennsylvania and [\[\*\*5\]](#) constitutes the sole source of electric power in those regions. Plaintiffs, fuel oil dealers,<sup>1</sup> compete directly with PP&L in the market for residential heating and related equipment in PP&L's service area. Plaintiffs contend that PP&L unlawfully restrained trade through business practices and marketing schemes in violation of both federal antitrust laws and state common-law. PP&L currently submits, for the Court's consideration, its Motion for Summary Judgment.

It should be noted at the outset that both parties have presented the Court well drafted, comprehensive, concise, [\[\*\*6\]](#) and organized briefs, with relevant submissions attached thereto. During oral argument on the Motion, both sides crafted compelling arguments, and the Court, in evaluating this Motion, faces a difficult task. After much deliberation, and for the following reasons, the Court will grant in part and deny in part PP&L's Motion.

I. INTRODUCTION

A. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

---

<sup>1</sup> Plaintiffs are: Apgar Oil Co.; Atlantic Oil; H. John Davis, Inc.; Deiter Brothers Fuel; Desousa Oil; Freyham's Fuel Oil; Harned Durham Oil; Guy Heavener, Inc.; Carlos R. Leffler; C.A. Lessig, Inc.; Mansfeld Fuel Oil Co.; W.C. Reichenbach; Schwanger Brothers; Senick, Inc.; Sico Co.; Arthur J. Ulrich; Union Fuel Co.; Ralph D. Weaver, Inc.; Whitlock & Woerth; Yeager's Fuel, Inc.; Zongora Fuel, Inc.; and Losch Boiler Sales & Servs. Co.

1. The Initial Complaint

In August, 1991, various fuel oil dealers filed a complaint in this Court alleging violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act ("Sherman Act"), 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1, 2 \(West Supp. 1996\); section 2\(c\) of the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act ("Robinson-Patman Act"), 15 U.S.C.A. § 13\(c\) \(West 1973\); section 3 of the Clayton Antitrust [\[\*632\]](#) Act ("Clayton Act"), 15 U.S.C.A. § 14 \(West 1973\); and section 1962(c) of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1961-1968 (West 1984 & Supp. 1995). In April, 1992, Losch Boiler Sales & Service Company, a fuel oil and related equipment dealer, filed a separate complaint against PP&L in this Court asserting essentially the same claims, with the addition of a claim under § 3 of the Robinson-Patman [\[\*\*7\]](#) Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 13a \(West 1973\) and state-law claims of unfair competition and civil conspiracy. Both Complaints rested on the same factual allegations, and the Court consolidated the cases. (See Doc. Nos. 89, 144 (consolidating cases)). Generally, Plaintiffs alleged that PP&L engaged in illegal promotional strategies, such as cash incentives, reduced electric rates, rebates, and subsidized advertising, in an effort to encourage the installation of electric heat pumps in homes located in its service area.

2. PP&L's First Motion For Summary Judgment

In early 1992, PP&L moved for summary judgment. By Opinion and Order dated September 8, 1992, this Court granted in part and denied in part PP&L's Motion. See Yeager's Fuel, Inc. v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., 804 F. Supp. 700 \(E.D. Pa. 1992\), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 22 F.3d 1260 (3d Cir. 1994) ("Yeagers I"). Accepting PP&L's contention that the challenged conduct constituted part and parcel of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania's energy conservation policies, and having determined that the allegedly anticompetitive behavior was conducted "pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy and under active [\[\*\*8\]](#) state supervision," the Court determined that Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 \(1943\), immunized PP&L from federal antitrust and racketeering liability. Yeagers I, 804 F. Supp. at 702. Similarly, the Court dismissed the RICO claim in the absence of a properly pleaded predicate act.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit affirmed in part and reversed in part in Yeager's Fuel, Inc. v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., 22 F.3d 1260, 1263 \(3d Cir. 1994\) ("Yeagers II"). Reversing this Court's decision regarding the federal antitrust claims, Yeagers II narrowed the focus of those claims considerably, extending immunity to PP&L's practice of "offering builders and developers cash grants and other incentives, and . . . offering consumers a special electric rate for installation of high efficiency electric heating systems." Id. at 1263. This protection did not, however, insulate PP&L "to the extent that [PP&L] made these offers contingent upon the all-electric development agreements . . . , i.e., for actions undertaken in connection with all-electric development agreements." Id. at 1263, 1272. The Third Circuit [\[\*\*9\]](#) described the all-electric development agreements ("all-electric agreements") as follows:

Although not specifically alleged in the Oil Dealers' Complaints, PP&L apparently included in some of its incentive offers provisions such as the following:

Developer must agree that the entire development will consist of only electrically heated units during the term of this Agreement. Completion of a non-electrically heated unit shall void this Agreement and the System grants for future units in the development will revert to whatever applicable program, if any, is in effect at the time.

Id. at 1263.

In allowing to proceed those antitrust claims which alleged that "PP&L provided benefits to builders and developers in exchange for entry into all-electric development agreements," id. at 1263, Yeagers II bestowed immunity on PP&L with respect to the "RTS Rate" and other incentive programs that it offered "free of all-electric development agreements to builders and developers pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed policy." Yeagers II, 22 F.3d at 1264, 1266 (defining "RTS Systems" as those which "promote load management by heating [\[\*\*10\]](#) water during off-peak hours . . . and storing it for use during peak hours . . . . PP&L offered a special rate (the 'RTS Rate') to homeowners purchasing homes with these units because RTS systems are more expensive than electric baseboard heating"). To the extent that those incentives [*633] were offered in conjunction with the all-electric agreements, however, PP&L received no immunity.

3. The Utility Commission

The Bureau of Conservation, Economics & Energy Planning (the "Bureau") is an arm of the Pennsylvania Public Utilities Commission ("PUC"). In an 1989 internal report, the Bureau "found that PP&L's offering of certain incentives to owners and builders to install high efficiency electric heating systems in new homes was a legitimate load management program." Id. at 1268. Despite the 1989 report approving PP&L's use of cash incentives, in March 1993, the PUC altered its policy, disallowing the use of such incentives. The PUC now requires approval of certain promotional activities implemented by utilities, "prohibits the use of cash to influence builders and developers[,] . . . [and forbids] delivery of allowances such as cash or appliances to builders and developers" [**11] in order to influence their choice of energy for use in new residential developments." Id. at 1269 (citing 52 Pa. Code § 57.63). Under the new PUC regulations -- issued March 19, 1993 and effective July 24, 1993 - a "promotional activity" includes:

[a] thing done by a utility with the object of bringing about an increase, or preventing a decrease, in the quantity of its service purchased by the public or with the object of inducing any person to purchase its service, or select or install any appliance or equipment designed to use its service, in preference to a competing form of energy. A demand-side management program approved by the Commission, with the object of encouraging customers to conserve energy or to shift demand from or reduce demand during peak periods, shall not be considered a promotional activity for the purpose of this subchapter.

(Pl.'s Mem. Opp. Ex. 57 ("Pl.'s Ex. ") (citing 52 Pa. Code. § 57.61)). The new regulations specifically forbid any utility, in the absence of PUC approval, from inter alia "delivering anything of more than token value to an architect, engineer, builder, developer, or other person for services performed" [**12] or to be performed in connection with realty, other than realty acquired or intended for acquisition by the utility for use in the conduct of its own business." Id. (citing 52 Pa. Code § 57.63(2)).

In light of the PUC's changed position, Yeagers II further limited PP&L's immunity to past conduct: "the fact that the PUC now prohibits such actions does not mean that PP&L should be denied state action immunity for its past activity." Yeagers II, 22 F.3d at 1269.

4. The Amended and Consolidated Complaint

On August 11, 1995, Plaintiffs filed an Amended and Consolidated Complaint ("Am. Compl.") containing additional factual allegations. Specifically, the Amended Complaint alleges that PP&L received advanced notice of all new construction in its service area, offered developers and builders cash grants for the installation of electric heat, and sought commitments from developers and builders to exclude fossil fuel from new developments. According to Plaintiffs, PP&L also offered and made cash payments to contractors and customers whose residences were already heated by fossil fuel in an effort to persuade them to convert those heating systems to electric ("conversion" [**13] grants"). In exchange for the grants, the contractors and homeowners had to agree that the electric heating device would not be supplemented by any fossil fuel device.

The Amended Complaint presents eight Counts: § 1 of the Sherman Act (Count I); section 2 of the Sherman Act (Count II); section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act (Count III); section 3 of the Clayton Act (Count IV); common-law restraint of trade (Count V); tortious interference with contractual relations (Count VI); unfair methods of competition (Count VII); and civil conspiracy (Count VIII). (See Def.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Summ. J. Ex. 1) ("Def.'s Ex. ").<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> By Order dated September 26, 1995, United States Magistrate Judge Charles B. Smith refined the allegations by striking all RICO claims previously dismissed; all antitrust claims concerning the RTS Rate that were previously dismissed; all class

[**14] [*634] 5. Scope of the Remand

PP&L is immunized only for the cash grants and other incentives it offered before July 24, 1993 -- including special rates for customers who installed high-efficiency heating systems -- that were not conditioned on, or exchanged for, an agreement to exclude oil or fossil fuel for such residential uses. All other alleged incentives -- including both the conversion grants and the all-electric agreements -- which properly fall within the purview of the Amended and Consolidated Complaint, and which the Court has not dismissed, constitute the present scope of this litigation. The Court will examine such conduct herein, if and as implicated by PP&L's Motion.

B. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

In the instant case, the parties performed extensive briefing and offered submissions designed to substantiate their respective theories of the case. They present different interpretations of the events that transpired in the heating, fuel, and equipment market in central and northeastern Pennsylvania between the late 1970s and the early 1990s. At this point, the Court examines both Plaintiffs' and PP&L's positions.

1. Plaintiffs' Position

(a). Costs and Efficiency

[**15] Oil and fossil fuel present the most cost-efficient heating systems and are less to install and operate than their gas and electric counterparts. Electric heat involves heat pump systems as well as baseboard heating systems. When heating a space, the heat pump gathers outside air, funnels it through the pump, increases the air's temperature, and releases the air through vents into the space being heated. If the temperature drops below 45 degrees, the heat pump becomes inefficient. (Pl.'s Ex. 4 at 103).

"Resistance" or baseboard heat costs much less to install than oil or gas but its operating costs are two and three times the price of oil or gas. (Pl.'s Ex. 1 at 161; Ex. 22 at 8). While the heat pump presents a more efficient alternative to the electric baseboard, its operating costs are 30% to 40% higher than fossil fuel. (Pl.'s Ex. 22 at 8). In the space heating context, oil costs $ 11.07 per million Btu, gas $ 11.40, electric baseboard heat $ 22.56, and heat pump heat $ 13.77. (Pl.'s Ex. 48).<sup>3</sup> When heating water, the heat pump costs $ 10.25 per million Btu, with gas and oil costing $ 9.79 and $ 9.37 respectively. (Id.). When combined with oil as a supplemental heating system, [**16] however, the heat pump presents a lower operating cost than any single source of heat, lower than regular electricity, oil, propane, or the ordinary, unsupplemented heat pump. (Pl.'s Ex. 1 at 343; Ex. 17).

Electric heat also imposes higher installation costs. Specifically, in 1989, gas (forced air) cost $ 1,600 to install and $ 450 per year to operate, while the same numbers for oil, electric baseboard, and heat pump systems were $ 1,900/$ 429, $ 800/$ 1,245, and $ 3,000/$ 623 respectively. (Pl.'s Ex. 26 at 2). Electric rates have generally increased more rapidly than oil or gas. Between 1980 and 1990, electric rates increased 91%, gas rates increased 43%, and oil rates decreased 8% (Pl.'s Ex. 49). Electric heating equipment also depreciates and becomes obsolete faster than oil heating equipment. A heat pump only lasts for 10 to 15 years while [**17] oil heating equipment might last 30 years. (Pl.'s Ex. 58 at 16; Ex. 8 at 148).

(b). Programs and Initiatives

---

certification claims; the § 3 Robinson-Patman Act claim; paragraph 37 -- alleging "as part of its scheme, PP&L initiated a pricing schedule for its off-peak electric heating customers which provided electricity for such heating at less than PP&L's cost" -- without prejudice to be addressed through a motion in limine; and the added claims of restraint of trade and tortious interference with contractual relations. (See Def.'s Ex. 2).

<sup>3</sup> "Btu" refers to "British thermal unit:" "the amount of heat required to raise a pound of water one degree Fahrenheit." Black's Law Dictionary 192 (6th ed. 1990).

"As PP&L emerged from conservation directed programs in the 1970s and early 1980s, emphasis was directed to revenue growth while uncoupling the rate-of-demand growth." (Pl.'s Ex. 49 at 8). PP&L's revenue comes from three major sources, the [*635] residential market ($ 800,587,000); the commercial market ($ 647,949,000); and the industrial market ($ 503,806,000). (Pl.'s Ex. 41). The residential market, by far the largest, became the target for revenue growth. In 1982 and 1983, PP&L sought to increase its sales by 3 1/2% (Pl.'s Ex. 9 at 56-57).

Several PUC decisions, however, undercut PP&L's ability to generate revenue. Between 1978 and 1979, the PUC found that PP&L could no longer use the savings it achieved through sales to other electric utilities on an interchange to improve the earnings and profits of the company. Rather, the PUC ruled that any savings accumulated had to be used to reduce the energy cost rate. (Pl.'s Ex. 9 at 52). Furthermore, in the early 1980s, PP&L constructed two nuclear power plants. Specifically, "Unit 1" of PP&L's Susquehanna nuclear power plant [**18] began commercial operation in 1983, and "Unit 2" at Susquehanna began commercial operation in 1985. PP&L appealed, albeit unsuccessfully, to the PUC in both 1983 and 1985, asking for a rate increase to offset the increased costs associated with constructing Unit 1 and Unit 2. The PUC found, however, that PP&L was experiencing capacity that exceeded its requirements for the remainder of the century. (Def.'s Ex. 66 at 2-3; Pl.'s Ex. 9 at 53).

In order to increase its revenues, PP&L now had to make "sales through [its] own customers or through contract sales to other entities." (Pl.'s Ex. 52). PP&L looked to the residential market, specifically heat pumps, as the vehicle to increase kilowatt hour sales. (See Pl.'s Ex. 9 at 90; Ex. 28 (describing heat pumps as "the solution to PP&L's long term marketing needs"); Ex. 49 (remarking "the electric heat pump is the primary competitor of gas heat in both single family and multi-family houses")). PP&L also began offering cash incentives for the installation of "off-peak" electric thermal storage systems which used heat pumps. As early as 1981, PP&L had been providing cash grants to customers. (Pl.'s Ex. 9 at 69). Between 1985 and 1989, [**19] PP&L awarded between $ 750 and $ 1,200 per heat pump in "New Construction Grants" to customers who installed heat pumps. (Pl.'s Ex. 45 at 539; Ex. 55 at 1804-05; Def.'s Ex. 57). PP&L also began to approach developers to advance them advertising subsidies. (Pl.'s Ex. 9 at 75, 95).

PP&L has always been cognizant that (1) builders decide what type of heating equipment will be placed in a home and (2) installation cost is a "critical" concern for new home builders. (Pl.'s Ex. 1 at 124-25; Ex. 26 at 2). PP&L therefore began to leverage its strong rapport with developers, assigning its best consultants to develop long term relationships. PP&L recognized that neither the oil nor gas companies, both of which lacked extensive personnel and organization, could match this effort. (Pl.'s Ex. 9 at 73; Ex. 25). PP&L also reached out, in this respect, to the actual equipment contractors, forming the Central Eastern Pennsylvania Heat Pump Association ("CEPHPA"). PP&L required, as a condition for receiving grant payments, that a CEPHPA member install the heat pump. (Pl.'s Ex. 38 at 154650). In addition, PP&L engaged in cooperative advertising programs with heat pump contractors, furnished both labor [**20] and equipment warranties for heat pumps sold by those contractors, and offered installation bonuses for those contractors. (Pl.'s Ex. 22 at 7).

(c). Specific Anticompetitive Conduct

Between 1983 and 1995, PP&L paid in excess of $ 25 million in grants to builders, developers, and homeowners in an effort to induce the use of electric home heating in its service territory. (Pl.'s Ex. 60). PP&L designed these grant programs to block the extension of gas and fossil fuels into newly constructed developments. PP&L paid some grants in advance, in the hope that all homes in a new development would contain electric heating. (Pl.'s Ex. 22 at 5). In addition to cash incentives, PP&L provided builders with model homes and cooperative advertising arrangements. (Pl.'s Ex. 22 at 4; Ex. 24). The model home grants involved payments of up to $ 3,100 per model home, with PP&L paying the builder or contractor to install electric storage heating and water heating in the model. Under the cooperative advertising arrangements, PP&L would [*636] provide grants for the model home installation of heat pumps, extend advertising allowances, pay as much as 50% of a builder's advertising costs, and provide development [**21] or on-sight signs and promotional materials. (Pl.'s Ex. 22 at 4-5).

In 1986, the price of gas and oil dropped substantially, increasing competition from both gas and oil companies in the heating market. (Pl.'s Ex. 9 at 93-94). In an effort to respond to this surge in competition, PP&L began using, as early as 1987; the all-electric agreements. (Pl.'s Ex. 24). The all-electric agreement was essentially a contract entered into between PP&L and a builder or developer that typically contained the following provision: "developer agrees that the entire Development will consist of only electrically heated houses. Completion of a nonelectrically heated house shall void this Agreement, and the System grants for future houses in Development will be those announced by PP&L for the applicable time period." (Pl.'s Ex. 31).

The all-electric agreement required that (1) the structure built would be a "new single, town, twin, condominium, apartment, or manufactured home with a high efficiency air- or ground-sourced heat pump;" (2) the customer would install electric domestic water heating; (3) CEPHPA, and only CEPHPA, would install the heat pump; and (4) the heat pump would not be supplemented by [**22] oil, kerosine, coal, or natural or bottled gas. PP&L, although not a manufacturer of heat pumps, agreed to furnish extended warranties for heat pumps installed by CEPHPA. In exchange, the builder would receive a string of cash grants upon the installation of each system (or sometimes in advance), a cooperative advertising allowance, and reimbursement of cooperative advertising expenditures. In addition, the builder or developer agreed to actively promote heat pumps and to inform PP&L of the names of prospective home buyers for contact by PP&L. (Pl.'s Ex. 22; Ex. 31; Ex. 74). The agreements also applied to a developers' conversion of an existing home, imposing the same no supplementation requirement. While PP&L employed the all-electric agreements as marketing tools as early as 1987, it did not inform the PUC of this practice until May, 1995. (Pl.'s Ex. 30; Ex. 31; Ex. 36; Ex. 38; Ex. 61; Ex. 63; Ex. 64; Ex. 65; Ex. 67).

Certain benefits associated with its status as the sole source of electric power in the region provided PP&L with unfair advantages. PP&L identified the significant home developments through its "Major Load Study." (See Pl.'s Ex. 70 (using Major Load Study results [**23] to identify developments "that have committed a portion or the entire development for the installation of fossil fuel heating systems" and suggesting that action be taken to contact the builders and convince them that electric is a better alternative than fossil fuels)). PP&L received advance notice of new construction; enclosed "bill inserts" in electric bills as advertisements; provided underground wiring allowances to builders in contravention of a PUC ruling that builders were responsible for trenching and backfilling; disbursed payments through its thermal integrity program; and reimbursed builders for the costs of interior improvements. (Pl.'s Ex. 8 at 144-47, 218-19; Ex. 9 at 127-28, 148; Ex. 39; Ex. 43 at 4; Ex. 66; Ex. 74; Def.'s Ex. 59 at 410). PP&L also began initiatives to convert non-electric, existing homes to electric heat by using its customer database and the aforementioned bill inserts to target customers and by extending low-interest loans. A homeowner making the conversion could not supplement the electric system with an oil or gas system. (Pl.'s Ex. 9 at 127; Ex. 43 (stating "the only market which has significant potential above and beyond that which we are presently [**24] addressing is the residential conversion market"); Ex. 72; Def.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Summ. J. at 8; Def.'s Ex. 52; Ex. 53).

PP&L increased its market share of the new home market from 61.5% in 1981 to about 84% in 1986. This saturation (84% of the market) was 17% higher than the nearest utility, the Philadelphia Electric Co. (Pl.'s Ex. 8 at 135). As of November, 1987, only 9% of all new construction had oil heat. (Pl.'s Ex. 22 at 2). Despite PP&L's near control of the new construction market in 1986, it initiated the all-electric agreement program in the following year (1987) to further [*637] the anticompetitive goal of complete domination. Between 1981 and 1995, 72% of all new homes built in PP&L's service area were electrically heated. (Pl.'s Ex. 46). According to estimates computed by PP&L in 1987, the absence of these marketing efforts would have reduced its share of the new home market to 55%. (Pl.'s Ex. 22 at 2).

In 1980, the last year before the grant program was initiated, heat pumps were found in only 12.1% of new residences. Between 1987 and 1995, 42,797 heat pumps were installed in 133,756 newly constructed residences, and the market saturation of heat pumps increased to an average [**25] of 32% during this period. (Pl.'s Ex. 46). In 1990, oil-heated households accounted for 41% of the market in the entire northeastern United States and 40% of the market in PP&L's service area. (Pl.'s Ex. 49 at 2).

2. PP&L's Position

PP&L offers a different interpretation of the facts regarding the home heating market in its service area. In the late 1970s, the PUC imposed strict regulations on gas companies that severely constrained line extension and essentially removed gas as a competitor from the heating market. The stringent PUC guidelines acted as a de facto "gas ban." (Def.'s Ex. 10 at 36-37). Beginning in 1981, PP&L began promoting the use of residential electric heating systems which used energy in off-peak periods. In 1982, PP&L offered cash grants of up to $ 1,200 to approximately 250 customers to encourage the installation of these systems and to offset their high installation costs. (Def.'s Ex. 57 at 378). PP&L required that, in exchange for these grants, the customer would agree to refrain from supplementing the system with another heat source. PP&L imposed this requirement to recoup its initial investment in disbursing the grant. (Def.'s Ex. 8 at 141). [**26] This system has carried different names over the years, i.e., the RTS System, the Electric Thermal Storage ("ETS") system, and the Supplemental Electric Storage Systems ("SESS") system.

In 1983, PP&L initiated the conversion grant program that offered cash grants for customers who converted from fossil fuel to off-peak electric heating systems. In 1987, PP&L added high-efficiency electric heat pumps to the list of heating systems that entitled customers to cash grants. (Pl.'s Ex. 43). A typical conversion agreement required that CEPHPA install the heat pump, that the customer not supplement the system with a fossil fueled system, and that the customer install electric domestic water heating. Between 1988 and 1990, PP&L converted 350 homes. (Def.'s Ex. 15; Ex. 52; Ex. 53; Ex. 59). During the same period, PP&L was losing between 2,000 and 3,000 electric heat accounts per year. (Def.'s Ex. 11 at 228).

(a). Gas Utility

The PUC lifted the gas ban in the mid-1980s, and gas companies, specifically UGI Utilities ("UGI"), launched aggressive marketing initiatives designed to increase their share of the residential heating market. In 1987, UGI intensified marketing efforts in both commercial [**27] and residential markets against electric and fuel oil companies, resulting in increased market share. Specifically, UGI's share of the market for new homes constructed in its territory grew from 12% in 1987 to over 50% in 1995, and in 1995, UGI held a 98% market share in new residential developments where natural gas was available. In 1995, 60% of UGI's additions came from new home construction and 40% came from conversions from other fuels, principally oil. In the aggregate, between 1987 and 1995, UGI converted approximately 20,857 residential customers from other heating fuels to natural gas, 68% of which came from oil and 16% of which came from electric. Like PP&L, UGI uses cash rebates, enters into agreements with builders and developers, extends gas mains at no charge, offers reduced rates, engages in cooperative advertising with builders and developers, uses grants to induce conversion, and sells gas appliances at retail. (Def.'s Ex. 49 PP 4, 5, 8, 10, 11, 14, 15; Pl.'s Ex. 49).

(b). All-Electric Development Agreements

In 1987, as competitive pressure from the gas utilities mounted, PP&L responded [*638] with the all-electric agreements, requiring that each development be "all-electric" [**28] and contain a minimum of 10 lots. (Def.'s Ex. 10 at 90; Ex. 16; Ex. 21). Because developers build over an extended period of time, they grew concerned that the grant levels might be reduced and that the payment of sequential grants as the homes reached completion would prove inadequate. To allay these fears, PP&L began to advance the grant money. (Def.'s Ex. 9 at 235-36). In 1989, PP&L expanded the new construction grant programs and the all-electric agreements to encompass the installation of high-efficiency heat pumps. (Def.'s Ex. 8 at 148-49; Ex. 9 at 218; Ex. 18). PP&L ceased using the all-electric agreements as a marketing tool after the PUC changed its regulations with regard to promotional activities in July, 1993. (Def.'s Ex. 66 at 4-5).<sup>4</sup>

[**29] (c). Market Reaction

Between 1984 and 1995, PP&L's share of the entire home heating market never exceeded 31%. Beginning in 1972, PP&L's share of new residential connections was 44%. This number increased steadily until reaching an all time high in 1986 of 84%. From 1986 to 1995, however, that share declined to 53%. From 1981 through 1986, as

---

<sup>4</sup> Plaintiffs contend that PP&L continued to use the all-electric agreements after July, 1993. (Def.'s Ex. 66 (stating "PP&L has signed approximately 25 agreements and proposed agreements with builders/developers since July 23, 1993. Of these, only four contained an all-electric commitment, two dated July, 1993, one dated August, 1993, and one dated September, 1993").)

PP&L's market share increased, PP&L paid grants for off-peak electric systems with respect to 1,587 new homes out of a potential 74,924 in its service area, only 2%. In 1986, when PP&L achieved its highest market share of new residential units, PP&L had not yet employed the all-electric agreements as a marketing tool (first used in 1987), and there was no program in effect to disburse heat pump grants (until 1989). (Def.'s Ex. 14; Ex. 17; Ex. 24; Ex. 55; Pl.'s Ex. 52). PP&L holds a smaller market share (31% or 333,317) of all homes in its service area (1,074,015) than the oil dealers (35.4% or 380,463). (Def.'s Ex. 14; Ex. 20).

Between 1981 and 1995, PP&L paid grants for electric heat installations in only 29,512 homes out of a potential 208,681 new home connections made in those years. In the years between 1987 and 1995, PP&L entered [**30] into only 120 all-electric agreements out of a potential 1,500 new residential developments started in its area. (Def.'s Ex. 10 at 253; Ex. 24). Similarly, the provisions in those agreements requiring that all units contain electric heating systems proved ineffective. From 1987 through 1995, PP&L's share of the new residential market steadily declined. Indeed, several builders and developers testified that they installed the heating system of their choice irrespective of the language articulated in the all-electric agreements. Out of the new developments started in PP&L's service area, some 85% chose not to enter into grant agreements with PP&L. (Def.'s Ex. 21; Ex. 25; Ex. 29; Ex. 30; Ex. 31; Ex. 35; Ex. 41; Ex. 44; Pl.'s Ex. 49).

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

"At one time, the Supreme Court endorsed a slightly stricter standard of review when a summary judgment order was challenged in an antitrust case." Ideal Dairy Farms, Inc. v. John Labatt, Ltd., 90 F.3d 737, 747 (3d Cir. 1996) (citations omitted). The Supreme Court abandoned that approach, however, in 1992, and HN1[<sup>A</sup>] the ordinary Rule 56 standard still applies. Id. (citing Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 468-69, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2083, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992)). See Town Sound and Custom Tops, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 959 F.2d 468, 481 (3d Cir.) (stating "it may be that because antitrust cases are so factually intensive that summary judgment occurs proportionately less frequently there than in other types of litigation, but the standard of F.R.C.P. remains the same"), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 868, 113 S. Ct. 196, 121 L. Ed. 2d 139 (1992).

Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure HN2[<sup>A</sup>] provides that summary judgment "shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and [*639] admissions on file, together with affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). An issue is "genuine" only if there is sufficient evidence for a reasonable jury to find for the non-moving party. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2510, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). Furthermore, bearing in mind that all uncertainties are to be resolved in favor of the nonmoving party, a [**32] factual dispute is only "material" if it might affect the outcome of the case. Id. Rule 56\(c\) directs summary judgment "after adequate time for discovery . . . against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 2552, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986).

III. FEDERAL ANTITRUST LAWSA. Sherman Act §2

Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides: HN3[<sup>A</sup>] "Monopolizing trade a felony; penalty[:] Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony." 15 U.S.C.A. § 2 \(West Supp. 1996\). Plaintiffs' § 2 claim alleges "PP&L's actions constitute abuse of monopoly power, attempt to monopolize, leveraging of monopoly, predation through governmental processes and conspiracy to monopolize." Am. Compl. P 64. PP&L's Motion seeks summary judgment on these claims, maintaining (1) it "has not monopolized [**33] or attempted to monopolize the home heating market in violation of Sherman Act § 2," (2) that absent market power, there is no "predatory conduct" within the meaning of § 2 of the Sherman Act, and (3) "Plaintiffs' Monopoly leveraging theory has no merit." (See Def.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Summ J. at 18, 42).

1. Attempted Monopolization

HN4 [↑] To establish a successful claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act for attempted monopolization, Plaintiffs must "present concrete evidence that (1) [PP&L] had engaged in predatory conduct or anticompetitive conduct with (2) specific intent to monopolize and with (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power." Ideal Dairy Farms, Inc. v. John Labatt, Ltd., 90 F.3d 737, 750 (3d Cir. 1996). See also Pennsylvania Dental Ass'n v. Medical Serv. Ass'n of Pennsylvania, 745 F.2d 248, 260 (3d Cir. 1984) (listing only two elements for attempted monopolization claim, "(1) a specific intent to monopolize; and (2) the consequent dangerous probability of success within the relevant geographic and product markets" but stating "direct evidence of specific intent need not be shown; it may be inferred from predatory or exclusionary conduct") [**34] (citing inter alia Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U.S. 208, 59 S. Ct. 467, 83 L. Ed. 610 (1939); United States v. Jerrold Elec. Corp., 187 F. Supp. 545, 567 (E.D. Pa. 1960), aff'd, 365 U.S. 567, 81 S. Ct. 755, 5 L. Ed. 2d 806 (1961)), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1016, 105 S. Ct. 2021 (1985).

(a). Specific Intent

HN5 [↑] "Plaintiffs alleging [attempted] monopolization under § 2 must produce intent evidence." Advo, Inc. v. Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc., 51 F.3d 1191, 1199 (3d Cir. 1995). "Specific intent is the intent to accomplish the forbidden objective, an intent that goes beyond the mere intent to do the act. Intent may be inferred by anticompetitive practices or proven by direct evidence." Great W. Directories, Inc. v. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co., 63 F.3d 1378, 1385 (5th Cir. 1995), withdrawn and superseded in part, 74 F.3d 613 (5th Cir. 1996). In establishing specific intent, "a mere intention to prevail over rivals or improve market position is insufficient. Even an intent to perform acts that can be objectively viewed as tending toward the acquisition of monopoly power is insufficient, unless it also appears that the acts were [**35] not predominantly motivated by legitimate business aims." Pennsylvania Dental, 745 F.2d at 260-61 (citations omitted).

[*640] Plaintiffs maintain that the record contains ample evidence of PP&L's specific intent to monopolize the residential heating market. Furnishing direct evidence, Plaintiffs point to a statement made by a PP&L marketing executive that "we're striving for total dominance in the new home market. We believe you can put electric heat into at least 85% of all new homes built in our service area this year." (Pl.'s Ex. 43 at 4). PP&L's consistent attempts to increase market share, even after achieving an 84% share in the new home market and a 98% share in the vacation home market, argue Plaintiffs, indicates an unrelenting intent to monopolize. (Pl.'s Ex. 1 at 65-66; Ex. 5 at 85-87).<sup>5</sup> Plaintiffs also point to restrictive covenants PP&L inserted in property deeds requiring that electricity constitute the sole source of energy for homes constructed on the land. (Pl.'s Ex. 53). Plaintiffs rely on Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 609 n.39, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 2860 n.39, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985) (stating "proof of specific intent to engage in [**36] predation may be in the form of statements made by officers or agents of the company . . . or evidence that the conduct was not related to any apparent efficiency") (citation omitted) and Kelco Disposal, Inc. v. Browning Ferris Indus. of Vermont, Inc., 845 F.2d 404, 408 (2d Cir. 1988) (remarking that "tough talk by defendant's employees, coupled with the proof of predatory pricing, more than supports the jury's finding of a specific intent to monopolize"), aff'd, 492 U.S. 257, 109 S. Ct. 2909, 106 L. Ed. 2d 219 (1989).

---

<sup>5</sup> Plaintiffs expert report refers to documents revealing PP&L's intent to maintain or increase market share. These documents state that (1) PP&L aimed for saturation levels of 85% for single homes and 75% for apartments; (2) programs were needed to improve saturation results; "[3] our efforts in the first 3 years have been in the new construction market and we have taken total saturation of electric heat from 61% to 84% in 1986 . . . There are 750,000 homes in our service area with fossil fuel systems as the only potential market which can add significantly to . . . growth;" "[4] the only market which has significant potential above what we are presently addressing is the residential conversion market;" the heat pump program was proposed "to maintain our market share and counter anti-heat pump efforts by the gas and oil companies;" (5) PP&L needed to obtain a higher heat saturation in new construction; and "[6] competition in the residential heating market has intensified and PP&L must expand marketing efforts for the electric heat pump to achieve market share goals." (Def.'s Ex. 22 at 20-23).

[**37] Plaintiffs suggest the record also contains proof of predatory conduct that serves as indirect evidence of specific intent. Plaintiffs first point to PP&L's use of grants, model homes, and cooperative advertising to foreclose competition. Plaintiffs also note that PP&L's director of marketing wrote, in an October 1989 paper titled "Division Operations Strategic Planning Conference:" "Are less profitable market segments valuable if they help block the competition's market development? Through a multi-market electric heat strategy, PP&L has limited the extension of gas lines, thus increasing sales in all segments." (Pl.'s Ex. 27 at 2). Plaintiffs consider this statement indicative of PP&L's intent to forgo profits in an effort to foreclose competition.

Plaintiffs' expert's report suggests that the following illustrates PP&L's intent to monopolize: (1) the exclusionary nature of the all-electric agreements; (2) marketing documents calling for the establishment of a strike force to counter competitive threats; (3) furnishing low-interest loans to homeowners willing to replace existing gas or oil systems with electricity; (4) PP&L documents describing grants and advertising subsidies [**38] as promotional incentives designed to block gas extensions into new developments and displace less costly competing sources of heat; and (5) an internal PP&L document stating "we are experiencing some of the highest saturation rates in the nation," stating PP&L enjoyed "an overall 85% saturation," and warning against "rapidly increasing competition from gas utilities and oil companies in the new home market." (Def.'s Ex. 22 at 8-16).

The expert concluded inter alia that PP&L aimed to increase market share, "even if the added growth did not meet its normal rate of return" because, in the words of a PP&L employee, "marketing is here to stay . . . I don't think we will ever return to the conservation days." (Def.'s Ex. 22 at 24). Plaintiffs' expert also believes PP&L relied on residential heating as a major opportunity [*641] to achieve growth and market penetration and that PP&L "attempted to achieve its goals by excluding competition even though affirmative methods of home heating were more cost effective." Id.

PP&L characterizes Plaintiffs' proofs, specifically the statements made by PP&L employees, as nothing more than marketing rhetoric, pointing to Advo, 51 F.3d at 1199 [**39] (interpreting the statements "[1] the ultimate benefit of the TMC program was that [defendant] would be the 'one stop buy,' i.e., the only competitor left, in the eight county Philadelphia market when rates would become 'upwardly adjustable'" and "[2] when you see the competition drowning, stick a water hose down their throat" as "isolated and unrelated snippet[s]" of "colorful, vigorous hyperbole" that "the antitrust statutes do not condemn"). Any attempts to increase market share, argues PP&L, were both expected and lawful. See id. (remarking that firms "would try, as a first step, to wrest one or more of the[] large accounts away from [plaintiff]. [Defendant's] proposals to [plaintiff's] largest customers are exactly what we'd expect from a legitimate competitor. That such behavior might be consistent with predation does not mean that [plaintiff] can survive [defendant's] motion for summary judgment").

PP&L reminds the Court that the 84% market share figure discussed referred only to new homes and not all homes in PP&L's service area. Furthermore, PP&L's share of new homes has eroded since 1986, and its share of the entire residential market [**40] is below Plaintiffs'. According to PP&L, a regulated utility lacks any motivation to monopolize a market; once monopolized, it could not raise prices without PUC approval. In the past, PP&L has received PUC approval with sporadic success. PP&L points to the deposition of the PP&L employee explaining the "total dominance" remark: "It's marketing talk for aggressive marketing to -- to compete strongly in a highly competitive marketplace and to strive for success [not seeking 100% of the market]." (Def.'s Ex. 93 at 90). Finally, attacking the restrictive covenant in the property deeds, PP&L notes that the deeds are dated 1966 and only ran for 10 years. (Pl.'s Ex. 53).

The Court finds that the statements proffered in the instant case provide stronger intent evidence than those evaluated in Advo. While Advo involved remarks appropriately characterized as nothing more than "aggressive" and "marketing rhetoric," those comments spoke of economic benefits and were couched in motivational statements. By contrast, the record here contains statements reflecting a strategy of total domination of the residential heating market made by an employee of a monopoly with the financial resources [**41] to effectuate that objective. These statements reveal a shift in general policy from a conservationist approach in the late 1970s to an aggressive marketing approach in the mid 1980s that sought an increase in usage. Moreover, the remarks were uttered at a point in time when PP&L controlled a major segment of the new residential construction submarket, and their exclusionary language pertains to all companies competing in the residential fuel market as opposed to a specific and isolated competitor. See *Syufy Enter. v. American Multicinema, Inc., 793 F.2d 990, 999 \(9th Cir. 1986\)* (finding "although Mr. Syufy's remarks to Mr. Durwood are arguably consistent with a simple desire to succeed in free and open competition, the jury could reasonably have inferred a specific intent to monopolize from the threat to run AMC out of town"), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1034, 107 S. Ct. 884, 93 L. Ed. 2d 838 (1987).

While the Court considers the statements presented more inculpatory and virulent than those examined in Advo, it concedes that other cases finding a specific intent to monopolize contained even stronger direct evidence. See [*Tasty Baking Co. v. Ralston Purina, \[\*42\] Inc., 653 F. Supp. 1250, 1271-72 \(E.D. Pa. 1987\)*](#) (finding specific intent evidence through (1) statements that defendant wanted to "take the competition out" and "then increase price" in a "basically non-competitive atmosphere;" (2) the non-discovery of documents wherein defendants "considered the antitrust consequences" of their actions; (3) evidence defendants knew their conduct would implicate antitrust concerns; [*642] and (4) evidence defendants engaged in pre-acquisition considerations of how defendant would raise prices after the commission of predatory acts). In the case sub judice, the aforementioned statements, without more, provide only marginal direct evidence of a specific intent to survive a motion for summary judgment. **HN6** Accordingly, the Court searches for indicia of anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct as indirect, corroborating evidence of specific intent to supplement the direct evidence proffered. The Court therefore defers ruling on the specific intent issue until it considers the predatory conduct prong of the attempted monopolization elements. See *Conoco, Inc. v. Inman Oil Co., Inc., 774 F.2d 895, 905 \(8th Cir. 1985\)* (stating "isolated statements by [*43] a single Conoco official . . . whose primary function was to advance WCO's competitive position, are insufficient to prove Conoco's intent to monopolize in the absence of corroborating conduct"); *Ashkanazy v. I. Rokeach & Sons, Inc., 757 F. Supp. 1527, 1536 \(N.D. Ill. 1991\)* (concluding "although fairly virulent, these statements, without more, do not give rise to a reasonable conclusion that Rokeach intended to monopolize -- as opposed to gain a larger share of -- the relevant market, and therefore we reserve judgment on the specific intent issue until we consider evidence of anticompetitive conduct").

(b). Predatory Conduct

Plaintiffs substantiate their allegation of predatory and anticompetitive conduct by looking to the all-electric agreements, cash incentives, and other activity. The all-electric agreements, argue Plaintiffs, used grants, model homes, cooperative advertising, and no supplementation clauses to insure the installation of equipment, i.e., the heat pump, that required a permanent source of electricity. Many of these agreements provided the cash grants in advance, and, according to Plaintiffs, PP&L designed these agreements to block the use or extension [*44] of fossil fuel in new residential developments. (Pl.'s Ex. 38; Ex. 65).

Plaintiffs also maintain that PP&L obtained agreements from builders stating that, in exchange for cash grants, the builders would refrain from installing gas line extensions. PP&L also reimbursed builders for trenching and backfilling costs. (Pl.'s Ex. 39; Ex. 64 (referring to agreement with "developer whereby he would not extend the gas lines beyond the first home, that has already been committed, if [PP&L] would reimburse him the cost of his trenching and backfilling"). Plaintiffs suggest that builders also resisted homeowners' efforts to install sources of heating other than the heat pump. (Pl.'s Ex. 94 at P 4). Plaintiffs characterize this activity as predatory, designed to increase market share and not to produce superior efficiency, pointing to *Aspen, 472 U.S. at 605, 105 S. Ct. at 2859* (noting "if a firm has been attempting to exclude rivals on some basis other than efficiency, it is fair to characterize its behavior as predatory").

PP&L protests that its lack of market power and its inability to coerce buyers prevents the all-electric agreements from violating the antitrust laws. The all-electric [*45] agreements, notes PP&L, affected only 120 out of 1,500 potential developments and had no effect on 85% of the new homes built from mid-1981 through 1995 in PP&L's service area. ( *Def.'s Ex. 24 P. 24*). PP&L points to Plaintiffs' deposition testimony that competition would not be restricted if 80% of the market was available. (Def.'s Ex. 70 at 203-04; Ex. 72 at 278-79).

According to PP&L, the all-electric agreements constituted nothing more than legal and permissible discounts made on the condition that the buyer use PP&L's product; PP&L relies on *Advo, 51 F.3d at 1203* & n.13 (finding discounts based on the total amount of advertising purchased by a customer, in conjunction with defendant's failure to threaten to deny services to refusing customers, did not "offend antitrust principles," especially where plaintiff offered the same discounts). PP&L also notes that both Plaintiffs and UGI offered similar agreements with developers. ( Def.'s Ex. 49 P. 14(c) (mentioning program whereby UGI agrees to extend gas mains in exchange for non-written agreement from developer that gas usage would justify this investment); Ex. 81 at 128 (referring to program where in return for free use of the oil ["**46"] tank, the customer had to ["*643"] purchase all their heating oil from that specific company)).

The evidence, maintains PP&L, reveals that the all-electric agreements did not prevent builders and developers from offering, choosing, or installing heating systems other than electric; PP&L did not penalize the builders who installed alternative heating systems in violation of the all-electric agreements by withholding electric service; developers agreements with PP&L reflected the developers' own choices; and consumers felt no impact from the agreements because builders constructed "what buyers wanted." (Def.'s Ex. 29 at 39; Ex. 31 PP 4(f), 8; Ex. 32 PP 4(a), 6; Ex. 33 P. 12; Ex. 34 PP 6, 7; Ex. 35 P. 5\(n\); Ex. 36 P. 3\(a\); Ex. 39 P. 4; Ex. 40 PP 2-4; Ex. 41 PP 6-8; Ex. 42 PP 4, 10; Ex. 44 PP 3(g), 5). PP&L blames Plaintiffs' inability to effectively compete for new residential development business on their failure to aggressively and competently market oil heat. PP&L points to deposition testimony that Plaintiffs did not know the identity of many of the builders or developers in their area. (Def.'s Ex. 31 PP 7, 8; Ex. 38 P. 6; Ex. 39 P. 13; Ex. 68 at 277-82; Ex. 70 at 193-94; Ex. 79 at 236-39; Ex. ["**47"] 80 at 243-48; Ex. 83 at 235-43; Ex. 85 at 212-14; Ex. 89 at 185-93).

PP&L proffers legitimate explanations for the "no supplementation" clause: it allowed PP&L to recoup its investment in the grant program, and rate payers experienced increased benefits from the utilization of off-peak capacity. PP&L notes that Plaintiffs do not sell supplementary heating systems, and customers do not request them because of their high costs, i.e., the construction of a chimney for installation, and disadvantages associated therewith, such as reliability of supply, dirt, smell etc. (Def.'s Ex. 8 at 140-41; Ex. 11 at 216; Ex. 25 at 18-19; Ex. 27 at 61; Ex. 29 at 67-68; Ex. 45 PP 3-4; Ex. 46 P. 3; Ex. 47 at PP 3, 6; Ex. 48; Ex. 74 at 88).

PP&L describes Plaintiffs' allegations as disguised complaints about the competitiveness of PP&L's legitimate marketing efforts, size, efficiency, and resources. According to PP&L, Plaintiffs have the same advance notice of new home developments but choose not to take advantage of it. To effectively market electric heating to builders and developers, PP&L personnel relied on nothing more than personal communication, attendance at land use planning meetings, systematic ["**48"] review of the newspaper, and other similar means. (Def.'s Ex. 3; Ex. 5 at 438-39; Ex. 6 at 11; Ex. 25 at 22-23; Ex. 70 at 196-98; Ex. 74 at 100-04; Ex. 75 at 105; Ex. 77 at 167; Ex. 78 at 173; Ex. 87 at 72-73). PP&L maintains it created "CEPHPA" for the pro-competitive purpose of increasing the quality of heat pump installations and customer satisfaction, and CEPHPA never denied membership to any Plaintiff. (Def.'s Ex. 11 at 214-16; Ex. 12 at 127-28; Ex. 67; Ex. 77 at 93-94). Finally, PP&L contends that the 30 year old deed restrictions covered a meager 51 building lots for a 10 year period.

HN7 "Predatory or anticompetitive conduct is that which unfairly tends to be exclusionary or tends to destroy competition." Great W., 63 F.3d at 1385. See also Great Escape, Inc. v. Union City Body Co., Inc., 791 F.2d 532, 541 \(7th Cir. 1986\) (remarking "predatory conduct may be broadly defined as conduct that is in itself a violation of the antitrust laws or has no legitimate business justification other than to destroy or damage competition"); Aurora Enter. v. National Broadcasting Co., Inc., 688 F.2d 689, 695 \(9th Cir. 1982\) (defining predatory conduct to include "conduct amounting ["**49"] to a substantial claim of restraint of trade or conduct clearly threatening to competition or exclusionary"). The question of whether the Court may consider conduct exclusionary "cannot be answered by simply considering its effect on [plaintiff]. In addition, it is relevant to consider its impact on consumers and whether it has impaired competition in an unnecessarily restrictive way." Aspen, 472 U.S. at 605, 105 S. Ct. at 2858-59.

Viewing the submissions in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, the Court finds evidence of conduct that a jury could consider predatory. Here, a monopolist with enormous financial resources persuaded builders and developers to exclude competing sources of heat through aggressive marketing strategies that involved cash incentives, advertising promotions, and advance notice of new construction. ["*644"] PP&L targeted builders knowing they are the primary decision makers regarding the installation of heat systems in new homes and entered into exclusive dealing arrangements with them that may have violated § 1 of the Sherman Act. As the sole provider of electricity, the all-electric agreements translate into "all-PP&L" agreements and guarantee PP&L a steady [**50] stream of future cash flow. These all-electric agreements applied to both new homes and any existing homes that the builders developed.

PP&L essentially used its position to establish itself as a major force in the new construction market by excluding others on some basis other than superior efficiency. Consumers suffered from this conduct because PP&L locked new homeowners into inefficient and expensive sources of heat, restraining their ability to obtain less-costly and more efficient heating systems.

Revisiting the question of specific intent, the Court concludes that the aforementioned statements could convince a jury that PP&L intended to dominate the new residential heating submarket, that PP&L advanced that intent, and that the all-electric agreements codified PP&L's desire to dominate and assisted in the realization of that objective. When considered in conjunction with exclusionary conduct, a jury could conclude that the aforementioned statements evince PP&L's specific intent to monopolize the residential heating of new homes.

The different interpretations of market trends and economic performance proffered by the parties reveal genuine issues of material fact concerning [**51] both the presence or absence of specific intent and the character, either predatory or competitive, of the conduct designed to actualize that intent. For example, a jury could reach two different factual conclusions regarding PP&L's choice to implement the all-electric agreement program in 1987 after achieving an 84% share of the new construction submarket in 1986: (1) PP&L aimed to dominate the new construction submarket; or (2) PP&L had to increase the virulence of its marketing programs to counter fierce competition from rapidly expanding gas companies. Accordingly, the Court finds genuine issues of material fact with regard to the special intent and predatory conduct elements of Plaintiffs' attempted monopolization claim.

(c). Dangerous Probability of Success

HN8 Evaluation of an attempted monopolization claim also involves a finding of a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. This determination requires an "inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market and the defendant's economic power in that market." Pastore v. Bell Tel. Co. of Pennsylvania, 24 F.3d 508, 512-14 (3d Cir. 1994) (remarking "the law directs itself to conduct which unfairly tends to [**52] destroy competition itself . . . . [Section] 2 makes the conduct of a single firm unlawful only when it actually monopolizes or dangerously threatens to do so") (citation omitted). See also Great W., 63 F.3d at 1385 (stating "dangerous probability of achieving an actual monopoly position is customarily assessed by looking at the defendant's market share. If the defendant possesses a large share, it will likely be concluded that the defendant's conduct, if undeterred, will result in an actual monopoly"); 3 Von Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws and Trade Regulation § 20.01[5] (1996) (remarking "in deciding whether there is a dangerous probability of success, courts analyze the defendant's market share in light of the market structure") (citation omitted) ("Von Kalinowski").

(i). Relevant Market

HN9 In order to determine the dangerous probability of monopoly power, the Court must first establish the definition of the relevant market. Plaintiffs bear the burden of defining the relevant market. Pastore, 24 F.3d at 512. The relevant product market consists of "commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes. Factors to be considered include [**53] price, use and qualities. Accordingly, the products in a relevant product market would be characterized by a cross-elasticity of demand." Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 198-99 (3d Cir. 1992) (citations omitted), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 921, 113 S. Ct. 1285, 122 L. Ed. 2d 677 [*645] (1993). See also SmithKline Corp. v. Eli Lilly & Co., 575 F.2d 1056, 1063 (3d Cir.) (describing the relevant product market as "those groups of producers which, because of the similarity of their products, have the ability -- actual or potential -- to take significant amounts of business away from each other"), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 838, 99 S. Ct. 123, 58 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1978). Courts also examine the relevant "geographic" market that includes "the area in which a potential buyer may rationally look for the goods or services he or she seeks." Pennsylvania Dental, 745 F.2d at 260 (citation omitted). Within the relevant market, a "submarket" may exist, "evidenced by such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct [**54] customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors." Pastore, 24 F.3d at 513 (citation omitted).

HN10 [Footnote] Market definition presents a question of fact for jury resolution that the Court may resolve on a motion for summary judgment if the record does not present any material factual disputes. See Town Sound, 959 F.2d at 497 (Sloviter J., concurring and dissenting) (remarking "although plaintiffs are correct that the scope of the relevant market may be a question of fact for jury resolution, in this case they may have failed to create a material factual dispute") (citations omitted); Weiss v. York Hosp., 745 F.2d 786, 825 \(3d Cir. 1984\) (remarking "market definition is a question of fact and we therefore must affirm the jury's conclusion unless the record is devoid of evidence upon which the jury might reasonably base its conclusion") (citations omitted), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1060, 105 S. Ct. 1777, 84 L. Ed. 2d 836 (1985); 3 Von Kalinowski § 19.02[2] (remarking that the definition of a relevant market may be decided on summary judgment if the moving party satisfies Rule 56 requirements and "shows its market theory describes the [**55] actual market behavior so accurately that the nonmoving party's assertion of the moving party's market power if not implausible, is at least unreasonable. The Supreme Court has defined this burden as substantial"). Similarly, whether a submarket exists presents a factual dispute for jury resolution. See Case-Swayne Co., Inc. v. Sunkist Growers, Inc., 369 F.2d 449, 456 \(9th Cir. 1966\) (stating "there may be a well-defined submarket which constitutes the relevant market for antitrust purposes which . . . is a question of fact in the particular case"), rev'd on other grounds, 389 U.S. 384, 88 S. Ct. 528, 19 L. Ed. 2d 621 \(1967\).

Plaintiffs and PP&L agree that the relevant product and geographic markets can be defined as the market for residential heating and related equipment within PP&L's service area, approximately 1,074,015 homes. (Pl.'s Ex. 52). (Compare Def.'s Ex. 22 at 55 (Plaintiffs' expert's report defining the relevant market as "the heating fuel market within that portion of Central Eastern Pennsylvania comprising of PP&L's service area") with (Def.'s Ex. 24 P. 58) (PP&L's expert's report defining relevant market as "the market for residential heating fuel [**56] within PP&L's service area"). Plaintiffs, however, characterize the new housing market as a submarket, claiming that both the public and industry recognize it as a submarket. A high cost of conversion, argue Plaintiffs, prevents existing homes from changing heat sources. (Pl.'s Ex. 10 at 63-66; Ex. 26; Def.'s Ex. 22 at 26). PP&L objects to Plaintiffs' description of the new residential heating market as a "submarket," arguing that Plaintiffs' expert refused to define it as such. (Pl.'s Ex. 10 at 55-56 (stating, during a deposition, that the market for heating fuel in newly installed residences is a significant segment of the overall market "so long as you don't mean submarket by 'segment'")). Accordingly, genuine issues of material fact exist as to whether the new home market qualifies as a submarket.

Viewing the submissions in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs suggests to the Court that the new home market does constitute a submarket. PP&L's position is inconsistent with its marketing initiatives. PP&L initiated "Residential New Home Marketing Programs;" designed "Four-Star Home Programs" to respond "as the competition with gas and oil intensified in the new home market;" dedicated [**57] its residential marketing program between 1982 and 1988 to encouraging [*646] "the installation of off-peak space and water heating installations into new homes;" divided its residential strategy into two categories, "New Homes" and "Existing Homes;" strategized methods for increasing saturation in "new house construction;" developed marketing proposals for "New Construction" and "Conversions;" and targeted new "developments." (Pl.'s Ex. 22; Ex. 24; Ex. 25; Ex. 26; Ex. 43; Ex. 49; Ex. 54; Ex. 55; Ex. 61; Def.'s Ex. 60). But see Pl.'s Ex. 48 (PP&L memorandum referring to "New Dwelling Units" as a "market segment"). Others in the industry recognize the "new residential construction" submarket, including the PUC. (Pl.'s Ex. 56 (PUC report dividing its analysis of PP&L promotional techniques between "New Construction" and "Conversions")).

Furthermore, the high costs associated with converting an existing heating system suggest that new residences present a unique submarket. The marketing programs targeting existing homes differ dramatically from those designed to encourage the installation of a system in a new home because of the different concerns each implicates. Those programs seeking [**58] to convert existing homes face a more difficult task than those aiming to install new systems. In the former, the customer incurs substantial costs associated with the conversion in addition to the monies expended for the system itself, while in the latter, the consumer bears only the cost associated with the system. Once the customer chooses a new system, it becomes an attached fixture to the home, i.e., an installed heat pump, furnace, etc., and conduits are installed to transmit the heat through the home, i.e., vents, radiators, etc.

Unlike either gas or electric heat, the installation of oil heat requires the construction of a chimney. Should the homeowner choose to convert the existing system, he or she must remove the heating unit and possibly the conduits compatible with that system. (Pl.'s Ex. 26 (PP&L position paper remarking "reaching the conversion customer at the time the decision is made to replace a heating system is very difficult. Promotional efforts must be broad based and thus expensive per contact"); Ex. 54 (PP&L report stating "how well an older home, which previously used fossil fuel, can be retrofitted to use electric as a heat source is also a troubling question"); [**59] Ex. 95 (affidavit of customer dissatisfied with electric heat but wary of high conversion costs)). Thus, targeting new residential construction allows the supplier to "get in early" when the consumer need not consider the costs of conversion in making a decision. Prohibitive conversion costs essentially remove an existing home from the relevant market.

Plaintiffs have proffered sufficient evidence to support a finding that the new residential market constitutes a submarket and thereby create a genuine issue of material fact. The Court now assess whether PP&L possessed enough monopoly power to come dangerously close to success within the relevant market and submarket. HN11[] In the absence of a formula for reaching this decision, several factors emerge: "[1] the strength of the competition, [2] probable development of the industry, [3] the barriers to entry, [4] the nature of the anticompetitive conduct, and [5] the elasticity of consumer demand. Most significant, however, is the defendant's share of the relevant market." Pastore, 24 F.3d at 513 (citations omitted). See also 3 Von Kalinowski § 20.01[5] (remarking that "market share alone may not suffice to demonstrate [**60] a dangerous probability of success" and listing other factors including barriers to entry, relative size of defendant, and "whether the defendant's market share is rising or declining").

(ii). Market Share

HN12[] A dangerous probability of monopoly power exists where "the defendant firm possesses a significant market share when it undertakes the challenged anticompetitive conduct." Barr Lab., Inc. v. Abbott Lab., 978 F.2d 98, 112 (3d Cir. 1992) (citation omitted). Nonetheless, while "the size of a defendant's market share is a significant determinant of whether the defendant has a dangerous probability of successfully monopolizing the relevant market, it is not exclusive." Id. See also Pastore, 24 F.3d at 513 (remarking "[there is a] presumption that attempt does not occur in the absence of a rather significant market share").

[*647] Plaintiffs submit that PP&L's share of the relevant market suggests that monopolization could result. The percentage has increased every year for the past 19 years without interruption, from 18.19% in 1977 to 31.03% in 1995. According to Plaintiffs, no single oil dealer holds more than a 1.4% share of the market, and Plaintiffs collectively [**61] have less than a 6% share of the market. (Pl.'s Reply Mem. at 17 n. 10-11; Ex. 96). Plaintiffs also point to PP&L's share of the new housing submarket, which reached 84% in 1986 and averaged 70% between 1987 and 1995, describing PP&L's position in this submarket as "dominant."

PP&L protests that 69% of consumers have chosen other sources for home heating. (Def.'s Ex. 24 PP 34, 69; Ex. 23 at 230). PP&L notes that more homes in the relevant market were heated by oil, 380,463 homes, than by electricity, 333,317 homes. (Def.'s Ex. 14; Ex. 20 at 4). PP&L stresses that its share of the new home submarket has fallen steadily over the past decade, from 84% in 1986 to 53% in 1995. According to PP&L, only 21% of the new homes built received construction grants, leaving 79% unaffected, and PP&L's attempts to convert oil and gas customers to electric heat have been unsuccessful. (Def.'s Ex. 4 at 122-23; Ex. 17; Ex. 23 at 495; Ex. 24 at PP 72, 108). PP&L attributes the rise and fall of its share of the new home market from the late 1970s through 1995 to the fluctuating competition from gas companies. The PUC's removal of the gas ban in the mid 1980s -- which eliminated gas utilities as strong competitors [**62] in the late 1970s -- led to an increase in the market share of gas utilities at the expense of PP&L. In its own service area, UGI's share has grown from 12% in 1987 to over 50% in 1995.

The Court considers PP&L's 31% market share alone inadequate to demonstrate, as a matter of law, that PP&L possessed sufficient market presence to come dangerously close to achieving monopoly power. A market share of 31% is not significant enough, without more, to create a conclusive presumption of attempted monopoly. See Barr, 978 F.2d at 112 (remarking "market share of 47-50% alone [is] not enough to establish dangerous probability of success") (citation omitted); 3 Von Kalinowski § 20.01[5] (stating HN13 [↑] "courts will typically be able to find a dangerous probability where defendants have a 50% or more share. Defendants with shares less than 30% are rarely determined to possess a dangerous probability. Those with a share between 30 and 50 will have a dangerous probability if other factors are present") (substantiating with case law). Therefore, the Court proceeds to examine the other factors.

(iii). Pricing

Plaintiffs suggest that PP&L's monopoly power is demonstrated by the inflated [\[\*\*63\]](#) prices it obtains in the heating fuel market. As a heating fuel, PP&L prices electricity 40% higher than fossil fuel when heat pumps are used and more than 2 1/2 times the price of fossil fuel when electric baseboard heating is used. (Pl.'s Ex. 23 (PP&L document listing respectively the following costs per 1,000 sq. ft: coal ($ 182), natural gas ($ 230), oil ($ 240), electric heat pump ($ 334), electric baseboard ($ 651), heat pump plus ($ 221), and ceramic storage heaters ($ 430)); Ex. 26 (document listing cost per Btu for gas ($ 8.10), oil ($ 7.70), electric baseboard ($ 22.50), heat cycle heat pump ($ 11.20), ceramic heating ($ 11.70), and heat pump plus ($ 7.50); Ex. 48 (listing cost per million BTU for electric baseboard ($ 22.56), heat pump ($ 13.67), heat pump plus ($ 12.77), ceramic ($ 13.77), conventional oil ($ 11.07), pulse oil ($ 8.70), conventional gas ($ 11.40), and pulse gas ($ 8.56)). Plaintiffs suggest that the low rate associated with the heat pump plus system is misleading and inaccurate. (Pl.'s Ex. 87). Plaintiffs maintain that PP&L extracts a supracompetitive price for a heating system that does not present a more desirable alternative to gas or oil. (Pl.'s Ex. [\[\*\*64\]](#) 76; Ex. 77; Ex. 94; Ex. 95 (affidavits of dissatisfied customers of electric heat)). Finally, according to Plaintiffs' expert, "a competitive market is characterized by price elasticity. The ability to increase market share in the face of increasing price disadvantage is the antithesis of a competitive market." (Def.'s Ex. 22 at 29).

PP&L maintains its prices have remained stable for almost a decade between 1985 and [\[\*648\]](#) 1995 with no general rate increase. (Def.'s Ex. 24 P. 82). PP&L also notes that the PUC regulates its prices. Furthermore, PP&L's expert suggests that other factors, like the superiority of electric heating, contribute to PP&L's ability to increase market share in spite of higher prices. (Def.'s Ex. 24 at P 89).

(iv). Barriers To Entry & Competition

Plaintiffs claim that substantial barriers to competition exist in this field. Plaintiffs remind the Court that both PP&L and UGI, as exclusive suppliers of electric and natural gas respectively, hold monopoly positions in this market that allow them guaranteed profit streams once the subsidized heating systems are installed. (Pl.'s Ex. 40) (comparative analysis of "payback calculations" for heat pumps installed). The [\[\*\*65\]](#) high cost of installing or converting a heating system insures that once the homeowner has selected a heating system, the probability of the homeowner changing that system is small. Plaintiffs complain of stringent competition in a market saturated with fuel dealers, all of whom sell at competitive prices. Plaintiffs must do more than offer efficient systems that cost less; they need to overcome the additional barrier of high installation and conversion costs. Furthermore, with sales of roughly $ 2.7 billion, PP&L is about 400 times the size of the average oil dealer. (Pl.'s Ex. 5 at 182). PP&L's expert's report corroborates this position. (Pl.'s Ex. 22 at 26).

Plaintiffs suggest that PP&L also enjoys exclusive and unlimited access to the builder market, and the builder chooses the type of heating system installed in a new home 85% of the time. This access usually begins long before Plaintiffs receive public notice of new construction, enabling PP&L to obtain early commitments. (Pl.'s Ex. 6 at 247-51; Ex. 8 at 218-19; Ex. 59). According to Plaintiffs, PP&L shifts costs to its regulated activities, those which, by nature of PP&L's status as regulated utility, are guaranteed to return [\[\*\*66\]](#) a reasonable profit that is recovered from ratepayers. This enables PP&L to lower prices in the unregulated market. Similarly, argue Plaintiffs, PP&L applies advantages it enjoys in the regulated market, like the "customer service department" -- whose salaries are paid by the rate-payers -- to arrange electric service for builders and developers. (Pl.'s Ex. 3 at 17 (deposition revealing marketing was referred to customer service); Ex. 25 (referring to oil and gas companies' inability to match the depth of PP&L's personnel)). Finally, Plaintiffs describe PP&L's mention of the resurgence of UGI's competitiveness as a red herring, noting UGI's rapid and substantial increase in market share occurred within its own service area, which differs from PP&L's service area.

PP&L characterizes the barriers to entry in the home heating market as low, maintaining that participation requires neither sophistication, patents, large capital expenditures, storage tanks, nor government approval. (Def.'s Ex. 23 at 108; Ex. 24 at PP 77-79 (expert opinion corroborating PP&L's position); Ex. 67 at 68-77; Ex. 69 at 27-28, 50; Ex. 72 at 23; Ex. 75 at 32; Ex. 77 at 56-59; Ex. 79 at 43; Ex. 83 at 34; Ex. 87 [**67] at 25; Ex. 90 at 49; Ex. 91 at 22). PP&L points to other court decisions in similar industries that found no significant barriers to entry, referring specifically to United States v. Empire Gas Corp., 537 F.2d 296, 305 \(8th Cir. 1976\) (noting that in the liquid petroleum retail gas business, "barriers to entry in this industry are minimal; all that are needed are a supply of [liquid petroleum], a truck, and perhaps a storage tank"), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1122, 97 S. Ct. 1158, 51 L. Ed. 2d 572 (1977). PP&L describes the competition as strong, well capitalized, and lucrative, noting UGI has assets of more than $ 2 billion and revenues of $ 877 million, PECO has assets of $ 14 billion and revenues of $ 4 billion, Plaintiff SICO earned over $ 400 million in revenues in 1995, and PG Energy enjoyed 1995 revenues of $ 152.8 million. (Def.'s Ex. 49 at Exhibit A; Ex. 64 at 20, 22; Ex. 65).

(v). Probability Conclusion

The submissions on both sides of this question have created a genuine issue of material fact for jury resolution of whether a dangerous probability exists that PP&L could [*649] achieve monopoly power in the relevant market and submarkets. The Court finds evidence [**68] suggesting, if credited, that such a probability exists. PP&L's 31% share of the relevant market is an insufficient indicator on its own. When considered in conjunction with other factors, however, the 31% market share suggests a possibility of achieving monopoly power. A jury could find PP&L's significantly larger share of the new construction submarket especially indicative of monopoly power in light of the fact that the majority of the charged predatory conduct involves PP&L's marketing strategies for this submarket. Entering into this consideration would be the issue of supracompetitive pricing. Plaintiffs describe PP&L's prices as anticompetitive while PP&L suggests other factors play a role in the selection of a heating system.

The parties also diverge on the issue of barriers to competition. HN14↑ Entry barriers refer either to "long run-costs that were not incurred by incumbent firms but must be incurred by new entrants or [to] factors in the market that deter entry while permitting incumbent firms to earn monopoly returns." Los Angeles Land Co. v. Brunswick Corp., 6 F.3d 1422, 1427-28 \(9th Cir. 1993\), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1197, 114 S. Ct. 1307, 127 L. Ed. 2d 658 [**69] (1994). See also Southern Pac. Communications Co. v. American Tel. and Tel., Inc., 238 U.S. App. D.C. 309, 740 F.2d 980, 1001 \(D.C. Cir. 1984\) (defining barrier to entry as "any market condition that makes entry more costly or time-consuming and thus reduces the effectiveness of potential competition as a constraint on the pricing behavior of the dominant firm"), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1005, 105 S. Ct. 1359, 84 L. Ed. 2d 380 (1985). In the actual case, the Court finds sufficient evidence in the submissions to justify a jury finding that this industry suffers from high entry barriers.

Evidence that while PP&L's prices exceed those of the competition, its market share consistently increases, could convince a jury that the relevant market contains insufficient competition to restrain PP&L from earning monopoly returns. PP&L points to two cases from the Third Circuit suggesting that capital requirements of a few million dollars do not create barriers to entry. See Advo, 51 F.3d at 1200-1201 (finding no barriers to entry of pre-printed advertising circular market; describing a start up investment of "a couple of million dollars" as "not so high that it would [**70] prevent new competitors from jumping in if [defendant] tried to charge supracompetitive prices"); Barr, 978 F.2d at 113-14 (finding low barriers to entry in pharmaceutical drug market).

Concededly, the record in the instant case does not contain evidence of prohibitively high costs associated with entering this industry. Instead, the Court chooses to employ an expansive definition of "barriers to entry" more suitably tailored for the unique facts presented, looking to "(1) legal licenses; (2) control over a superior resource; (3) entrenched buyer preferences for established brands or company reputations; and (4) capital market evaluations imposing higher capital costs on new entrants." Los Angeles, 6 F.3d at 1428 n. 4 (citation omitted). See also Southern Pac., 740 F.2d at 1001 (including "the costs and delays of the regulatory process . . . . the creation of bottlenecks, entrenched customer preferences . . . large capital requirements, access to technical information, and disparities in risk" in definitions of barriers to entry) (citation omitted).

The Court's conclusion rests, in part, on the uniqueness of the residential heating market in PP&L's service area. [**71] The two largest players in this market are regulated monopolies who face no competition within their respective fields. PP&L provides the exclusive source of electric energy in Plaintiffs' service area, and the barriers to entry in the electric supply arena are absolute. If PP&L decides to raise rates, and the PUC approves this decision, PP&L will not be checked by the entry of different suppliers of electricity willing to charge a lower price. Once arrangements are made for a particular home to have either gas or electric, either UGI or PP&L is assured the revenue stream from that home and rests comfortably knowing that no competitor selling gas or electricity will wrestle that client away; "all-electric" and "all-gas" mean "all-PP&L" and "all-UGI."<sup>6</sup>

[*650] The remainder of the market consists of small fuel oil dealers, some of whom have limited financial resources. Plaintiffs strive to compete in a market populated by two well endowed and heavily regulated monopolies. Anyone wishing to enter the unregulated portion of the residential heating market is thrown in among the fuel oil dealers. While the costs associated with entering the market may not be prohibitive, the high level of competition [**72] among the regulated monopolies and the fragmented fuel oil dealers could prevent entrants from restraining PP&L.<sup>6</sup>

Finally, the high conversion costs associated with changing heating systems insures that [**73] once a home contains a particular system, the supplier can count on consistent revenue from that house. These high conversion costs limit the customers' options, lessen the probability that a new competitor will succeed, and increase the importance of the new residential construction submarket. The "permanence" of an existing system makes the new construction submarket crucial to the economic sustenance of the competitors in the relevant market, and the inability to access this submarket has deleterious effects on Plaintiffs' competitiveness in the relevant market. The Court therefore finds ample evidence in the record to create a factual issue as to whether near monopolization of the new construction submarket yields a high probability that PP&L could successfully monopolize the entire residential market.

Accordingly, in the face of jury questions regarding an intent to monopolize, a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power, and predatory conduct, the Court cannot award summary judgment on Plaintiffs' attempted monopolization claim. (Compare Def.'s Ex. 22 at 4-7 (Plaintiffs' expert claiming the presence of monopoly power), at 7-24 (finding evidence of specific intent), [**74] at 30 (describing PP&L's activity as "anticompetitive") with Def.'s Ex. 24 at PP 58-88 (PP&L's expert proclaiming PP&L has no market power), at PP 117-23 (denying specific intent to monopolize), at PP 83-88 (denying PP&L's conduct was predatory). This claim will proceed.

2. Actual Monopolization

PP&L moves for summary judgment on Plaintiffs' claim of actual monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act. HN15 [**75] "The offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of superior product, business acumen, or historical accident." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2089, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992) (citing United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 1704, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)). Plaintiffs must also establish that they suffered antitrust injury. See Houser v. Fox Theatres Management Corp., 845 F.2d 1225, 1233 (3d Cir. 1988) (remarking "plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury [**75] of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants acts unlawful") (citation omitted).

---

<sup>6</sup>The Court is not persuaded by PP&L's reliance on Empire Gas. While Empire Gas found low barriers to entry in the liquid petroleum retail gas industry, the Court considers the competitive forces unique to this relevant market dispositive. A finding contrary to Empire Gas from a different region suggests that concerns unique to the market in question control, and no established rule exists that a certain industry has low or high barriers to entry. The Court believes this finding varies from case to case. See Oahu Gas Serv., Inc. v. Pacific Resources, Inc., 838 F.2d 360, 367 (9th Cir.) (finding sufficient evidence to support the "conclusion that high barriers to entry existed in the Hawaiian propane market"), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 870, 109 S. Ct. 180, 102 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1988).

(a). Monopoly Power

HN16<sup>7</sup> Monopoly power is "the power to control prices or exclude competition." United States v. E.I. DuPont De Nemours and Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 76 S. Ct. 994, 1005, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956). The Third Circuit examines these two factors conjunctively. See Borough of Lansdale v. Philadelphia Elec. Co., 692 F.2d 307, 311 (3d Cir. 1982) (defining monopoly power as the power to [*651] control prices and exclude competition). "The size of market share is a primary determinant of whether monopoly power exists." Pennsylvania Dental, 745 F.2d at 260 (citation omitted). See also Fineman, 980 F.2d at 201 noting monopoly power "may ordinarily be inferred from a predominant share of the relevant market" (citation omitted); Weiss, 745 F.2d at 827 (stating "[a] primary criterion used to assess the existence of monopoly power is the defendant's market share").<sup>7</sup>

[**76] In the instant case, PP&L's share of the relevant market has climbed steadily from 17.30% in 1978 to 31.03% in 1995. The Court considers these figures inadequate. HN18<sup>7</sup> Under the decisions in this Circuit, a market share of 31% is insufficient as a matter of law to establish monopoly power. See Ideal, 90 F.3d at 749-50 (finding a 47% share inadequate); Fineman, 980 F.2d at 201 (finding as a matter of law that "absent other relevant factors, 55 percent market share will not prove the existence of monopoly power" and noting "90% is enough, 60% is not likely to suffice, and 33% is insufficient") (citation omitted); Pennsylvania Dental, 745 F.2d at 261 (finding a market share of between 32% and 35% insufficient as a matter of law to establish monopolization); 3 Von Kalinowski § 19.02[3] (remarking that lower courts find that a high market share "generally above 70% [] by itself demonstrates monopoly power . . . [A] low market share (generally below 40%) either precludes a finding of monopoly power or requires a finding of no monopoly power . . . In the middle range (generally 40% to 70%) courts have split over whether market share alone suffices to establish monopoly [**77] power").

Because PP&L's share of the relevant market is insufficient to support a finding of monopoly power, the Court concludes as a matter of law that Plaintiffs cannot proceed on their claim for actual monopolization. The Court recognizes that in Weiss, the Third Circuit remarked that courts have the discretion to examine other factors beyond market share in assessing monopoly power. That decision also instructs, however, that a 33% share of the relevant market is insufficient to find monopoly power. See Weiss, 745 F.2d at 827 & n.72 (citations omitted). Finally, while the Court did not regard PP&L's 31% share as inadequate when evaluating the attempted monopolization claim, the threshold finding in an actual monopolization analysis is higher. See 3 Von Kalinowski § 19.03 (remarking that "the defendant crosses the 'dangerous probability' threshold with substantially less market share than the defendant who crosses the 'monopolization' portal"). The Court therefore grants PP&L's Motion for Summary Judgment with respect to Plaintiffs' claim of actual monopolization.

3. Monopoly Leveraging

Plaintiffs charge PP&L with leveraging its monopoly power as the sole [**78] provider of electricity in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act. Specifically, Plaintiffs maintain that PP&L had an excess of electricity from the Susquehanna nuclear facilities. According to Plaintiffs, if PP&L "sold that electricity to other utilities on the interchange, the proceeds of those sales would be used to reduce the energy cost rate which the PUC allowed it to recover." (Pl.'s Mem. Opp. at 48). Plaintiffs posit that if PP&L "could make sales to its jurisdictional ratepayers, the PUC would allow a return on the cost of those sales which increased PP&L's profits." (Id.) (See Pl.'s Ex. 9 at 51-53 (stating that <sup>7</sup> HN17<sup>7</sup> In assessing whether monopoly power exists, the Court applies the same definitions of relevant market and submarket crafted supra in the attempted monopolization analysis. See 3 Von Kalinowski §§ 19.02[2], 20.01[2][b] (1996) (stating "to determine if monopoly power exists, it is first necessary to define the relevant market in which the power to control prices or and/or exclude competitors exists . . . The same tests used to determine the relevant market in cases of actual monopolization are applied in attempted monopolization actions") (citing inter alia Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993)).

PP&L used to achieve savings by making sales on the interchange that improved earnings but the PUC changed its position, requiring that any improvement in earnings position come from sales to customers); Ex. 22 at 2 (Plaintiffs' expert speculating "PP&L leveraged a regulated monopoly position as an electric power provider in an [*652] attempt to monopolize the heating fuel market in its service area)). According to Plaintiffs, PP&L targeted the home heating market to increase revenues and profits, and PP&L used the all-electric agreements and other practices to obstruct [**79] the competition from entering that market.

PP&L attacks Plaintiffs' leveraging claim, relying exclusively on Advo. There, the Third Circuit refused a monopoly leveraging claim where the industry was marked by low barriers to entry, any attempt to recoup foregone profits would lead to a flood of new entrants in the market, the record contained no evidence of leverage, and defendants' offering of discounts did not offend antitrust practices. PP&L considers itself in a similar situation, maintaining the market has low barriers to entry, PP&L cannot raise prices because of the PUC, and the record contains no evidence of leveraging. (Def.'s Ex. 24 PP 114-16 (PP&L's expert denying leverage)). The Court disagrees.

HN19 [↑] "Leveraging involves the use of monopoly power in one market to gain an advantage in another market," and the use of such power violates § 2 of the Sherman Act. 3 Von Kalinowski § 19.05[3]. The essence of a leveraging claim "is the use of monopoly power at one stage of production or in one market to gain a monopoly or a competitive advantage at another stage of production or in another, related market." Trans Sport, Inc. v. Starter Sportswear, Inc., 775 F. Supp. 536, 1\*\*801 540 \(N.D.N.Y. 1991\) (citations omitted), aff'd, 964 F.2d 186 \(2d Cir. 1992\). See also Eastman, 504 U.S. at 480 n.29, 112 S. Ct. at 2089 n.29 (remarking "power gained through some natural and legal advantage, such as a patent, copyright, or business acumen, can give rise to liability if a seller exploits his dominant position in one market to expand his empire in the next") (citations omitted); Robles v. Humana Hosp. Cartersville, 785 F. Supp. 989, 996 \(N.D. Ga. 1992\) (defining monopoly leveraging as the "use of power in one market to dominate or control a secondary market"). In this Circuit, Plaintiffs must show that PP&L gained more than a mere competitive advantage in the residential heating market. Rather, "in order to prevail upon a theory of monopoly leveraging, a plaintiff must prove threatened or actual monopoly in the leveraged market." Fineman, 980 F.2d at 206. See also 3 Von Kalinowski § 19.05[3][c] (adopting Fineman approach and suggesting "monopoly leveraging only should be an offense when the defendant has either monopolized the second market or obtained sufficient market power in it to be liable for attempted monopolization").

[**81] Plaintiffs' leveraging claim survives summary judgment. Accepting Plaintiffs' theory as true, the Court finds a genuine issue of material fact concerning whether PP&L targeted the home heating market both to increase revenue in the unregulated market and to offset its inability to broker out excess energy to other utilities under regulatory supervision. A jury, accepting the record as framed by Plaintiffs, could find that PP&L leveraged its monopoly power, attempted to monopolize a second market, and enjoyed more than just a competitive advantage in that second market.

Advo provides no support for PP&L. Unlike the market in Advo, the relevant market in the instant case contains high barriers to entry. The record demonstrates that PP&L enjoys a consistent, albeit small, increase in market share each year even though its heating systems, with the exception of the heat pump plus, are the costliest form of heat. To date, PP&L has not suffered a wave of new entrants driving prices down to competitive levels. Similarly, PP&L's status as a monopoly allows it to extract home heating higher prices without the fear that other competitors will enter the market. Once PP&L obtains an [**82] agreement from a builder that all homes in a development will be electrically heated, PP&L is guaranteed that all homes must look to PP&L for power. Finally, the marketing programs employed by PP&L in its attempt to monopolize the relevant market, unlike those in Advo, may very well offend antitrust principles.

B. SHERMAN ACT § 1

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides: HN20 [↑] "Trusts, etc., in restraint of trade illegal; penalty[:] Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or [*653] conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C.A. § 1. HN21 [↑] In order to present a valid claim under § 1, Plaintiffs must prove "(1) the defendants contracted, combined or conspired among each other, (2) the combination or conspiracy produced anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; (3) the objects of the conduct pursuant to that contract or conspiracy were illegal; and (4) the plaintiffs were injured as a result of that conspiracy." Ideal, 90 F.3d at 748 n.5 (citation omitted).

2. Per Se Illegality of the Contested Agreements

HN22 Since "virtually [**83] all business agreements restrain trade to some extent," § 1 of the Sherman Act "has been construed to make illegal only those contracts that constitute unreasonable restraints of trade." Orson, Inc. v. Miramax Film Corp., 79 F.3d 1358, 1366 \(3d Cir. 1996\) (citation omitted). Certain agreements, "because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use. Such plainly anticompetitive agreements are illegal per se." Id. at 1367 n.9. Examples of per se violations include tying agreements and group boycotts. See Town Sound, 959 F.2d at 476-77 (stating "the Court long ago established a so-called 'per se' rule against tying arrangements in cases where it thought exploitation of leverage is probable") (citation omitted); Miller v. Indiana Hospital, 843 F.2d 139, 144 n.6 (3d Cir.) (remarking "a group boycott . . . is illegal per se under section 1 of the Sherman Act") (citation omitted), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 870, 109 S. Ct. 178, 102 L. Ed. 2d 147 (1988). [**84]

PP&L contends that the Court cannot designate the all-electric agreements as per se illegal. According to PP&L, the instant case does not provide an example of "horizontal agreements" because PP&L did not contract with gas companies, propane sellers, and fuel dealers. The only agreements at issue, as far as PP&L is concerned, are "vertical agreements" between the sellers and buyers of electricity, and "vertical restraints of trade, which do not present an express or implied agreement to set resale prices, are evaluated under the rule of reason." Orson, 79 F.3d at 1368. Plaintiffs characterize both the all-electric agreements and the conversion grants as per se illegal, describing them as either tying agreements or group boycotts.

The Court concludes that the agreements constituted neither tying arrangements nor group boycotts. HN23 "In a tying arrangement, the seller sells one item, known as the tying product, on the condition that the buyer also purchases another item, known as the tied product." Allen-Myland v. Int'l Business Mach. Corp., 33 F.3d 194, 200 (3d Cir.) (citation omitted), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 684 (1994). At first blush, the all-electric [**85] agreements resemble tying arrangements -- PP&L sells one product, electricity, on the condition that the developer purchase another product, the heat pump. Once the heat pump is connected, PP&L enjoys a permanent customer. Before the Court can conclude that a tying arrangement exists, however, it must find that the "tied" product and the "tying" product are two separate products. See Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 614, 73 S. Ct. 872, 883, 97 L. Ed. 1277 \(1953\) (referring to the "common core of the adjudicated unlawful tying arrangements" as "the forced purchase of a second distinct commodity with the desired purchase of a dominant 'tying' product, resulting in economic harm to competition in the 'tied' market"). Examples of tying arrangements involving separate products include a defendant's refusal to lease salt dispensing machines unless the lessee agrees, in addition, to purchase from defendant the salt used therein, International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 68 S. Ct. 12, 92 L. Ed. 20 \(1947\), and a railroad's insertion, in a lease, of a "preferential routing" clause requiring that the lessees give the railroad preference in [**86] transporting goods originating from the leased lands, Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 \(1958\).

[*654] The agreements are not tying arrangements. The underlying product in this antitrust litigation is residential heating. Admittedly, that product has separate components. After adjustments are made to an electric thermostat, the heat pump extracts air from the outside, treats the air, and forces it, through vents, into the living area. This entire process, however, depends exclusively on electricity. The Court therefore finds that PP&L sold only one product through the all-electric agreements and the conversion grants: electricity for residential heating. While it also arranged for the installation of heat pumps, the heat pumps play, at best, an ancillary role, amounting to nothing more than a conduit for electricity that transforms it into a heating source. In the absence of a second product, a tying arrangement cannot exist.

In reaching this conclusion, the Court adopts the rationale employed in Washington Gas Light Co. v. Virginia Elec. and Power Co., 438 F.2d 248 \(4th Cir. 1971\) which rejected a gas utility's allegation that [**87] an electric utility's practice of reducing the costs, to a contractor, of installation for an underground residential distribution line, in exchange for a commitment by the contractor to build an all-electric house, constituted a tying arrangement and hence a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. The electric utility also furnished credit, based on anticipated electrical usage, for underground residential distribution installation. The court concluded that the electric utility did not conduct a tying arrangement because it sold only one product, electricity. It characterized the delivery of electricity as "an ancillary and necessary part of the business of producing and selling electrical power. This was simply a new method of delivery . . . . There was no separate market for the installation of underground wiring . . . .

HN24[↑] That there are not dual markets strongly suggests that there are not separate products." Id. at 252 (referring to Times-Picayune, 345 U.S. at 614, 73 S. Ct. at 872). See also Grason Elec. Co. v. Sacramento Mun. Util. Dist., 571 F. Supp. 1504, 1527 (E.D. Cal. 1983) (finding "electrical energy systems" are not "a product distinct from [**88] retail electric energy"). While the heat pump lies farther down the chain of distribution than underground wiring, it does nothing more than transform electric energy into a viable heating source.

Similarly, Plaintiffs' allegation of a classic group boycott fails. HN25[↑] A group boycott is a concerted effort by a group of competitors "at one level to protect themselves from competition from non-group members who seek to compete at that level. Typically, the boycotting group combines to deprive would be competitors of a trade relationship which they need in order to enter (or survive in) the level wherein the group operates." Larry v. Muko, Inc. v. Southwestern Pennsylvania Bldg. and Constr. Trades Council, 670 F.2d 421, 429 n.11 (3d Cir.) (citation omitted), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 916, 103 S. Ct. 229, 74 L. Ed. 2d 182 (1982). The activity alleged here involves neither a boycott nor a refusal to deal. The only consequence associated with the failure to abide by the terms associated with either the all-electric agreements or the conversion grants was ineligibility for cash incentives, not a concerted refusal to do business.

The Court agrees with PP&L's assertion that the agreements [**89] constitute vertical restraints of trade and not horizontal restraints of trade. The agreements are HN26[↑] "vertical" -- between "entities operating at different levels of the market structure, such as manufacturers and distributors" -- and not "horizontal" -- "among competitors at the same level of distribution." Black's Law Dictionary 1563, 737 (6th ed. 1991). PP&L, a supplier of electricity, entered into an agreement with builders acting at a different level of distribution. "[A] purely vertical arrangement, by which (for example) a supplier or dealer makes an arrangement exclusively to supply or serve a manufacturer, is not a group boycott." U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Healthsource, Inc., 986 F.2d 589, 594 (1st Cir. 1993) (referring to Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, 359 U.S. 207, 212, 79 S. Ct. 705, 709, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959)).

The Court considers both cases relied on by Plaintiffs distinguishable. Radiant Burners, Inc. v. Peoples Gas Light and Coke Co., 364 U.S. 656, 81 S. Ct. 365, 5 L. Ed. 2d 358 (1961) involved an antitrust suit brought by a [*655] gas burner manufacturer against an association of suppliers of natural gas. Similarly, in Fashion Originators' Guild Int'l of America, Inc. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 312 U.S. 457, 61 S. Ct. 703, 85 L. Ed. 949 (1941), garment manufacturers and textile manufacturers dealt only with buyers who would not use textiles that had been copied. Both cases dealt with concerted agreements among many, if not all, competing suppliers to refuse to sell their products unless certain conditions were met. The penalties for noncompliance with the underlying agreements were boycotts amounting to outright refusals to deal.

By contrast, the instant lawsuit, brought by suppliers of oil heat against the sole supplier of an alternative source of energy, attacks inter alia an agreement between that competitor and the builders who select the form of energy to be placed in new homes. Assuming, for the purposes of this analysis only, that the builders acted as retailers in that they connected PP&L with consumers, the record contains no evidence of a concerted refusal to deal or sell among competing suppliers at the same level of production. The only penalty for noncompliance involved the withholding of a promotional cash incentive. See Earl W. Kintner, Federal Antitrust Law § 10.29 (remarking HN27[↑] "a mere promotional [**91] incentive which may tend to persuade economic actors to choose one product or service over another cannot be classified as a group boycott") (referring to Sulmeyer v. Coca-Cola Co., 515 F.2d 835, 845 (5th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 424 U.S. 934, 96 S. Ct. 1148, 47 L. Ed. 2d 341 (1976)).<sup>8</sup>

[**92] (b). The Agreements are Exclusive Dealing Arrangements

While the Court finds great difficulty in pigeonholing the challenged activity into one of the definitions of per se illegal activity, the contested agreements easily qualify as "exclusive dealing arrangements." HN29↑ An exclusive dealing agreement requires "the purchaser not to deal in the goods of a competitor of the seller." Town Sound, 959 F.2d at 473 n.2. Generally, the "seller agrees to sell to a buyer on the condition that the buyer agrees not to deal in competitive products." 2 Von Kalinowski § 6G.01[1]. See also Earl W. Kintner, Federal Antitrust Law § 10.39 (1980) (stating exclusive dealing arrangements "condition business dealings upon some ancillary or non-ancillary action or inaction on the part of those entering into the arrangement"); Lawrence A. Sullivan, Antitrust § 163 (1977) (remarking an "exclusive dealing contract involves a commitment by a buyer to deal only with a particular seller"). In the instant case, the all-electric agreements specifically required a builder to ensure that all homes in the development had electric heating systems that would not be supplemented by an [\[\*\*93\]](#) alternative source of energy.

PP&L denies that the all-electric agreements constitute exclusive dealing contracts, suggesting the agreements affected "less than all purchases." See Barr, 978 F.2d at 110 n.24 (noting "an agreement affecting less than all purchases does not amount to true exclusive dealing") (citing Kellam-Energy, Inc. v. Duncan, 668 F. Supp. 861, 883-84 \(D. Del. 1987\)). In support of this assertion, they point to testimony from various developers averring that in spite of the language of the all-electric agreements, the developers knew they could purchase oil or gas heating systems with no consequence and proceeded, on some occasions, to install alternative residential heating systems in developments subject to the all-electric agreements. PP&L likens the all-electric agreements to nothing more than ordinary volume discount offers. Plaintiffs protest that in spite of PP&L's contention that the developers ignored the restrictive language contained in the all-electric agreements, a PP&L employee testified that he "could not speak" to the question [\[\*656\]](#) whether "all the builders knew [PP&L] would not enforce this agreement" and stated, "why would we produce an [\[\*\*94\]](#) agreement that is designed to market our product and then tell a person . . . 'It doesn't mean anything.'" (Pl.'s Ex. 8 at 121-22). The Court therefore faces a fact dispute concerning the developers' supposed belief that the language contained in the all-electric agreements was not binding, precluding a finding, at this stage, that the developers dealt freely with other suppliers of residential heating systems. See Kellam-Energy, 668 F. Supp. at 883 (finding "nothing in the requirements contracts between the parties restricts [purchaser] from purchasing gasoline from other suppliers at [purchaser's other outlets]. Each contract applies only to a particular location, and the record reveals that [purchaser] dealt openly with other wholesalers. Five of [purchaser's] locations were not supplied by [supplier]").

Viewing the submissions in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs compels the conclusion that the all-electric agreements implicated both the spirit and the purpose of the exclusive dealing arrangement definition. PP&L required developers not to deal with its competitors and to install electric residential heat. A developer's failure to comply with this condition [\[\*\*95\]](#) resulted in a penalty to the builder. Additionally, the clauses forbidding the supplementation of the electric heating systems with fossil fuels and other competing energy sources conditioned future dealings between PP&L and the developers on the developers' refusal to deal with PP&L's competition. See 2 Von Kalinowski § 6G.01[1] (stating that HN30↑ an exclusive dealing contract "conditions future dealing on the purchaser's agreement not to deal with the supplier's competitors").

---

<sup>8</sup> Asserting the agreements are inherently suspect restraints, Plaintiffs ask the Court, in the alternative, to apply the abbreviated HN28↑ "quick look" rule of reason analysis. This approach applies "where per se condemnation is inappropriate, but a full-blown industry analysis is not required to demonstrate the anticompetitive character of an inherently suspect restraint." Orson, 79 F.3d at n.9 (citation omitted). In the instant case, in order to assess the anticompetitive effects, if any, of PP&L's allegedly violative conduct, the Court must conduct a rather comprehensive examination of the home heating industry in PP&L's service area. Accordingly, the Court does not consider the "quick look" approach applicable.

HN31[] The Court evaluates both exclusive dealing arrangement's and vertical restraints under the "rule of reason" analysis. See Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. Number 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 44, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 1575, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (O'Connor, J. concurring) (remarking "exclusive dealing arrangements are independently subject to scrutiny under § 1 of the Sherman Act, and are also analyzed under the rule of reason") (citing Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 333-35, 81 S. Ct. 623, 631-32, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 \(1961\)); Orson, 79 F.3d at 1368 (remarking "the Supreme Court has instructed that vertical restraints of trade, which do not present an express or implied agreement to set resale [**96] prices, are evaluated under the rule of reason"); U.S. Healthcare, 986 F.2d at 595 (suggesting that to condemn exclusive dealing arrangements requires "the normal treatment afforded by the rule of reason"); Williams v. Indep. News Co., Inc., 485 F.2d 1099, 1104 \(3d Cir. 1973\) (stating "by definition an exclusive dealing contract excludes potential customers from competition with the exclusive dealer[,] such a restraint is not per se unreasonable").

"The inquiry mandated by the rule of reason is whether the challenged agreement is one that promotes competition or one that suppresses competition." National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 691, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 1365, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 \(1978\). The rule of reason analysis requires the Court to consider "all relevant factors in examining a defendant's purpose in implementing a restraint and the restraint's effect on competition." Orson, 79 F.3d at 1367 (citation omitted). <sup>9</sup> HN32[] Plaintiffs "bear the initial burden of showing that the alleged combination or agreement produced adverse, anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets." Id. at 1368 (citation omitted). [**97] "The adverse impact must be on [*657] competition, not on any individual competitor or plaintiff's business." Reazin v. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Kansas, Inc., 899 F.2d 951, 960 \(10th Cir.\), cert. denied, 497 U.S. 1005, 110 S. Ct. 3241, 111 L. Ed. 2d 752 \(1990\). Plaintiffs satisfy this burden by "proving the existence of actual anticompetitive effects, such as reduction of output, increase in price, or deterioration in quality of goods and services." Orson, 79 F.3d at 1367 (citation omitted).

Due to the difficulty of isolating the market effects of the challenged conduct, however, such proof is often impossible to make. Accordingly, the courts allow proof of the defendant's 'market power' instead. Market power -- the ability to raise prices above those that would prevail in a competitive market -- is essentially a surrogate for detrimental effects.

Id. (citations omitted).

[**98] HN34[] Once plaintiff meets this initial burden of "adducing adequate evidence of market power or actual anticompetitive effects, the burden shifts to defendant to show that the challenged conduct promotes a sufficiently pro-competitive objective. To rebut, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the restraint is not reasonably necessary to achieve the stated objective." Id. at 1367-68 (citations omitted).

3. Application of the Rule of Reason

Plaintiffs contend that both the all-electric agreements and the conversion grants violate § 1 of the Sherman Act, relying heavily on Advanced Health Care Servs., Inc. v. Radford Community Hosp., 910 F.2d 139 \(4th Cir. 1990\) (finding for purposes of a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, a durable medical equipment supplier stated a § 1 claim against its competitor and several hospitals by alleging that they conspired to exclude all competition in the durable

<sup>9</sup> HN33[] Under the traditional rule of reason:

The true test of illegality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be obtained, and all relevant facts.

United States v. Brown Univ. in Providence in the State of Rhode Island, 5 F.3d 658, 668 n.8 \(3d Cir. 1993\) (citing Board of Trade of Chicago v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 38 S. Ct. 242, 243-44, 62 L. Ed. 683 \(1918\)).

medical equipment markets and that this exclusion was not the result of business acumen, but of anticompetitive monopolistic intentions executed through marketing strategies and kickback schemes; the hospitals received 65% of all revenues generated by rentals of competitors' products to discharged [**99] patients). According to Plaintiffs, PP&L foreclosed the homeowner's ability to select the most economical and desirable heating system. Finally, Plaintiffs suggest that at the very least, whether PP&L possesses "market power" presents a question of fact for jury resolution.

PP&L claims that the record contains insufficient evidence of market power because the oil dealers hold a greater share of the relevant market than PP&L. According to PP&L, the 29,512 grants affected no more than 3% of the total 1,074,015 homes in the relevant market, 97% of the homes in the relevant market were unaffected by the alleged anticompetitive activity, only 120 out of 1,500 developments operated under the all-electric agreements, and approximately 90% of the residential developments constructed were unaffected by the all-electric agreements. (Def.'s Ex. 14; Pl.'s Ex. 46).

HN35[<sup>10</sup>] While not controlling, an examination of PP&L's market power provides a starting point for the Court's evaluation of the challenged restraint's impact on competition. Compare Brader v. Allegheny Gen. Hosp., 64 F.3d 869, 878 (3d Cir. 1995) (remarking "market power" is relevant only to the extent that it is a factor in the determination [**100] of the reasonableness of the restraint") with Reazin, 899 F.2d at 967-68 & n.24 (highlighting the disagreement among courts over whether "a particular market share should be given conclusive or merely presumptive effect . . . or whether market share is only a starting point in the inquiry") (citing cases) and Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 822 F.2d 656, 666 (7th Cir. 1987) (describing defendant's possession of market power as a "threshold inquiry" and remarking "only if [plaintiff] can allege facts that give rise to an inference that [defendant] had sufficient market power to control liquor prices must we proceed to the first step in the Rule of Reason analysis"), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 977, 108 S. Ct. 488, 98 L. Ed. 2d 486 (1987).

Had the Court concluded that PP&L possessed sufficient monopoly power as a matter of law to establish a claim of actual monopolization under the § 2 of the Sherman Act, it could easily find market power under [*658] § 1. See Eastman, 504 U.S. at 481, 112 S. Ct. at 2090 (finding "monopoly power under § 2 [actual monopolization claim] requires, of course, something greater than market power under § 1" and [**101] describing § 2 as the "more stringent monopoly standard"); Reazin, 899 F.2d at 967 (remarking that market and monopoly power "differ only in degree -- monopoly power is commonly thought of as 'substantial' market power"); 3 Von Kalinowski § 17.01[2] (finding that "since the existence of actual or near monopoly power is a requisite element of actual . . . monopolization under section 2, commentators sometimes have said that the quantum of proof required under that section exceeds that required by section 1"). In the absence of such a finding, the Court conducts a comprehensive evaluation of PP&L's market power.

PP&L's market shares of 31% of the relevant market and 53% of the new construction submarket neither constitute prima facie evidence of market power nor preclude a finding of market power. See Valley, 822 F.2d at 666 (finding "70%-75% of market share constitutes market power . . . and that a 20%-25% market share or less does not constitute market power").<sup>10</sup> HN36[<sup>10</sup>] When considered in conjunction with other factors like barriers to entry, control over a superior resource, relative size, strength of the competition, and other market specific characteristics, [**102] market share may indicate market power. See Reazin, 899 F.2d at 967 & n.23 (remarking "market share is relevant to the determination of the existence of market or monopoly power, but 'market share alone is insufficient to establish market power'" and listing relevant factors as inter alia "power of price and power of competition . . . the existence and intensity of entry barriers, elasticity of supply and demand, the number of firms in the market, and market trends") (citation omitted); Valley, 822 F.2d at 666 (finding "market power is normally inferred from the possession of a substantial percentage of the sales in a market carefully defined in terms of both product and geography") (citation omitted).

---

<sup>10</sup> In assessing PP&L's market share, the Court defines the relevant market as residential home heating in PP&L's service area and the submarket as new residential construction in PP&L's service area. While this definition mirrors that employed in disposing of the Sherman Act § 2 claim, the Court cannot fashion, and the parties have not put forth, a more germane definition designed specifically for the Sherman Act § 1 claim. Compare 2 Von Kalinowski § 6.02[2] (stating that while "market power under § 1 is not necessarily the same as monopoly power under § 2 of the Sherman Act, defining markets under § 1 involves the same analysis as under § 2 of the Sherman Act") with Kellam, 668 F. Supp. at 889 n.41 ("defining the relevant market for purposes of an attempted monopolization claim is different than defining the market for an exclusive dealing claim. In an exclusive dealing context, the law is only concerned with the market in the product under contract").

[**103] In the instant case, assessing PP&L's market share in light of other factors, the Court cannot conclude as a matter of law, that PP&L does not possess market power as understood and defined under § 1 of the Sherman Act. The Court has already found evidence of high barriers to entry. Viewing the facts in a light most favorable to Plaintiffs reveals that they compete in a market populated by at least one monopolist, PP&L, a large gas company enjoying a significant share of the gas heating market, and a panoply of oil dealers, none of whom controls a significant portion of the market. PP&L's relative size and status as the sole provider of electricity provide it with considerable advantages over the Plaintiffs, all of whom compete in the highly fragmented oil segment. PP&L enjoys exclusive control over this resource and therefore possesses durable market power. PP&L's market share in the relevant market has increased consistently (despite its supracompetitive prices), and its declining market share in the new construction submarket, from 84% in 1986, does not foreclose a finding of market power. See Reazin, 899 F.2d at 970 (stating HN37 [↑] "[a] declining market share may reflect [**104] an absence of market power, but it does not foreclose a finding of such power") (citation omitted).

The Court now looks to PP&L to demonstrate that the all-electric agreements promote a sufficiently procompetitive objective. PP&L proffers that the all-electric agreements produced inherent advantages in price, convenience, and service. According [\*659] to PP&L, builders obtained the benefit of predictability through the provision of a continuous stream of cash grants, increased good will and marketing success, full discretion in their dealings, and limited penalties for noncompliance. (Def.'s Ex. 5 at 96, 102; Ex. 31 P. 4\(f\); 32 P. 4\(b\); Ex. 35 P. 5; Ex. 40 P. 6; Ex. 41 P. 6; Ex. 42 P. 7\(c\)). Plaintiffs, argue PP&L, made no efforts to either develop and procure builder business or effectively market to the builders.

HN38 [↑] In the presence of a procompetitive justification for the all-electric agreements, the Court examines their anticompetitive effects. See Brown, 5 F.3d at 669 (stating once "defendant offers sound pro-competitive justifications, however, the court must proceed to weigh the overall reasonableness of the restraint using a full-scale rule of reason analysis"). Given the anticompetitive [\*\*105] nature of the all-electric agreements, the Court cannot conclude, as a matter of law, that these agreements did not constitute unreasonable restraints of trade. Furnishing cash grants and other financial incentives -- which PP&L was able to do because of its size relative to the competition and its monopoly on electricity -- allowed PP&L to close the market off to alternate heating sources. PP&L leveraged advantages it enjoyed as the sole provider of electricity into the new residential submarket, taking advantage of advance notice of new construction, using its customer service department to increase sales, and marketing through billing inserts. PP&L targeted builders in order to control, from the inception, what type of heating system would be installed in a new home. With respect to the all-electric agreements, it should be noted that "all-electric" means "all-PP&L." Once PP&L negotiated an all-electric agreement, it was guaranteed a future supply of customers that could turn only to PP&L. The oil dealers do not enjoy the same benefits. An "all-oil" agreement would not assure any dealer business; they would still compete among themselves for the customer.

The nature of the agreements [\*\*106] reveals their deleterious effects. In exchange for an agreement to exclude competitive fossil fuels and prevent supplementation with non-electric sources, builders received cash grants, often times in advance, tightening PP&L's grip on the development. The agreements clearly suppressed, rather than promoted, competition and effectively diminished Plaintiffs' presence in the new residential heating submarket. They were certainly effective; 95% of the homes constructed under all-electric agreements received electric heat while only 49.6% of those homes constructed in developments that were not controlled by all-electric agreements received electric heat. (Pl.'s Ex. 62). Prior to the agreements, Plaintiffs faced a more level playing field in this submarket. Once signed, the all-electric agreements block gas and oil from the development and forbid the homeowner to purchase a supplementary system from non-electric sources. Having found sufficient evidence of PP&L's specific intent to monopolize to survive summary judgment, the Court, drawing inferences in Plaintiffs' favor, reasons that PP&L devised these all-electric agreements in an attempt to dominate the new construction submarket.

[**107] HN39 The Court must also "take into account whether the competition eliminated by the clause is significant within the context of the total competition extant in the industry . . . [and attempt] to measure the effect of the challenged restriction on the market structure." American Motor Inns, Inc. v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 521 F.2d 1230, 1247 (3d Cir. 1975). Between 1981 and 1995, PP&L awarded 29,512 grants while 208,681 new residential connections were established during that period, and between 1987 and 1995, PP&L awarded 27,925 grants while 133,756 new connections were established. (Pl.'s Ex. 46). Admittedly, the 29,512 grants constitute only 2.7% of the 1,074,015 homes in the relevant market. The Court considers that statistic misleading, however, because of the peculiar nature of the market at issue. Converting a heating system entails substantial costs. Often, significant hardware must be removed, such as a chimney, furnace, or heat pump, and corresponding changes in the method of distributing the heat must be made, requiring alterations to vents, radiators, baseboards, etc. Such expenses diminish the willingness of homeowners to convert [*660] an existing heating system. This suggests [**108] that once a heating system is installed, that house is no longer part of the relevant market. High conversion costs mean that while PP&L has over 1,000,000 homes in its service area, those homes with existing heating systems are extremely difficult to reach, and only a small fraction -- those with the financial resources and desire to convert their system -- are susceptible to marketing.

The high costs of conversion, and the veritable removal from the market of those homes with existing systems, suggest that the new home submarket is crucial to the economic sustenance of residential heating suppliers. The Court therefore considers the 29,512 grants in light of the 208,681 new residential connections made between 1981 and 1995 and the 133,756 new connections made between 1987 and 1995. These significantly higher percentages for the new construction submarket provide a more accurate reflection of the all-electric agreements' anticompetitive effects.

The record also contains evidence of antitrust injury. See Mathews v. Lancaster General Hosp., 87 F.3d 624, 641 (3d Cir. 1996) (requiring HN40 a court to "analyze the antitrust injury from the viewpoint of the consumer. An antitrust [**109] plaintiff must prove the challenged conduct affected the prices, quantity or quality of goods or services, not just his own welfare") (citations omitted). The agreements lessened choices for new homeowners and made builders and developers resistant to the installation of alternative heating sources. They required new home purchasers to incur the increased costs associated with an electric heating system and forego a less expensive and more efficient oil or gas system. By inducing builders to install electric heating systems with grants, PP&L effectively strapped new homeowners with an electric heating system that required them to pay supracompetitive prices for a less desirable system that they did not specifically choose. In a purely competitive market, the new home purchaser could freely choose among gas, oil, or electric based on the advantages and disadvantages presented by each system. Finally, Plaintiffs presented an extensive expert report outlining the injury they suffered as competitors. (Pl.'s Ex. 96). PP&L's expert's report, however, which urges that Plaintiffs can point to no evidence of antitrust injury, creates a genuine issue of material fact for jury resolution. (Def.'s [**110] Ex. 24 PP 124-32). Accordingly, the Court cannot conclude as a matter of law that the all-electric agreements did not constitute an unreasonable restraint of trade.

5. Conversion Grants

An examination of the conversion grants, however, compels a different result. The unique factors implicated by the all-electric agreements, which dealt largely with new home construction, have no applicability to conversion grants which were awarded to existing homeowners. The submissions relied on by Plaintiffs fail to establish that such conversion grants had any significant impact on the relevant market.

PP&L initiated the conversion grant program in 1983, and conversion grants enabled PP&L to lessen the financial drawbacks associated with converting a heating system. (Pl.'s Ex. 60). While the record does not reveal the exact number of conversion grants PP&L paid to existing homeowners, it states that PP&L converted 218 homes in 1987, 346 homes between 1988 and 1990, and 72 homes between 1990 and 1994. In its "Annual Conservation and Load Management Report for 1987," PP&L stated "the projection for 1988 is to have 400 storage space and water heating systems installed as replacements [**111] to present fossil-fueled space heating and water heating systems." PP&L set the same number at 250 in its 1988 Report. (Pl.'s Ex. 60 at 510, 527; Def.'s Ex. 15).

These numbers can only be considered in the context of the existing homes in the relevant market. Between 1983 and 1995, there were 192,519 homes constructed in a relevant market of 1,074,015 homes, leaving 881,496 existing homes during this period for conversions. Assuming PP&L converted its targeted 400 homes per year between 1983 and 1995 (a total of 4,800 homes), these conversion grants affected only 0.5% of 881,496 existing homes in the relevant market. Plaintiffs have failed to establish that the [*661] conversion grants eliminated a significant amount of competition to raise a genuine issue of material fact with regard to whether the conversion grants constitute an unreasonable restraint of trade. See 2 Von Kalinowski § 6G.03[2] (establishing numerical guidelines for § 1 violations and finding "under the rule of reason, an exclusive dealing or requirements contract probably would not violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act unless it affected over 50% of the relevant market").

6. Conclusion -- Sherman Act § 1

[**112] Accordingly, Plaintiffs' claims under § 1 of the Sherman Act only survive with respect to the all-electric agreements insofar as those agreements affect new homes. To the extent that Plaintiffs allege that PP&L unreasonably restrained trade by (1) offering cash incentives and financial aid to convert existing homeowners to electric heat and (2) offering builders cash incentives through the all-electric agreements to convert existing homes, the Court grants summary judgment to PP&L.

C. Clayton Act § 3

Plaintiffs assert that the all-electric agreements violate § 3 of the Clayton Act. At a minimum, argue Plaintiffs, a triable fact issue exists as to whether the agreements substantially foreclosed competition in the relevant market. Considering that the all-electric agreements foreclosed 14% of the new home submarket (setting the damage period between 1981 and 1995 and 21% for the period between 1987 and 1995), Plaintiffs suggest that a jury could find substantial foreclosure. These percentages, urge Plaintiffs, when considered in conjunction with PP&L's size, its achievement of an 84% share of the submarket in 1986, its achievement of more than 70% saturation in the new [**113] home submarket between 1987 and 1995, and the fact that homeowners must pay substantially higher prices for electric heat, support a finding of substantial foreclosure offensive to § 3. (Pl.'s Ex. 37; Ex. 46; Ex. 67; Ex. 69; Def.'s Ex. 66 at 4-5). According to Plaintiffs, the substantial market effect is seen in the consumers paying higher prices for electric energy than they would if oil was widely used. Furthermore, argue Plaintiffs, PP&L nearly doubled its saturation with the agreements: 95% of homes in developments controlled by all-electric agreements contain electric heat compared to 49.6% of new homes in developments not governed by the all-electric agreements.

PP&L argues that Plaintiffs cannot demonstrate substantial foreclosure when only (1) 8% of new developments, 120 out of 1,500, were governed by the all-electric agreements, (2) 3% of the relevant market (29,512 out of 1,074,015 homes) has been affected, and (3) 14% of the submarket (29,512 out of 208,681 new homes constructed) has been affected. This left open 85% of all new homes constructed and 97% of all homes in the relevant market, percentages Plaintiffs admitted indicate strong business possibilities. According [**114] to PP&L, the Clayton Act applies only to the sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities and not electricity; PP&L relies on Groton v. Connecticut Light & Power Co., 497 F. Supp. 1040, 1052 n.14 (D. Conn.) (finding, for purposes of § 2(a) of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C.A. § 13(a)) that "electricity is not a commodity") (citing City of Newark v. Delmarva Power & Light, 467 F. Supp. 763, 773-74 (D. Del. 1979) (remarking "the wording of the statute, its legislative history, and the regulation of the electric utility industry which existed at the time [of] the adoption of the Robinson-Patman Act, all suggest that 'commodity' was not intended to encompass electric power")), aff'd in part and remanded, 662 F.2d 921 (2d Cir. 1980).

1. Distinguished From Sherman Act § 1

Section 3 of the Clayton Act provides:

Sale, etc., on agreement not to use goods of competitor

**HN41**[] It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption, [\[\*\*115\]](#) or resale within the United States . . . or fix a price charged therefor, [\[\*662\]](#) or discount from, or rebate upon, such price on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

15 U.S.C.A. § 14 \(West 1973\). "Section 3 **HN42**[] applies to a narrower range of transactions than does Section 1 [including goods or commodities but not including real property, advertising, or services. Furthermore, a] lesser degree of anticompetitive injury need be demonstrated under Section 3 than under Section 1." 2 Von Kalinowski § 6G.03.

While § 1 applies to actual restraints of trade, § 3 "condemn[s] sales or agreements where the effect of such sale or contract would, under the circumstances disclosed, probably lessen competition or create an actual tendency to monopoly." Tampa, 365 U.S. at 326, 81 S. Ct. at 627 (citation [\[\*\*116\]](#) omitted). "The legality of an exclusive dealing arrangement under the Clayton Act depends on whether the competition foreclosed constitutes a substantial share of the relevant market." Barr, 978 F.2d at 110 (citation omitted). The two leading § 3 cases are Tampa (1961) and Standard Oil Co. of California and Standard Stations, Inc. v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 69 S. Ct. 1051, 93 L. Ed. 1371 \(1949\).

2. Quantitative Substantiality Test

In Standard, the Supreme Court found that agreements requiring contracting retailers to purchase all their gasoline from the Standard Oil substantially lessened competition. Accounting for 23% of sales, Standard Oil was the largest gasoline retailer in the area. These exclusive supply contracts covered 6.7% of the area's sales and foreclosed competing refiners from marketing their product through 16% of the independent retail gasoline outlets in the region. Standard, 337 U.S. at 295, 69 S. Ct. at 1053. The Supreme Court adopted **HN43**[] a "quantitative substantiality" test whereby a § 3 case would be made out "upon a showing that the exclusive dealing arrangement involved a significant share of the relevant market, or possibly even [\[\*\*117\]](#) upon a showing that the arrangement involved a substantial volume of commerce." American, 521 F.2d at 1251 n.75 (citing Standard, 337 U.S. at 299, 310-14, 69 S. Ct. at 1051, 1062). Applying Standard, "the only relevant economic indicator is the percentage of the market the contracts foreclose." Barr, 978 F.2d at 110 (citation omitted). Despite the Supreme Court's later interpretation of § 3 in Tampa, Standard remains viable authority. See American, 521 F.2d at 1251 n.75 (stating "although the Supreme Court has modified the rigid rule articulated in Standard Oil, it has not indicated that the result in Standard Oil would differ from Tampa Electric").

Taking the Standard approach, the all-electric agreements do not violate § 3 because Plaintiffs have failed to produce proof "that competition has been foreclosed in a substantial share of the line of commerce affected." Standard, 337 U.S. at 314, 69 S. Ct. at 1062. The Court relies on the same definitions of relevant market and submarket crafted in dealing with the Sherman Act claims. See 2 Von Kalinowski § 13.03[3] (stating **HN44**[] "the manner in which the relevant market is identified [\[\*\*118\]](#) [under § 3 of the Clayton Act] is the same under the Sherman Act"). The all-electric agreements affected only 3% of the relevant market. Compare Barr, 978 F.2d at 111 (finding 15% preemption, in the presence of other factors, insufficient to make out a § 3 claim) and American, 521 F.2d at 1252 (finding foreclosure of 14% "may well offend limitations which the Clayton Act places on exclusive contracts") with Tampa, 365 U.S. at 333, 81 S. Ct. at 631 (finding .77% insubstantial). See also 2 Von Kalinowski § 6G.04[2] n.39 (stating "the lowest percentage of sales volume in the relevant market to be termed substantial was . . . about 5%") (citing Lessig v. Tidewater Oil Co., 327 F.2d 459 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 993, 84 S. Ct. 1920, 12 L. Ed. 2d 1046 (1964)). While the all-electric agreements affected 21% of the new construction submarket, the Court reserves discussion of the [\[\*663\]](#) unique implications associated with that statistic for its "qualitative" analysis.

3. Qualitative Substantiality Test

Evaluating a requirements contract providing a utility company with an assured supply of coal for its generating plants that foreclosed [**119] only .77% of the relevant market, Tampa spawned the "qualitative substantiality test." Tampa considered the requirements contract lawful in light of the small percentage of the market foreclosed, the non-dominant position of the seller, and the failure of the exclusive dealing arrangements to hamper competition in the coal industry. HN45↑ The qualitative substantiality test examines three factors:

It is necessary to weigh the probable effect of the contract on the relevant area of effective competition, taking into account the relative strength of the parties, the proportionate volume of commerce involved in relation to the total volume of commerce in the relevant market area, and the probable immediate and future effects which pre-emption of that share of the market might have on effective competition therein.

*Tampa*, 365 U.S. at 329, 81 S. Ct. at 629. Under this test, "the degree of market foreclosure is only one of the factors involved in determining the legality of an exclusive dealing arrangement." *Barr*, 978 F.2d at 111 (citation omitted). The Third Circuit applies the qualitative substantiality test. See id. (applying Tampa); *American*, I<sup>\*\*120</sup> 521 F.2d at 1251 n.75 (remarking that the qualitative test "introduced greater flexibility").

Application of the qualitative substantiality test compels a different conclusion from that reached under the quantitative substantiality test. The nature of the agreements, and PP&L's status as a monopoly, assure that the developments will be "all-PP&L" to the exclusion of oil and gas. The all-electric agreements foreclosed 21% of the submarket. As discussed supra, the new construction submarket plays a crucial role in the economic viability of these competitors, and the importance of that market cannot be underestimated. The high costs of conversion lessen the significance of the relevant market, and the "permanence" of an existing system makes the new construction submarket crucial to the sustenance of these competitors. The inability to access this submarket has deleterious effects on Plaintiffs' competitiveness in the relevant market, and blocking expansion into 21% of the new home submarket results in a substantial foreclosure of the relevant market. See *American*, 521 F.2d at 1252 (finding foreclosure of 14% "may well offend limitations which the Clayton Act places on exclusive [**121] contracts"); *Dictograph Prods., Inc. v. Federal Trade Comm'n*, 217 F.2d 821, 828 \(2d Cir. 1954\) (considering control of 20% retail outlets through exclusive dealing contracts by a large industry leader substantial foreclosure), cert. denied, 349 U.S. 940, 75 S. Ct. 784, 99 L. Ed. 1268 (1955).

The Court does not reach the same result with respect to the conversion grants. The qualitative analysis applicable to the all-electric agreements -- which dealt mostly with new home construction -- is not germane to the conversion grants -- which PP&L awarded to existing homeowners. The submissions relied on by Plaintiffs reveal that the conversion grants affected only 0.5% of 881,496 existing homes in the relevant market, an insufficient figure to demonstrate that they either had significant impact on competition in the relevant market or involved a substantial portion of commerce in the relevant market. The record in the instant case therefore fails to raise a genuine issue of material fact with regard to whether PP&L's use of the conversion grants violates § 3 of the Clayton Act. See *Tampa*, 365 U.S. at 331, 81 S. Ct. at 630 (considering foreclosure of less than [**122] 1% inadequate).

The Court rejects PP&L's contention that electricity is not a commodity for purposes of either the Clayton Act or the Robinson-Patman Act. Admittedly, City of Newark refused to include electricity within the definition of commodity. The Court notes, however, that City of Newark assessed § 2\(a\) of the Robinson-Patman Act, and this Court limits its holding to that section. See *City of Newark*, 467 F. Supp. at 773 n.12 (remarking "none of the cases cited by plaintiffs decide the issue of whether the [**664] terms commodity in Section 2\(a\) includes electric power") (emphasis supplied). Furthermore, HN46↑ a considerable number of cases have found that electricity is a commodity for purposes of the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts. See *Seaboard Supply Co. v. Congoleum Corp.*, 770 F.2d 367, 371 n.3 \(3d Cir. 1985\) (remarking "the Supreme Court held that section 2\(c\) was independent of 2(a)") (citation omitted); *Kirkwood v. Union Elec. Co.*, 671 F.2d 1173, 1181-82 \(8th Cir. 1982\) (finding electricity is a commodity for Robinson-Patman purposes; "electric power can be felt, if not touched. It is produced, sold, stored in small quantities, transmitted, and distributed [**123] in discrete quantities"), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1170, 103 S. Ct. 814, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1013 (1983); *Rankin County Cablevision v. Pearl River Valley Water Supply Dist.*, 692 F. Supp.

691, 693 (S.D. Miss. 1988) (remarking "most of the courts which have considered the issue have concluded that electricity is a commodity subject to the [Robinson-Patman] Act"); Concord v. Boston Edison, Co., 676 F. Supp. 396 (D. Mass. 1988) (same); Ellwood City v. Pennsylvania Power Co., 570 F. Supp. 553, 561 (W.D. Pa. 1983) (same); Gainesville v. Florida Power & Light Co., 488 F. Supp. 1258, 1282 (S.D. Fla. 1980) (considering electricity a commodity under both Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts; finding City of Newark decision an "unnecessarily narrow view of Congressional intent in using the word commodity"). Considering that PP&L generates and sells electricity, and the instant case involves the sale of electricity as a manufactured product that PP&L distributes in the form of residential heat, the Court adopts the rationale expressed in the aforementioned cases.

4. Conclusion -- Clayton Act § 3

Accordingly, Plaintiffs' claims under § 3 of the Clayton Act only survive [**124] with respect to the all-electric agreements insofar as those agreements affect new homes. To the extent that Plaintiffs allege that PP&L violated § 3 of the Clayton Act by (1) offering cash incentives and financial aid to convert existing homeowners to electric heat and (2) offering builders cash incentives through the all-electric agreements to convert existing homes, the Court grants summary judgment to PP&L.

D. Robinson-Patman Act § 2(c)

The Robinson-Patman Act, argue Plaintiffs, prohibits PP&L from providing payments to builders (purchasers of the heat pump) in order to exert influence over the builders' selection of electric heat. Plaintiffs allege that PP&L furnished grants to builders and developers that were not provided in exchange for services rendered by the builders and developers. According to Plaintiffs, a cause of action under § 2(c) does not require proof of predatory pricing. Plaintiffs suggest that § 2(c) requires only that a payment be made in connection with the purchase or sale of goods; it does not specifically require that the seller make the payment. Finally, Plaintiffs attack PP&L's assertion that the transactions in question do not affect [**125] interstate commerce, claiming that the heat pumps, as well as the components from which they are manufactured, are produced outside the Commonwealth by Carrier Corporation in Syracuse, New York.

PP&L argues that Yeagers II immunizes these cash incentives. According to PP&L, Plaintiffs have failed to produce evidence of either predatory pricing or sales that crossed state lines, two requirements under § 2(c); PP&L relies on Gulf Oil Corp. v. Copp Paving Co., 419 U.S. 186, 195, 95 S. Ct. 392, 398, 42 L. Ed. 2d 378 (1974) (stating "the distinct 'in commerce' language of the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Act provisions . . . appears to denote only persons or activities within the flow of interstate commerce"). PP&L contends that the record contains no evidence that it is either a seller or a buyer in the heat pump transactions, and therefore the grants do not pass the "seller-buyer" line. Finally, PP&L protests that Plaintiffs have not shown a fiduciary relationship between the builders and potential homeowners, pointing to Yeagers I, 804 F. Supp. at 715 (finding, that for purposes of a RICO claim, Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint failed to aver "that the developers and/or builders [**126] and/or contractors are employees, agents or fiduciaries of anyone from whom they were [*665] required to obtain consent before accepting the payments").

HN47  Section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act addresses price discrimination and provides, in part:

Discrimination in price, services, or facilities -- Price; selection of customers

* * * *

Payment or acceptance of commission, brokerage or other compensation

(c) It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, either to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative, or other intermediary therein where such intermediary is acting in fact for or on behalf, or is subject to the direct or indirect control, of any party to such transaction other than the person by whom such compensation is so granted or paid.

15 U.S.C.A. § 13(c). HN48 This provision "was designed to eliminate the competitive advantage large [**127] buyers and sellers attained over their smaller competitors by virtue of their economic clout and bargaining power." Stephen Jay Photography, Ltd. v. Olan Mills, Inc., 903 F.2d 988, 991 n.5 (4th Cir. 1990). Section 2(c) forbids payment of unearned monies "to the other party to a transaction or to an agent who is subject to the control of a person other than the one making the payment . . . . Although the purpose of that section was to eliminate unfair price discrimination, existence of that factor is not a prerequisite to liability." Seaboard, 770 F.2d at 370-71 & n.3 (including commercial bribery within the ambit of § 2(c)).

Section 2(c) HN49 "encompasses cases of commercial bribery tending to undermine the fiduciary relationship between a buyer and its agent, representative, or other intermediary in a transaction involving the sale or purchase of goods." Harris v. Duty Free Shoppers Ltd. Partnership, 940 F.2d 1272, 1274 (9th Cir. 1991) (citation omitted). For a finding of commercial bribery, plaintiff "must show that the illegal payments in question crossed the line from buyer to seller or vice-versa." Environmental Tectonics v. W.S. Kirkpatrick, Inc., 847 F.2d 1052, **128 1066 (3d Cir. 1988), aff'd, 493 U.S. 400, 110 S. Ct. 701, 107 L. Ed. 2d 816 (1990). See Ellwood City, 570 F. Supp. at 562 (noting "intrastate sales are subject to the Robinson-Patman Act as long as the sales remain in the flow of interstate commerce").

Application of the aforementioned legal precepts to the facts presented in the instant case requires extreme innovation. The case law suggests that Congress enacted the Robinson-Patman Act in an effort to curtail the exertion of improper influence by large, financially resourceful players over sale transactions. Similarly, "commercial bribery" presents a prototype of the classic arrangement that § 2(c) aimed to eliminate -- a situation where the fiduciary of one party is influenced by another party to the transaction by the payment of brokerage when no services are performed. The transaction in the instant case fails to present the type of arrangement that Congress intended § 2(c) to prevent. The submissions indicate that PP&L furnished money to builders and developers in an effort to exert influence over the builders' decisions to install heat pumps. Plaintiffs obfuscate the issue, however, by focusing on the wrong transaction. **129 The underlying transaction at issue in this case is the sale of electricity by PP&L (seller) to new homeowners (buyers) to operate residential heating systems. The Court considers the sale and installation of heat pumps, and grants paid to builders to induce those sales and installations, ancillary to the sale of electricity by PP&L to new homeowners.

The case sub judice would implicate § 2(c) if PP&L paid special consideration to the buyer, an agent of the buyer, or an intermediary subject to the buyer's control. The builders, however, constitute neither (1) agents for the buyer, (2) agents for the seller, nor (3) intermediaries acting on behalf of either the buyer or the seller. The builders *666 are completely unrelated to, and uninvolved in, PP&L's selling electricity to a new homeowner, even though they may tangentially facilitate that transaction.

Plaintiffs' § 2(c) claim therefore fails because the record does not demonstrate that the protested cash payments crossed the line from buyer to seller. To sustain a § 2(c) claim, Plaintiffs need to illustrate that PP&L's cash payments traveled (1) from PP&L to either the new homeowners or a broker, agent, or intermediary acting **130 on behalf of the new homeowners; or (2) from a broker, agent, or intermediary acting on behalf of PP&L to the new homeowners. See Seaboard, 770 F.2d at 372 (finding seller-buyer line was not crossed where a sales agent of the seller bribed the seller's employee and examining a case where "directed verdict for defendant manufacturer" was appropriate because "persons receiving unearned commissions from the manufacturer were not under the control of purchasers or acting on their behalf") (citation omitted); Environmental, 847 F.2d at 1066 (finding a complaint that alleged the illegal payment of monies through controlled corporations to government officials designed to influence the awarding of contracts stated a § 2(c) claim); Ideal Plumbing Co. v. Benco, Inc., 529 F.2d 972, 977 n.4 (8th Cir. 1976) (remarking that § 2(c) seeks to prevent "the practice of certain large buyers to demand the allowance of brokerage directly to them upon their purchases, or its payment to an employee, agent, or corporate subsidiary whom they set up in the guise of a broker, and through whom they demand that sales to them be made") (citation omitted).

The absence of any evidence that the [**131] monies paid crossed the line from buyer to seller, or vice-versa, precludes a finding that the payments from PP&L to the builders constituted commercial bribery and eliminates Plaintiffs' standing to bring a § 2(c) claim. See Environmental, 847 F.2d at 1066-67 (stating "a plaintiff must . . . meet the standing requirements to proceed [under § 2(c)] . . . [A] direct competitor of a company that obtains a contract through commercial bribery has standing to press a § 2(c) claim against the briber") (citations omitted). Although Plaintiffs acknowledge that the transaction does not present a classic § 2(c) violation, they apply an aggressive analysis of the facts presented to depict a § 2(c) violation that enjoys no support in the Third Circuit and constitutes an unnecessary extension and application of the rationale articulated in cases from other circuits. The Court instead elects to reach its own determination of this issue, concluding that PP&L's payments to the builders, which may violate other antitrust laws, do not fall within the explicit language of § 2(c). See Seaboard, 770 F.2d at 372 (remarking that "conduct not within the scope of the Act is not [**132] made into an antitrust violation by accompanying conduct which is reprehensible under some moral or ethical standard or even illegal under some other law"). Accordingly, the Court grants PP&L's Motion for Summary Judgment on Plaintiffs' § 2(c) claim.

E. State-Law Claims

Plaintiffs originally asserted state-law causes of action for civil conspiracy and unfair competition. See Yeagers II, 22 F.3d at 1263. In July, 1994, Plaintiffs moved to amend their Complaint by (1) alleging a claim of tortious interference with contractual relations with respect to the conversion grants and (2) amplifying the unfair competition claim to specify a cause of action for common-law restraint of trade. (See Pl.'s Ex. 93 at PP 5-8; Doc. Nos. 141, 166). The Court permitted the addition of the tortious interference claim but only insofar as it related to the conversion grants. The Court also allowed Plaintiffs to add a claim for common-law restraint of trade. In their initial Complaint, Plaintiffs pled a generic cause of action for unfair competition, and the Court believed that the addition of the restraint of trade claim would amplify Plaintiffs' general pleading.

1. Tortious Interference [**133] With Contractual Relations

The Restatement HN50[↑] defines a cause of action for tortious interference with contractual relations as follows:

One who intentionally and improperly interferes with the performance of a contract . . . [*667] between another and a third person by inducing or otherwise causing the third person not to perform the contract, is subject to liability to the other for the pecuniary loss resulting to the other from the failure of the third person to perform the contract.

Restatement (Second) of Torts § 766 (1979). The accompanying commentary to that section envisions a balancing test:

HN51[↑] the plaintiff's interest in his contractual rights and expectancies must be weighed, however, against the defendant's interest in freedom of action. If the defendant's conduct is predatory, the scale on his side may weigh very lightly, but if his conduct is not predatory, it may weigh heavily. The issue is whether in the given circumstances his interest and the social interest in allowing the freedom claimed by him are sufficient to outweigh the harm that his conduct is designed to produce. In deciding the issue, the nature of his conduct is an important factor.

[**134] Id. at § 766 cmt. c. Section 767 articulates HN52[↑] factors to consider in determining the impropriety of an actor's conduct:

- (a) the nature of the actor's conduct,
- (b) the actor's motive,
- (c) the interests of the other with which the actor's conduct interferes,
- (d) the interests sought to be advanced by the actor,
- (e) the social interests in protecting the freedom of action of the actor and the contractual interests of the other,
- (f) the proximity or remoteness of the actor's conduct to the interference, and
- (g) the relations between the parties.

Id. at § 767. The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has adopted both §§ 766 and 767 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts. See Small v. Juniata College, 682 A.2d 350, 354 & n.1 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1996) (citing Restatement (Second) of Torts § 767); Daniel Adams Assoc., Inc. v. Rimbach Publ'g, Inc., 360 Pa. Super. 72, 519 A.2d 997, 1000 (Pa. Super. Ct.) (remarking that the Pennsylvania Supreme Court has adopted Restatement (Second) of Torts § 766), appeal denied, 535 A.2d 1056 (Pa. 1987).

The significance of the conversion grants varies depending on the legal context in which the Court examines them. Under [**135] § 2 of the Sherman Act, the Court determined that the parties' submissions raise genuine fact issues regarding the possible predatory nature of such grants. The Court nonetheless found that the conversion grants fail under both § 1 of the Sherman Act and § 3 of the Clayton Act because they neither eliminated significant competition nor foreclosed a substantial share of the relevant market.

The Court's conclusions regarding § 1 of the Sherman Act and § 3 of the Clayton Act do not, however, preclude a jury from finding that PP&L offered the conversion grants for an improper purpose and thereby tortiously interfered with Plaintiffs' contractual relations. HN53 [↑] PP&L's actions need not be unlawful under federal antitrust statutes to be tortious. A jury must evaluate whether PP&L either (1) simply extolled the virtues of its products through promotional incentives or (2) interfered with Plaintiffs' contractual relations with existing homeowners. See Restatement (Second) of Torts § 766 cmt. m (remarking that A may induce B to sever his business relations with C by offering "B a better bargain than that which he has with C. Here . . . a nice question of fact is presented. A's freedom [**136] to conduct his business in the usual manner . . . is not restricted by the fact that B has agreed to buy similar goods from C"); Restatement (Second) of Torts § 767 cmt. c (stating "conduct specifically in violation of statutory provisions . . . may for that reason make an interference improper. This may be true . . . of conduct that is in violation of antitrust provisions"). PP&L has failed to eliminate from the Rule 56 record all genuine issues of material fact regarding the use and purpose of the conversion grants. Because a fact question exists whether such use was "improper," the Court declines to award summary judgment.

2. Unfair Competition

Count VII of the Amended Complaint states a cause of action styled "Unfair [**668] Methods of Competition" and alleges that the all-electric agreements and conversion grants "constitute an unfair method of competition, in violation of Pennsylvania state law." (Am. Compl. P 81). Plaintiffs fail to articulate, however, the specific Pennsylvania state-law to which they are referring. The Court first assumes that Plaintiffs rely on 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 201-2 (4) (West 1993) (defining "Unfair methods of competition"). The conduct proscribed by [**137] that section, however, does not encompass the conduct complained of in the instant case. See Horowitz v. Federal Kemper Life Assurance Co., 57 F.3d 300, 307 (3d Cir. 1995) (noting "in Pennsylvania, only malfeasance, the improper performance of a contractual obligation, raises a cause of action under the Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Law, 73 P.S. § 201-1 et seq.").

The language in § 201-2 sounds in deception, misrepresentation, confusion, disparagement, and fraud. The statute does contain a "catchall" provision that includes, in its definition of "unfair," "engaging in any other fraudulent conduct which creates a likelihood of confusion or of misunderstanding." 73 Pa. Stat. Ann. § 201-2(xvii). This provision, however, applies only to fraudulent conduct. See Hammer v. Nikol, 659 A.2d 617, 619-20 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 1995) (remarking "to recover under the catchall provision, the elements of common-law fraud must be proven") (citation omitted). While Plaintiffs in the actual case have presented several allegations of antitrust violations, they have not produced any evidence of fraudulent, disparaging conduct that the Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer [**138] Protection Law aims to protect.

HN54 [↑] The common-law claim of unfair competition does, however, provide Plaintiffs with a cognizable cause of action. Restatement (Third) of Unfair Competition § 1 provides, in part:

One who causes harm to the commercial relations of another by engaging in a business or trade is not subject to liability to the other for harm unless:

- (a) the harm results from . . . other actions or practices of the actor determined to be actionable as an unfair method of competition, taking into account the nature of the conduct and its likely effect on both the person seeking relief and the public; or
- (b) the acts or practices of the actor are actionable by the other under federal or state statutes . . .

Restatement (Third) of Unfair Competition § 1 (1995). An accompanying comment explains this provision: "subsection (a) therefore includes a residual category encompassing other business practices determined to be unfair . . . An act or practice is likely to be judged unfair only if it substantially interferes with the ability of others to compete on the merits of their products." Id. at § 1 cmt. g. See also Lakeview Ambulance and Medical Servs., Inc. v. Gold Cross Ambulance and Medical Serv., Inc., No. 1994-2166, 1995 WL 842000, at *2-3 (Pa. Ct. Common Pleas Oct. 18, 1995) (finding cause of action under Restatement (Third) of Unfair Competition § 1). Because the record contains fact issues concerning whether PP&L violated the various federal antitrust statutes, the Court considers summary judgment on Plaintiffs' common-law claim for unfair competition to be inappropriate.

3. Restraint of Trade

HN55 [↑] "The Sherman Act is merely the application of the common-law doctrine concerning the restraint of trade to the field of interstate commerce." Lakeview, 1995 WL 842000, at 4 (citing Collins v. Main Line Bd. of Realtors, 452 Pa. 342, 304 A.2d 493, 496 (Pa.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 979, 94 S. Ct. 291, 38 L. Ed. 2d 223 (1973)). Because of this similarity, the Court's decision regarding Plaintiffs' common-law restraint of trade claim mirrors the conclusion reached in assessing Plaintiffs' claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act. The Court denies summary judgment with respect to the all-electric agreements and grants summary judgment with respect to the conversion grants.

4. Civil Conspiracy

Finally, **140 Plaintiffs' cause of action for civil conspiracy survives summary judgment. HN56 [↑] To establish civil conspiracy, *669 Plaintiffs must demonstrate "that two or more persons combined or agreed with the intent to do an unlawful act or to do an otherwise lawful act by unlawful means . . . . Proof of malice, i.e., an intent to injure, is essential in proof of a conspiracy . . . . This unlawful intent must be absent justification." Thompson Coal Co. v. Pike Coal Co., 488 Pa. 198, 412 A.2d 466, 472 (Pa. 1979) (citations omitted). The record contains sufficient evidence of PP&L's specific intent to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to PP&L's motivation and whether PP&L's conduct was unlawful.

F. Conclusion

Accordingly, PP&L's Motion for Summary Judgment is granted with respect to (1) Plaintiffs' claim of actual monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act; (2) Plaintiffs' claims involving the conversion grants under both § 1 of the Sherman Act and § 3 of the Clayton Act; (3) Plaintiffs' claim under § 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act; and (4) Plaintiffs' common-law restraint of trade claim (conversion grants only). The following causes of action proceed to trial: (1) § 1 of **141 the Sherman Act (all-electric agreements/new homes only); (2) § 2 of the Sherman Act (attempted monopolization, leveraging of monopoly, abuse of monopoly power, predation through governmental processes, and conspiracy to monopolize only); (3) § 3 of the Clayton Act (all-electric agreements/new homes only); (4) tortious interference with contractual relations (conversion grants only); (5) restraint of trade (all-electric agreements/new homes only); (6) unfair competition; and (7) civil conspiracy.

An appropriate Order follows.

ORDER

AND NOW, this 27th day of January, 1997, upon consideration of Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. Nos. 313, 314) and appendices submitted in support thereof (Doc. Nos. 315-19, 330, 338-41), Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Opposition (Doc. No. 325) and appendices in support thereof (Doc. Nos. 326-28, 333-34), Defendant's Reply (Doc. No. 329), Plaintiffs' Sur-reply (Doc. No. 332), and oral argument held on November 14, 1996 (Doc. Nos. 342, 346), IT IS HEREBY ORDERED THAT:

1. Defendant's Motion is GRANTED with respect to

- (a.) Plaintiffs' claim of actual monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act;
- (b.) [**142] Plaintiffs' claims involving the conversion grants under both § 1 of the Sherman Act and § 3 of the Clayton Act;
- (c.) Plaintiffs' claim under § 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act; and
- (d.) Plaintiffs' common-law restraint of trade claim (conversion grants only).

2. Defendant's Motion is DENIED in all other respects.

BY THE COURT:

John R. Padova, J.

---

End of Document

Goda v. Abbott Labs.

Superior Court of the District of Columbia, Civil Division

February 3, 1997, Decided

Civil Action No. 01145-96

Reporter

1997 D.C. Super. LEXIS 69 *

Herbert L. Goda, individually and on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated v. Abbott Laboratories, et al.

Core Terms

---

damages, overcharge, purchaser, pharmacies, classwide, consumer, retail, class action, certification, cases, indirect, pass-on, antitrust, manufacturers, wrongdoer, collateral source, predominate, wholesalers, conspiracy, ultimate consumer, managed care, questions, prices, class certification, prescription drug, indirect-purchaser, methodologies, class-action, defendants', chain

Judges: [*1] BRAMAN, J.

Opinion by: BRAMAN

Opinion

---

OPINION (ON CLASS CERTIFICATION)

BRAMAN, J. We are presented with a motion seeking class certification which raises questions of first impression in this jurisdiction. The class-action issues arise in a suit charging a horizontal, price-fixing conspiracy against the leading manufacturers of pharmaceuticals.<sup>1</sup> The difficulties stem from a lack of privity between the defendants and the putative class members. Specifically, while the class members are purchasers and consumers of defendants' pharmaceuticals, they do not purchase directly from defendants.

We are in the domain of [Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois \[1977-1 Trade Cases ¶ 61,460, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 \(1977\)\]](#), beset by the quandaries [*2] involved in tracing the effects of alleged conspiratorial overcharges down the relevant line of distribution through successive purchasers who may or may not have passed on the overcharge in whole or in part.

Illinois Brick

---

<sup>1</sup> Principal jurisdiction is stated under (he District of Columbia Antitrust Act of 1980, D.C. Code §28-4508\(a\) (1996 Repl.), which permits a private action against any business that engages, inter alia, in any "conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce all or any part of which is in the District of Columbia. . . ." Id. at §28-4502. Alternative counts are pitched under the Consumer Protection Procedures Act. D.C. Code § 28-3905\(k\)\(1\) (1996 Repl.) and under the common law of unjust enrichment. The ensuing analysis will demonstrate that these alternatives do not substantively alter the merits of class action certifiability.

The Court had decided prior to Illinois Brick that a price-lixer could not defend against or mitigate a direct purchaser's claim on the ground that the direct purchaser had passed on the overcharge to its customers and was not, therefore, "injured" within the contemplation of section 4 of the Clayton Act 15 U.S.C. § 15 \(1994\). Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., [1968 Trade Cases ¶ 72,490], 392 U.S. 481, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (1968). The direct purchaser is thus permitted a full recovery notwithstanding that he has not absorbed the overcharge. The issue in Illinois Brick was whether indirect purchasers, such as we have here, would be permitted to claim that the illegal overcharge was successively passed on through the distribution chain and later paid by them. Confronted with Hanover Shoe's rejection of pass-on as a defense when urged by the wrongdoer, the Illinois Brick Court also rejected offensive use of the pass-on theory by plaintiffs. Speaking through Mr. Justice White, the Court ruled that indirect or subsequent purchasers were not "injured" and hence were not entitled to recover even [*3] though they ultimately paid the overcharges imposed by the antitrust violator.

Rejection of the indirect purchaser's plight, was primarily driven by fear that antitrust cases, already noted for their complexities, would be further confounded by inquiries seeking to track the damaging effects of an overcharge on the murky interplay of market forces, including supply and demand, as the levy impacts each relevant purchaser through each successive link in the distribution chain. Faced with the choice of allowing a 100 percent recovery to an undamaged, direct purchaser and apportioning the total impact of the overcharge among its victims, the Court declared that, "until there are clear directions from Congress to the contrary," the antitrust laws are better enforced "by holding direct purchasers to be injured to the full extent of the overcharge paid by them than by attempting to apportion the overcharge among all that may have absorbed a part of it ." Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 746.<sup>2</sup>

The Illinois Brick dissent, authored by Mr. Justice Brennan, was undaunted [*4] by the difficulties in assessing damages. Admittedly,

the portion of the overcharge passed on may be only approximately determinable. But again, this problem hardly distinguishes this case from other antitrust cases. Reasoned estimation is required in all antitrust cases, but "while the damages [in such cases] may not be determined by mere speculation or guess, it will be enough if the evidence show [sic] the extent of the damages as a matter of just and reasonable inference, although the result be only approximate. Lack of precision in apportioning damages between direct and indirect purchasers is thus plainly not a convincing reason for denying purchasers an opportunity to prove their injuries and damages.

Id. at 759-760 (first brackets in original, citations omitted) (quoting Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Co., 282 U.S. 555, 563, 51 S. Ct. 248, 75 L. Ed. 544 (1931)).

The dissent's faith in "reasoned estimation" that "only approximate[s]" damages, an implicit acceptance of a doctrinal approach to be crafted by experts, was rejected by a skeptical majority for its lack of focus on individual injury and the realities of the market. Id. at 742-743.

The Legislative Solution

Whereas Illinois Brick had favored the direct purchaser and damages that were certain, the District of Columbia legislature opted, as the Court said [*5] it might, in favor of apportionment among the de facto victims of the overcharge regardless of whether they were in privity with the wrongdoer. In 1980, the Council of the District of Columbia passed, and Congress sanctioned, the District of Columbia Antitrust Act which, inter alia, look square aim at Illinois Brick:

Any indirect purchaser in the chain of manufacture, production, or distribution of goods or services, upon proof of payment of all or any part of any overcharge for such goods or services, shall be deemed to be injured within the meaning of this chapter.

---

<sup>2</sup> The risk of multiple liability also prompted the Court to reject the indirect purchaser's claim. We will allude later to this problem. See infra [page 79,140].

D.C. Code §28-4509(a) (1996 Repl.).<sup>3</sup> Safeguards against the risk of multiple liability are set forth in sections 28-4509(b) & (c), thus greatly reducing if not entirely eliminating the apprehensions of Illinois Brick.

But the presence of Illinois Brick is [*6] not so easily dismissed, for it nevertheless casts a long shadow over class actions in antitrust matters.

The Instant Case and the Class Motion

The 23 defendants comprise most of the leading manufacturers of brand name prescription drugs, as distinguished from drugs that are sold under their generic names. The plaintiff, a resident of the District, is an ultimate consumer who buys his prescription drugs from retail pharmacies located in the District. Plaintiff charges that the defendants have conspired to fix, raise and maintain prices charged for brand name prescription drugs sold to independent and chain pharmacies while, at the same time, charging substantially lower prices to institutional pharmacies and mail order pharmacies.<sup>4</sup> These more favorable prices are steadfastly refused to independent and chain pharmacies, it is claimed. Wholesalers are also in collusion, it is averred, to impose and maintain this dual pricing structure (although they are not sued). Plaintiff seeks certification of the following class:

[A]ll persons who purchased branded drugs from retail pharmacies in the District which were manufactured, marketed, distributed and sold by Defendants at supra-competitive prices [*7] . . . during the period commencing four years before the filing of this complaint to the present. . . . Excluded from the Class are officers and directors of the Defendants, any entity in which any of the Defendants has a controlling interest, and the family members, legal representatives, heirs, successors or assigns of any of the foregoing Defendants.

Rule 23 and the Contentions of the Parties

Plaintiff's compliance with subsection (a) of Rule 23, SUPER.CT.CIV.R., has not been put in question by defendants.<sup>5</sup> Instead, defendants' attack on class recognition concentrates upon Rule 23(b)'s insistence that the applicant also meet one of its criteria. Here the standard is the third, which heightens the demands upon common-question certification by also requiring "that the question of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy." [*8] Id. at 23(b)(3).

Defendants maintain that this case quintessentially displays the complexities and individualized circumstances inherent in indirect purchaser suits as Illinois Brick apprehended. Viewed from the bottom of the distribution line upwards, the defendants argue that the proof would have to be on a per-purchaser, perpurchase basis, i.e., each purchaser would be required to show, as to each purchase made at a local retail pharmacy, that the drug was tainted by the conspiracy, that he or she was thereby injured and the amount of damage sustained. Viewed from

<sup>3</sup> The report of the Committee on the Judiciary states, "Illinois Brick has engendered substantial criticism, commencing with the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Brennan joined by Justices Marshall and Blackmun. Section 28-4509(a) makes clear that indirect purchasers can indeed seek damages for overcharges resulting from antitrust violations which are proven to have been passed on to them." Report on Bill 3-107, at 16 (Oct. 8, 1980).

<sup>4</sup> Institutional pharmacies include some health maintenance organizations (HMOs), hospitals, nursing homes, health clinics and other managed-care health organizations. Mail order pharmacies include some HMOs and insurance companies.

<sup>5</sup> Rule 23(a) provides that:

One or more members of a class may sue or be sued as representative parties on behalf of all only if (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impractical, (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class, (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class, and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

the top down, a class member would be required to prove that (1) a defendant conspiratorially over-charged one or more wholesalers, (2) the wholesaler passed the overcharge onto the [*9] class member's pharmacy, (3) the pharmacy then passed on the overcharge to the consumer plaintiff, and (4) the consumer plaintiff, as distinguished from a health benefit plan or other third-party source, actually paid the overcharge. Far from issues of injury and damages being common, the defendants argue they are highly individualized thereby requiring individualized proof. In short, defendants maintain, the individual issues will far and away predominate over the common ones.

Plaintiff, who has the burden of establishing compliance with Rule 23, *Yarmolinsky v. Perpetual American Federal Savings and Loan Ass'n*, 451 A.2d 92, 94 (D.C.App. 1982), contends that the conspiracy issue is not only a common issue but the dominant one. It is further argued that District law permits classwide proof on the issues of injury and damages, and plaintiff is prepared through the testimony of an expert economist to quantify the overcharge and the pass-ons, thus enabling injury and damages to be shown by common proof. Other issues impacting a particular class member (e.g., third party payment for a purchase and failure to mitigate damages) may be addressed, it is claimed, in the administrative phase of this proceeding following the main trial. Finally, plaintiff argues that rejection of certification [*10] of the damage claims for lack of common-issue dominance should not defeat his application for certification of the injunction claim.

The MDL Litigation

In resolving these issues we do not write upon a clean slate. The case at bar trails two federal antitrust proceedings in the Northern District of Illinois brought by retail pharmacies against the same manufacturers of brand name prescription drugs as well as wholesalers. In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litig., No. MDL 997, 94 C 897 (the "MDL" or multidistrict litigation). The first proceeding is a class action. The second consists of consolidated actions brought by opt-out, independent pharmacies.

The retail pharmacies are indirect purchasers since they purchased from wholesalers, not the defendants. On defendants' motions for summary judgment based, inter alia, on Illinois Brick, Judge Kocoras held in both proceedings that the wholesalers were unwilling captives and under the control of the manufacturers. *Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litig.*, No. MDL 997, 94 C 897, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4335, 1996 WL 167350, at \*30-32 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 4, 1996). Hence, the case fell within the "control" exception to the indirect-purchaser bar of *Illinois Brick*, 431 U.S. at 736 n. 16, and the pharmacies effectively would be considered direct purchasers of the manufacturers. [*11] 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4335, WL at \*32.

I will treat the MDL summary judgment ruling as tantamount to the law of this case. See *Parklane Hosiery Co., Inc. v. Shore*, 439 U.S. 322, 326-333, 99 S. Ct. 645, 58 L. Ed. 2d 552 \(1979\). For our purposes this means that instead of there being two tiers of purchasers between plaintiffs and manufacturers (the wholesale tier and the retail tier), there is only one (the retail tier).<sup>6</sup>

The MDL rulings by Judge Kocoras on two motions for class certification should also be considered. In the first, involving the federal action brought by the pharmacies, class certification was granted. *Brand Name Prescription Drugs*, No. MDL 997, 94 C 897, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16658, at \*3-16 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 15, 1994). The second motion arose in a separate state action brought on behalf of ultimate consumers from Alabama. Certification was denied because these plaintiffs, unlike the pharmacies in their suit, failed to make a showing of injury and damages on a classwide basis. For that reason it was held that common issues did not predominate. *Id.* at \*17-19.

Faced with the same issue against most of the same defendants, a lower court in California granted certification to a class composed of ultimate consumers. Its force as persuasive authority is weakened, however, [*12] because it tests entirely on ultimate conclusions of commonality and predominance without a reasoned basis of support. Preciado v. Abbott Laboratories, No. 962294 (San Francisco Super. Ct. Calif Aug. 16, 1996) (order certifying consumer class).

---

<sup>6</sup> The consequences of this contraction will be developed when we treat the "Scope of Our Question." See infra [page 79,143].

Predominance of Common v. Individual Issues

Plaintiff advances an array of cases to support the proposition that in a horizontal, price-fixing case the conspiracy is treated as the common and predominant issue for class-certification purposes. But those cases with facts sufficient to permit analysis, show them to be direct-purchaser cases.<sup>7</sup>

Defendants advance a line of [*13] authorities in indirect-purchaser cases which reject certification. But these cases mostly turn on circumstances where the proof was not common to the putative class.<sup>8</sup>

It is evident that when the class-action remedy intersects price-fixing litigation, the conflict between the philosophies of the majority and dissenting opinions in Illinois Brick is sharpened. If we disdain the expert's theories, as does the majority, and demand the singular facts involving particular individuals in the specific context of their market, the class action is virtually doomed in indirect-purchaser cases. But if we assume the commission of a wrong that has resulted in some injury, albeit one difficult to measure, the allowance of "reasoned estimation" and "approximation," as postulated by the expert is not without appeal. The approach is especially persuasive where the wrongdoer's action has itself created the difficulty in proving damages with certainty. Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,445], 327 U.S. 251, 264-265, 66 S. Ct. 574, 90 L. Ed. 652 (1946). The Illinois Brick dissent opens the way for admission of the expert's formulae to measure the overcharge and successive pass-ons, [*14] thus establishing injury and damages on a classwide basis. Common questions of fact are thereby increased and individual questions correspondingly reduced.

Classwide formulae have been allowed after all to prove injury and damages in class actions involving direct purchasers. E.g., In re Fine Paper Antitrust Litig. [1979-1 Trade Cases ¶ 62,551], 82 F.R.D. 143, 154 (E.D. Pa. 1979), aff'd [1982-2 Trade Cases ¶ 64,843, 685 F.2d 810], 685 F.2d 810 (3d Cir. 1982), cert. den. 459 U.S. 1156, 103 S. Ct. 801, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1003 (1983); In re Domestic Air Transportation Antitrust Litig., 137 F.R.D. at 691; Transamerican Refining Corp. v. Dravo Corp. [1990-1 Trade Cases ¶ 68,919], 130 F.R.D. 70, 76 (S.D. Tex. 1990). And in the MDL litigation involving our defendants, Judge Korcos certified a direct-purchaser class after recognizing the "number of different methodologies that can be used in proving damages and injury on a classwide basis." Brand Name Prescription Drugs, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16658, at *13.

Again we are spared the difficulty of choosing, for the legislature in opting for the indirect-purchaser remedy also focused upon class actions and classwide proof.

The Legislative Gloss on Class Actions

<sup>7</sup> In re Aluminum Phosphide Antitrust Litigation, 11995-2 Trade Cases ¶ 71,2091, 160 F.R.D. 609 (D. Kan. 1995); In re Potash Antitrust Litig. [1995] Trade Cases ¶ 70,8851, 159 F.R.D. 682 (I. Minn. 1995); In re Catfish Antitrust Litig. [1993-2 Trade Cases ¶ 70,395, 826 F. Supp. 1019]. (N.D. Miss. 1993); Coleman v. Cannon Oil Co., 141 F.R.D. 516 (M.D. Ala. 1992); In re Infant Formula Antitrust Litig., No. MDL 878, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21981, 1992 WL 503465 (N.D. Fla. Jan. 13, 1992); In re Domestic Air Transportation Antitrust Litig. [1991-2 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,518], 137 F.R.D. 677 (N.D. Ga. 1991); New York v. Salem Sanitary Caning Corp., No. CV-85-0208, 1989 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12678, 1989 WL 86997 (E.D.N.Y. July 24, 1989). In support of In re Amino Acid Lysine Antitrust Litig., No. 95-C-7679 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 15, 1996) (granting certification), plaintiff submits the transcript of the oral hearing on class certification. Although the court delivered its views. The underlying facts are obscure and do not reveal whether the purchaser was in privity.

<sup>8</sup> E.g., In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceeding in Petroleum Products Antitrust Litig. 1982-83 Trade Cases ¶ 65,028], 691 F.2d 1335 (9th Cir. 1982), cert. den., 464 U.S. 1068, 104 S. Ct. 972, 79 L. Ed. 2d 211 (1984); Borden, Inc. v. Universal Indus. Corp. [1981-1 Trade Cases ¶ 63,8961, 88 F.R.D. 708 (N.D. Miss. 1981); Keating v. Philip Morris, Inc. [1987-2 Trade Cases ¶ 67,801], 417 N.W.2d 132 (Minn.Ct.App. 1987).

Section 28-4508 of the D.C. Code provides remedies for private parties injured by violations of the District of Columbia Antitrust Act. As respects class actions, the legislature explicitly sanctioned, in section 28-4508(c), the use of common or classwide proof of injury to the class as a whole as well as to its members individually:

In any class action brought under this section by purchasers or sellers, the fact of injury and the amount of damages sustained by members of the class may be proven [*15] on a class-wide basis, without requiring proof of such matters by each individual member of the class. The percentage of total damages attributable to a member of such class shall be the same as the ratio of such member's purchases or sales to the purchases or sales of the class as a whole.

In this manner has the expert and his formulae gained sway as Mr. Justice Brennan contemplated.<sup>9</sup>

Defendants seek to negate this legislative allowance of classwide proof by arguing that it is in conflict with the requirement of section 28-4509(a), that the indirect purchaser individually prove "payment of all or any part of any overcharge" in order to be deemed "injured." The two provisions mesh perfectly, however. To sue, the plaintiff must be "injured" and section 28-4509(a) provides that upon proof of "payment of all or any part of any overcharge," the indirect, purchaser is "deemed to be injured within the meaning of this chapter." Having told us who is injured, the legislature then deals in section 28-4508(c) with the proof and measure of damages when the injured person is a member of a class. Class damages may [*16] be reckoned on a classwide basis and the individual member, who has qualified as "injured" under section 28-4509(a), is allowed individual damages under section 28-4508(c) pursuant to the "ratio" payout specified in that section.

While not dispelling Illinois Brick's skepticism of experts, section 28-4508(c) does mitigate the majority's apprehension of a plethora of mini-trials on injury and damages by sanctioning classwide proof. But statutory sanctioning of classwide proof does not by itself make the problem go away. The requirements of Rule 23(a) and (b) must still be satisfied.

The Scope of Our Question

Two limiting circumstances should be noted before we deal with the common vis a vis individual questions presented here:

(1) Because summary judgment in the MDL litigation effectively eliminated wholesalers from the distribution chain as being captives of the defendants-manufacturers, we have only one intermediate tier (i.e., the retail pharmacy) between the manufacturer and the ultimate consumer, the putative class member. Accordingly, only one pass-on must be scrutinized as distinguished from two in Illinois Brick. The effect, of this contraction of issues is to lessen the individual issues within the contemplation of Rule 23 that would otherwise be spawned [*17] by this dispute.

(2) The ultimate consumer, at least in one respect, presents an easier question as a plaintiff than a middleman, indirect purchaser. The ultimate consumer has no one to pass on to and there are no damages other than the overcharge he suffers. But the middleman, even though passing on the overcharge in whole or in part, may yet demand additional damages on the theory that his sales were reduced by the increased prices. See Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. 720, 733 n.13, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707.

Indirect-purchaser cases that do not present these limiting factors may present more difficult and intractable circumstances for class-action treatment than our case at bar. But more significantly, the nature of the classwide proof presented impacts significantly on certifiability.

---

<sup>9</sup> Our legislature, in so acting, was following respected authority. See Newberg on Class Actions, §§ 10.06, 10.07 (3d ed. 1992) and cases collected therein.

We should also clear at the threshold defendants' argument that no injury can accrue to the class on account of any conspiracy because retail pharmacies, unlike managed care organizations, do not possess sufficient market-share power to command price discounts. Therefore, the theory goes, the prices to the pharmacies would remain unchanged regardless of any alleged conspiracy. The same argument was advanced and rejected in the MDL litigation on the summary judgment motion. [*18] I find the reasons supporting denial of the motion in the MDL case. Brand Name Prescription Drugs, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4335, 1996 WL 167350, at \*13.35, entirely persuasive here.

The Proffered Classwide Proof

Plaintiff's expert economist, Dr. Michael J. Sattinger, has advanced by affidavit various econometric methodologies for measuring the overcharge and the extent to which retailers passed it on. This would permit, if accepted, common proof to establish injury and damage to the putative class. His opinions and methodologies have been subjected to extensive cross-examination by deposition and they are heavily attacked.<sup>10</sup>

I am not, however, permitted to assess the persuasive force of plaintiff's expert compared to defendant's expert. Dr. Edward A. Snyder. Nor may I determine whether, in a bench trial. I would credit Dr. Sattinger's opinions and methodologies. The question, instead, is whether they are sufficiently colorable to merit jury consideration. In re Disposable Contact Lens Antitrust Litig., 170 F.R.D. 524, 531 \(M.D. Fla. Sept. 5, 1996\) (A "colorable method of proving impact" or injury is sufficient for certification purposes.); [In re Potash Antitrust Litig. \[1995-1 Trade Cases ¶ 70,885\], 159 F.R.D. 682, 697 \(D. Minn. 1995\)](#) ("Without trenching on the merits, in considering a class certification motion, a court must consider only whether plaintiffs have made a threshold showing 'that what proof they will offer will be sufficiently generalized in nature that . . . the class action will provide a tremendous savings of time and effort.'"); See 7B Charles Wright. Et Al., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 1718 at 7-8 (1986). While [*20] class-action certification often involves analytical entanglement with the merits, Coopers & Lybrand v. Livesay, 437 U.S. 463, 469 n.12, 98 S. Ct. 2454, 57 L. Ed. 2d 351 \(1978\), it does not permit nitpicking testimony to determine who "will prevail on the merits." [Eisen v. Carlisle Jacqueline \[1974-1 Trade Cases ¶ 75,082\]. 417 U.S. 156, 178, 94 S. Ct. 2140, 40 L. Ed. 2d 732 \(1974\)](#).

The threshold showing here is more than sufficient. Dr. Sattinger's theorems on quantification of an overcharge were accepted in the MDL litigation. Brand Name Prescription Drugs, 1994 U.S. Dist. Lexis 16658, at \*13. The remainder of his testimony dealing with the pass-on is corroborated a fortiori by four experts engaged by five of the defendants in the MDL litigation. They self-servingly opined, as respects the Robinson-Patman Act price discrimination claims also presented there, that 100 percent of any overcharge was in fact passed on by the retailers. Dr. Sattinger's affidavit postulates only a 50 percent pass-on. The literature is also supportive. "[I]ndirect purchasers virtually always can legitimately claim to have suffered overcharge harm as a result of a successful price fixing conspiracy." SECTION OF ANTITRUST LAW, A.B.A., PROVING ANTITRUST DAMAGES: LEGAL AND ECONOMIC ISSUES 184 (1996).<sup>11</sup>

<sup>10</sup> Defendants attack overreaches the deposition transcript in a number of instances. For example, the claim that Dr. Sattinger was unable to rate the accuracy of any of his proposed methodologies in reflecting individual damages (Defendants' Memorandum of Law at 36) turns out to be an inability at the time of deposition to comparatively rank the various formulae according to their respective accuracy in reflecting individual damages (Sattinger Dep., 1135-1136), not a failure of any formula to fairly approximate damages. He is also said in have admitted that one of his constructs used in the MDL case "doesn't necessarily tell you 'what the price would [*19] be absent the conspiracy.'" (Defendants' Memorandum of Law at 34). The cited deposition page (165) does not support the proposition. Even had the witness so testified, admissibility would not be impaired. A construct or formula is not required to "necessarily" prove a conclusion. Probability is sufficient.

<sup>11</sup> See also, Harris and Sullivan, Passing on the Monopoly Overcharge: A Comprehensive Policy Analysis, 128 U. Pa. L. Rev. 269, 289-290 (1979); Elmer J. Schaefer, *Passing-On Theory in Antitrust Treble Damages Actions: [*21] An Economic and Legal Analysis*, 16 Wm. & Mary L. Rev. 883, 897 (1975); Cynthia U. Kassis. The Indirect Purchaser's Right to Sue Under Section 4 of the Clayton Act Another Congressional Response to Illinois Brick, 32 Am. U. L. Rev. 1087 n.2 \(1983\).

The proffered testimony here on classwide injury and damages distinguishes our case from the Alabama indirect-purchaser case where, in denying certification. Judge Kocoras noted that plaintiffs "have failed to show that they can establish the fact of injury and damages through common proof on a class-wide basis." Brand Name Prescription Drugs, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16658, at \*17-18.

Defendants argue that Dr. Sattinger's formulaic approach to injury and damages is a crude effort to get at individual loss. But the concept is sanctioned by section 28-4508\(c\) and defendants, while hinting at constitutional difficulties, conspicuously stop short of attacking it. It is hard to view the statutory concept (which adopted Mr. Justice Brennan's dissent) as being more crude and unfair in a case like this than the doctrine of the Illinois Brick majority, which permits a full recovery to an unharmed, direct purchaser while denying the real victim, the indirect purchaser, any relief at all. Moreover, in terms of fair enforcement of the antitrust laws, it sounds hollow for the alleged wrongdoer, while striking only a [*22] glancing blow against class-wide damages, to champion the rights of the individual consumer by arguing vigorously that his damages have not been accurately reckoned.

Nor am I impressed at this stage with the alarms of insuperable complexities that will follow class certification. We are told there are 800 different drugs, thousands of retail outlets and tens of thousands of ultimate consumers with a myriad of health plans involved here. If analyzed on a drug-by-drug, retailer-by-retailer and consumer-by-consumer basis, it is claimed that the class action would be overwhelmed with individual questions. The argument is a variation, albeit a significant one, on a theme often raised and rejected in direct-purchaser cases where there is a colorable, expert approach to a classwide assessment of injury and damages.<sup>12</sup> The variation presented here is our putative class of indirect purchasers. This opens the door to the pass-on puzzle. But our statutes authorizing indirect purchaser suits (§ 28-4509\(a\)) and classwide proof of injury and damages (§ 28-4508\(c\)) mandate that we be solicitous to the class-action remedy if it is otherwise in conformity with Rule 23 and is manageable. And although we are trading up to the question [*23] of pass-on, we are rid of the middleman's consequential damage claims stemming from the assertion that, although the overcharge was passed on in whole or in part, sales and profits were lost because of higher costs.

There is yet, however, another substantial obstacle to the class-action remedy or, at least, to the composition of the class as proffered.

The Collateral Source Issue

Defendants point, to the fact that third parties or collateral sources often pay directly, or reimburse the consumer, for drugs purchased at retail pharmacies. Among such collateral sources are insurance companies, managed care plans and medicaid. Depending upon the contract or arrangement, there may be no "injury" within the contemplation of the antitrust laws, it is argued. Indeed, some members of the applicant class may belong to health care organizations who are favored by the discount denied to retail pharmacies. In such cases, defendants contend, the consumer has [*24] no valid complaint.

The gravamen of plaintiff's claim is the passing on of the conspiratorial overcharge. Without the passing on the consumer is not injured. Clearly, HMO members who are permitted to buy from designated pharmacies are not injured within the contemplation of section 28-4509\(a\) if the pharmacy effectively absorbs the overcharge (either by moderating the prices charged to members or by rebating to the HMO). Medicaid recipients are also uninjured consumers. Federal law requires that manufacturers of brand name prescription drugs give the D.C. Medicaid program the "best price" provided to any private buyer or a 15 percent discount, whichever is greater, 42 U.S.C. §

<sup>12</sup> E.g., Brand Name Prescription Drugs, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16658, at \*11-12; In re Potash, 159 F.R.D. at 694-695, 697; [In re Carbon Dioxide Antitrust Litigation \[1993-1 Trade Cases ¶ 70,230\]](#), 149 F.R.D. 229, 233-234 (M.D. Fla. 1993); In re Domestic Air Transportation Litig., 137 F.R.D. at 689, 693-694; In re Wirebound Boxes Antitrust Litig. [1989-2 Traded Cases ¶ 68,818], 128 F.R.D. 268, 271-272 (I). Minn. 1939); In re South Central States Bakery Products Antitrust Litig., 86 F.R.D. 407, 419, 420-423 (M.D. La. 198); In re Fine Paper, 82 F.R.D. at 147, 151-152; In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litig. (1978-2 Trade Cases ¶ 62,220], 80 F.R.D. 244, 246, 249, 250 (S.D. Tex. 1978).

1396r-8 (1994). Accordingly, to be excluded from any class are consumers in those two categories: (1) Medicaid recipients; and (2) Members of health plans which, by dint of their economic clout, oblige independent pharmacies to absorb any overcharge.

Other collateral-source arrangements require further examination, however. No case has been cited dealing with collateral contributions in the context of antitrust injury. But, we must regard Hudson v. Lazarus, 95 U.S. App. D.C. 16, 217 F.2d 344 (1954), even though it is based in the law of personal injury. Hudson decided that an injured person may usually recover in [*25] full from a wrongdoer regardless of anything he may get from a "collateral source" unconnected with the wrongdoer. . . . [T]he interests of society are likely to be better served if the injured person is benefited than if the wrongdoer is benefited.

Id. at 18-19, 217 P.2d at 346. Applied strictly to this case, an injured consumer would be entitled to a full recovery notwithstanding his health care contract.

It is true, as defendants argue, that a consumer with a managed care plan or insurance policy calling upon him to make a fixed co-payment feels no pinch when drug companies hike prices and the retailers pass-on to the plan or the carrier. But there is nevertheless an injury as a result of a wrong. True it is that the injury is absorbed by the managed care plan or an insurance company, but they were paid to do so by the consumer-beneficiary who paid the premiums directly or indirectly through his employer. There is no reason why a wrongdoer should gain because his target has paid for coverage either through his dollars or through his labors for his employer.<sup>13</sup> In that sense he may be regarded as injured and as stated in Hudson, it is better here to benefit the injured than the wrongdoer. The rationale is more appealing [*26] where the wrong is not mere negligence that usually harms only one person but a deliberate conspiracy that harms many. Effective enforcement of the antitrust laws is thus promoted.

We must not confuse the rights of the consumer as against a wrongdoer with the consumer's rights against his collateral source. While the manufacturer may be liable to the consumer, the insurance company or managed care plan may be entitled to indemnification from him, as would certainly be the case in subrogation. The latter circumstance can be addressed if and when we reach it in the administrative phase of these proceedings.

Nevertheless, problems involving collateral source are such that they deserve special and separate treatment. While insurance policies that simply [*27] provide for reimbursement of the insured's directly incurred expenses do no appeal to present the complications of managed care plans, the better course at this time is to reserve them for separate scrutiny.

Subclass Certification

Aided as I am (1) by this jurisdiction's legislation and (2) finding as I do that plaintiff's methodologies on overcharge and pass-on permit common proof of injury and damages sufficient to merit injury consideration, I conclude that the common questions of law and fact do predominate over individual questions. The residual requirement of Rule 23(b)(3), that "a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy," is not genuinely contested. There is in practical terms no alternative remedy since the individual stakes in independent actions are no doubt insufficient to justify the costs. Accordingly, the class action remedy is the only remedy available.

I am mindful of defendants' argument that class-action certification and a single trial would "permit only proof common to the class . . . [and] prevent the defendants from explaining, on a consumer-by-consumer, drug-by-drug, and retailer-by-retailer basis, why many [*28] individual consumers have no claim, why many individual consumers would be compensated who (even under plaintiff's own theory) were never injured at all and why many others would be overcompensated for any claimed damage." (Defendants' Memorandum of Law at (6). The point has merit but is exaggerated.

<sup>13</sup> To the argument that the consumer with fixed copayments has gotten what he bargained for, fixed costs without the risk of enhanced prices, it may be said that (his artful rationale is one of the analgesics that permits escalating costs in health care. In any event, the predictable result is that, although copayments and/or premiums may be stabilized for one year, they will surely rise in the next to the detriment of the consumer/beneficiary.

To the extent that these three subject matters of alleged preclusion implicate collateral contributions, the questions are issues of law upon which the court will rule. Those rulings will control individual entitlements. The first matter, that "many individuals have no claim," is unclear. If defendants mean that they will not be able to challenge pass-on in whole or in part, they are mistaken. Nor will they be confined strictly to common proof. If the theorems propounded by the class skew individual damages so far that aggregate damages are in doubt or otherwise suspect, the jury would be entitled to weigh this in determining whether to adopt the methodology advanced by the class.<sup>14</sup> Rule 23(b) does not foreclose the trial of individual issues in a class action suit. It merely requires that the common issues predominate.

As stated, there will be excluded from certification (1) medicare beneficiaries and (2) persons with managed care programs whose brand-name-prescription-drug benefits are such that they negate any pass-on.<sup>15</sup>

Accordingly, this case will go forward as a class action but structured in subclasses pursuant to Rule 23(c)(4). The first subclass will consist of consumers who are without collateral source benefits. The second subclass will consist of those who have unexcluded collateral source benefits. Questions of individual entitlement will, should plaintiffs prevail, be left to the administrative stage subject to determination according to standards of law established by the court. The ratio formula of section 28-4508\(c\) will assist in the resolution of these matters. Collateral source problems will also be sorted out at this stage as well as problems involving individual mitigation of damages. Recourse to special masters pursuant to Rule 53 may also be helpful.

Whether the complexities of this case are ultimately susceptible to class action treatment is yet unclear. Certification, according to Rule 23(c)(1), "may be conditional and may [*30] be altered or amended before the decision on the merits." This power will be exercised as the exigencies require.

Conclusion

As our economy becomes more complex, technologically sophisticated and global, it continues to test the adequacy of the judicial process. The genius of our jurisprudence has always been its creative powers to adapt to the imperatives of our times.<sup>16</sup> Our legislature has taken the lead in this antitrust area with bold legislation endowing old remedies with new concepts and dimensions. The courts should not be found wanting where the subject matter at bar is prima facie manageable, as it is here.

Plaintiff is to submit within fourteen days an order which includes a restructuring of the class in conformity with this Opinion. Plaintiff should also submit within the same time period an order providing notice pursuant to Rule 23(c)(2) and setting forth, inter alia, the proposed notice, the means of [*31] notice and provision for the payment of costs.

SO ORDERED.

<sup>14</sup> The latitude allowed for such evidence is obviously a matter of trial court discretion. [*29]

<sup>15</sup> The class certified in Prociado excluded persons who did not purchase from an independent retail pharmacy.

<sup>16</sup> The metamorphic nature of the law has not abated. Its continuing vitality is attested to in cases like Sindell v. Abbott Laboratories, 26 Cal. 3d 588, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 (1980), cert. den. 449 U.S. 912, 101 S. Ct. 285, 101 S. Ct. 286, 66 L. Ed. 2d 140 (1980) (espousing the theory of "market share liability" in limited circumstances) and Anderson v. Somberg, 67 N.J. 291, 338 A.2d 1 (1973), cert. den., 423 U.S. 929, 96 S. Ct. 279, 46 L. Ed. 2d 258 (1975) (endorsing the theory of "alternative liability" in appropriate circumstances).

---

End of Document

Bogan v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

February 5, 1997, Decided

91 Civ. 2221 (WCC)

Reporter

953 F. Supp. 532 *; 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1208 **

ROBERT M. BOGAN and SCOTT M. BOGAN, Plaintiffs, - against - NORTHWESTERN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY and AUSTIN E. HODGKINS, JR., Defendants.

Disposition: [**1] Defendants' motion for summary judgment on antitrust claim granted and remaining fifteen state claims for resolution in pending state court case dismissed

Core Terms

---

general agent, Metropolitan, terminated, conspiracy, conspiring, rule of reason, dealers, horizontal, antitrust, group boycott, vertical, subordinate, territories, franchised, compete, sales agent, relevant market, general agency, state claims, Sherman Act, transfers, insurer, summary judgment, antitrust claim, procompetitive, newspaper, training, effects, records, soliciting agent

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1 [] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment should be granted when there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). When the moving party has carried its burden under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\), its opponent must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. It must establish that there is a genuine issue for trial. In considering the motion, the court's responsibility is not to resolve disputed issues of fact but to assess whether there are any factual issues to be tried, while resolving ambiguities and drawing reasonable inferences against the moving party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a case under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Specifically, conduct as consistent with permissible conduct as with an illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. There must be direct or circumstantial evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants were acting independently. Moreover, in antitrust cases, if the factual context renders plaintiff's claim implausible -- if the claim is one that simply makes no economic sense -- plaintiff must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support its claim than would otherwise be necessary.

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN3 Antitrust Actions, Facilities

Employees may challenge antitrust violations that are premised on restraining the employment market but not violations premised on restraining competition in the downstream product market in which their employers sell.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

HN4 Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

HN5 Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

To determine whether a particular practice of an insurance company constitutes the "business of insurance," courts have articulated a further three-part test: First, whether the practice has the effect of transferring or spreading a policy holder's risk; second, whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and third, whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A violation of the Sherman Act (§ 1), 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 requires concerted action among two or more persons; § 1 does not proscribe independent action. A parent could not conspire with its wholly owned subsidiary. A parent and its wholly owned subsidiary have a complete unity of interest. Their objectives are common, not disparate; their general corporate actions are guided or determined not by two separate corporate consciousnesses, but one.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Collaborative action between a corporation and its employees, or among employees within a corporation, is not regarded as joint action within the meaning of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. However, a corporation's wholesalers or dealers are capable of conspiring in violation of § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > General Overview

HN8 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Whether two actors constitute distinct economic entities for purposes of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., is determined by the economic realities of their relationship. In the context of the principal/agent relationship this analysis requires consideration of a number of elements which include: whether the agent performs a function on behalf of his principal other than securing an offer from a buyer for the principal's product; the degree to which the agent is authorized to exercise his discretion concerning price and terms under which the principal's product is to be sold; and finally, whether use of the agent constitutes a separate step in the vertical distribution of the principal's product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Although the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, prohibits any contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, it has long been established that § 1 proscribes only unreasonable restraints. The "rule of reason" is the prevailing standard of analysis. Certain business practices are deemed illegal per se, however, because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue. These practices and agreements are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use. Some examples of per se illegal arrangements are certain boycotts, horizontal territorial restrictions, and both horizontal and vertical price-fixing schemes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

**HN10** [] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

The classic "group boycott" is a concerted attempt by a group of competitors at one level to protect themselves from competition from non-group members who seek to compete at that level. It is this purpose to exclude competition that has characterized courts invoking the group boycott per se rule.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

**HN11** [] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

An arrangement that has both horizontal and vertical aspects definitely should be tested under the "rule of reason" and possibly under the per se rule applied to group boycotts, if the restraint of trade has no purpose except stifling competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN12** [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Establishing a violation of the rule of reason involves three steps. Plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market. If the plaintiff succeeds, the burden shifts to the defendant to establish the pro-competitive redeeming virtues of the action. Should the defendant carry this burden, the plaintiff must then show that the same pro-competitive effect could be achieved through alternative means that is less restrictive of competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN13** [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The antitrust laws are enacted for the protection of competition not competitors. Thus, a plaintiff must show more than that he was harmed by defendant's conduct or that there was an adverse effect on competition among different sellers of the same product. Such intrabrand restrictions can actually enhance market-wide competition by fostering vertical efficiency and maintaining the desired quality of a product. The focus of the inquiry must be the relevant market as a whole, and any restriction of intrabrand competition must be balanced against any increases in interbrand competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN14 [blue icon] Clayton Act, Claims

For standing purposes, however, whether there was or was not a per se violation is irrelevant. Regardless of any substantive violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., §§ 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act still require plaintiffs to establish that the defendants engaged in anticompetitive conduct that caused them an antitrust injury. Although the per se rule relieves plaintiff of the burden of demonstrating an anticompetitive effect, which is assumed, it does not excuse a plaintiff from showing that his injury was caused by the anticompetitive acts.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Pendent Claims

Securities Law > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Postofferings & Secondary Distributions > Federal Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Supplemental Jurisdiction, Pendent Claims

The exercise of pendent or supplemental jurisdiction is left to the discretion of the district court. In exercising its discretion, the district court is permitted to weigh several factors, including considerations of judicial economy, convenience, and fairness to litigants.

Counsel: APPEARANCES:

For Plaintiffs: MICHAEL S. DEVORKIN, ESQ., Of Counsel, DOAR DEVORKIN & RIECK, New York, New York.

For Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company, Defendant: PETER JASON, ESQ., Of Counsel, SCHNADER, HARRISON, SEGAL & LEWIS, New York, New York. For Austin E. Hodgkins, Jr., Defendant: TIMOTHY P. COON, ESQ., Of Counsel, BLEAKLEY, PLATT & SCHMIDT, White Plains, New York.

Judges: William C. Conner, Senior United States District Judge

Opinion by: William C. Conner

Opinion

---

[*534] OPINION AND ORDER*CONNER, SENIOR D.J.

Plaintiffs Robert M. Bogan ("Bogan" or "Robert") and Scott M. Bogan ("Scott"), jointly and separately, have brought various claims against defendants Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company ("NML") and Austin E. Hodgkins, Jr. ("Hodgkins") on sixteen separate causes of action arising out of Robert Bogan's termination as an insurance agent.<sup>1</sup>

[**2] The only federal claim in this case is brought by both Robert and Scott Bogan against Hodgkins for federal antitrust violations (1st cause of action). Together they have also brought claims against Hodgkins for state antitrust violations (2nd) and tortious interference with prospective contractual relations with other General and Sales Agents (7th). Against NML they have brought a joint claim for tortious interference with existing contractual relations with Hodgkins (5th). They have also brought a claim for fraud against both Hodgkins and NML (11th).

Robert Bogan alone has brought claims against Hodgkins for: breach of contract (3rd), conspiracy to violate fiduciary duty (10th) and four claims for defamation (causes 14-17). He has brought claims against NML for: breach of written contract (4th), breach of implied contract (8th), and unjust enrichment (9th). Finally, he has brought claims against both defendants for conversion (13th), and tortious interference with his contracts with his Sales Agents (6th).

[*535] The asserted basis for jurisdiction in this case is a federal claim under the antitrust laws, with pendent jurisdiction over the state claims. While there would be diversity [**3] jurisdiction over the claims of Scott Bogan, a Connecticut resident, complete diversity does not exist because Hodgkins and Robert Bogan are both New York Residents. Before the Court are Defendant Hodgkins' and Defendant NML's motions for summary judgment on all counts pursuant to FED. R. CIV. P. 56\(c\).

BACKGROUND

Defendant NML insurance is a mutual insurance company that sells life insurance through a system of General Agents, District Agents, Sales Agents and Special Agents. NML contracts with its General Agents and generally assigns them each an exclusive territory. In the New York Metropolitan area, however, five General Agents share the same territory. General Agents, in turn, contract directly with District and Special Agents who are approved by NML. The District Agents in turn contract directly with Sales Agents. On the policies they sell, District, Special and Sales Agents are compensated by commissions on the initial premium and renewal premiums for the next nine years; General Agents receive an override commission on the commissions paid to the District, Special and Sales Agents.

Defendant Hodgkins, a New York resident, was during all times relevant to this dispute, [**4] a General Agent for NML in the New York Metropolitan Area. Robert Bogan started with NML as a Sales Agent in 1976. From 1982 to 1987, he managed a District Agency under Hodgkins and in 1987 became a District Agent under Hodgkins' General Agency. On May 29, 1990, he was terminated by Hodgkins with 30 days notice effective June 30, 1990. On June 4, after a dispute involving Bogan's failure to turn over his records to Hodgkins, he was terminated for cause.

Robert's brother Scott joined NML in 1985 as a Special Agent under Hodgkins' predecessor, Hamilton; he later became a Special Agent under Hodgkins. In 1987 he signed a Special Agent's contract under Robert. All of the contracts of the Special Agents in Bogan's District Agency, including that of Scott, were terminated when Robert was terminated. As discussed above, Scott joins Robert in five of Robert's sixteen claims.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> There were originally 17 causes of action, but the 12th, under New York Deceptive Trade Practices, was dismissed by Judge Broderick. (See Order of 11/29/95).

[**5] As Robert Bogan presents them, the pertinent events leading up to his termination are as follows:

In 1990, Bogan was a highly successful District Agent for NML, ranked approximately fourth out of 300. Up until that point, he had invested over $ 1.5 million in the development and improvement of his District Agency. During his tenure as District Agent, the District Office size had increased from three to eleven agents, while annual sales had increased from $ 11 to $ 120 million. Bog. Aff. PP 141-149.

NML's agency contracts contain strict limitations on its agents' writing business with other carriers (exclusive agency clauses). Prior to his termination, some of Bogan's agents were violating their exclusivity clauses and when Bogan attempted to enforce the clauses, they complained to Hodgkins who "told him [Bogan] not to interfere with what his Soliciting Agents were doing and began to plan to take away Bogan's District Agency and give it to two of Bogan's Soliciting Agents who were friends of Hodgkins." Pl. Br. p. 4-5. On May 29, Hodgkins terminated Bogan without cause "even after NML had repeatedly promised in writing that it would not permit such terminations." Id. In a June [**6] 1 phone conference, Bogan told Dennis Tamscin, NML Senior Vice President - Agencies, some "very, very serious violations of the law have been committed by Hodgkins," that his agents were receiving checks from other insurers, and that "research needs to be done." Hdgk. Exh. J p. 6-8. Tamscin told Bogan to give Hodgkins access to the files or he would support Hodgkins' [*536] termination of Bogan for cause. Tamscin added that, if Hodgkins so terminated him, he would not be able to take his District Agency with him when he left. Id.

On June 4th at 8:00 a.m., Hodgkins went to Bogan's offices and demanded that he turn over "all of [his] records" and "refused to give him time to consult with his attorney as to his rights and to coordinate with his attorney an orderly transfer." Pl. Br. p. 4. Bogan asserts that there were legitimate questions regarding which records belonged to NML and which were his personal files and that he asked Hodgkins to wait an hour until 9:00 a.m. when Bogan's attorney would be available. Hodgkins refused and notified him that he would be terminated for cause effective at 5:30 that day. Bog. 3(g) stmt. P24. Scott Bogan's contract was also terminated (as were all [**7] of Bogan's Soliciting Agent's contracts), and he was told he could only recontract with the Hodgkins agency. Id. at P29.

Bogan alleges that Hodgkins terminated him wrongfully and that pursuant to an agreement amongst the General Agents he calls the "Metropolitan Agreement,"<sup>3</sup> once he was terminated for cause, he was prevented from either transferring as an active agent, or recontracting after his termination. It is this termination, the events that surrounded it and the alleged Metropolitan Agreement that give rise to the sixteen separate causes of action Bogan has brought before this Court.

<sup>2</sup> Scott Bogan has not submitted separate briefs to this Court but has relied upon Robert Bogan's submissions. Thus, throughout this opinion we will address the arguments presented by Robert Bogan, making explicit reference to Scott Bogan's claims only where they differ from Robert's.

<sup>3</sup> The origin and sponsorship of this "Metropolitan Agreement" are difficult to discern from Bogan's submissions to this court. He states in his 3(g) statement that "beginning no later than 1984, the General Agents reached an agreement called the Metropolitan Agreement which restricted agents in one agency from transferring to another area agency either voluntarily or upon termination." Bog. 3(g) stmt. P 35. He apparently asserts that the substance of this agreement is contained in the document "Company Policy on Metropolitan Transfers." Bog. 3(g) stmt. P 37 ("In 1989, NML decided for legal reasons that the Agreement would look better and have a better legal defense if it were called a company policy.").

For his part, Hodgkins apparently does not dispute that what he calls the "Metropolitan Policy," (see Hdgk. Exh. V), emerged from a 1989 meeting of NML General Agents. However, he asserts that the document is "improperly characterized" as an agreement amongst General Agents, when it is merely the NML company policy. Although Bogan, as the non-moving party, is entitled to have all disputed facts construed in a light favorable to him, for simplicity's sake, this Court will refer to Exh. V by its title -- the "Metropolitan Policy." However, for purposes of the merits of Bogan's claim, where relevant, this Court will assume that the General Agents agreed to its provisions.

[**8] Defendants' version, though largely in agreement, puts a different slant on the facts. They assert that there were numerous problems in Bogan's district agency, evidenced by the multiple complaints Bogan's Agents had made to NML. According to Tamscin, Bogan's Agents considered him "dictatorial", Tamscin Reply Aff. for NML, P 41, and complained about his policy regarding expense reimbursement and outside business. For example, Bogan allegedly charged his agents $ 3.50 per page for faxes, and demanded 20% of any commissions on outside business done through his office. Id. at PP 14, 15. Tamscin testified that in January of 1990 representatives of the Special Agent's association (SAI -- Special Agents, Inc.) had talked to Bogan about the complaints they had received from his agents; in February 1990, Kent Beebe of NML visited Bogan's agency because of the "problems there;" and in April, Richard Storatz, one of Bogan's agents, wrote a letter to Tamscin in which he described Bogan as "a district agent run amok, subverting the values of the company from within." Id. at PP 41, 45, 48.

Hodgkins testified that prior to his termination of Bogan, he and Bogan had attempted to "resolve [**9] some myriad of issues, and were making some progress, certainly in some areas, and other areas we weren't." Hdgr. Depo. p. 21. He states that Bogan offered to step down as District Agent if the difficulties could not be resolved. Id. at 189.<sup>4</sup> [**10] He adds that only then did he terminate Bogan without cause and that "Bogan's response . . . was to lock out two agents [Bob Slocum and Paul Winrich]," Hdgr. Br. p. 1., and deny them access to their records including [*537] "one-card files" essential to an agents' ability to conduct day-to-day business. NML 3(g) stmt. P2. Hodgkins asserts that at that point, the Metropolitan Policy did not apply to Bogan as a former agent terminated without cause, and that he was free to transfer (alone, without his Soliciting Agents). Hodgkins states that only after Bogan refused his and Tamscin's demands to turn over the records did he fire Bogan for cause, thus rendering him unable to transfer to another General Agency.<sup>5</sup>

Hodgkins asserts that he was justified in firing Bogan and that his termination was neither a breach of contract nor part of an antitrust conspiracy, but part of a strategy to improve the management of his General Agency. He has brought a motion for summary judgment on all counts of the Bogans' complaint. Because Bogan's antitrust claim is the asserted basis for federal jurisdiction, [**11] we discuss it first.

DISCUSSION

I. SUMMARY JUDGMENT STANDARD

HN1 [↑] Summary judgment should be granted when "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and . . . the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." FED. R. CIV. P. 56(c); Knight v. U.S. Fire Ins. Co., 804 F.2d 9, 11 (2d Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 480 U.S. 932, 94 L. Ed. 2d 762, 107 S. Ct. 1570 (1987); see Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986). "When the moving party has carried its burden under Rule 56(c), its opponent must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348

---

<sup>4</sup> See Hdgr. Exh. C, 6/2 Memo from Bogan to Hodgkins, stating: "I'm sure we can find a livable/workable solution even if that means my stepping down."

<sup>5</sup> Hodgkins claims that this termination for cause was perfectly justified under Bogan's District Agency Contract. The contract provides in relevant part:

12. Records - District Agent shall hold and preserve all records relating to transactions by or for the company . . . and shall surrender them to the General Agent or the Company on demand.

20. Term of Agreement - ...

It may be terminated by the General Agent upon written notice to the District Agent, by reason of . . .

(ii) Failure of the District Agent to comply with any of the terms hereof, . . .

It may be terminated by either party at any time, without cause, upon thirty days' written notice.

Exh. A, NML 3(g) stmt.

(1986). It must establish that there is a "genuine issue for trial." Id. at 587. "In considering the motion, the court's responsibility is not to resolve disputed issues of fact but to assess whether there are any factual issues to be tried, while resolving ambiguities and drawing reasonable inferences against the moving party." Knight, 804 F.2d at 11.

However, HN2[] "antitrust law" limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous [**12] evidence in a § 1 case." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588. Specifically, "conduct as consistent with permissible conduct as with [an] illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Id. There must be direct or circumstantial evidence that "tends to exclude the possibility that the [defendants] were acting independently." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984). Moreover, in antitrust cases, "if the factual context renders [plaintiff's] claim implausible -- if the claim is one that simply makes no economic sense -- [plaintiff] must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support [its] claim than would otherwise be necessary." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587; Apex Oil v. DiMauro, 822 F.2d 246, 253 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 977, 108 S. Ct. 489, 98 L. Ed. 2d 487 (1987) (". . .the implausibility of a scheme will reduce the range of inferences that may permissibly be drawn from ambiguous evidence").

While "several courts have noted that summary judgment disposition of antitrust cases is difficult to obtain because of their inherent factual complexity, . . . that does not mean that [**13] summary disposition is thereby precluded or disfavored in antitrust law." Capital Imaging Assoc., Inc. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assoc., 996 F.2d 537, 541 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 947, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337, 114 S. Ct. 388 (1993). Rather, "as the Supreme Court observed in Matsushita, summary judgment remains a vital procedural [*538] tool to avoid wasteful trials and may be particularly important in antitrust litigation to prevent lengthy and drawn-out litigation that has a chilling effect on competitive market forces." Id.

II. THE ANTITRUST CLAIM

A. The Nature of the Antitrust Claim

At the heart of Bogan's antitrust claim is the Metropolitan Policy which Bogan alleges was an agreement among NML General Agents not to compete for the services of existing agents by restricting their transfer. According to this document (whose full title is "NML Company Policy on Metropolitan Transfers"), active agents could not transfer between General Agents without the permission of both the agent's former and future General Agent. The Policy next provided that "agents who are 'terminated' by a General Agency will not automatically be prevented from contracting with another [**14] General Agency unless [they were fired for cause]."<sup>6</sup> [**15] Bogan contends his

<sup>6</sup>The copy of the Metropolitan Policy submitted as Exh. V is very poor. This Court has attempted to transcribe it as accurately as possible. It states, in relevant part, that:

Transfers within a metropolitan area are a touchy subject. Our first objective is to operate in the best interests of the Company and its General Agency system. Second, we seek reasonable solutions consistent with applicable federal and state law involving trade and commerce. In addition, we want to minimize Home Office interference in the conduct of local business because we feel it is contrary to the spirit of the General Agency System. However, the Company and the General Agents have to protect investments of time, energy and money in the recruitment, training, development and support of agents and in the General Agency system. Therefore, we need to operate within certain guidelines to provide a modicum of structure and some basic "rules of the road" with reference to transfers, especially in areas where several Agencies operate within the same territory.

Our policy on operating General Agencies in metropolitan areas, as it relates to transfers, is as follows:

1. Active, contracted Agents residing within shared territory shall not transfer between General Agencies without the approval of both General Agents. (This includes proposed transfers where a change in contract to include management or specialist responsibilities is involved.) . . .

3. Agents who are "terminated" by a General Agency will not automatically be prevented from contracting with another General Agency unless the reasons for termination involved failure to comply with company rules or ethical practices or to meet other standards for holding a Northwestern Mutual Contract.

firing on 30 days notice and subsequent dismissal for cause were unjustified, and that Hodgkins' actions in agreeing to the Metropolitan Policy and then firing him involve a course of conduct designed to exclude him from the NML system that constitutes "a contract, combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1."<sup>7</sup> As best we can ascertain from Bogan's rather confusing claim, he seems to allege that the Metropolitan policy enabled Hodgkins to: (1) wrongfully prevent Bogan's transfer while he was an active agent (see P 1 of the Policy), and (2) continue to exclude Bogan from recontracting with another NML agency thereafter by deliberately trumping up a "cause" for dismissal (see P 3). Bogan does not accuse the other General Agents or NML itself of violating § 1.

In response, Hodgkins contends, first, that the Metropolitan Policy is exempt from the antitrust laws under the McCarran-Ferguson Act; second, that he cannot conspire [**16] with other NML General Agents; and third, that the Metropolitan Policy was not a violation of § 1 but merely a perfectly legal mechanism which NML and the General Agents use to protect their investment in the training [*539] of their agents. Hodgkins further states that after he fired Bogan, the Policy's restrictions on transfer did not apply to Bogan because Bogan was no longer an active agent, that he justifiably terminated Bogan for cause, and at that point it was NML, not he, who exercised control over Bogan's ability to recontract. We consider these contentions separately in the order listed.

B. Antitrust Exemption under the McCarran-Ferguson Act

According to the Supreme Court, the primary purpose of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1011 et seq.,<sup>8</sup> was to insure the continued regulation of the insurance industry by the states; its secondary purpose was to allow only a limited exemption from the antitrust laws. Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205, 218 n.18, 221, 59 L. Ed. 2d 261, 99 S. Ct. 1067 \(1978\) (emphasis added) (The McCarran-Ferguson Act was designed primarily to enable insurers to collaborate on cooperative rate making without [**17] violating the antitrust laws.). In order to determine whether the Sherman Act applies to particular conduct of an insurer, the Court has developed a three-pronged analysis for construing the McCarran-Ferguson Act: conduct that (a) constitutes the business of insurance (b) is regulated by state law, and (c) does not constitute a boycott, is exempt from the Sherman Act. See Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. at 207; Union Labor Life Ins. Co. v. Pireno, 458 U.S. 119, 73 L. Ed. 2d 647, 102 S. Ct. 3002 (1982).

Bog. Exh. V (emphasis added).

<sup>7</sup> As a preliminary matter, we assume that Bogan has standing to bring an antitrust claim here. As a prominent commentator has noted, most courts have concluded that "HN3" employees may challenge antitrust violations that are premised on restraining the employment market but not violations premised on restraining competition in the downstream product market in which their employers sell." AREEDA, ANTITRUST LAW, P 377a, p. 311. But see Balaklaw v. Lovell, 14 F.3d 793, 800 (2d Cir. 1994). Balaklaw held that a doctor excluded by a hospital did not have standing under the antitrust laws because he had not shown anticompetitive effects in the relevant market. Since the question of the proper market is central to the analysis of the underlying antitrust claims, rather than summarily dismissing this case without analysis of the merits of those claims, we reserve consideration of this matter for our discussion of the § 1 conspiracy claim.

<sup>8</sup> HN4  Section 1012 of the McCarran-Ferguson Act provides in relevant part:

- (a) The business of insurance, and every person engaged therein, shall be subject to the laws of the several States which relate to the regulation or taxation of such business.
- (b) No Act of Congress shall be construed to invalidate, impair or supersede any law enacted by any state for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance, or which imposes a fee or tax upon such business, unless such Act specifically relates to the business of insurance; Provided, That after June 30, 1948, the Act of July 2, 1890, as amended, known as the Sherman Act, and the Act of October 15, 1914 known as the Clayton Act, and the Act of September 26, 1914, known as the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, shall be applicable to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State law.

[**18] HN5↑

To determine whether a particular practice of an insurance company constitutes the "business of insurance," the Supreme Court has articulated a further three-part test: First, whether the practice has the effect of transferring or spreading a policy holder's risk; second, whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and third, whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry. Pireno, 458 U.S. at 129.

Our application of this test leads us to conclude that restrictions upon the transfer of subordinate agents does not constitute the business of insurance, and that the McCarran-Ferguson Act therefore does not bar Bogan's claims. The basic purpose of the Act was to allow insurance companies to coordinate their policy structures to facilitate spreading their risks. We do not see how the Metropolitan Policy meaningfully furthers this goal. NML's proffered justification -- that transfer restrictions result in increased training and thus better qualified NML Sales Agents -- is evidence of a procompetitive advantage of the Policy. We are not convinced by Hodgkins' argument that this training serves the [**19] purposes of the McCarran Ferguson-Act and satisfies the Pireno test (promoting the spreading of risks and constituting an integral part of the contract between the insurer and the insured). Moreover, Hodgkins has not adequately established that the Metropolitan Policy is a matter regulated by state law. Thus, we deny Hodgkins' motion insofar as it contends that Bogan's claim is barred by the McCarran-Ferguson Act and proceed to a consideration of the merits of the claim under the Sherman Act.

C. The Ability of General Agents to Conspire

HN6↑ A violation of § 1 requires concerted action among two or more persons; § 1 does not proscribe independent action. [Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 1\*540\] 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 \(1984\); Schwimmer v. SONY Corp. of Am., 677 F.2d 946, 952](#) (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1007, 74 L. Ed. 2d 398, 103 S. Ct. 362 \(1982\). Hodgkins urges that Copperweld Corp. v. Indep. Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\), establishes that the General Agents are parts of a single corporate entity and cannot conspire as a matter of law. In that case, the Supreme Court held that a parent could [**20] not conspire with its wholly owned subsidiary. The Court explained that "A parent and its wholly owned subsidiary have a complete unity of interest. Their objectives are common, not disparate; their general corporate actions are guided or determined not by two separate corporate consciousnesses, but one." Id. at 771.

The Copperweld Court provided an important limitation to its decision, however, cautioning that: "We limit our inquiry to the narrow issue squarely presented: whether a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary are capable of conspiring in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. We do not consider under what circumstances, if any, a parent may be liable for conspiring with an affiliated corporation it does not completely own." Id. at 767 (emphasis added). In this case, the General Agents are not wholly owned subsidiaries of NML. Indeed, NML has no ownership interest in the General or District Agencies, S. Bog. Aff. P 16., and NML is not charged with participating in the conspiracy. Thus, Copperweld is not controlling.

Similarly, the Second Circuit has said that "HN7↑ collaborative action between a corporation and its employees, or among employees within [**21] a corporation, is not regarded as joint action within the meaning of § 1." Schwimmer, 677 F.2d at 953 (emphasis added). However, a corporation's wholesalers or dealers are capable of conspiring in violation of § 1. Id.; see also United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 \(1966\) (franchised auto dealers capable of conspiring with their franchisor); Bowen v. New York News, 522 F.2d 1242, 1256 \(2d Cir. 1975\) (newspaper publisher guilty of formulating a § 1 conspiracy with its exclusive franchised dealers to restrict the sale of newspapers to independent resale dealers); Borger v. Yamaha Intern. Corp., 625 F.2d 390, 395 \(2d Cir. 1980\). In addition, it is clear that, outside of baseball, sports organizations are capable of conspiring with their member clubs in violation of the antitrust laws. See, e.g., Mackey v. NFL, 543 F.2d 606, 618-19 \(8th Cir.\), cert. dism'd, 434 U.S. 801, 98 S. Ct. 28, 54 L. Ed. 2d 59 \(1977\)<sup>9</sup>; Chicago Prof'l Sports

---

<sup>9</sup> This case and Smith v. Pro Football, 193 U.S. App. D.C. 19, 593 F.2d 1173 \(D.C. Cir 1978\), were criticized by the Second Circuit as being inconsistent with its ruling in Wood v. Nat'l Basketball Ass'n, 809 F.2d 954 \(2d Cir. 1987\). See U.S. Football, 842

Lim. Partnership v. N.B.A., 961 F.2d 667 (7th Cir. 1992). Thus, in order to determine whether NML General Agents are capable of conspiring, it is important to determine whether they are more like employees [**22] or independent franchisees.

[**23] Some of the factors that suggested to the Second Circuit in Bowen that the dealer-franchisees were independent operators were: that they were labeled as "independent contractors" in their contract with the newspaper; that they had sole discretion to hire, discharge and supervise those engaged by them to carry out their delivery function; that they had sole discretion to determine the manner in which collections and deliveries were to be made; and that they had no right to return unsold copies. In addition, subscribers were considered to belong to the franchisees, and the newspaper had the right to buy a franchisee's customer list only if it were terminated. 522 F.2d at 1252-53. Thus, the [*541] court found that the newspaper had intended to "cast some risk, although relatively slight, on the franchise dealer." Id. at n.8.

In Fuchs Sugars & Syrups, Inc. v. Amstar Corp., 602 F.2d 1025 (2d. Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 917, 62 L. Ed. 2d 172, 100 S. Ct. 232 (1979), the Second Circuit discussed the important factors in determining whether a corporation is legally capable of conspiring with its agents.<sup>10</sup> As the Second Circuit explained:

HN8[] Whether . . . two actors constitute [**24] distinct economic entities for purposes of the Sherman Act is determined by the economic realities of their relationship. In the context of the principal/agent relationship this analysis requires consideration of a number of elements which include: whether the agent performs a function on behalf of his principal other than securing an offer from a buyer for the principal's product; the degree to which the agent is authorized to exercise his discretion concerning price and terms under which the principal's product is to be sold; and finally, whether use of the agent constitutes a separate step in the vertical distribution of the principal's product.

602 F.2d 1025 at 1031 (citations omitted). Since the plaintiffs acted "solely as conduit[s]" through which Amstar would negotiate the initial distribution of its sugar, they never purchased the sugar or competed with Amstar in its distribution or sale, Amstar never held them out as competitors, and the terms of the resultant sale were exclusively determined by Amstar, "rather than representing a separate and independent step in the distribution process, the sugar broker was merely an agent." Id. at n.5. See also Williams v. I**251 Fisher Nevada, 999 F.2d 445, 447 (9th Cir. 1993) (Jack-in-the-Box franchisor incapable of conspiring with franchisee to implement no-transfer agreement because they are part of a common enterprise.").

However, the Second Circuit has found members of a physician's group capable of conspiring under § 1. Capital Imaging v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assoc., 996 F.2d 537, 545 (2d Cir. 1993) (noting that the doctors were not staff physicians of the HMO nor its agents, but independent practitioners with separate economic interests). In finding that a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary are incapable of conspiring, [**26] the Southern District of New York noted that a "single corporation and its agents and employees are normally treated as a single actor for antitrust purposes except where the individuals or subentities are held out as competitors." Reborn Enter., Inc. v. Fine Child,

---

F.2d 1335 at 1372. Wood held that a basketball player's claim that certain practices of the NBA teams were a per se violation of § 1 was preempted by the collective bargaining provisions of labor law. Wood, 809 F.2d at 958-62 (challenging salary cap, college draft and prohibition of player corporations arrived at through collective bargaining.) Smith ruled that the labor laws do not preempt a challenge to the NFL draft under the antitrust laws. Smith, 593 F.2d at 1179 n.22. Mackey ruled that a challenge to an NFL league rule regarding compensation of free agent's former club by new owners was not preempted by the labor laws because it was not the product of bona fide arm's length bargaining. Mackey, 543 F.2d at 615. It appears that all that the Wood court intended to criticize were the portions of the Smith and Mackey decisions which ruled that there was no preemption.

<sup>10</sup> This discussion was not essential to the holding in Fuchs. Relying upon the insufficiency of evidence of a conspiracy, the Fuchs Court found that a Sugar refiner and its general (non-exclusive) brokers were not guilty of a § 1 conspiracy in restraint of trade because in eliminating the general dealers (in favor of exclusive dealers), the refiner had acted unilaterally. 602 F.2d 1025 at 1031.

Inc., 590 F. Supp. 1423, 1437 (S.D.N.Y. 1984) (emphasis added), citing R. GIVENS, ANTITRUST: AN ECONOMIC APPROACH § 16.03, at 16-11 (1984).

Bogan's relationship with Hodgkins and NML has some similarities to that of the franchised newspapers dealers in Bowen. Bogan's District Agency contract itself recites that he "shall be an independent contractor and nothing herein shall be construed to make District Agent an employee of the Company or General Agent." See Hdgk. Exh. A. The contract goes on to state the "District Agent shall be free to exercise his own judgment as to the persons from whom he will solicit Applications and the time, place and manner of solicitation, but the Company from time to time may adopt regulations respecting the conduct of the business covered hereby, not interfering with such freedom of action of District Agent." Id. While all Agents selected by a District Agent must be [**27] approved by NML, the District Agent is responsible for all "expenses, costs causes of action and damages resulting from or growing out of acts or transactions by himself, his employees his agents or persons appointed by him." Id. Thus, according to the terms of the contract at least, while he does not have absolute control over hiring and firing, a District Agent certainly bears more than a "relatively slight" risk. Id.<sup>11</sup> If a District [*542] Agent's position in the Company has aspects that are independent from NML's control, certainly his General Agent would enjoy at least as great a degree of independence, since a District Agent works under the supervision of his General Agent.

[**28] Bogan argues that General Agents cannot be considered a part of a single entity because they compete against each other to sell policies and for the services of the best subordinate agents in order to maximize their personal wealth. We agree for several reasons. First, although it appears that, like the sales agents in Fuchs, the General Agents of NML do not exercise discretion concerning the prices and terms of the policies their subordinate agents sell because NML establishes standard policy coverage and rate structures, Bogan argues that General Agents can compete for the sale of policies by permitting their District and Soliciting Agents to vary the level of service to and advocacy for the client. As he describes it, an Agent who puts the client first can offer not only superior services but a superior product. For example, the Agent can "do his best to obtain a non-rated policy or present[] the best policy alternative to the client so that the interests of the client and not the carrier are best served." Bog. Br. p. 27. One example of such a policy alternative offered by Bogan is an Agent's decision to recommend a particular combination of "whole life" versus "term life" [**29] coverage. According to Jeffrey Grabel's testimony, whole life policies generally offer greater compensation to Agents. An agent who "puts the client first" might recommend a greater percentage of term-life coverage, even though such a recommendation is contrary to the Agent's -- and his superiors' -- pecuniary interests. Grabel Aff. PP 9-15. In view of the important role agents play in the structuring and servicing of policies, we find that the General Agencies constitute a "separate step" in the vertical distribution of NML's product.

Second, although the commissions paid to Agents are fixed by NML, General Agents allegedly compete for District and Soliciting Agents by varying the amount of training the agents receive, as well as the percentage of rent, supplies and secretarial services for which they are reimbursed. R. Bogan Aff. P 8.

We therefore conclude that the General Agents exercise sufficient independent control over their agencies, have adverse interests and compete among themselves to a sufficient degree to render them legally capable of conspiring against each other.<sup>12</sup>

<sup>11</sup> It is not clear, however, that the contract should be taken at face value. Both parties, at various times, urge that the contract is not representative of the actual relationship between the parties. Although Bogan strenuously urges that the General Agents are not one entity with NML, at another point he contends that "NML has treated all agents as agents of NML and it regularly controls their conduct by various means, up to and including directing or threatening their termination." (Pl. Br. p. 3, Bog. Aff. PP 24-34). Hodgkins, likewise, while insisting that NML and its various agents should be treated as one entity, allegedly has "repeatedly stated" that NML does not control the agents and that they are free to run their own businesses. Tamscin Aff. P 16; S. Bog. Aff. P 16.

<sup>12</sup> Hodgkins urges that this court should follow the Tenth Circuit's lead in Card v. Nat'l Life, 603 F.2d 828 (10th Cir. 1979), affirming a summary judgment for an insurer accused of conspiring with its General Agents to establish and enforce an exclusive agency agreement. There, the General Agents of National Life formed a corporation known as the General Agents Association, which was owned, controlled and financed by National Life General Agents. The General Agents met with officers of National

[**30] [*543] D. The Applicable Antitrust Analysis

Hodgkins further argues that even if the Metropolitan Policy was an agreement among the General Agents to restrict transfer of subordinate agents, it was not illegal because, in order to establish a violation of the antitrust laws, Bogan must show anticompetitive effect on the (consumer) market under the rule of reason. Bogan counters that the alleged conspiracy should be considered the type of group boycott that is per se illegal, or in the alternative should be analyzed under the "quick look" rule of reason. In resolving these issues we must first determine the proper characterization of the Metropolitan Policy under the Sherman Act, and correspondingly, the proper legal standard to apply to this conduct.

HN9 [↑] Although § 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits any contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, 15 U.S.C.A. § 1, it has long been established that § 1 proscribes only unreasonable restraints. K.M.B. Warehouse Distrib. v. Walker Mfg., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7253, 1994 WL 250115 (S.D.N.Y.), aff'd, 61 F.3d 123 (2d Cir. 1995), (citing Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 55 L. Ed. 619, 31 S. Ct. 502 [**31] (1911)). The Supreme Court has stated, that "since the early years of this century a judicial gloss on this statutory language has established the 'rule of reason' as the prevailing standard of analysis." Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977). Certain business practices are deemed illegal per se, however, "because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue." Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). These practices and agreements are "conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use." Id. Some examples of per se illegal arrangements are certain boycotts, horizontal territorial restrictions, and both horizontal and vertical price-fixing schemes. See Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 537-538; U.S. v. Topco, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972); Klor's Inc. v. Broadway Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 211-12, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959); K.M.B. Warehouse, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7253, 1994 WL 250115 at *3.

It is difficult [**32] to determine the exact nature of the conspiracy alleged by Bogan and the appropriate label to give it for the purposes of legal analysis, in particular to determine whether such an agreement would constitute a vertical or horizontal restriction on trade. Bogan would have us conclude that it is a horizontal agreement (among the General Agents) to allocate the market for the services of NML agents enforced by a group boycott that is illegal per se. As the Second Circuit has noted, the definition of a group boycott that is per se illegal is rather elusive and the cases discussing the issue are "fraught with uncertainty and doubt." US Football League v. Nat'l Football League, 842 F.2d 1335, 1372 (2d Cir. 1988), (comparing Klor's, 359 U.S. 207, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 ("group boycotts, or concerted refusals by traders to deal with other traders, have long been held to be in the forbidden [per se] category."), with Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 30-31, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984) ("exclusion of physician from hospital staff privileges not violation of antitrust laws 'without a showing of actual adverse effect on competition' in product market"), [**33] and Northwest Wholesale Stationers,

---

Life and consulted with them on all major policy decisions. Id. at 830. (According to Tamschin, the General Agents of NML also had an "independent" organization, with its own officers and management, to "handle matters of interest to their members and represent their members' interests in matters pertaining to their relationship with NML." Tamschin Aff. (Scott Bogan) P 8.)

The Tenth Circuit found this Association, as well as individual general agents to be "really part of the National Life Structure" and thus incapable of being regarded as conspirators. Id. at 834. See also Pa. Indep. Bus. Assoc. v. Unicorn Mktg., 1985 WL 2812 at *3-4 (If a corporation and its independent and separately incorporated subsidiary cannot form an antitrust conspiracy because the required 'different interests' do not exist, then it is highly unlikely that a corporation can conspire with its agents . . . An agent's interests ultimately coincide with those of the corporation and do not constitute the different interest required for concerted action under the antitrust laws.")

However, in addition to having very little solid information as to what the role of the NML General Agents' association was in the formation of NML company policy, we do not believe the exclusive agency agreement at issue in Card to be analogous to the no-transfer agreement at issue here. In Card, all General Agents had the same interest in disallowing the writing of outside business by their subordinate agents -- the loss of prospective commissions. Here, the General Agents have competing interests in recruiting the most productive agents from other General Agencies. Therefore, we do not find Card compelling.

Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 296, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1985) ("group boycott was not per se illegal absent proof that buying cooperative possessed market power.")).

While the case law is difficult to parse, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia has provided some helpful instruction on the matter. It stated that: "HN10<sup>13</sup>] The classic 'group boycott' is a concerted attempt by a group of competitors at one level to protect themselves from competition from non-group members who seek to compete at that level. . . . [*544] It is this purpose to exclude competition that has characterized the Supreme Court's decisions invoking the group boycott per se rule." Smith v. Pro Football<sup>13</sup>, 193 U.S. App. D.C. 19, 593 F.2d 1173 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (bold emphasis added), cited in Topps Chewing Gum v. Major League Baseball Players, 641 F. Supp. 1179, 1186-87 (S.D.N.Y. 1986). Like other types of conduct found illegal per se, these classic group boycotts "involve a type of arrangement that is so clearly and consistently anticompetitive that it is inherently illegal." Topps, 641 F. Supp. at 1187-88. [**34]

This definition does not seem to fit squarely the situation in this case. Though the General Agents occupy the same level in the market and we have assumed that they have sufficient independence to conspire and that they do compete to a certain extent, see section II(C), supra, it seems illogical for Bogan to claim that the General Agents have conspired to exclude themselves from a most attractive part of the market for labor. Bogan has not alleged that a subset of General Agents are excluding others, or that they are excluding non-NML agents. The Metropolitan Agreement purportedly prevents other General Agents from recontracting with an agent terminated for cause, thus excluding not only subordinate agents, but the General Agents themselves from the excluded [**35] agent's continued commissions. In this scenario, there is no classic outsider at the same level being excluded unless the General Agents are excluding themselves -- Bogan does not occupy the same level as the General Agents. Thus, Bogan's claim, if styled as a group boycott, approaches the type of implausible assertion frowned upon in Apex Oil, supra.<sup>14</sup>

[**36] In addition, NML does not appear to possess the requisite market power required by the Supreme Court in Northwest Wholesale Stationers, supra, before a boycott will be found per se illegal. According to Hodgkins, NML "holds only 4% of the relevant insurance market." Hdgk. Br. p. 30. Nowhere does Bogan challenge this assertion or suggest that NML has market power in the insurance market.

Furthermore, although Bogan has alleged that only the General Agents were involved in any conspiracy to restrict transfer, the evidence presented to this Court makes it apparent, however, that NML played an indispensable (if not unilateral) role in enforcing the Metropolitan Agreement. Bogan himself testifies "In the Metropolitan New York Area, <sup>13</sup> Recall from fn.9 that this case and Mackey v. Nat'l Football League, 543 F.2d 606 (8th Cir.), cert. dism'd, 434 U.S. 801, 98 S. Ct. 28, 54 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1977), were criticized by the Second Circuit, likely on the issue of labor law preemption of the antitrust laws.

<sup>14</sup> In making this statement, we do not mean to suggest that we are convinced that Hodgkins' proffered justification for firing Bogan was not pretextual and that the Metropolitan Policy did not provide some assistance to Hodgkins in his efforts to end Bogan's relationship with NML. Although Hodgkins offered considerable evidence that some of Bogan's subordinates considered him a difficult and "dictatorial" supervisor, the facts as Bogan presents them paint a picture that he was highly successful and that he was drummed out by Hodgkins, who conditioned his further employment on his allowing his Soliciting Agents to break their exclusive agency contracts with NML. Bogan suggests this was a mere pretext for taking over his agency. Hodgkins counters that he fired Hodgkins for legitimate reasons -- causing unrest in the office and refusing to turn over Slocum and Wintrich's records -- and that the absence of a conspiracy is shown by the fact that another General Agent did agree to contract with Bogan. Hodgkins adds that it was NML (not Hodgkins) that disapproved of the Bogan's proposed contract with another General Agent, that NML was perfectly justified in doing so, and that Bogan's failure to sue NML itself for antitrust violations is instructive. While these facts provide evidence that there was no such conspiracy, they do not establish that conclusion as a matter of law. A reasonable jury might find that through the Metropolitan Policy, Hodgkins and NML used coercion aimed at getting Bogan to "go along" with Hodgkins' alleged policy of "don't ask, don't tell" with respect to the Soliciting Agents' violations of their exclusive agency contracts, that Bogan was not justly fired for cause, and that the Metropolitan Policy that facilitated his permanent termination could be considered a "boycott." All this being said, we still cannot conclude that the challenged pattern of behavior constitutes the type of boycott that is illegal per se.

the General Agents and Northwestern Mutual have entered into a separate agreement strictly limiting the ability of any soliciting agent to transfer from one General Agency to another." Bog. Aff. in Opp. to Hdgk. Motion for Order to Surrender Documents P 4, NML Exh. 22.

[*545] It certainly appears that NML enforced any such General Agent agreement. For example, prominent NML officers sided with Hodgkins in his dispute with Bogan. See e.g., tape of 6/1/90 [**37] conversation between NML Vice President Dennis Tamscin and Robert Bogan, Hdgk. Exh. J., ("You must give Brud [Hodgkins] access to any records in the District Agency . . ."). Tamscin, however, asserts that NML by no means encouraged or even tolerated violations of the exclusive agency agreements, and did not encourage Hodgkins to send Bogan the 30-day notice, but merely "agreed with Hodgkins that Bogan's continued refusal to turn over the agents' records justified his termination for cause and NML tried as best it could to persuade Bogan to release the records to avoid termination for cause." Tamscin Reply Aff. P 19.

In addition, the parties do not dispute that Bogan had actually signed a preliminary Special Agent's contract with another General Agent (Gerald Gilberg) and that it was NML that disapproved the contract after Bogan was terminated for cause. See Hdgk. Exh. N, G. Gilbert Depo. p. 114. There is no evidence that any other General Agents were involved in this particular decision, other than their alleged agreement to the Metropolitan Policy concerning such matters. These facts cut against Bogan's argument that the General Agents were part of an organized conspiracy [**38] to restrict transfer, but cannot defeat the assertion as a matter of law. It certainly appears likely that at least in this instance, without the enforcement arm of NML, any such conspiracy among the General Agents would have failed.

Tamscin also avers that it was NML itself who wanted the policy in the first place. Tamscin Aff. P 37 ("NML has traditionally encouraged its General Agents to try to reach agreement as to the circumstances under which they would approve transfers within their territories. NML not only encouraged such agreements, but typically drafted the agreements and met with the General Agents involved in order to help resolve any differences among them in order to reach an agreement that would be acceptable to them and NML"). A 1989 letter from Kent Beebe to Hodgkins states that:

. . . the Company has developed its policies regarding transfers and recontracting in order to foster orderly development of all general agency territories, especially those in major metropolitan areas. As you know, the Company as a general rule does not allow transfers between metropolitan agencies. Prohibiting transfers protects each general agent's investment of time, energy and [**39] money in the recruitment, financial support and development of agents . . .

G. Gilberg Exh. A.

Tamscin states that the General Agents never agreed to the policy (NML's efforts were "singularly unsuccessful"), and that Mr. Beebe of NML then sent out a copy of the document Bogan calls the Metropolitan Policy as part of a memorandum sent to all General Agents. Tamscin Aff. P 38; G. Gilbert Depo p. 334; see also Hdgk. reply Aff. P 4. The memo reads, in part:

While it is pretty obvious that we will not all agree on each and every subject, the opportunity to constructively share concerns, values and ideas is always valuable.

Since our meeting we have been conferring with the Law Department about the transfer rules we discussed. They have advised us of the state of the law on a number of issues implicit in our efforts to legitimately control transfers in the best interests of the Company and its general agents. We are convinced that the most effective control is a Company policy which addresses your concerns without placing unfair or unreasonable restraints on agents or former agents.

Therefore, the principles which we discussed have been revised with the help of counsel [**40] and are set forth in the attached Company Policy on New York Metropolitan Transfers . . .

I want to stress once again the ultimate objective which is the development of such strong metropolitan relationships that you are able to handle your situations and difficulties without Home Office intervention. We continue to believe that the existence [*546] of excellent relationships among our General Agents sharing the

New York Territory is the paramount issue, because with good relationships and a desire to "do the right thing" most disputes will disappear.

G. Gilberg Depo. Exh. B, S. Gilbert Depo. Exh. A.

At minimum, these facts suggest strong vertical aspects to the alleged combination or conspiracy.<sup>15</sup> Bogan's decision not to assert an antitrust claim against NML does not change this reality. Thus, Bogan's characterization of the Metropolitan Policy as the type of per se illegal boycott quintessentially entered into by horizontal competitors to exclude outsiders is highly dubious.

[**41] Nor does this case involve a horizontal conspiracy affecting prices. The Supreme Court has found franchised auto dealers liable under the per se rule for conspiring with their franchisor to restrict price competition. See United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 (1966). In General Motors, a number of exclusive dealers, each of whom GM had franchised to sell its cars in a different Los Angeles location, began reselling GM cars to discount houses that then resold to consumers. Other franchise dealers complained to GM, who reacted by obtaining an agreement from each not to resell to discounters. Three associations of franchise dealers jointly policed the agreements by supplying information to GM who met with the dealers to discourage the practice and to request that the cars sold to discount houses be repurchased. Id. at 129-38.

In defense of its practices, GM argued that the resales violated the "location clause" in its franchise agreements. The Supreme Court did not question the legality of such agreements, or that GM itself might have taken unilateral action to enforce them. However, it stated:

We have a classic [**42] combination in restraint of trade: joint, collaborative action by dealers, the . . . associations, and General Motors to eliminate a class of competitors by terminating dealings between them and a minority of Chevrolet dealers and to deprive franchised dealers of their freedom to deal through discounters if they so choose. Against this fact of unlawful combination, the "location clause" is of no avail. Whatever General Motors might or might not have done to enforce individual dealer Agreements by action within the borders of those agreements and the relationship which each defines, is beside the point.

Id. at 140. The Court was careful to point out, however, that "inherent in the success of the combination in this case was a substantial restraint upon price competition -- a goal unlawful per se when sought to be effected by combination or conspiracy. Id. at 147 (emphasis added).

Bogan argues that the Metropolitan Agreement significantly affects price competition. We disagree. The "price" that Bogan asserts is affected by the Metropolitan Agreement's limitation on transfer is the total compensation provided to NML District, Sales and Soliciting Agents. While [**43] Bogan concedes that an NML Agent's commissions are fixed regardless of who his supervising agents are, he asserts that General Agents have significant discretion in the amount they reimburse their subordinate agents for rent, secretarial services, and supplies and that this discretion would create "wage" competition if the subordinate agents were permitted to transfer between general agencies. Bog. Aff. P 8; see section II(C), supra. While this may well be the case, it does not help Bogan here because, as discussed below, his definition of the relevant market as consisting only of the services of NML agents is unacceptable. The market is properly considered the entire industry (or at least the New York Metropolitan area), and thus any restriction on wage competition in NML's small share of the industry does not seriously affect such

---

<sup>15</sup> There are countless cases discussing whether to denominate similar agreements as vertical or horizontal conspiracies. Many find such arrangements to be vertical. See, e.g., Blanton Enter., Inc. v. Burger King Corp., 680 F. Supp. 753, 765 (D.S.C. 1988) (refusal by Burger King of franchise to plaintiff was vertical restraint, despite complaints of franchisees). We believe, however, that the best characterization of the Metropolitan Agreement is that it was both vertical and horizontal in nature.

[*547] competition in the industry as a whole.<sup>16</sup> Thus, the Metropolitan Policy cannot be considered a restriction on price competition that would fall under the per se analysis.

[**44] In a situation the Second Circuit found to be "remarkably similar" to that condemned in General Motors, the court found a newspaper publisher guilty of formulating a § 1 conspiracy with its exclusive franchised dealers to establish exclusive territories. Bowen v. New York News, 522 F.2d 1242, 1256-58 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 936, 48 L. Ed. 2d 177, 96 S. Ct. 1667 (1976). The obvious effect of the agreement was to prevent competition in the sale of newspapers to independent resale dealers. Id. The territorial restriction was apparently held illegal per se, since the Second Circuit did not discuss whether it was performing a per se or rule of reason analysis, but simply held the conspiracy illegal, without express consideration of market power or effects on competition. Id. Here, however, the alleged conspiracy (the Metropolitan Policy) does not involve the establishment of exclusive territories -- in fact, Bogan complains about a restriction against his transfer within a territory shared by six General Agents. Bog. 3(g) stmt. P 34.

In light of the fact that the Metropolitan Policy cannot be considered either a classic group boycott, a horizontal [**45] price-fixing scheme or a horizontal territorial allocation that is illegal per se, we turn to an analysis of cases involving similar facts -- those involving arrangements that are both horizontal and vertical in nature -- in order to determine whether an agreement among General Agents that is policed by their principal, such as the Metropolitan Policy, constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws.

Many courts have held that sports organizations (outside of baseball) are capable of conspiring with their member clubs in violation of the antitrust laws and have analyzed these conspiracies under the rule of reason. See, e.g., Mackey v. NFL,<sup>17</sup> 543 F.2d 606, 618-19 (8th Cir.), cert. dism'd, 434 U.S. 801, 98 S. Ct. 28, 54 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1977). In Mackey, the Eighth Circuit held that a NFL rule that required a club acquiring a free agent to compensate the agent's previous club constituted a group boycott properly analyzed under the rule of reason because of the special circumstance that the NFL possessed some characteristics of a joint venture and some characteristics of competition. See also Chicago Prof'l Sports Lim. Partnership v. N.B.A., 961 F.2d 667, 673 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 954, [*46] 121 L. Ed. 2d 334, 113 S. Ct. 409 (1992) (Rule of reason properly applied to NBA rule limiting television broadcasts since NBA is a joint venture); Brenner v. World Boxing Council<sup>18</sup>, 675 F.2d 445, 454-55 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 835, 74 L. Ed. 2d 76, 103 S. Ct. 79 (1982) (declining to apply per se rule to World Boxing Council suspension practices).

The Second Circuit has found that an agreement by independent magazine solicitors to prevent its agents from switching [**47] agencies was an agreement "ostensibly directed at 'housecleaning' within the ranks of the signatory organizations themselves" and that "because a harmful effect upon competition is not clearly apparent from the terms of these agreements," they were "distinguishable from those boycotts held illegal per se." Union Circulation Co. v. Fed. Ins. Comm'n, 241 F.2d 652, 657 (2d Cir. 1957).

More recently, in K.M.B. Warehouse v. Walker Mfg., 61 F.3d 123, 127 (2d Cir. 1995), the Second Circuit found a conspiracy between [*548] an auto parts manufacturer and some of its distributors to exclude an outside auto-parts distributor to be a vertical, non-price restriction governed by the rule of reason. The manufacturer, at the behest of some of its distributors, refused to honor a contract it had made with K.M.B. to allow K.M.B. to distribute its products. Id. at 126; see also Bunch v. Artec Intern. Corp., 559 F. Supp. 961, 966 (S.D.N.Y. 1983) ("Merely because a dealer's termination may contain elements of a horizontal restriction, it does not become a per se violation of the Sherman Act, thereby obviating the requirements that plaintiff establish that defendants' conduct is manifestly [**48] anticompetitive.").

<sup>16</sup> Bogan argues that even if agent services are not considered a market, the Sherman Act protects the benefits of competition in "vital matters such as claim policy and quality of service." Bog. Br. p. 27 (citations omitted). While he is certainly correct about the law, he is still incorrect in defining the proper market -- it is not simply NML claim policies and the quality of service available to NML customers that is protected, but policies and level of service in the entire industry, or at least the New York Metropolitan area.

<sup>17</sup> Recall from fn.9 that this case has been criticized by the Second Circuit, likely on the issue of labor law preemption of the antitrust laws.

<sup>18</sup> The Court noted that "absent a facial showing of anticompetitive purpose underlying the adopting or enforcement of a rule, the disciplinary activity of a sports organization must be evaluated under the Denver Rockets test or the rule of reason." 675 F.2d 445 at 455 (referring to Denver Rockets v. All-Pro Management Inc., 325 F. Supp. 1049, 1064-65 (C.D. Cal 1971)).

The Second Circuit has also recently stated that HN11[] an arrangement that had both horizontal and vertical aspects definitely should be tested under the rule of reason and "possibly under the per se rule applied to group boycotts in Klor's, if the restraint of trade 'has no purpose except stifling competition.'" Discon, Inc. v. Nynex, 93 F.3d 1055, 1060-61 (2d Cir. 1996). There, plaintiff Discon accused NYNEX and MECO, (a corporation that acted as NYNEX's procurement agent), of conspiring to exclude Discon from providing "removal" services. (These removal services included salvaging and disposing of obsolete telephone central office equipment.) The court found that plaintiffs had not established a horizontal restraint because MECO did not itself provide removal services and thus did not compete with Discon or NYNEX. Id. However, the Second Circuit stated that an agreement between two firms, even in a vertical relationship may constitute a horizontal restraint if it seeks to "disadvantage a direct competitor." It found that in Discon's case, no pro-competitive justification appeared on the face of the complaint for NYNEX's behavior in excluding Discon [**49] and thus concluded that a cause of action had been stated, leaving the decision as to whether to apply the rule of reason or a per se analysis to the district court at trial. Id. ("Per se rule to be applied only if evidence shows that the practice had 'no purpose other than to stifle competition.'"; see also Volvo N. Amer. v. Men's Int'l Prof. Tennis Council, 857 F.2d 55, 72-73 (2d Cir. 1988) (Whether conduct alleged to be possibly horizontal market division, group boycott or concerted refusal to deal is to be analyzed under rule of reason or per se test is "matter for the district court to decide in due course.")).

The transfer restrictions of the Metropolitan Policy at issue here may well have been promulgated with mixed motives, one of which was a desire on the part of the General Agents to preserve the status quo at NML, thereby stabilizing the amount of compensation each General Agent expected to receive. However, at the inter-company level, the Policy appears to have the substantial procompetitive justification of encouraging General Agents to better train their subordinate agents.<sup>19</sup> This enables each General Agent to compete more effectively for clients [**50] with other NML General Agents and with the agents of other companies. (see section II(C), supra). It also enables them to better compete with other General Agents for the hiring of new subordinate agents, who have an obvious interest in receiving the best training possible. Thus, it is not the type of practice that has "no purpose except stifling competition."<sup>20</sup> Discon, 93 F.3d at 1061-61; see also Northern P.R. Co., 356 U.S. at 5 (In order to be illegal per se, a practice must be "so pernicious" as to "lack . . . any redeeming value."). Therefore, regardless of the precise label given to the conduct, (boycott, a horizontal price-restraint with vertical aspects, vertical non-price restraint with horizontal aspects and price effects, etc.), we believe a careful comparison of the facts of this case and of the precedents in the Second Circuit shows that it is properly analyzed under the rule of reason. Accordingly, consistent with the sports cases, K.M.B. Warehouse, and the Second Circuit's [*549] prescription that "expansion of the per se rule 'should be approached with great caution,'" Copy-Data Sys., Inc. v. Toshiba Am., 663 F.2d 405, 411 (2d Cir. 1982), [**51] we next analyze the effects of the Metropolitan Policy under the rule of reason.

E. Rule of Reason Analysis of the Competitive Effects

According to the Second Circuit:

HN12[] Establishing a violation of the rule of reason involves three steps. "Plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market . . . ." If the plaintiff succeeds, the burden shifts to the defendant to establish the "procompetitive

---

<sup>19</sup> Bogan himself testifies in detail as to the importance and expense of training agents. See, e.g., R. Bog. Aff. P 16, P 55 ("The recruiting, training and performance of Sales Agents determines 100 percent of management revenue.").

<sup>20</sup> This is a further reason that the Metropolitan policy cannot be considered a "group boycott." Topps Chewing Gum, supra, 641 F. Supp. at 1186, suggests that such group boycotts must have a "pernicious effect on competition and lack any redeeming virtue."

'redeeming [**52] virtues" of the action. Should the defendant carry this burden, the plaintiff must then show that the same procompetitive effect could be achieved through alternative means that is less restrictive of competition.

K.M.B. Warehouse, 61 F.3d at 127 (citations omitted); Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 543; Int'l Distrib. Centers v. Walsh Trucking, 812 F.2d 786, 793 (2d Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 482 U.S. 915, 96 L. Ed. 2d 676, 107 S. Ct. 3188, (plaintiff must show anticompetitive effects of the conspiracy outweigh the procompetitive.)<sup>21</sup>

[**53] 1. The Test for Proving Adverse Effect

"HN13[] The antitrust laws . . . were enacted for 'the protection of competition not competitors.'" Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977). Thus, a plaintiff must show more than that he was harmed by defendant's conduct or that there was an adverse effect on competition among different sellers of the same product. K.M.B. Warehouse, 61 F.3d at 127. Such intrabrand restrictions can "actually enhance market-wide competition by fostering vertical efficiency and maintaining the desired quality of a product." Id. The focus of the inquiry must be the relevant market as a whole, and any restriction of intrabrand competition must be balanced against any increases in interbrand competition. Id.; see also Borger v. Yamaha Intern. Corp., 625 F.2d 390, 397 (2d Cir. 1980).

While Bogan has shown considerable personal harm from Hodgkins' and NML's conduct, he has not shown sufficient harm in the relevant market -- labor of insurance agents in the metropolitan area.<sup>22</sup> Bogan would apparently have us believe the relevant market is his services, or that of only NML agents. As [**54] K.M.B. illustrates, this is not the proper market for antitrust purposes.<sup>23</sup> [**56] See also Balaklaw v. Lovell, 14 F.3d 793, 798-99 [<sup>1</sup>*550] (2d Cir. 1998) (No antitrust injury where anesthesiologist complained about exclusion from hospital holding exclusive contract with another association of doctors -- plaintiff had failed to show injury either to consumers (patients) or sellers (doctors) in the relevant markets. The relevant market for the doctors was the multi-state area in which the hospital recruited doctors.).<sup>24</sup> While Bogan has offered several affidavits of customers and

---

<sup>21</sup> Bogan would have us apply the "Quick Look" approach to the rule of reason, arguing that "Because these are restraints by horizontal competitors, as Hodgkins admits, the 'Quick Look' approach requires Hodgkins to justify the restraint by proving that procompetitive effects outweigh anticompetitive effects and are the least restrictive available." Hdgk. Br. p. 34. To justify the application of the "Quick Look" approach, he quotes the Seventh Circuit in Chicago Pro Sports, infra, as stating that such an approach applies because "there was a 'naked restraint' of a horizontal nature because it was an agreement among competitors as to certain issues concerning how they would compete with each other." This quotation "cherry picks" a phrase from its context -- the "naked restraint" must be one on "price or output". See, e.g., Chicago Pro Sports, 961 F.2d at 674. As discussed above, the conspiracy alleged here does not constitute a price restriction in the relevant market -- that of the labor of agents industry-wide, or at least metropolitan-area-wide. Nor does it affect output. Bogan does not allege that it affects the number of policies sold or agents hired. The Metropolitan Policy merely prevents transfers of agents between NML General Agencies.

<sup>22</sup> Even though Bogan has since recontracted with Massachusetts Mutual and still apparently uses the same offices, he alleges that he lost a significant client base that did not transfer with him to Massachusetts Mutual as well as generous retirement benefits. See Bog. Aff. PP 12-13. We find these assertions credible, and thus sufficient to establish personal harm from his termination, although his subsequent contract with Massachusetts Mutual provides evidence that interbrand competition was increased by his termination.

<sup>23</sup> Even if NML agents were the proper market (which we do not believe), there is no evidence before this court that anyone other than Robert (and perhaps Scott) Bogan was prohibited from transferring. In fact, Scott Bogan concedes in his deposition that Stephen Gilberg had stated in a June 11th meeting that the Metropolitan Policy "would not be an inhibition . . . [to recontracting]" and that "there have been transfers of agents previously between agencies; and that it wasn't an issue. Nobody would be encumbered." S. Bog. Depo. p. 455 (emphasis added).

agents stating that they prefer not to have either their own or their client's personal information provided to anyone besides Robert Bogan, (see, e.g., James Cantalini Aff., Michael Flora Aff., Lawrence Green Aff., Al Woodall Aff., Eric Wagoner Aff., Donald Zinn Aff.), the Second Circuit has found such "isolated statements of preference are not a sufficient 'empirical demonstration concerning the [adverse] effect of the [defendants'] arrangement on price or quality." K.M.B., 61 F.3d at 128. Thus, since Bogan has not demonstrated the requisite evidence of adverse effect in the relevant market, he has [\[\*\*55\]](#) failed the rule of reason test as a matter of law.<sup>25</sup>

[\[\*\*57\]](#) 2. The Tests for Procompetitive Effect and Plaintiff's Obligation to Prove Less Restrictive Means

Since we have held as a matter of law that Bogan has failed to satisfy the first prong of the rule of reason analysis, we need not reach the other elements. We note in passing, however, that Hodgkins has offered a procompetitive justification -- the encouragement of training -- that was supported by Bogan's own affidavits. See fn.19, supra. Moreover, Bogan has not offered a suggested any less restrictive means by which NML and the General Agents could insure that the District and Sales Agents receive adequate training.

III. THE STATE CLAIMS

As previously mentioned, this case presents a federal antitrust claim together with fifteen pendent state claims which Bogan urges us to retain under the doctrine of supplemental jurisdiction, 28 U.S.C. § 1367. HN15<sup>24</sup> The exercise of pendent (or supplemental) jurisdiction is left to the discretion of the district court. Purgess v. Sharrock, 33 F.3d 134, 138-139 \(2d Cir. 1994\). In exercising its discretion, the district court is permitted to weigh several factors, including considerations of judicial economy, convenience, and fairness [\[\*\*58\]](#) to litigants. Id. (state claims retained where federal claim was dismissed at the close of the evidence.)

First, we note that the pendent state claims are the subject of a pending action in Supreme Court, Westchester County. If we retain no part of this case and allow it to proceed in the state court, judicial economy and convenience of the parties would not be substantially disserved. True, this Court has spent considerable time familiarizing itself with the facts of the case, but we have done so mainly with an eye towards the federal claims at issue. We have not probed in depth the factual basis for the state claims [\[\*551\]](#) such as fraud and tortious interference with contract, and would be required to spend considerable time and effort to do so. Nor have we considered the lengthy submissions regarding Plaintiffs' claims against NML. Moreover, the state court is undoubtedly much more familiar with the state law principles applicable to all of these claims.

<sup>24</sup> Balaklaw was actually decided on the basis of standing; the Second Circuit found that since plaintiff had not shown injury to competition in the relevant market, he had not demonstrated antitrust injury and had no standing. Balaklaw, 14 F.3d at 798-800. The court noted:

HN14<sup>25</sup> For standing purposes, however, whether there was or was not a per se violation is irrelevant. Regardless of any substantive violation of the Sherman Act, sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act still require plaintiffs to establish that the defendants engaged in anticompetitive conduct that caused them an antitrust injury . . . Although the per se rule relieves plaintiff of the burden of demonstrating an anticompetitive effect, which is assumed, it does not excuse a plaintiff from showing that his injury was caused by the anticompetitive acts.

Id. (citations omitted.) Since we decide that for the same reasons, Bogan has failed the rule of reason test, we need not reach the standing issue.

<sup>25</sup> Bogan strenuously urges that this situation is analogous to that of a professional sports player who is not allowed by the league to transfer between teams. While these cases have numerous similarities, the one fatal dissimilarity Bogan fails to perceive is that here, there are other insurance agencies for whom he could work. In fact, Bogan is apparently working for one now. Hdgk. Br. p. 7. When the NFL forbids a player to transfer without compensation of his prior team, see Mackey, supra, he is effectively prevented from playing elsewhere.

This Court, with the generous help of Magistrate Judge Fox, has expended significant resources to oversee the discovery process. This effort will not have been in vain should we dismiss the state claims, but will surely work to save [**59] the State Court and the parties considerable time and expense in their continued prosecution of this suit. The extensive discovery already undertaken should not have to be repeated. While Bogan urges us that he would be prejudiced by the 16-month delay in obtaining a trial date in state court, we do not consider this delay a significant factor. Our current trial calendar would not permit trial of the case for approximately ten months, even if the parties were ready for an immediate trial, which they are not. Moreover, there are pending motions by both defendants for summary judgment on all fifteen claims, another factor that could cause further substantial delay of the trial. Thus the time required to reach trial in the state court is not a significant factor in our decision whether to retain jurisdiction.

In light of the above factors, we decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the Bogans' state law claims.

CONCLUSION

Although we conclude that an agreement among an insurance company's General Agents to restrict the transfer of their subordinate agents does not constitute the business of insurance under the McCarran-Ferguson Act and that General Agents can conspire [**60] with each other, and thus that the conspiracy alleged by Bogan is not exempt from antitrust scrutiny, we conclude that the activity of Defendant Hodgkins alleged in the complaint does not constitute an antitrust violation. Because the alleged conspiracy appears to have at least some vertical aspects, to have occurred in a setting that requires at least some horizontal cooperation, and not to have involved naked price or output restraints, it is properly analyzed under the rule of reason. Since Bogan has failed to show sufficient adverse effect on the relevant market -- the labor of subordinate insurance agents in the New York Metropolitan area -- he has failed to satisfy the rule of reason test, and his antitrust claim fails as a matter of law. Finally, since neither judicial economy, convenience nor fairness to the litigants would be particularly served by our retaining supplemental jurisdiction over the fifteen state claims, we decline to do so. Thus, we grant defendants' motion for summary judgment on the antitrust claim, and dismiss the remaining fifteen state claims for resolution in the pending state court case.

SO ORDERED.

Date: February 5, 1997

White Plains, New [**61] York

William C. Conner

Senior United States District Judge

Gross v. New Balance Ath. Shoe

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

February 11, 1997, Decided ; February 13, 1997, FILED

96 Civ. 4921 (RWS) MDL -1154

Reporter

955 F. Supp. 242 *; 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1488 **; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,840

MARK GROSS and ELLEN M. SULLIVAN, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, - against - NEW BALANCE ATHLETIC SHOE, INC., Defendant.

Disposition: [**1] New Balance's motion to dismiss granted. Plaintiffs granted leave to refile within thirty (30) days of issuance of Opinion.

Core Terms

---

antitrust, retailers, conspiracy, conspiring, co-conspirators, prices, shoes, consumers, allegations, non-conspiring, athletic shoes, competitor, cases, antitrust violation, manufacturer, causal

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

In a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss, the factual allegations of the complaint are presumed to be true and all factual inferences must be drawn in the plaintiff's favor and against the defendants.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) imposes a substantial burden of proof upon the moving party. A court may not dismiss a complaint unless the movant demonstrates beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. In practice a complaint must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Colleges & Universities

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN3 Higher Education & Professional Associations, Colleges & Universities

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) mandates that a complaint contain a short and plain statement of the claim that demonstrates that the pleader is entitled to relief. The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not permit conclusory statements to substitute for minimally sufficient factual allegations. The burden on a plaintiff alleging federal antitrust violations is no greater than the burden faced by a plaintiff alleging any cause of action not covered by the specific pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN4 Pleadings, Rule Application & Interpretation

In a case of magnitude, a district court must retain the power to insist on some specificity in pleading before allowing a potentially massive factual controversy to proceed. The liberal system of notice pleading applies to all causes of action unless otherwise specified in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN6 Standing, Clayton Act

Clayton Act § 4 authorizes a private right of action for a person who is injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15. The scope of authority conferred by § 4 is limited by judicially crafted standing rules that purposefully narrow the class of individuals entitled to maintain a private damages claim under § 4.

955 F. Supp. 242, *242L<sup>A</sup> 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1488, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 Private Actions, Standing

There are five factors that are to be considered in determining whether a particular plaintiff has antitrust standing. These factors are: (1) the causal connection between an antitrust violation and the harm suffered by the plaintiff, and the intent of the defendants to cause that harm; (2) whether the plaintiff suffered antitrust injury; (3) the directness of the asserted injury to the plaintiff; (4) the existence of more direct victims of the antitrust violation; and (5) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN8 Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Consumer antitrust plaintiffs have even less ability to determine the identities of a manufacturers' co-conspirators than do most antitrust plaintiffs, who are generally economic competitors. Evidence of the specific identity of exhibitors, attendees, speakers and suppliers who allegedly have acted in concert with defendant, is largely in defendant's hands. Plaintiff should be allowed to conduct full discovery in order possibly to further substantiate such claims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN9 Regulated Practices, Private Actions

A plaintiff need not sue all conspirators; he may choose to sue but one. Even in a criminal antitrust case, the government need not name the conspirators not sued, nor state their number, in the indictment.

Counsel: APPEARANCES:

For Plaintiffs: BERNSTEIN LITOWITZ BERGER & GROSSMANN, New York, NY, By: JEFFREY A. KLAFTER, ESQ., SETH R. LESSER, ESQ., Of Counsel.

For Defendant: CURTIS, MALLET-PREVOST, COLT & MOSLE, New York, NY, By: TURNER P. SMITH, ESQ., Of Counsel.

Judges: ROBERT W. SWEET, U.S.D.J.

Opinion by: ROBERT W. SWEET

Opinion

---

[*243] OPINION

Sweet, D.J.,

Defendant New Balance Athletic Shoe, Inc. ("New Balance") has moved to dismiss Plaintiffs' antitrust class action lawsuit and certain pendent state law claims.

For the reasons set forth below, New Balance's motion will be granted.

Parties

Defendant New Balance is an athletic shoe manufacturer.

Plaintiffs Ellen M. Sullivan ("Sullivan") and Mark Gross ("Gross") are individuals residing in New York, New York.

Background

For purposes of the instant motion to dismiss, the allegations of the complaint are taken as true. The facts are presented below accordingly, and do not constitute factual findings.

On June 12, 1996, the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") announced that New Balance [**2] had agreed to settle charges that it had engaged in a vertical resale price maintenance scheme to fix the resale prices of its shoes in violation of antitrust laws. The settlement was the result of coordinated investigations by the FTC and the Attorneys General of New York and the other forty-nine states of pricing policies in the athletic shoe industry. Pursuant to the settlement, New Balance, which had a 2% share of the market, signed a Consent Order with the FTC.<sup>1</sup>

On June 27, 1996, Plaintiffs filed the [**3] instant action, relying extensively on the allegations used by the FTC in the Consent Order. The Complaint alleges two causes of action: one under Sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. §§ 15, 26) alleging violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and the other under Section 349\(h\) of New York's Consumer Protection from Deceptive Acts and Practices Act (Article 22-A, General Business Law § 349\(h\)).

The named Plaintiffs allege that between 1991 and 1996, New Balance, a large athletic footwear manufacturer, engaged in a systemic and nationwide scheme to coerce retail shoe dealers to enter into express or tacit agreements to fix or maintain the prices of New Balance footwear. To obtain agreement from recalcitrant retailers to adhere to its price maintenance scheme, New Balance allegedly engaged in surveillance of retail prices, threats to terminate or suspend shipments to discounting retailers, and demands that retailers raise their prices. The result of New Balance's scheme was that price competition among retailers of New Balance shoes was restricted and the prices of New Balance shoes were inflated to the detriment of consumers, such as the present Plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs [**4] allege they "purchased New Balance footwear and suffered economic injury" as a result of New Balance's alleged wrongful conduct. Plaintiffs purportedly have brought the action "on their own behalf and on behalf of all members of a class ... consisting of all persons situated in the United States who purchased New Balance footwear through retail shoe sellers" over a four-year period. As a result of the conspiracy, Plaintiffs allege that they "and the other Class members paid [*244] more for such shoes" than they otherwise would have paid.

The instant motion to dismiss was filed on September 10, 1996. Oral argument was heard on December 4, 1996, at which time the motion was considered fully submitted.

On February 6, 1997, the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation granted New Balance's motion to transfer to this district all pending actions in this multidistrict litigation, MDL-1154, In re New Balance Athletic Shoe, Inc., Antitrust Litigation, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. section 1407.

Discussion

---

<sup>1</sup> As a further result of the investigation, two additional athletic shoe manufacturers signed consent orders with the FTC and settled "companion" parens patrie suits filed in this Court by the fifty states and the District of Columbia. See State of New York ex rel Vacco v. Reebok International Ltd., 903 F. Supp. 532 (S.D.N.Y. 1995); State of New York ex rel Koppell v. The Keds Corporation, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3362, 1994 WL 97201 (S.D.N.Y. 1994). New Balance was not sued in the parens patrie acts.

I. Standards for Reviewing a 12(b)(6) Motion

HN1 [↑] On a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss, the factual allegations of the complaint are presumed to be true and all factual inferences [**5] must be drawn in the plaintiff's favor and against the defendants. See Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 1686, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 \(1974\); Cosmas v. Hassett, 886 F.2d 8, 11 \(2d Cir. 1989\); Dwyer v. Regan, 777 F.2d 825, 828-29 \(2d Cir. 1985\). Accordingly, the factual allegations considered here are presumed to be true only for the purpose of deciding the present motions.

HN2 [↑] Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) imposes a substantial burden of proof upon the moving party. A court may not dismiss a complaint unless the movant demonstrates "beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 101-102, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 \(1957\). Accord Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 2232-33, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 \(1984\) (quoted in H.J., Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Tel. Co., 492 U.S. 229, 250-51, 109 S. Ct. 2893, 2906, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195 \(1989\)).

"In practice 'a complaint ... must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory.'" Fort Wayne Telsat [**6] v. Entertainment & Sports Prog. Network, 753 F. Supp. 109, 111 \(S.D.N.Y. 1990\), quoting, Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1106 \(7th Cir. 1984\).

HN3 [↑] Rule 8\(a\)\(2\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure mandates that a complaint contain a "short and plain statement of the claim" that demonstrates "that the pleader is entitled to relief." The Federal Rules do "not permit conclusory statements to substitute for minimally sufficient factual allegations." Furlong v. Long Island College Hosp., 710 F.2d 922, 927 \(2d Cir. 1983\).

The burden on a plaintiff alleging federal antitrust violations is no greater than the burden faced by a plaintiff alleging any cause of action not covered by the specific pleading requirements of Rule 9 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. See George C. Frey Ready-Mixed Concrete, Inc. v. Pine Hill Concrete Mix Corp., Inc., 554 F.2d 551, 554 \(2d Cir. 1977\) ("It...[is] clear in this circuit ... that a short plain statement of a claim for relief which gives notice to the opposing party is all that is necessary in antitrust cases, as in other cases under the Federal Rules," citing Nagler v. Admiral Corp., 248 F.2d 319 [**7] \(2d Cir. 1957\)); Nagler, 248 F.2d at 322-23 ([it is]"quite clear that the federal rules contain no special exceptions for antitrust cases"); Barr v. Dramatists Guild, Inc., 573 F. Supp. 555, 558 \(S.D.N.Y. 1983\) (citing George C. Frey for the proposition that there are no special pleading standards for antitrust conspiracy); Newburger v. Gross, 365 F. Supp. 1364, 1367-68 \(S.D.N.Y. 1973\) (citing Nagler for the proposition that there are no special pleading requirements in antitrust litigation), modified on other grounds, 563 F.2d 1057 \(2d Cir. 1977\); Quality Foods de Centro America, S.A. v. Latin American Agribusiness Dev. Corp., 711 F.2d 989, 995 \(11th Cir. 1983\) ("It is now well accepted that notice pleading is all that is required for a valid antitrust complaint").

While the Supreme Court has noted in the context of large antitrust action that "HN4 [↑] certainly in a case of this magnitude, a district court must retain the power to insist on some specificity in pleading before allowing a potentially massive factual controversy to proceed[,]'" Associated Gen. Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 528 n.17, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 \(1983\), the [*245] Court recently affirmed that the liberal system of notice pleading applies to all causes of action unless otherwise specified in the Rules. Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence and Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 113 S. Ct. 1160, 1161, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517 \(1993\).

II. The Complaint Will Be Dismissed

Section One of the Sherman Act reads, in relevant part:

HN5 Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a felony.... .

15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1973\).

A. Plaintiffs Lack Standing to Bring This Action

Defendants contend that Plaintiffs lack standing to bring the instant antitrust action. HNC Section 4 of the Clayton Act authorizes a private right of action for a person who is "injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 15. The scope of authority conferred [**9] by § 4 is limited, however, by judicially crafted standing rules that purposefully narrow the class of individuals entitled to maintain a private damages claim under § 4. See, e.g., Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990).

The Supreme Court has HN7 articulated five factors that are to be considered in determining whether a particular plaintiff has "antitrust standing." See Associated Gen. Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters ("AGC"), 459 U.S. 519, 537 n.33, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983). These factors are:

- (1) the causal connection between an antitrust violation and the harm suffered by the plaintiff, and the intent of the defendants to cause that harm;
- (2) whether the plaintiff suffered antitrust injury;
- (3) the directness of the asserted injury to the plaintiff;
- (4) the existence of more direct victims of the antitrust violation; and
- (5) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

AGC at 537-44; see also Crimpers Promotions Inc. v. Home Box Office, Inc., 724 F.2d 290, [**10] 296-297 (2d Cir. 1983); Sullivan v. Tagliabue, 25 F.3d 43, 46 (1st Cir. 1994).

Plaintiffs here allege that "certain, "not all, of New Balance's retailers participated in the conspiracy. Defendants contend that because the Plaintiff class includes all purchasers of New Balance athletic shoes, and is not limited to those who purchased from the conspiring retailers, the complaint fails to allege any injury sufficiently direct to fall within the purview of § 4.

According to Defendants, in order to demonstrate standing, Plaintiffs must be able to allege that they purchased from a conspiring retailer and that New Balance therefore engaged in wrongful conduct with respect to them. Otherwise, the causal link between the putative antitrust violation and any injury sustained by Plaintiffs is too remote to be justiciable under § 4. See Reading Indus., Inc. v. Kennecott Copper Corp., 631 F.2d 10 (2d Cir. 1980) (antitrust standing tests are "ultimately tests of whether there is a legally sufficient causal relationship between the alleged violation and the alleged injury").

Plaintiffs contend that regardless of whether a consumer purchased New Balance shoes from a conspiring retailer [**11] or a non-conspiring retailer, that consumer was injured because the conspiracy, if successful, stifled price competition for, and raised the price of, all New Balance shoes.

Mid-West Paper Prod. Co. v. Continental Group, Inc., 596 F.2d 573, 583-87 (3d Cir. 1979), is the only decision of which the Court is aware which directly addresses the question whether those who purchased from non-conspiring retailers have standing, based on the conspiracy's alleged effect on all the company's goods, to bring an antitrust action. [*246] The plaintiff in Mid-West Paper, like Plaintiffs here, purchased from a competitor of the defendants. The Mid-West Paper plaintiff asserted standing based on the alleged conspiracy's effect on the general price level in the market, and alleged that non-conspirators sold under this "umbrella" at higher prices than they would have absent the price-fixing scheme. The plaintiff claimed that it suffered antitrust injury because it bought from a nonparticipating competitor at the higher price. The Court rejected this contention and held that the plaintiff lacked standing to bring an antitrust action. [Mid-West Paper, 596 F.2d at 587. See also Liang \[\*\*12\] v. Hunt, 477 F. Supp. 891, 896-97 \(N.D. Ill. 1979\)](#) (same); Pollock v. Citrus Assoc. of the New York Cotton Exchange, Inc., 512 F. Supp. 711, 719 n.9 \(S.D.N.Y. 1981\) (distinguishing Mid-West Paper and holding the "severe difficulties attendant with proving damages in an "umbrella" pricing situation" were not present).

The cases cited by the Plaintiffs do not support the contention that all purchasers, regardless of whether they purchased from a conspiring retailer, have antitrust standing. In Bogosian v. Gulf Oil Corp., 561 F.2d 434 \(3rd Cir. 1977\), the court simply held that "the fact that a customer has not made purchases from every co-conspirator does not prevent him from suing all for each co-conspirator contributed to the charging of the supracompetitive price paid by the purchaser." Bogosian, 561 F.2d at 448. In Bogosian, each of the plaintiffs had direct dealings with at least one of the conspiring defendants. Thus, the Court did not address the question presented here -- whether a plaintiff who did not purchase from any conspirator nonetheless has standing to bring an antitrust suit.

[Donahue v. Pendleton Woolen Mills, Inc., 633 F. Supp. 1423, 1429 \[\*\*13\] \(S.D.N.Y. 1986\)](#), upon which Plaintiffs also rely, held that resale price maintenance conspiracies like the one alleged here "directly coerce retailers, who must charge the price suggested by the manufacturer if they wish to continue carrying the product line," but ultimately affect consumers, who "pay the economic cost of such conduct in the higher prices set by the manufacturer." The Donohue Court did not, however, address whether all consumers -- not just consumers who purchased from a conspiring retailer -- could claim antitrust standing arising from an "umbrella" price increase allegedly caused by an RPM.

Plaintiffs' attempt to seek recovery for all consumers of New Balance athletic shoes during the alleged class period places their claim in the category of the type of indirect injury that is incapable of being quantified with any degree of economic certainty. Plaintiffs will be unable to demonstrate that those who purchased New Balance shoes from a non-conspiring retailer suffered damages, i.e., paid more for their shoes, because of the effects of the alleged conspiracy. Non-conspiring retailers may have independently raised or maintained their prices for any number of [\[\*\*14\]](#) reasons, or may even have lowered their prices. Accordingly, those who purchased from such retailers could not show an injury caused by a violation of the antitrust laws.

The Mid-West Paper Court recognized these difficulties in identifying and quantifying damages resulting from indirect injury such as that alleged by Plaintiffs here. The Court held that "the outcome of any attempt to ascertain what price the Defendants' competitors would have charged had there not been a conspiracy would at the very least be highly conjectural." Mid-West Paper, 596 F.2d at 584. The Court observed that the nonparticipating competitor might very well have charged the same price even absent the conspiracy, and the plaintiff would be "hard pressed to prove otherwise." Id.; see also Sullivan, 25 F.3d at 52 ("highly speculative" nature of plaintiff's damages claim weighed against a grant of standing); Reading Indus., Inc., 631 F.2d at, 13-14 (plaintiff lacked antitrust standing to assert claims based on conjectural theories of injury and attenuated economic causality).

In sum, the factors outlined by the Supreme Court in AGC weigh against finding that consumers who purchased [\[\*\*15\]](#) from non-conspiring retailers have standing to assert an antitrust claim. In particular, Plaintiffs' alleged injury was suffered, if at all, only indirectly as a result of a general [\[\*247\]](#) price increase which in turn resulted from the direct effects of the conspiracy; the causal connection between the alleged injury and the conspiracy is attenuated by significant intervening causative factors (i.e., independent pricing decisions of non-conspiring retailers); and more direct victims of the alleged conspiracy exist in those who purchased directly from conspiring retailers, such that denying Plaintiffs a remedy on the basis of their allegations in this case is "not likely to leave a significant antitrust violation undetected or unremedied." AGC, 459 U.S. at 910.

Accordingly, Plaintiffs as currently defined in the complaint lack standing to brings this action. The complaint will be dismissed, and Plaintiffs will be granted leave to replead within thirty (30) days of the issuance of this Opinion.

B. Plaintiffs Need Not Identify Alleged Co-Conspirator<sup>2</sup>

[**16] Defendant claims that the complaint is deficient because it alleges only that "certain" retailers conspired with New Balance in the resale price maintenance scheme but does not identify those co-conspirators. Although New Balance cites several cases that have required the specific naming of co-conspirators in antitrust complaints, the weight of authority does not endorse such a requirement, particularly where, as here, the relevant information regarding the identities of co-conspirators is "largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators." Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting, 368 U.S. 464, 473, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. 486 (1962). Under such circumstances, "dismissal prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly." Hospital Bldg. Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hospital, 425 U.S. 738, 746, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976).

HN8 [↑] Consumer antitrust plaintiffs like those here have even less ability to determine the identities of a manufacturers' co-conspirators than do most antitrust plaintiffs, who are generally economic competitors. This Court has held:

Evidence of the specific identity of exhibitors, attendees, speakers and [**17] suppliers who allegedly have acted in concert with defendant, is largely in defendant's hands. Plaintiff should be allowed to conduct full discovery in order possibly to further substantiate such claims. Thus, the court will not dismiss Count I of the complaint.

Expoconsul Int'l, Inc. v. A/E Systems, Inc., 711 F. Supp. 730, 735 (S.D.N.Y. 1989).

Only one decision in this district dismissed an antitrust claim based on the plaintiff's failure to name co-conspirators is North Jersey Secretarial School, Inc. v. McKiernan, 713 F. Supp. 577, 584 (S.D.N.Y. 1989), in which the Court was presented with a barebones complaint that alleged that the defendant's employees had conspired with plaintiff's "competitors," and gave no other indication of how the identity of these co-conspirators might be discerned. Here, the Plaintiffs have alleged that New Balance's co-conspirators are "certain" of New Balance's retailers. While New Balance's retailers may number in the hundreds, they nonetheless constitute a finite universe, and one from which a subset of New Balance's co-conspirators might be readily identified. See Hewlett-Packard Co. v. Arch Associates Corp., 908 F. Supp. 265, 269 [**18] (E.D. Pa. 1995) (motion to dismiss denied where "pleading alleges that HP combined with certain members of its distribution network" which is a "finite group whose members can be determined through discovery").

As the Ninth Circuit has held:

The 'other' distributors are not named, nor are their numbers or locations or other similar facts stated. While some cases seem to require such allegations, we do not think that they are required. HN9 [↑] A plaintiff need not sue all conspirators; he may choose to sue but one. Even in a criminal antitrust case, the government need not name the conspirators not sued, nor state their number, in the indictment.

[*248] Walker Distributing Co. v. Lucky Lager Brewing Co., 323 F.2d 1, 8 (9th Cir. 1963) (citations omitted); accord, e.g., William Inglis & Sons Baking Co. v. ITT Continental Baking Co., Inc., 668 F.2d 1014, 1053 (9th Cir. 1982); Christen Inc. v. BNS Indus., Inc., 517 F. Supp. 521, 524 (S.D.N.Y. 1981).

C. The Manageability of this Case as a Class Action Is Not Relevant at this Stage

New Balance contends that this case should be dismissed because management of the case as a class action would be overly [**19] burdensome. This argument, however, pertains to whether class action treatment is appropriate under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23\(b\), and does not shed light on whether dismissal is warranted pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\). It is thus inappropriate at this stage of the proceedings, and accordingly will not be addressed.

<sup>2</sup> Although the Court, having already determined that alternate grounds warrant dismissal, need not address this portion of Defendant's argument, the Court will nonetheless address this question in order to avoid relitigation of this motion to dismiss in the event Plaintiffs refile the Complaint in accordance with the Court's standing analysis.

III. The State Law Claims Will Be Dismissed

Since, as set forth above, Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims will be dismissed at this early phase of the proceedings, the Court will not exercise jurisdiction over the state law claims. See Castellano v. Bd. of Trustees, 937 F.2d 752, 758 \(2d Cir. 1991\) ("Certainly, if the federal claims are dismissed before trial, even though not insubstantial in a jurisdictional sense, the state claims should be dismissed as well.") quoting United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218, 86 S. Ct. 1130 \(1966\).

Plaintiffs' state law claims will be dismissed without prejudice however, and may be refiled along with a refiled complaint that limits the Plaintiff class to those who purchased New Balance shoes from conspiring retailers.

Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, New [\[\*\*20\]](#) Balance's motion to dismiss is hereby granted. Plaintiffs are granted leave to refile within thirty (30) days of issuance of this Opinion.

It is so ordered.

New York, N. Y.

February 11, 1997

ROBERT W. SWEET

U.S.D.J.

---

End of Document

Johnson v. Nyack Hosp.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

February 11, 1997, Decided ; February 11, 1997, FILED

94 Civ. 7464 (LAK)

Reporter

954 F. Supp. 717 *; 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1416 **

FLETCHER J. JOHNSON, M.D., et ano., Plaintiffs, -against- NYACK HOSPITAL, et al., Defendants.

Disposition: [**1] Defendants' motion for partial summary judgment granted in part and denied in part. Plaintiff's motion for leave to file the second amended complaint granted.

Core Terms

---

conspiracy, privileges, conspiring, vascular, reinstatement, intraenterprise, emotional, revocation, damages, medical staff, thoracic, thoracic surgery, defendants', distress, accrues

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN1 Statute of Limitations, Time Limitations

Generally, a cause of action accrues and the limitations period begins to run when a defendant commits an act that injures a plaintiff. Each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendant, a cause of action accrues to him to recover the damages caused by the act and, as to those damages, the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act. Each cause of action that so accrues entitles a plaintiff to recover not only those damages which he has suffered at the date of accrual, but also those which he will suffer in the future from the particular invasion, including what he has suffered during and will predictably suffer after trial. Thus, if a plaintiff feels the adverse impact of a conspiracy on a particular date, a cause of action immediately accrues to him to recover all damages incurred by that date and all provable damages that will flow in the future from the acts of the conspirators on that date. To recover those damages, he must sue within the requisite number of years from the accrual of the cause of action. Only those future damages caused by an action prior to the start of the limitations period that would have been too speculative or unpredictable if sued upon promptly may be recovered in an action brought within the limitations period.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Contractual Relations & Housing > Equal Rights Under the Law (sec. 1981) > Remedies

HN2 Equal Rights Under the Law (sec. 1981), Remedies

954 F. Supp. 717, *717L 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1416, **1

Plaintiffs in 42 U.S.C.S. § 1981 cases may recover for emotional distress.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Management Duties & Liabilities > Causes of Action > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Dissolution & Winding Up > Dissolution > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > General Partnerships > Management Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Conspiracy Against Rights > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN3 Management Duties & Liabilities, Causes of Action

A conspiracy is a partnership the object of which is the achievement of an unlawful or improper objective. One who forms or joins it is liable for all of the acts committed in furtherance of the conspiracy by any of the conspirators. Moreover, once having joined a conspiracy, each conspirator is presumed to continue as a member until the conspiracy ends with its abandonment or the accomplishment of its unlawful purpose or until the conspirator withdraws by some affirmative act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN4 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine is drawn from § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, which prohibits contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade. The evil to which that statute is directed is concerted decisions of two or more business entities to take action that, in a competitive world, each would take separately. In consequence, the statutory requirement of a plurality of actors is not satisfied by joint action of wholly owned subsidiaries of a single entity, unincorporated divisions of a company, or employees of a single entity acting within the scope of their employment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Conspiracy Against Rights > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Efforts to import the intraenterprise principle of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, to 42 U.S.C.S. § 1985\(3\) have met with varying results. Some circuits have rejected it outright or confined it to the narrowest of circumstances. Others, however, have restricted § 1985\(3\) on the basis of the antitrust analogy. The Second Circuit falls into this group, although the extent of its restriction of § 1985\(3\) claims is yet to be fully defined.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Conspiracy Against Rights > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN6 Protection of Rights, Conspiracy Against Rights

Personal bias is not the sort of individual interest that takes a defendant out of the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine where the action complained of arguably served a legitimate interest.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Conspiracy Against Rights > General Overview

HN7 Protection of Rights, Conspiracy Against Rights

Members of hospital medical staffs are capable of conspiring with one another in view of their separate and possibly competitive private economic interests.

Counsel: Appearances:

George R. Clark, Annemarie Scanlon Harthun, REED SMITH SHAW & McCLAY. Harry Frischer, Robert Frenchman, SOLOMON, ZAUDERER, ELLENHORN, FRISCHER & SHARP, Attorneys for Plaintiffs.

Ronald S. Rauchberg, Nancy Kilson, Francis D. Landrey, Patricia J. Clarke, Victoria A. Rosen, PROSKAUER ROSE GOETZ & MENDELSOHN LLP, Attorneys for Defendants.

Judges: Lewis A. Kaplan, United States District Court

Opinion by: Lewis A. Kaplan

Opinion

---

[*718] MEMORANDUM OPINION

LEWIS A. KAPLAN, District Judge.

This action in its present form involves a claim by plaintiff Fletcher J. Johnson, M.D., that his 1994 application for reinstatement of vascular and thoracic surgical privileges at defendant Nyack Hospital was denied on the basis of race. This allegedly violated 42 U.S.C. § 1981 and, because it is said to have taken place pursuant to a racially motivated conspiracy, 42 U.S.C. § 1985\(3\) as well. Defendants move for partial summary judgment dismissing (1) the amended complaint as to certain defendants on the ground that there is [*719] no genuine issue of fact as to their participation in the 1994 decision, and (2) the conspiracy claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1985\(3\) as against all defendants on the ground that the defendants are incapable as a matter of law of conspiring to violate the civil rights laws in connection with the 1994 action. Dr. Johnson moves for leave to file a second amended complaint in an effort to cure any of the alleged deficiencies relied upon by defendants. As the only substantial issue regarding the amendment is the sufficiency of the proposed changes, leave to amend is granted and the Court will treat defendants' motion [*719] as addressed to the second amended complaint.<sup>1</sup>

This dispute has been the subject of [*719] three reported decisions of this Court and two of the Second Circuit.<sup>2</sup> The Court assumes familiarity with those opinions and therefore refers to the facts only to the extent necessary to this decision.

---

<sup>1</sup> Defendants object also to the fact that the second amended complaint contains claims which previously have been dismissed. The objection is without merit. Plaintiffs are merely preserving their rights with respect to the dismissed claims. The grant of leave to amend does not revive any claim previously dismissed.

I

The defendants in this case, apart from Nyack Hospital, are Kenneth Steinglass, M.D., Daniel Berson, M.D., Lawrence Simon, M.D., James Dawson, Donald Winikoff, M.D., and Greger Anderson.<sup>3</sup> All allegedly were involved in Nyack's 1987 revocation of Dr. Johnson's vascular/thoracic surgical privileges. Defendants, however, maintain that Drs. Berson, Winikoff and Steinglass and Mr. Dawson had no involvement whatever in the 1994 denial of reinstatement. As it already has been established that [**4] plaintiff's claims with respect to the 1987 decision are time-barred, Johnson II, defendants maintain that the action should be dismissed as against these defendants.

A.

Dr. Berson was Chief of the Department of Surgery at Nyack from 1982 to 1988. (Cpt<sup>4</sup> P 13) Mr. Dawson was president of the hospital from 1978 to 1991. (Id. P 14) Dr. Winikoff has been co-chair of the Peer Review Committee from before 1987 to date. (Id. P 15)

Dr. Berson and Mr. Dawson allegedly requested that Dr. Steinglass review all of Dr. Johnson's vascular/thoracic surgery cases, a review which is said to have led to the 1987 revocation of privileges. (Id. PP 46-76) Dr. Winikoff allegedly chaired a meeting [**5] of the Peer Review Committee on February 24, 1987 at which the committee allegedly rubber stamped the Steinglass review. (Id. P 63) The crux of plaintiff's argument concerning these three defendants is that their 1987 actions were part of a racially motivated conspiracy directed at Dr. Johnson and that the denial of reinstatement in 1994 was a necessary part of the alleged plan to eliminate African-Americans from the vascular/thoracic surgical staff at Nyack. (Pl. Mem. 8) As they put it, defendants "Berson, Dawson, and Winikoff's actions with respect to the 1987 revocation of Dr. Johnson's privileges was, and is, part of the conspiracy to deny Dr. Johnson -- because of his race -- the right to hold thoracic and vascular privileges at Nyack." (Id. at 13-14) There is no suggestion and no evidence, however, that any of these three defendants had anything to do with the 1994 action apart from the allegation that the 1994 decision was based in part on 1987 events. On this basis, plaintiff asserts -- without citation of any authority whatsoever -- that he has a timely civil rights claim against these defendants based on the 1994 action. Defendants maintain the contrary, although [**6] they too cite no authority. It is helpful, therefore, to return to first principles.

To begin with, these defendants are sued under both Sections 1981 and 1985(3). The former claim is that each of them, either as a principal or perhaps as an aider and abettor, deprived Dr. Johnson of his federally protected right to equality in making and enforcing contracts, here the contract implicit in the medical staff relationship with Nyack Hospital. The latter asserts that the defendants entered into a conspiracy to deny him that right on the ground of his race. It is important consider these claims separately for purposes of this motion.

As the only allegations against these defendants pertinent to the Section 1981 claim are of 1987 actions, the Court must determine [*720] the effect of Johnson II, which dismissed claims based on the 1987 events as untimely. This requires consideration of what claims Dr. Johnson had and when they accrued.

HN1[] "Generally, a cause of action accrues and [the limitations period] begins to run when a defendant commits an act that injures a plaintiff[...] . . . . Each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendant, a cause of action accrues to him to recover [**7] the damages caused by the act and . . . , as to those damages, the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act." Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338-39, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77, 91 S. Ct. 795 (1990). But Zenith articulated another important principle as well. Each "cause of action that so accrues entitles a plaintiff to recover not only those damages which he has suffered at the date of accrual, but also those which he will suffer in the future from the particular invasion, including what he has suffered during and will predictably suffer after trial. [citations omitted] Thus, if a plaintiff feels the adverse impact of [a] . . . conspiracy on a particular date, a cause of action immediately accrues to him to recover all damages incurred by that date and all provable damages that will flow in the future from the acts of the conspirators on that date. To recover those damages, he must sue within the requisite number of years from the accrual of the cause of action." Id. at 338-39. Only those future damages caused by an action prior to the start of the limitations period that would have been too speculative or unpredictable if sued upon [**8] promptly may be recovered in an action brought within the limitations period. Id. at 339.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Johnson v. Nyack Hospital, 86 F.3d 8 (2d Cir. 1996), aff'g 891 F. Supp. 155 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) ("Johnson II"); Johnson v. Nyack Hospital, 964 F.2d 116 (2d Cir. 1992), aff'g 773 F. Supp. 625 (S.D.N.Y. 1991); Johnson v. Nyack Hospital, 169 F.R.D. 550, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18660, No. 94 Civ. 7464 (LAK), 1996 WL 724708 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 17, 1996).

<sup>3</sup> Plaintiff has dropped Rockland Thoracic Associates, P.C. from the second amended complaint.

<sup>4</sup> "Cpt" refers to the second amended complaint.

Dr. Johnson's principal Section 1981 claim is that he was the victim of actions by Drs. Berson and Winikoff and Mr. Dawson which resulted in the revocation of his vascular/thoracic surgical privileges in 1987 and that those same actions influenced the 1994 refusal to reinstate those privileges. The moment those privileges were revoked, however, Dr. Johnson knew that his income stream from the performance of such surgery at Nyack Hospital had been terminated. There is no suggestion that recovery of damages to compensate for the loss of that income would have been precluded as too speculative. [**9] Assuming he had sued promptly and prevailed, he would have been entitled to compensation for any income he lost by virtue of the revocation.<sup>6</sup>

The economic loss for which Dr. Johnson now seeks compensation is the loss of any income he would have earned had his privileges been reinstated in 1994. This of course is entirely included in the income stream Dr. Johnson could have recovered following the 1987 revocation of his privileges. These defendants, [**10] however, are not alleged to have taken any action after 1987 which brought about the 1994 decision except insofar as their alleged involvement in the 1987 privileges revocation may have affected it. As Dr. Johnson could have recovered for that injury years ago, the dismissal of Count III, the Section 1981 claim, insofar as it was based on the 1987 events, necessarily forecloses any recovery by Dr. Johnson against these defendants for his alleged economic harm resulting from their 1987 actions.

Economic harm, however, is not the only sort of injury for which Dr. Johnson is entitled to seek compensation. HN2[
↑] Section 1981 plaintiffs may recover for emotional distress as well,<sup>7</sup> and Dr. Johnson alleges that he [*721] suffered emotional injury as a result of the 1994 denial. As each adverse action by Nyack Hospital reasonably might be found to have inflicted its own sting and humiliation, one cannot now exclude the possibility that a trier of fact could find that Dr. Johnson suffered emotional distress as a result of the 1994 events quite separate from any emotional injury he sustained in 1987. Given Dr. Johnson's contention that the 1994 denial was based at least in part on the defendants' 1987 [**11] actions, the question whether these defendants may be held liable under Section 1981 for emotional distress suffered in and after 1994 presents essentially an issue of causation -- whether the alleged actions of Drs. Berson and Winikoff and Mr. Dawson in 1987 were a substantial factor in producing the alleged incremental emotional injury in 1994. That is quintessentially a jury issue. Accordingly, defendants' motion for partial summary judgment dismissing Count III of the complaint as to Drs. Berson and Winikoff and Mr. Dawson is granted except insofar as Dr. Johnson seeks recovery for emotional distress allegedly sustained as a result of the 1994 denial.

<sup>5</sup> Zenith was an antitrust case. There is no reason, however, why the principles referred to in the text should not be applied here. See Hernandez Jimenez v. Calero Toledo, 576 F.2d 402, 404 (1st Cir. 1978) (applying Zenith in civil rights context); Kadar v. Milbury, 549 F.2d 230, 234 (1st Cir. 1977) (same).

<sup>6</sup> See, e.g., Johnson v. Railway Express Agency, Inc., 421 U.S. 454, 459, 44 L. Ed. 2d 295, 95 S. Ct. 1716 (1975) (compensatory damages available under § 1981); T & S Service Associates, Inc. v. Crenson, 666 F.2d 722, 727 (1st Cir. 1981) (lost earnings recoverable); Davis v. Supermarkets General Corp., 584 F. Supp. 870, 872 (E.D. Pa. 1984) (future wages recoverable); cf. United States v. Burke, 504 U.S. 229, 241, 119 L. Ed. 2d 34, 112 S. Ct. 1867 (1992) (referring to broad remedies available under antidiscrimination statutes other than Title VII).

<sup>7</sup> E.g., Odima v. Westin Tucson Hotel, 53 F.3d 1484, 1498 (9th Cir. 1995); Thomas v. Resort Health Related Facility, 539 F. Supp. 630, 633 (E.D.N.Y. 1982); see Hurley v. Atlantic City Police Dept., 933 F. Supp. 396, 423 (D. N.J. 1996).

Count IV, the Section 1985(3) conspiracy claim, presents a rather different issue. The complaint alleges that [**12] Drs. Berson and Winikoff and Mr. Dawson joined a racially motivated conspiracy to remove Dr. Johnson from the vascular/thoracic surgery staff. Plaintiff asserts, moreover, that the 1994 reinstatement denial was in furtherance of that conspiracy.

HN3 A conspiracy of course is a partnership the object of which is the achievement of an unlawful or improper objective. See, e.g., Pinkerton v. United States, 328 U.S. 640, 644, 90 L. Ed. 1489, 66 S. Ct. 1180 (1946). One who forms or joins it is liable for all of the acts committed in furtherance of the conspiracy by any of the conspirators. Id. at 646-47. Moreover, once having joined a conspiracy, each conspirator is presumed to continue as a member until the conspiracy ends with its abandonment or the accomplishment of its unlawful purpose or until the conspirator withdraws by some affirmative act.<sup>8</sup> [**13] Here, Drs. Berson and Winikoff and Mr. Dawson allegedly became members of the asserted conspiracy in 1987. They have presented no evidence sufficient to establish withdrawal under the standards governing in this Circuit.<sup>9</sup> The questions whether the alleged conspiracy existed and, if so, whether the 1994 reinstatement denial was in furtherance of such a conspiracy as opposed to an independent, event for which the parties to the alleged 1987 conspiracy may bear no responsibility are not ripe for disposition on this motion. Accordingly, insofar as Drs. Berson and Winikoff and Mr. Dawson seek dismissal of the Section 1985(3) claim on the ground that the complaint alleges no actions by them subsequent to 1987, their motion must be denied.

B.

The fourth defendant as to whom dismissal is sought is Dr. Steinglass, whose situation is not entirely comparable to the other three individuals in that [**14] Dr. Johnson contends that Dr. Steinglass played "an integral role" in the 1994 decision (Pl. Mem. 6), a contention that, in view of what has been said already, affects only the Section 1981 claim. Given that Dr. Steinglass' motion is supported by an affidavit which states unequivocally that he in effect recused himself and took no part in the denial of Dr. Johnson's 1994 application in view of Dr. Johnson's repeated accusations against him (Steinglass Aff. P 70) -- an assertion supported by affidavits of Drs. Simon (Simon Aff. P 23) and Menitove (Menitove Aff. PP 2-5) -- it was Dr. Johnson's burden to come forward with admissible evidence which, if credited, would permit a trier of fact to find that Dr. Steinglass was involved.

[*722] Plaintiff makes three arguments. These contentions, whether taken individually or together, are insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact.

Dr. Johnson first contends that Dr. Steinglass was a member of the Quality Assurance/Risk Management Committee, which voted in 1994 to deny Dr. Johnson's reinstatement application. That is undisputed. It is undisputed also, however, that Dr. Steinglass did not participate in any way the Committee's consideration [**15] of Dr. Johnson's application. The fact that he was present is of no moment because other matters were discussed in other portions of the meeting, and there is no question that he said nothing concerning Dr. Johnson's situation. (Menitove Aff. PP 2-5) Indeed, Dr. Johnson's brief essentially admits as much. (Pl. Mem. 7) ("it appears that Dr. Steinglass chose to remain silent")

Dr. Johnson next relies upon Dr. Steinglass' alleged failure to advise the various Nyack committees and the Board of Trustees who acted upon the 1994 application that proceedings that had taken place before the New York State Office of Professional Medical Conduct ("OPMC") demonstrated that Nyack's 1987 revocation, in which Dr. Steinglass played an important role, was "a sham." (Id. 6-7) This is a most peculiar argument. The OPMC decision was rendered on May 6, 1993. Johnson II, 891 F. Supp. at 158. Dr. Johnson applied for reinstatement at Nyack in

<sup>8</sup> E.g., United States v. Chalarca, 95 F.3d 239, 243 (2d Cir. 1996) (conspiracy continues until abandoned or objective accomplished); United States v. Greenfield, 44 F.3d 1141, 1149-50 (2d Cir. 1995) (withdrawal); United States v. Rucker, 586 F.2d 899, 906 (conspiracy continues until consummated, abandoned or terminated by affirmative act).

<sup>9</sup> See, e.g., Greenfield, supra n. 8, 44 F.3d at 1149-50; United States v. Jones, 27 F.3d 50, 51 (2d Cir. 1994).

January 1994, eight months later. (Johnson Decl., Mar. 28, 1995, P 129) His submission included the OPMC findings. (Id. P 132) The notion that Dr. Steinglass violated Dr. Johnson's civil rights by failing to tell Nyack Hospital and its various boards of [**16] the OPMC decision of which they were fully aware simply defies reason.

Finally, Dr. Johnson relies on the fact that Dr. Steinglass was present to testify at a December 1994 hearing concerning the 1994 denial. (Id. 6) The hearing in question was conducted by former Judge Conboy of this Court, who acted as a hearing officer pursuant to the Hospital's by-laws. The question whether he would hear evidence concerning the 1987 events had not been determined by the time of the December 1994 hearing. Accordingly, Dr. Steinglass attended in case his testimony was required, although he did not in fact testify. This is insufficient to raise an issue of fact as to Dr. Steinglass' alleged participation in the 1994 denial.

These contentions having been put aside, Dr. Steinglass' situation is analytically identical, for purposes of this aspect of the motion, to that of Drs. Berson and Winikoff and Mr. Dawson. The Section 1981 claim against him must be dismissed except to the extent that Dr. Johnson seeks to recover for emotional harm suffered as a result of the 1994 decision. The issue whether any such harm was a proximate consequence of actions by Dr. Steinglass will be for the jury. There [**17] is no basis for dismissing the Section 1985\(3\) claim against him for the reasons already discussed unless it be defendants' intraenterprise conspiracy argument, to which the Court now turns.

II

Defendants contend that the Section 1985\(3\) claim must be dismissed pursuant to the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine because all of the conduct complained of was that of employees or members of the medical staff of Nyack Hospital acting in those capacities. In substance, they argue that Nyack Hospital cannot conspire with itself.

HN4 [↑] The intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine is drawn from Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, which prohibits contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade. The evil to which that statute is directed is concerted decisions of two or more business entities to take action "that, in a competitive world, each would take separately." Stathos v. Bowden, 728 F.2d 15, 21 (1st Cir. 1984) (Breyer, J.) In consequence, the statutory requirement of a plurality of actors is not satisfied by joint action of wholly owned subsidiaries of a single entity, unincorporated divisions of a company, or employees of a single entity acting within the scope of [**18] their employment. E.g., Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 I\*7231 (1984); VII PHILLIP E. AREEDA, ANTITRUST LAW PP 1462-74 (1986) ("AREEDA").

HN5 [↑] Efforts to import this principle to Section 1985\(3\) have met with varying results. Some circuits have rejected it outright or confined it to the narrowest of circumstances.<sup>10</sup> Others, however, have restricted Section 1985\(3\) on the basis of the antitrust analogy.<sup>11</sup> The Second Circuit falls into this group, although the extent of its restriction of Section 1985\(3\) claims is yet to be fully defined.

[**19] In Girard v. 94th Street and Fifth Avenue Corp., 530 F.2d 66 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 974, 48 L. Ed. 2d 798, 96 S. Ct. 2173 (1976), the plaintiff charged a cooperative apartment corporation and its directors with having declined to approve the assignment of a lease to her on the ground of her gender. A divided panel of the Second Circuit affirmed dismissal of the Section 1985\(3\) claim, essentially on the view that the corporation and its directors, who it viewed as having been sued only for actions taken in their capacities as such, were incapable as a matter of law of forming a Section 1985\(3\) conspiracy. Id. at 71-72. In doing so, however, it noted that the action complained was that of a single policy making body -- the board of directors -- and laid considerable emphasis on the fact that none of the individual defendants was alleged to have been "motivated by any independent personal stake in achieving the corporation's objective." Id. See also Herrmann v. Moore, 576 F.2d 453, 459 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1003, 99 S. Ct. 613, 58 L. Ed. 2d 679 (1978) (law school faculty and trustees incapable of conspiring to discharge professor).<sup>12</sup>

<sup>10</sup> E.g., Stathos, 728 F.2d at 21 (doctrine limited to ministerial acts to carry out a single discretionary decision); Novotny v. Great Am. Fed. Sav. & Loan Assn., 584 F.2d 1235, 1259 (3d Cir. 1978) (rejecting doctrine), vacated on other grounds, 442 U.S. 366, 99 S. Ct. 2345, 60 L. Ed. 2d 957 (1979).

<sup>11</sup> E.g., Hartman v. Board of Trustees of Comm. Coll. Dist. No. 508, 4 F.3d 465, 469 (7th Cir. 1992) (managers of corporation pursuing its lawful business not rendered conspirators by discriminatory actions); Travis v. Gary Community Mental Health Ctr., Inc., 921 F.2d 108, 110 (7th Cir. 1990); Runs After v. United States, 766 F.2d 347, 354 (8th Cir. 1985); Dombrowski v. Dowling, 459 F.2d 190, 196 (7th Cir. 1972) (Stevens, J.).

[**20] Plaintiff seizes on this latter comment to argue that his claim comes within Girard because the requisite independent personal motive is supplied by personal racial bias. (Pl. Mem. 15-16) The argument, however, is without merit. In Griffin v. Breckenridge, 403 U.S. 88, 29 L. Ed. 2d 338, 91 S. Ct. 1790 \(1971\), the Supreme Court held that "racial, or perhaps otherwise class-based, invidiously discriminatory animus" must motivate the defendants in order to give rise to Section 1985\(3\) liability. Id. at 102. If personal racial bias were sufficient to defeat the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine, the exception would swallow the rule, and Girard and Herrmann would be meaningless.<sup>13</sup> Accordingly, this Court holds that HN6<sup>14</sup> personal bias is not the sort of individual interest that takes a defendant out of the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine where, as here, the action complained of arguably served a legitimate interest of Nyack Hospital. Accord, Hartman, 4 F.3d at 470; Robins v. Max Mara U.S.A., Inc., 914 F. Supp. 1006, 1010 \(S.D.N.Y. 1996\).

[**21] Plaintiff next argues that the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine should be limited in the Section 1985\(3\) context to circumstances in which the alleged conspiracy [*724] encompassed no more than a single act of discrimination.<sup>14</sup> There are, to be sure, such suggestions in the cases.<sup>15</sup> [**22] As Judge Easterbrook and others have pointed out, however, "such a line responds neither to the text nor to the objectives of Section § 1985. Section 1985 depends on multiple actors, not on multiple acts of discrimination or retaliation." Travis, 921 F.2d at 111.<sup>16</sup>

Finally, plaintiff argues that hospitals and their medical staffs are capable of conspiring in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and, in consequence, that his Section 1985\(3\) claim therefore would be sufficient even if the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine were imported wholesale from the law of antitrust. (Pl. Mem. 19-20) Although not phrased as such, the argument is a variation on the personal interest exception to the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine alluded to in Girard.

In dealing with alleged antitrust conspiracies involving hospital medical staffs and hospitals, it is important to bear in mind that some physicians are hospital employees while others have independent practices. In the ordinary peer

<sup>12</sup> Dr. Johnson contends that the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine should not apply here because the policies that produced it cannot properly be translated from antitrust to the civil rights field. See, e.g., Stathos, 728 F.2d at 21; Novotny, 584 F.2d at 1256-59. Girard and Herrmann foreclose the argument before this Court.

<sup>13</sup> Plaintiff's reliance on Garza v. City of Omaha, 814 F.2d 553 \(8th Cir. 1987\), is misplaced. While Garza did find the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine inapplicable, it did so principally because there was evidence that the individual defendants acted out of "personal animosity." Id. at 557. To be sure, the panel referred also to evidence of personal bias. But it did not address the point here presented. To whatever extent it is fairly read as supporting plaintiff's position, the Court declines to follow it for the reason adduced in the text. Cases such as Walker v. Woodward Governor Co., 631 F. Supp. 91 \(N.D. Ill. 1986\), also relied upon by plaintiff, which reject the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine in the Section 1985\(3\) context are inconsistent with Girard and Herrmann and therefore inapplicable in this Circuit.

<sup>14</sup> Plaintiff actually contends that it should be confined to cases involving "no more than a single act of discrimination by a single defendant." (Pl. Mem. 16) (emphasis added) As a conspiracy requires at least two actors, however, the suggestion of limitation to situations involving only one defendant makes little sense.

<sup>15</sup> See, e.g., Volk v. Coler, 845 F.2d 1422, 1435 \(7th Cir. 1988\); Stathos, 728 F.2d at 21; Wahad v. Federal Bureau of Investigation, 813 F. Supp. 224, 232 \(S.D.N.Y. 1993\); Rackin v. University of Pennsylvania, 386 F. Supp. 992, 1005 \(E.D. Pa. 1974\).

<sup>16</sup> Accord, Comment, The Intracorporate Conspiracy Doctrine and 42 U.S.C. § 1985(3): The Original Intent, 90 NW. U. L. REV. 1125, 1159-60 \(1996\); Note, Intracorporate Conspiracies Under 42 U.S.C. § 1985(c), 92 HARV. L. REV. 470, 472-73 (1978).

review or staff privileges dispute, physicians who are hospital employees rarely if ever will have interests separate [**23] from those of the hospitals that employ them and therefore rarely will be capable of conspiring with the hospitals or, for that matter, among themselves when they play their roles in the review or privileging process. Their interests and those of their hospitals and colleagues all will be congruent. Physicians with independent practices, on the other hand, present a more nuanced situation. Rarely will such physicians be in competition with the hospitals at which they practice. Some, however, will be competitors among themselves (e.g., two orthopedists) while others will not (e.g., an obstetrician and a radiologist). The degree to which private practitioners functioning in a peer review or staff privileges context may be capable of conspiring depends upon whether their private interests diverge from those of the hospital or the physician who is the focus of attention. VII AREEDA P 1471e & P 1471'b (1996 Supp.)

This view is borne out by the cases. The Second, Fourth and Eleventh Circuits, for example, have held that HN7 members of hospital medical staffs are capable of conspiring with one another in view of their separate and possibly competitive private economic interests.<sup>17</sup>

[**24] Here, none of the individual defendants save Dr. Steinglass is alleged to have been a competitor of Dr. Johnson. Thus, none had any economic interest in whether his vascular/thoracic surgery privileges were revoked in 1987. Their participation in the process was solely in their capacities as members of the hospital medical staff or hospital officials. They and the hospital therefore are indistinguishable for purposes of conspiracy analysis.

Dr. Steinglass presents a different problem. He headed Rockland Thoracic Associates, P.C., a group practice engaged in vascular and thoracic surgery which competed with Dr. Johnson. Dr. Steinglass and Dr. Johnson allegedly were two of the three vascular/thoracic surgeons with the relevant operating privileges at Nyack Hospital. He [*725] therefore had a personal interest sufficient to take him out of the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine. The question therefore becomes whether his personal interest permits the conclusion that he conspired with Nyack Hospital, which for purposes of this analysis includes the other individuals acting on its behalf.

The cases are divided on the question whether a hospital is capable of conspiring with members of its [**25] medical staff.<sup>18</sup> The Second Circuit has not yet ruled on the point. The answer, however, should depend upon straightforward application of the law of conspiracy to the specific facts of each case.

[**26] Dr. Steinglass' alleged personal interest in depriving Dr. Johnson of vascular/thoracic surgery privileges destroys his unity of interest with Nyack Hospital and thus renders him capable of conspiring with it. In order to make out a conspiracy case against these two defendants, however, Dr. Johnson must show that they entered into an agreement to achieve an illicit objective, here the deprivation on the basis of race of rights guaranteed by law. In other words, the plaintiff will have to demonstrate that Dr. Steinglass and one or more agents of the hospital, acting within the scope of their employment, agreed to revoke Dr. Johnson's privileges on the basis of his race.<sup>19</sup> As defendants have argued only that Dr. Steinglass and Nyack are incapable of conspiring as a matter of law, a proposition which this Court rejects, the question whether the evidence would permit such a conclusion as a matter of fact has not been addressed. Accordingly, the motion for summary judgment dismissing the Section 1985\(3\) claim as to Dr. Steinglass and Nyack Hospital must be denied.

<sup>17</sup> Capital Imaging Associates, P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Associates, Inc., 996 F.2d 537, 544 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 947, 114 S. Ct. 388, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337 (1993); Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hospital, 945 F.2d 696, 706 (4th Cir.) (en banc), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1074, 117 L. Ed. 2d 137, 112 S. Ct. 973 (1992); Bolt v. Halifax Hospital Medical Center, 891 F.2d 810, 819 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 495 U.S. 924, 109 L. Ed. 2d 322, 110 S. Ct. 1960 (1990).

<sup>18</sup> Compare, e.g., Okusami v. Psychiatric Inst. of Washington, 295 U.S. App. D.C. 58, 959 F.2d 1062, 1065 (D.C. Cir. 1992) (hospital and medical staff incapable of conspiracy if they have unity of interest); Oksanen, 945 F.2d at 705 (medical staff members incapable of conspiring with hospital to deny privileges where board of trustees final decision maker); Nurse Midwifery Assoc. v. Hibbett, 918 F.2d 605 (6th Cir. 1990), mod. on rehearing, 927 F.2d 904 (6th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 952 (1991) (medical staff members incapable of conspiracy with hospital in denying staff privileges); Nanavati v. Burdette Tomlin Mem. Hosp., 857 F.2d 96, 118 (3d Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1078, 103 L. Ed. 2d 834, 109 S. Ct. 1528 (1989) (same); Potters Med. Ctr. v. City Hosp. Assn., 800 F.2d 568, 573 (6th Cir. 1986) (same); Weiss v. York Hosp., 745 F.2d 786, 816-17 (3d Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1060, 84 L. Ed. 2d 836, 105 S. Ct. 1777 (1985) (same); with Bolt, 891 F.2d 810 (medical staff members with private practices capable of conspiring with hospital); Oltz v. St. Peter's Comm. Hosp., 861 F.2d 1440 (9th Cir. 1988) (same).

[**27] Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, defendants' motion for partial summary judgment is granted to the extent that (1) Count III is dismissed as against Drs. Berson, Steinglass and Winikoff and Mr. Dawson except insofar as plaintiff seeks recovery for emotional distress in connection with the 1994 reinstatement denial, and (2) Count IV is dismissed as against all defendants except Dr. Steinglass and Nyack Hospital. The motion is denied in all other respects. Plaintiff's motion for leave to file the second amended complaint is granted. The pleading is deemed served and filed as of this date.

SO ORDERED.

Dated: February 11, 1997

Lewis A. Kaplan

United States District Court

---

End of Document

<sup>19</sup> Section 1985\(3\) does not reach "conspiracies motivated by economic or commercial animus." United Bhd. of Carpenters and Joiners, 463 U.S. 825, 837-39, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1049, 103 S. Ct. 3352 \(1983\). Thus, while the divergence of Dr. Steinglass' economic interests from those of the hospital render them capable of conspiring, plaintiff nevertheless will have to prove that they entered into a racially, as opposed to economically, motivated conspiracy in order to prevail on Count IV.

S. Megga Telecomms. v. Lucent Techs.

United States District Court for the District of Delaware

February 14, 1997, Decided

C.A. No. 96-357-SLR

Reporter

1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2312 *; 1997 WL 86413

S. MEGGA TELECOMMUNICATIONS LIMITED, a Hong Kong corporation, and S. MEGGATEL SDN. BHD., a Malaysian corporation, Plaintiffs, v. LUCENT TECHNOLOGIES, INC., a Delaware corporation, Defendant.

Notice: [*1] FOR ELECTRONIC PUBLICATION ONLY

Subsequent History: Motion for Reconsideration Granted in Part and Denied in Part May 12, 1997, Reported at: 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22163.

Disposition: Lucent's motion to dismiss as to counts I through V denied and motion to dismiss as to counts VI and VII granted. Plaintiffs' motion to dismiss Lucent's counterclaims granted. Lucent's motion for temporary restraining order denied as moot.

Core Terms

---

counterclaims, plaintiffs', telephones, allegations, manufacturing, cordless, motion to dismiss, misrepresentation, joint venture, parties, counts, commerce, terminate, argues, import, temporary restraining order, facilities, antitrust, fiduciary duty, selling, business relationship, intellectual property, forum non conveniens, foreign nation, compulsory, public interest factors, integration, fraudulent, Venture, profits

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN1 [?] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

In ruling on a motion to dismiss, the court will consider primarily the allegations contained in the complaint. The court, however, may also consider matters of public record, orders, items appearing in the record of the case, and exhibits attached to the complaint. The court must accept all factual allegations in the complaint as true. The court is also bound to give the plaintiffs the benefit of every reasonable inference to be drawn from the complaint. Additionally, the court must resolve any ambiguities concerning the sufficiency of the claims in favor of the plaintiffs. The court may dismiss a complaint only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Intent

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN2 Contract Interpretation, Intent

The interpretation of an agreement involves determining the intention of the parties as revealed by the language used by them. Under New Jersey law, the intention of the parties is determined by the situation of the parties, the attendant circumstances, and the objects they were striving to attain. Evidence of the circumstances is always admissible in aid of the interpretation of an integrated agreement.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Integration Clauses

Contracts Law > Contract Modifications > General Overview

HN3 Contract Conditions & Provisions, Integration Clauses

Some courts, in applying New Jersey law, give conclusive effect to integration clauses in determining whether the parties intended to make a contract integrated.

Contracts Law > Contract Modifications > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

HN4 Contracts Law, Contract Modifications

The intent of the parties is not to be determined solely by reference to the four corners of the written agreement even when the contract on its face is free from ambiguity.

Contracts Law > Contract Modifications > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Parol Evidence > General Overview

HN5 Contracts Law, Contract Modifications

Whether a particular subject of negotiation is embodied by the writing depends wholly upon the intent of the parties; but the intent must be judged by an external standard. The writing is not wholly and intrinsically self-determinative of the parties intent to make it the sole memorial of the subject of negotiation; this intent must be sought in the conduct and language of the parties and the surrounding circumstances. The document alone will not suffice. What it was intended to cover cannot be known till the court knows what there was to cover. The question being whether certain subjects of negotiation were intended to be covered, a court must compare the writing and the negotiations before it can determine whether they were in fact covered.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Integration Clauses

Contracts Law > Contract Modifications > General Overview

HN6 Contract Conditions & Provisions, Integration Clauses

Although a contract with a merger clause is strong evidence that the parties intended the writing to be the complete and exclusive agreement between them, it is not dispositive.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Parol Evidence > General Overview

Evidence > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN7 Contract Interpretation, Parol Evidence

The parole evidence rule does not apply in determining the subject matter of the general purchase agreements or whether they were intended to be the master agreements. The parole evidence rule is a rule of substantive law not related to interpretation or the admission of evidence for the purpose of interpretation. The terms of any contract must be given a meaning by interpretation before it can be determined whether an attempt is being made to vary or contradict them.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Good Faith & Fair Dealing

HN8 Types of Contracts, Covenants

Under New Jersey law, a breach of an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing may be established if a defendant encourages a plaintiff to make substantial investments while actively concealing its decision to terminate a contract.

Contracts Law > ... > Consideration > Enforcement of Promises > General Overview

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Negligent Misrepresentation > Elements

Contracts Law > Contract Formation > Consideration > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Negligent Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN9 Consideration, Enforcement of Promises

Under New Jersey law, the elements for a claim of fraudulent misrepresentation are: (1) a material misrepresentation of presently existing or past fact; (2) knowledge of falsity by the person making the misrepresentation; (3) intent that the misrepresentation be relied upon; (4) actual and reasonable reliance on the misrepresentation; and (5) detriment to plaintiff. The elements of negligent misrepresentation are (1) a material misrepresentation of a presently existing or past fact; (2) negligently made; and (3) justifiably relied upon.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN10 Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) provides that in all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity. The United States Courts of Appeals for the Third Circuit holds that focusing exclusively on Rule 9(b)'s particularity language is too narrow an approach and fails to take into account the general simplicity and flexibility contemplated by the rules.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN11 [blue icon] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) requires plaintiffs to plead with particularity the circumstances of the alleged fraud in order to place the defendants on notice of the precise misconduct charged, and to safeguard defendants against spurious charges of immoral and fraudulent behavior. In accordance with these objectives, allegations of date, place, or time are not required and plaintiffs are free to use alternative means of injecting precision and some measure of substantiation into their allegations of fraud.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

HN12 [blue icon] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 6a.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

The Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 6a, requires an actual injury to plaintiff within the United States.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Ancillary Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > Compulsory Counterclaims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > Permissive Counterclaims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Supplemental Jurisdiction, Ancillary Jurisdiction

In order for a federal court to entertain a counterclaim, the counterclaim must be either a compulsory counterclaim and so fall within the court's ancillary jurisdiction, or a permissive counterclaim with an independent basis of jurisdiction. Fed. R. Civ. P. 13\(a\) provides that a counterclaim is compulsory if it arises out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the opposing party's claim and does not require for its adjudication the presence of third parties of whom the court cannot acquire jurisdiction. Permissive counterclaims are claims not arising out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the opposing party's claim. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > Compulsory Counterclaims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Counterclaims, Compulsory Counterclaims

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit embraces a fairly liberal interpretation of the transaction or occurrence standard, establishing as the operative question in determining if a claim is a compulsory counterclaim whether the counterclaim bears a logical relationship to an opposing party's claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > Compulsory Counterclaims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN16 [blue icon] Counterclaims, Compulsory Counterclaims

In determining whether a logical relationship exists between an opposing party's claim and a counterclaim, the court will analyze several factors: (1) are the issues in fact and law raised by the claim and counterclaim largely the same?; (2) would res judicata bar a subsequent suit on defendant's claim absent the compulsory counterclaim rule?; and (3) will substantially the same evidence support or refute plaintiff's claim as well as defendant's counterclaims?

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Forum Non Conveniens

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Initial Burden of Persuasion

HN17 [blue icon] Venue, Forum Non Conveniens

The court has the discretion to grant or deny a motion to dismiss a claim under the doctrine of forum non conveniens. Under this doctrine, the party seeking dismissal of a claim has the initial burden of establishing that an adequate alternative forum exists. Once the moving party has established that an alternative forum exists, it must then show that the private and public interest factors weigh heavily in favor of dismissal.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Forum Non Conveniens

HN18 [L] Venue, Forum Non Conveniens

Once an adequate alternative forum is established, the court must balance several private and public interest factors to determine whether dismissal is proper. The private interest factors include: relative ease of access to sources of proof; availability of compulsory process for attendance of unwilling, and the cost of obtaining attendance of willing, witnesses; and all other practical problems that make a trial of a case easy, expeditious and inexpensive. The public interest factors include: the local interest in having localized controversies decided at home; the interest in having the trial of a diversity case in a forum that is at home with the law that must govern the action; the avoidance of unnecessary problems in conflict of laws, or in application of foreign laws.

Counsel: For Plaintiffs: Arthur G. Connolly, Esquire, of Connolly, Bove, Lodge & Hutz, Wilmington, Delaware. Of Counsel: Byron L. Gregory, Esquire, Jillisa Brittan, Esquire, Charles P. Beveridge, Esquire, of McDermott, Will & Emery, Chicago, Illinois.

For Defendant: Jesse A. Finkelstein, Esquire, John T. Dorsey, Esquire, of Richards, Layton & Finger, Wilmington, Delaware. Of Counsel: Francis P. Barron, Esquire, Philippe Z. Selendy, Esquire, and David M. Hornik, Esquire, of Cravath, Swaine & Moore, New York, New York.

Judges: Sue L. Robinson, District Judge

Opinion by: Sue L. Robinson

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM OPINION

ROBINSON, District Judge

I. INTRODUCTION

On July 1, 1996 plaintiffs S. Megga Telecommunications Limited ("S.Megga") and S. Meggatel SDN. BHD. ("S. Meggatel") (collectively referred to as "plaintiffs") filed this action against defendant Lucent Technologies, Inc. ("Lucent") seeking to recover [*2] damages as a result of Lucent's alleged breaches of contracts, tortious conduct, and antitrust violations. (D.I. 1) On August 20, 1996, Lucent filed a motion to dismiss counts I through VII of plaintiffs' complaint. (D.I. 8) On January 2, 1997, Lucent filed an answer to count VIII, counterclaims, and a motion for a temporary restraining order. (D.I. 16, 20) Plaintiffs responded by filing an answer and motion to dismiss Lucent's counterclaims. (D.I. 22, 23) On January 6, 1997, the court heard oral argument on Lucent's motion for a temporary restraining order. (D.I. 21) All of the motions have been fully briefed. (D.I. 9, 11, 17, 24, 25, 31, 32, 33, 35, 36)

This case is presently before the court on Lucent's motion to dismiss counts I through VII of plaintiffs' complaint, its motion for a temporary restraining order, and plaintiffs' motion to dismiss Lucent's counterclaims. (D.I. 8, 16, 23) For the reasons that follow, the court shall deny Lucent's motion to dismiss as to counts I through V and grant its motion as to counts VI and VII. The court shall also grant plaintiffs' motion to dismiss Lucent's counterclaims and deny Lucent's motion for a temporary restraining order.

[*3] II. BACKGROUND

S. Megga is a Hong Kong corporation with its principal place of business in Hong Kong and with manufacturing facilities in the People's Republic of China ("China"). (D.I. 1 at 3) Plaintiff S. Meggatel is a Malaysian corporation with its principal place of business in Klang, Malaysia.<sup>1</sup> (D.I. 1 at 3)

Defendant Lucent is a Delaware corporation that does business throughout the United States. (D.I. 20 at 1) Lucent is composed of "certain former AT&T Corporation ("AT&T") businesses and operations relating to the design, development, manufacturing and marketing of telecommunications equipment and related software." (D.I. 20 at 1)

Since 1983, S. Megga has manufactured consumer products for Lucent. [*4] (D.I. 1 at 4) In 1986, S. Megga began manufacturing cordless telephones for Lucent. (D.I. 1 at 5) In 1992, S. Meggatel also began manufacturing cordless telephones for Lucent. (D.I. 1 at 5-6) Plaintiffs assert that, in early 1991, Lucent induced S. Meggatel to build a new facility "dedicated exclusively to the manufacturing of cordless telephones for Lucent." (D.I. 1 at 5) Lucent is alleged to have represented to plaintiffs that it would purchase a minimum of 400,000 telephones annually from S. Meggatel for the "long term" and continue to purchase telephones from S. Megga unless restrictions by China were imposed. (D.I. 11 at 1-2) Plaintiffs also allege that, in 1995, Lucent induced S. Megga to build a new manufacturing facility in China in order to meet Lucent's demands. (D.I. 11 at 1-2) From 1983 to 1995, Lucent allegedly instructed plaintiffs not to manufacture telephones for Lucent's competitors or it would terminate its business relationship with them. (D.I. 1 at 7) Lucent also allegedly directed plaintiffs to defer their profits on sales to Lucent from 1994 to 1995. (D.I. 1 at 8)

In return for all these concessions, plaintiffs allege that Lucent promised S. Megga and S. Meggatel [*5] a business relationship with Lucent for the "long term." (D.I. 11 at 3) In December 1995, however, Lucent terminated its relationship without notice. (D.I. 1 at 8) As a result, plaintiffs have set forth claims for breach of contract (count I), breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing (count II), promissory estoppel (count III), fraudulent misrepresentation (count IV), negligent misrepresentation (count V), attempted monopolization (count VI), and breach of fiduciary duty (count VII).

In its motion to dismiss counts I through VII of the complaint, Lucent argues that its contractual relationship with plaintiffs is governed by General Purchase Agreements ("GPAs") that S. Megga entered into in 1986 and S. Meggatel entered into in 1992.<sup>2</sup> (D.I. 1 at 4, 6) According to Lucent, both GPAs (1) "constitute the entire agreement between the parties with respect to purchases of cordless telephones;" (2) "disclaim any minimum purchase obligation;" and (3) "state that Lucent can cease making purchase orders at any time." (D.I. 9 at 2) In opposing Lucent's motion, plaintiffs argue that their complaint concerns conduct and agreements with Lucent that are outside the scope of both [*6] GPAs.

---

<sup>1</sup> S. Meggatel is an affiliate of S. Megga. S. Megga is a wholly-owned subsidiary of S. Megga International Holdings, Ltd., a corporation organized under the laws of the British Virgin Islands. (D.I. 1 at 3) S. Megga International Holdings, Ltd. also owns seventy percent of S. Meggatel. (D.I. 1 at 4)

<sup>2</sup> The contract between S. Meggatel and Lucent was amended in March of 1993 to include cordless telephones. Although the agreement between Lucent and S. Meggatel that was attached to plaintiffs' complaint is not specifically identified as a "General Purchase Agreement," both parties appear to refer to it as such. (D.I. 9 at 2; D.I. 11 at 2)

Lucent's motion for a temporary restraining order and its counterclaims relate to cordless telephones that S. Megga made for a joint venture corporation. In 1994, AT&T (now Lucent), S. Megga, and the Central Technology Center,<sup>3</sup> a Chinese government corporation, entered into a contract ("Joint Venture Agreement") to create the joint venture corporation AT&T-CTB ("Joint Venture"). (D.I. 25, Ex. 1 at 4) The Joint Venture Agreement is governed by the laws of China and provides that disputes arising in connection with it shall be submitted to the court of arbitration in Stockholm, Sweden. (D.I. 25, Ex. 1 at 22)

[*7] After the Joint Venture Agreement was executed, Lucent authorized S. Megga to manufacture cordless telephones for AT&T-CTB. (D.I. 17 at 5) With these instructions, S. Megga manufactured approximately 60,000 to 70,000 cordless telephones for AT&T-CTB. (D.I. 21 at 1) According to S. Megga, these telephones were intended to be sold by the Joint Venture only in China. (D.I. 24 at 1) In December 1995, Lucent allegedly advised S. Megga that it was withdrawing from the Joint Venture.<sup>4</sup> (D.I. 25 at 2 and Ex. 2, P6)

[*8] The telephones that S. Megga manufactured consisted of three different models: model numbers 5548, 5545, and 4615. (D.I. 25 at 1) According to S. Megga, Models 5548 and 5545 accounted for all but 1,000 of the 60,000 to 70,000 units S. Megga manufactured. (D.I. 25 at 1) Model 4615 accounted for the remaining 1,000 units. (D.I. 25 at 1) S. Megga claims that models "5548 and 5545 were designed entirely by S. Megga" and only S. Megga's tooling and electronics were used. (D.I. 25 at 1) The 5548 and 5545 models carry the AT&T logo and were packaged in boxes with the AT&T logo. The 1000 units of model 4615 were made using AT&T's tooling. (D.I. 25 at 2) The 4615 model does not carry the AT&T logo and was made using only S. Megga's electronics. (D.I. 25 at 2)

Lucent argues that S. Megga has breached its GPA by selling these cordless telephones in China without Lucent's authorization. S. Megga's GPA contains provisions relating to the use of Lucent's tooling equipment,<sup>5</sup> information,<sup>6</sup> [*10] identification,<sup>7</sup> and insignia.<sup>8</sup> The GPA also contains a clause which provides that S. Megga may not

---

<sup>3</sup>The Central Technology Center is a wholly-owned subsidiary of the China National Posts and Telecommunications Industry Corporation, an agency of the Chinese government. (D.I. 17 at 4)

<sup>4</sup>At oral argument, counsel for Lucent denied that Lucent had withdrawn from the Joint Venture. (D.I. 21 at 13) Lucent, however, admits that it advised S. Megga in December 1995 that it was considering selling its interest in AT&T-CTB. (D.I. 20 at 5)

Plaintiffs claim that because Lucent wanted to withdraw from the Joint Venture it entered into a settlement agreement with S. Megga in January 1996 ("January 1996 Agreement"). The January 1996 Agreement involved "an adjustment of costs . . . under which Lucent agreed . . . that it owed and would pay S. Megga U.S. $ 3 million as part of the reconciliation of costs related to the Joint Venture and S. Megga would, as it did, take over Lucent's position in the Joint Venture at no additional costs to S. Megga." (D.I. 1 at 21) Plaintiffs' count VIII alleges that Lucent breached the January 1996 Agreement. Lucent does not seek to dismiss this claim.

<sup>5</sup>The "Title to Special Tooling" clause, in subparagraph (7), provides, in part, that "if [S. Megga] defaults . . . or if [AT&T] is not obligated to purchase products . . . [AT&T] may withdraw all or any part of the TOOLING and TOOLING drawings." (D.I. 1, Ex. A) The GPA defines "special tooling" as "including, but not limited to molds, dies, punches, printed circuit masters, integrated circuit masks, and the like, including the media in which embodied, and services required to produce the same." (D.I. 1, Ex. A)

<sup>6</sup>The "Use and Information" clause provides that any information furnished or acquired by S. Megga from Lucent shall remain Lucent's property and must be returned at Lucent's request. The term "information" is defined as "any specifications, drawings, sketches, models, samples, tools, computer or other apparatus programs, technical or business information or data, written, oral or otherwise, owned or controlled by [Lucent] . . ." (D.I. 1, Ex. A; D.I. 17 at 10 n. 5)

<sup>7</sup>The identification clause provides in part that "[S. Megga] shall make no use of any identification of . . . [AT&T] . . . in its advertising and promotional efforts in reference to activities undertaken by [S. Megga] under this Agreement." The GPA defines "identification" as "any trade names, trademark, service mark, [or] insignia. . . ." The clause also provides that "[S. Megga] agrees to remove any such identification prior to any sale, use or disposition of material . . . not purchased by Company. . . ." (D.I. 1, Ex. A; D.I. 20 at 9, P38)

<sup>8</sup>The insignia clause in the GPA provides in part that "[cordless phones] rejected or not purchased by Company which utilized such INSIGNIA shall have all such Insignia removed prior to any sale, use or disposition thereof." (D.I. 1, Ex. A; D.I. 20 at 10, P39) The GPA defines "insignia" as "certain Company trademarks, trade names, insignia, symbols, decorative designs, packaging designs or evidences of Company's inspection." (D.I. 1, Ex. A) knowingly "transmit directly or indirectly . . . any immediate product . . . produced directly by the [*9] use of technical information . . . or any commodity produced by such immediate product . . . to . . . [the] People's Republic of China . . ." without the prior written consent of the United States Department of Commerce. (D.I. 1, Ex. A at 19)

S. Megga claims that all of the units were made before December 1995. (D.I. 25 at 1) S. [*11] Megga also claims that Lucent approved these telephones for sale in China. (D.I. 25 at 1) At oral argument, counsel for Lucent disputed S. Megga's claim that the 4615 models were made before December 1995. Counsel for Lucent suggested that a manufacturing date of June 1996 was stamped on the bottom of the 4615 telephones.<sup>9</sup> (D.I. 21 at 14)

In December 1995, S. Megga still possessed 16,000 telephone units from those it had manufactured for the Joint Venture. S. Megga claims that the Joint Venture could not pay for these units because of Lucent's withdrawal. (D.I. 25 at 2 and Ex. 1, P8) S. Megga then attempted to secure payment for these telephones from Lucent but was unsuccessful. Consequently, in August 1996, S. Megga began selling the cordless telephones to third parties in China to mitigate its losses. (D.I. 25 at 2) Between August and December 1996, S. Megga [*12] sold 12,000 units. Presently, S. Megga claims it has approximately 4,000 telephone units in its possession. (D.I. 25 at 3)

Lucent disputes these facts. In its counterclaim, Lucent alleges that, at or around July 1996, S. Megga began to manufacture, distribute, and sell cordless telephones in China made with Lucent's equipment, technology, and intellectual property. (D.I. 17 at 5-6) Lucent's affiant, Patrick Leung, the General Manager of the Joint Venture, asserts that he believes the number of telephones sold by S. Megga is increasing. (D.I. 19, P13) Leung states that he has "seen no evidence to suggest that S. Megga is reducing its distribution and sale of Lucent/AT&T cordless telephones." (D.I. 19, P13) Leung also states that "the volume of sales by [the Joint Venture] . . . of Lucent/AT&T cordless telephones in China [] has declined by 90% from July to December. (D.I. 19, P14) Lucent also complains that S. Megga has not returned Lucent's capital tooling equipment and technical information as requested by Lucent.<sup>10</sup> (D.I. 17, Ex 1; D.I. 21 at 9)

[*13] Based on these allegations, Lucent filed its counterclaims and this motion for a temporary restraining order. Lucent's counterclaims fall into two basic categories: breach of contract claims and intellectual property claims. Count I of Lucent's counterclaims alleges that S. Megga breached its GPA by selling cordless phones in China that are marked with the AT&T logo or made with Lucent's tooling. Counts II through IV of Lucent's counterclaims allege that, by selling these phones in China, S. Megga has violated the trademark, unfair competition, and business secret laws of China.

III. DISCUSSION

The parties' motions will be addressed seriatim.

A. Lucent's Motion to Dismiss

Lucent has moved to dismiss counts I through VII of plaintiffs' complaint under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\) \(6\). Counts I through V and VII of plaintiffs' complaint are based on state contract and tort law. Count VI is based on federal antitrust law. Although the parties use different rationales, they do not dispute that New Jersey law governs both the interpretation of the GPAs and plaintiffs' state law claims. (D.I. 9 at 6 n.3; D.I. 11 at 4 n.1) The court finds that New Jersey [*14] law applies to plaintiffs' state law claims and to all claims arising out of the GPAs. New Jersey law applies to plaintiffs' state law claims because it is the state with the most significant relationship to

---

<sup>9</sup> At oral argument, the court noted that the numbers "96" and "6" appeared to be stamped or embossed on the bottom of a sample model 4615 telephone.

<sup>10</sup> At oral argument, counsel for S. Megga and S. Meggatel asserted that Lucent's tooling equipment has been or will be returned. (D.I. 21 at 43) Counsel for S. Megga and S. Meggatel stated that S. Megga and S. Meggatel are not using such equipment and have no interest in it. (D.I. 21 at 43)

these claims. See *IBM v. Comdisco, Inc., 1991 Del. Super. LEXIS 453, C.A. No. 91 C-07-199, 1991 WL 269965*, at *5-7 (Del. Super. Ct., Dec. 4, 1991). The court also finds that New Jersey law applies to the GPAs because there is a material connection that links the chosen jurisdiction to the transaction.<sup>11</sup> *Annan v. Wilmington Trust Co., 559 A.2d 1289, 1293 \(Del. 1989\)*.

[*15] 1. Rule 12(b)(6) Standard for Dismissal

**HN1** In ruling on a motion to dismiss, the court will consider primarily the allegations contained in the complaint. *Pension Benefit Guar. Corp. v. White Consol. Indus., 998 F.2d 1192, 1196 \(3d Cir. 1993\)*. The court, however, may also consider matters of public record, orders, items appearing in the record of the case, and exhibits attached to the complaint. Id. The court must accept all factual allegations in the complaint as true. *Cruz v. Beto, 405 U.S. 319, 322, 31 L. Ed. 2d 263, 92 S. Ct. 1079 \(1972\)* (per curiam). The court is also bound to give the plaintiffs the benefit of every reasonable inference to be drawn from the complaint. *Retail Clerks Int'l Ass'n v. Schermerhorn, 373 U.S. 746, 10 L. Ed. 2d 678, 83 S. Ct. 1461 \(1963\)*. Additionally, the court must resolve any ambiguities concerning the sufficiency of the claims in favor of the plaintiffs. *Hughes v. Rowe, 449 U.S. 5, 10, 66 L. Ed. 2d 163, 101 S. Ct. 173 \(1980\)* (per curiam). The "court may dismiss a complaint only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations." [*16] *Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59, 104 S. Ct. 2229 \(1984\)*.

2. Plaintiffs' Contract Claims

In their complaint, plaintiffs set forth claims for breach of contract (count I), breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing (count II), and promissory estoppel (count III).<sup>12</sup> Lucent's argument that these claims should be dismissed is essentially based upon the assertion that both GPAs are the "master agreements" governing its relationship with the plaintiffs.

[*17] According to Lucent, both GPAs' merger clauses clearly establish that they are the "master agreements" governing Lucent's purchasing relationship with plaintiffs.<sup>13</sup> [*18] Based on this assertion, Lucent argues that plaintiffs cannot rely on any allegations of prior or contemporaneous oral agreements to alter the terms of both

<sup>11</sup> The GPAs contain choice of law provisions that state "the construction, interpretation and performance of this Agreement and all transactions under it shall be governed by the laws of the State of New Jersey. . . ." (D.I. 1, Ex. A; D.I. 9, Ex. 1) Since Lucent is headquartered in New Jersey, there is a material connection between the chosen jurisdiction and the transaction. *Suburban Trust & Sav. Bank v. Univ. of Del., 910 F. Supp. 1009, 1013 \(D. Del. 1995\)*.

<sup>12</sup> Plaintiffs rely upon essentially the same allegations for each of these claims. The conduct plaintiffs base their claims on is Lucent's (1) failure to maintain its volume of purchases with S. Megga once the Malaysian facility was built; (2) failure to purchase annually at least 400,000 units from S. Meggatel for the period necessary to recoup its investment or for the long term; (3) failure to allow plaintiffs to recover profits on sales to Lucent during 1994 to 1995; and (4) failure to allow plaintiffs to continue to sell cordless telephones to Lucent at the price at which plaintiffs could recover their profits. Plaintiffs allege that Lucent promised them this "long-term" business relationship if they would defer profits for two years and build or expand their manufacturing facilities. Plaintiffs also allege that Lucent made these promises even though it had decided to terminate its business relationship with them.

<sup>13</sup> The S. Megga GPA contains an "Entire Agreement" clause which provides:

This Agreement shall incorporate the typed or written provisions on Company's [Lucent's] orders issued pursuant to this Agreement, and this Agreement as supplemented by such provisions shall constitute the entire agreement between the parties with respect to the subject matter of this Agreement and shall not be modified or rescinded, except by a writing signed by Supplier [S. Megga] and Company . . . . Estimates furnished by Company shall not constitute commitments. The provisions of this Agreement supersede all prior oral and written quotations, communications, agreements and understandings of the parties with respect to the subject matter of this Agreement.

(D.I. 1, Ex. A) S. Meggatel's GPA contains a substantially similar clause. (D.I. 9, Ex. 1)

GPAs because the merger clauses and the parole evidence rule bar such allegations. (D.I. 9 at 8) Lucent argues that these claims fail because, under the terms of both GPAs, Lucent had the right to terminate its relationship with plaintiffs for any reason and was not obligated to purchase a minimum number of telephone units.<sup>14</sup>

Plaintiffs argue that their breach of contract claim involves "other agreements" [*19] that were "separate and independent of the GPAs." In other words, plaintiffs argue that the GPAs do not represent the entire relationship between them and Lucent. For this reason, plaintiffs assert that the court cannot dismiss their claims without first considering evidence relating to these "other agreements."

The court agrees with plaintiffs. HN2[<sup>15</sup>] The interpretation of an agreement involves determining the intention of the parties as revealed by the language used by them. Atlantic Northern Airlines v. Schwimmer, 12 N.J. 293, 96 A.2d 652, 656 \(N.J. 1953\). Under New Jersey law, the intention of the parties is determined by the "the situation of the parties, the attendant circumstances, and the objects they were. . . . striving to attain . . . ." Id. Evidence of the circumstances is always admissible in aid of the interpretation of an integrated agreement. Id.

Lucent argues that Schwimmer is inapplicable to the case at bar because that case involved the construction of a contract that did not contain an integration clause.<sup>15</sup> (D.I. 14 at 6 n.9) The court recognizes that HN3[<sup>16</sup>] some courts, in applying New Jersey law, have given conclusive effect to integration clauses in determining [*20] whether the parties intended to make a contract integrated. See Zone Co. v. Service Transp. Co., Inc., 137 N.J.L. 112, 57 A.2d 562, 564-565 \(N.J. 1948\); see also Dow Chemical Co. v. Schaefer Salt & Chemical Co., 1992 WL 672289 at \*9 (D.N.J. July 21, 1992) (citing United States v. Clementon Sewerage Authority, 365 F.2d 609, 614 n.1 \(3d Cir. 1966\)). The court, however, finds Schwimmer to be the authoritative statement in New Jersey on the manner of proving integration. United States v. Clementon Sewerage Authority, 365 F.2d 609, 613 \(3d Cir. 1966\) (stating that Schwimmer is the authority in New Jersey on integration); Doyle v. Northrop Corp., 455 F. Supp. 1318, 1333 \(D.N.J. 1978\). The court notes, as the Third Circuit noted in Clementon Sewerage, that two older New Jersey Supreme Court cases apparently determine integration by reference only to the written agreement. 365 F.2d at 614 n.1 (citing Brautigam v. Dean & Co., 85 N.J.L. 549, 89 A. 760 \(N.J. 1914\) and Zone Co., 137 N.J.L. 112, 57 A.2d 562, 564-565 \(N.J. 1948\)). Both these cases, however, do not specifically address the manner in which courts are to determine whether a contract [*21] is integrated.<sup>16</sup>

<sup>14</sup> S. Megga's GPA contains a "Non-Exclusive Marketing Rights" clause that provides, in part:

Supplier [S. Megga] agrees that the purchases by Company [Lucent] under this Agreement shall not restrict the right of the Company to cease purchasing or require Company to continue any level of such purchases.

(D.I. 1, Ex. A). S. Meggate's GPA contains a substantially similar clause. (D.I. 1, Ex. B) S. Megga's GPA also contains a "Termination of Purchase Order" clause that provides in part:

Company [Lucent] may at any time terminate any or all purchase orders placed by it hereunder. Unless otherwise specified herein, Company's liability to Supplier [S. Megga] with respect to such terminated purchase order or orders shall be limited to (1) Supplier's purchase price of all components [], plus (2) actual costs incurred by Supplier in procuring and manufacturing MATERIAL [], less (2) any salvage value thereof.

(D.I. 1, Ex. A) S. Meggate's GPA has the exact same clause. (D.I. 1, Ex. B)

<sup>15</sup> Lucent notes correctly that, in Schwimmer, the court allowed the introduction of parole evidence "only for the purpose of interpreting the writing-- not for the purpose of modifying or enlarging or curtailing its terms." 96 A.2d at 656. Lucent, however, is incorrect in characterizing plaintiffs' claims as "seeking to modify, enlarge or curtail the terms of the GPAs." (D.I. 14 at 6-7 n.9) Plaintiffs' argument that the terms of the GPAs do not apply to its other agreements involves interpreting what the parties intended the terms of the GPAs to mean.

<sup>16</sup> In Brautigam, the New Jersey Supreme Court considered a contract without an integration clause. The Brautigam court simply held that the contract was incomplete upon examining its terms. 89 A. at 763. The court recognizes that in Zone Co. the New Jersey Supreme Court held that the contract was integrated because "there is a clear implication of fact from the writing itself." 57 A.2d at 564. However, the New Jersey Supreme Court in Zone Co. also specifically declined to pursue the question of whether extrinsic evidence is admissible in determining whether a contract was integrated. 57 A.2d at 564.

[*22] In Schwimmer, the New Jersey Supreme Court held that HN4<sup>17</sup> the intent of the parties is not to be determined solely by reference to the four corners of the written agreement "even when the contract on its face is free from ambiguity." 96 A.2d at 656. The Schwimmer court stated:

HN5<sup>18</sup> Whether a particular subject of negotiation is embodied by the writing depends wholly upon the intent of the parties; but the intent must be judged by an external standard. The writing is not 'wholly and intrinsically self-determinative of the parties' intent to make it the sole memorial' of the subject of negotiation; this intent 'must be sought . . . in the conduct and language of the parties and the surrounding circumstances. The document alone will not suffice. What it was intended to cover cannot be known till we know what there was to cover. The question being whether certain subjects of negotiation were intended to be covered, we must compare the writing and the negotiations before we can determine whether they were in fact covered.'

Id. at 657. (quoting Wigmore on Evidence (3rd ed.), sections 2413, 2430, 2431). Given this directive, HN6<sup>19</sup> although a contract with a "merger clause is [*23] strong evidence that the parties" intended the writing to be the complete and exclusive agreement between them, it is not dispositive. L.S. Heath & Son, Inc. v. AT&T Information Systems, Inc., 9 F.3d 561, 569 \(7th Cir. 1993\) (applying New Jersey law).

HN7<sup>20</sup> The parole evidence rule does not apply in determining the "subject matter" of the GPAs or whether they were intended to be the "master agreements." Schwimmer, 96 A.2d at 656. As the Schwimmer court stated, "the parole evidence rule is a rule of substantive law not related to interpretation or the admission of evidence for the purpose of interpretation." Id. "The terms of any contract must be given a meaning by interpretation before it can be determined whether an attempt is being made to 'vary or contradict them.'" Id. (quoting Corbin on Contracts, section 579); see also Garden State Plaza Corp. v. S.S. Kresge Co., 78 N.J. Super. 485, 496, 189 A.2d 448, (App. Div. 1963) (stating that "the parole evidence rule does not even come into play until it is first determined what the true agreement of the parties is--i.e., what they meant by what they wrote down").

In accordance with these settled principles of [*24] contract construction, the court must consider extrinsic evidence in order to determine the scope and meaning of the GPAs as a matter of law. See L.S. Heath & Son, Inc. 9 F.3d at 569. Likewise, the court must consider extrinsic evidence in interpreting plaintiffs' alleged "other agreements."<sup>17</sup>

[*25] Plaintiffs allege that their contract claims involve agreements relating to new or expanded facilities and deferred profits that are beyond the subject matter of the GPAs. Plaintiffs specifically allege that Lucent promised them a long-term business relationship if they deferred profits and invested in new or expanded facilities. Plaintiffs allege that Lucent terminated its relationship without allowing them to recoup these profits and investments.

<sup>18</sup> [*26] Plaintiffs also allege that they reasonably relied upon these promises and suffered substantial and definite

<sup>17</sup> In the alternative, Lucent argues that the statute of frauds renders any oral contract regarding the purchase of telephones unenforceable. (D.I. 9 at 8) Plaintiffs cite California Natural, Inc. v. Nestle Holdings, Inc., for the proposition that they can avoid the application of the statute of frauds through the doctrine of promissory estoppel. 631 F. Supp. 465, 472 \(D.N.J. 1986\) (applying New Jersey law). In response, Lucent argues that, as a matter of law, plaintiffs cannot show reasonable reliance on the alleged agreements because the GPAs contain explicit terms to the contrary. However, without first considering extrinsic evidence relating to the GPAs and other agreements, the court cannot determine, as a matter of law, that plaintiffs' reliance was unreasonable. Id. at 473 (stating that "until all factual issues are resolved . . . the court cannot rule as a matter of law that [plaintiff's] reliance was unreasonable").

<sup>18</sup> HN8<sup>21</sup> Under New Jersey law, a breach of an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing may be established if a defendant encourages a plaintiff to make substantial investments while actively concealing its decision to terminate a contract. Bak-A-Lum Corp. v. Alcoa Building Prod., 69 N.J. 123, 351 A.2d 349 \(N.J. 1976\); see also Sons of Thunder, Inc. v. Borden, Inc., 285 N.J. Super. 27, 666 A.2d 549, 563 \(App. Div. 1995\) (distinguishing Bak-A-Lum Corp., on the grounds that the defendant did detriment.<sup>19</sup> Consequently, the court finds plaintiffs' allegations as to counts I through III are sufficient to withstand Lucent's motion to dismiss.

3. Fraudulent and Negligent Misrepresentation

Counts IV and V allege fraudulent and negligent misrepresentation respectively. (D.I. 1 at 14-17) Both claims are based on the allegations that Lucent decided to terminate its business dealings with plaintiffs at the same time that it (1) represented to plaintiffs that the level of business in 1996 would at least be equal to 1995 levels; (2) encouraged plaintiffs to expand their facilities at a substantial cost to plaintiffs; and (3) held firm to a requirement that plaintiffs [*27] not deal with Lucent's competitors. (D.I. 1 at 14-15)

HN9 Under New Jersey law, the elements for a claim of fraudulent misrepresentation are: (1) a material misrepresentation of presently existing or past fact; (2) knowledge of falsity by the person making the misrepresentation; (3) intent that the misrepresentation be relied upon; (4) actual and reasonable reliance on the misrepresentation; and (5) detriment to plaintiff. Jewish Ctr. of Sussex County v. Whale, 86 N.J. 619, 432 A.2d 521, 524 (1981). The elements of negligent misrepresentation are (1) a material misrepresentation of a presently existing or past fact; (2) negligently made; and (3) justifiably relied upon. H. Rosenblum, Inc. v. Adler, 93 N.J. 324, 461 A.2d 138 (1983).

Lucent admits that plaintiffs' first allegation-- that business in 1996 would be at least be equal to 1995 levels-- constitutes an alleged "misrepresentation." (D.I. 9 at 14 at 25 n.34) Lucent argues, however, that plaintiffs could not have reasonably relied upon alleged estimates of 1996 purchase orders because the GPAs explicitly provide that forecasts of future purchase order are not commitments to purchase.<sup>20</sup> As discussed above, the court cannot [*28] determine whether plaintiffs' reliance on the allegations was reasonable until it considers extrinsic evidence relating to the formation of the GPAs and plaintiffs' alleged other agreements. See California Natural, Inc. v. Nestle Holdings, Inc., 631 F. Supp. 465, 473 (D.N.J. 1986).

Lucent also argues that count IV fails to meet the requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b) because plaintiffs do not allege the identity of the individual agents of Lucent who made the alleged misrepresentations. HN10 Rule 9(b) provides, in relevant part, that "in all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity." Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b). The Third Circuit has held that "focusing exclusively on [Rule 9(b)]'s 'particularity' language is too narrow an approach and fails [*29] to take into account the general simplicity and flexibility contemplated by the rules." Christidis v. First Pa. Mortgage Trust, 717 F.2d 96, 100 (3d Cir. 1983).

Lucent cites Saporito v. Combustion Eng'g, Inc. for the proposition that plaintiffs are required by Rule 9(b) to plead the author and recipient of the alleged misrepresentations. 843 F.2d 666, 675 (3d Cir. 1988), vacated on other grounds, 489 U.S. 1049 (1989). In Saporito, however, the Third Circuit did not explicitly hold that a plaintiff must identify the author and recipient of the misrepresentations in order to satisfy the "particularity" requirement of Rule 9(b). Instead, the Third Circuit held that the pleadings simply did not provide a sufficient level of notice of the not actively conceal its decision to terminate the contract). In the present case, plaintiffs allege that Lucent concealed its decision to terminate its relationship, while it encouraged plaintiffs to invest in new or expanded facilities. (D.I. 11 at 20)

---

<sup>19</sup> Under New Jersey law, in order to state a claim for promissory estoppel a plaintiff must allege the following: (1) a clear and definite promise was made by the promisor; (2) the promise was made with the expectation that the promisee would rely on it; (3) the promisee must in fact reasonably rely on the promise; and (4) the promisee suffered detriment on a definite and substantial nature in reliance on the promise. R. J. Longo Constr. Co. v. Transit Am., 921 F. Supp. 1295, 1305 (D.N.J. 1996). The court finds that plaintiffs have alleged these required elements.

<sup>20</sup> The "Entire Agreement Clause" in the GPAs provides Estimates or forecasts furnished by Company [Lucent] shall not constitute commitments.

precise misconduct charged. Id. at 675. In Seville Indus. Mach. Corp. v. Southmost Mach. Corp., the Third Circuit stated that HN11 [↑] "Rule 9(b) requires plaintiffs to plead with particularity the 'circumstances' of the alleged fraud in order to place the defendants on notice of the precise misconduct charged, and to safeguard defendants against spurious charges of immoral and fraudulent behavior." 742 F.2d 786, 791 \(3d Cir. 1984\). In accordance with these objectives and mindful of the ruling in Christidis, the Third Circuit held that allegations of date, place, or time are not required and "plaintiffs are free to use alternative means of injecting precision and some measure of substantiation into their allegations of fraud." Id.

Plaintiffs allege that while Lucent knew it was going to terminate its relationship with plaintiffs, it represented to them that plaintiffs' business for 1996 would at least be equal to 1995 levels. (D.I. 1 at 14) Plaintiffs allege that Lucent made this misrepresentation "less than three months before terminating its relationship" with them. (D.I. 1 at 14) Plaintiffs also allege that Lucent failed to disclose its plan to terminate its relationship with plaintiffs, despite its knowledge that plaintiffs built and expanded their facilities based upon Lucent's promise for a long-term business relationship. (D.I. 1 at 15) In addition to these allegations, a letter signed by one of Lucent's agents, detailing some of the alleged misrepresentations, is attached to the complaint. (D.I. 1, Ex. C) The court finds these allegations to be sufficiently particular under the requirement [*31] of Rule 9\(b\). Consequently, the court shall deny Lucent's motion as to counts IV and V.

4. Attempted Monopolization

In count VI, plaintiffs allege that Lucent violated Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, when it terminated its business relationship with them. Plaintiffs claim that Lucent controls a substantial percentage of the market for cordless telephones because it terminated its relationship with plaintiffs while encouraging them to invest in new facilities. (D.I. 1 at 18) According to plaintiffs, Lucent has exercised its market power to control the supply and price of cordless telephones, eliminate competition, and exclude others from participating or entering the relevant market. (D.I. 1 at 18)

Lucent argues that plaintiffs have failed to state an antitrust claim because, inter alia, they fail to allege a basis for subject matter jurisdiction.<sup>21</sup> Lucent asserts that the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act, 15 U.S.C. § 6a ("FTAIA"), applies to plaintiffs' claim because it involves trade or commerce with foreign nations. HN12 [↑] The FTAIA provides, in part, that sections 1 through 7 of the Sherman Act

Shall not apply to conduct involving [*32] trade or commerce (other than import trade or import commerce) with foreign nations unless--

- (1) such conduct has a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect--
- (A) on trade or commerce which is not trade or commerce with foreign nations, or on import trade or import commerce with foreign nations; or
- (B) on export trade or export commerce with foreign nations, of a person engaged in such trade or commerce in the United States; . . . .

15 U.S.C. § 6a (emphasis added). Lucent contends that plaintiffs' complaint fails to pleads facts from which the court can conclude that Lucent's conduct had a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect in the United States.

[*33] According to plaintiffs, the direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable standard of the FTAIA does not apply to conduct that affects import trade or import commerce. (D.I. 11 at 31) Plaintiffs argue that the court need only determine whether the challenged conduct has, or is intended to have, any anticompetitive effect upon United States commerce. (D.I. 11 at 31) Plaintiffs argue that the challenged conduct in this case satisfies either standard.

<sup>21</sup> Lucent also argues that plaintiffs' antitrust claim should be dismissed because they fail to allege (1) that Lucent had a dangerous probability of success in attempting to monopolize the relevant market and (2) fail to allege an antitrust injury. The court declines to address these issues since it finds that plaintiffs have failed to establish jurisdiction.

Plaintiffs claim that Lucent's conduct "precluded them from selling their goods in the United States and negatively affected consumers in the United States by forcing higher prices and reduced output." (D.I. 11 at 33) Plaintiffs also argue that Lucent engaged in anticompetitive activities by preventing them from dealing with Lucent's competitors and making profits. (D.I. 11 at 33-34)

The court finds plaintiffs' arguments meritless. The complaint contains no factual allegations that plaintiffs themselves imported or planned to import any product into the United States. The complaint also does not contain any allegations relating to how plaintiffs were prevented from importing products into the United States. The complaint clearly establishes [*34] that plaintiffs are foreign corporations that only manufactured products for Lucent. (D.I. 1 at 4-6) Since the parties' relationship involved trade and commerce with foreign nations, the court finds that the FTAIA applies.<sup>22</sup> The 'In' Porters, S.A. v. Hanes Printables, Inc., 663 F. Supp. 494, 500 (M.D.N.C. 1987) (applying section 6a to antitrust plaintiffs, "other than [] domestic importers"); Coors Brewing Co. v. Miller Brewing Co., 889 F. Supp. 1394, 1398 (D. Colo. 1995) (stating that the FTAIA applies to antitrust plaintiffs "with the exception of claims brought by domestic importers"); Caribbean Broadcast System Ltd. v. Cable and Wireless PLC, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19225, C.A. No. 93-2050, 1995 WL 76164, at *2 (D.D.C. Dec. 21, 1995) (noting that the FTAIA "makes clear that the concern of the antitrust laws is protection of American consumers and American exporters, not foreign consumers or producers"); United Phosphorus LTD v. Angus Chemical Co., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14786, C.A. No. 94-C-2078, 1994 WL 577246 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 18, 1994).

[*35] HN13[

The FTAIA requires an "actual injury to plaintiff within the United States." The 'In' Porters, Inc., 663 F. Supp. at 500 (holding that a "foreign company can not demonstrate the domestic injury requirement by 'piggybacking' onto the injury of a United States exporter"); Optimum, S.A. v. Legent Corp., 926 F. Supp. 530, 532-533 (W.D. Pa 1996). Plaintiffs' alleged injuries--lost sales to Lucent-- are not injuries within the United States. Consequently, the court finds that plaintiffs fail to establish subject matter jurisdiction under the FTAIA and shall grant Lucent's motion as to count VI.

5. Breach of Fiduciary Duty

Count VII of the complaint alleges that Lucent breached its fiduciary duty to plaintiffs when it terminated their business relationship. (D.I. 1 at 19) Lucent argues that the parties in this case are "corporations dealing at arm's length" and therefore no fiduciary duty could exist between them.

The court agrees. There are no allegations in the complaint that could support a finding that Lucent owed a fiduciary duty to plaintiffs. In count VII, plaintiffs simply allege that they had a "special and unique relationship" with Lucent because of Lucent's involvement [*36] in establishing manufacturing facilities in Malaysia and China. (D.I. 1 at 19) In their brief, plaintiffs also argue that they had a special and unique relationship with Lucent because they were involved in the Joint Venture. (D.I. 11 at 40) Plaintiffs cite New Jersey law for the proposition that joint venturers owe each other a fiduciary duty.<sup>23</sup> The allegations in count VII, however, do not incorporate any allegations relating to the Joint Venture. (D.I. 1 at 19-20) Furthermore, the record clearly establishes that the Joint Venture Agreement is governed by Chinese law and plaintiffs do not cite any Chinese authority. (D.I. 25, Ex. 1 at 22) Consequently, the court finds as a matter of law that Lucent did not owe a fiduciary duty to plaintiffs. The court shall grant Lucent's motion as to count VII of the complaint.

<sup>22</sup> The court declines to follow the ruling in Eskofot A/S v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., cited by plaintiffs. 872 F. Supp. 81 (S.D.N.Y. 1995). The majority of cases, cited above, establish that the "import trade or import commerce" exception in the FTAIA applies only to domestic importers. Furthermore, plaintiffs' case is factually different from Eskofot A/S. In Eskofot A/S, the plaintiff alleged that both it and the defendant planned to market and sell their products in the United States. Id. at 85. In the present case, the complaint contains no allegations that plaintiffs imported or planned to import any products into the United States themselves.

<sup>23</sup> The case plaintiffs cite is LoBosco v. Kure Eng'g Ltd., 891 F. Supp. 1020 (D.N.J. 1995).

B. Plaintiffs' Motion to Dismiss

On January 2, 1997, Lucent filed counterclaims against plaintiff [*37] S. Megga for selling telephones in China. (D.I. 20) Plaintiffs moved to dismiss Lucent's counterclaims. (D.I. 23) Plaintiffs argue that Lucent's counterclaims are permissive counterclaims and should be dismissed based on the doctrine of forum non conveniens.

1. Compulsory vs. Permissive Counterclaims

HN14[] In order for a federal court to entertain a counterclaim, the counterclaim must be either a compulsory counterclaim and so fall within the court's ancillary jurisdiction, or a permissive counterclaim with an independent basis of jurisdiction. Akzona Inc. v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 662 F. Supp. 603, 618 n.29 \(D. Del. 1987\). Rule 13\(a\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that a counterclaim is compulsory "if it arises out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the opposing party's claim and does not require for its adjudication the presence of third parties of whom the court cannot acquire jurisdiction." Permissive counterclaims are claims "not arising out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the opposing party's claim." Fed.R.Civ.P. 12\(b\).

As this court has noted before, HN15[] "the United States Court [*38] of Appeals for the Third Circuit has embraced a fairly liberal interpretation of the 'transaction or occurrence' standard, establishing as 'the operative question in determining if a claim is a compulsory counterclaim . . . whether [the counterclaim] bears a logical relationship to an opposing party's claim.'" Standard Chlorine of Del., Inc. v. Sinibaldi, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13913, C.A. No. 91-188- SLR, 1995 WL 562285 at \*3 \(D. Del. Aug. 24, 1995\) \(citing Xerox Corp. v. SCM Corp., 576 F.2d 1057, 1059 \(3d Cir. 1978\)\).

HN16[] In determining whether a 'logical relationship' exists between an opposing party's claim and a counterclaim, the court will analyze several factors: (1) Are the issues in fact and law raised by the claim and counterclaim largely the same?; (2) Would res judicata bar a subsequent suit on defendant's claim absent the compulsory counterclaim rule?; and (3) Will substantially the same evidence support or refute plaintiff's claim as well as defendant's counterclaims?

Sinibaldi, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13913, 1995 WL 562285 at *3. In its counterclaims, Lucent alleges that S. Megga breached and continues to breach its GPA, and has violated and continues to violate the trademark, unfair competition, and [*39] business secret laws of China by selling cordless telephones in China. (D.I. 20 at 15, 17-21) The factual issues raised by these counterclaims concern cordless telephones that were intended for sale to the Joint Venture. (D.I. 17 at 5; D.I. 24 at 4) Lucent also suggests that S. Megga may be making more cordless telephones with Lucent's technology and insignia for sale in China. (D.I. 19) Plaintiffs' complaint concerns Lucent's role in the building and expansion of plaintiffs' manufacturing facilities. The factual issues raised by plaintiffs' complaint concern the contractual relationship between the plaintiffs and Lucent.

Although both Lucent's and plaintiffs' claims involve the interpretation of S. Megga's GPA, there is no significant overlap of factual issues between Lucent's and plaintiffs' claims. The factual issues involved in Lucent's counterclaims concern telephones that S. Megga made for the Joint Venture. These telephones are not at issue in plaintiffs' complaint. The legal issues involved in Lucent's counterclaims are also different from any of plaintiffs' claims.<sup>24</sup> Given that there is no significant overlap of facts or law between Lucent's and the plaintiffs' claims, [*40] the court finds no "logical relationship" between Lucent's and plaintiffs' claims. See Sinibaldi, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13913, 1995 WL 562285 at *3 (D. Del 1995); see also Alesayi Beverage Corp. v. Canada Dry Corp., 797 F. Supp. 320, 321 (S.D.N.Y. 1992). Consequently, the court finds that Lucent's counterclaims are permissive counterclaims. See Brady v. Schwartz Motor Co., Inc., 723 F. Supp. 1045 (D. Del. 1989) (finding no logical relationship between a federal claim and a state law claim involving the same loan transaction); see also Alesayi Beverage Corp., 797 F. Supp. at 322 (dismissing intellectual property counterclaims while maintaining jurisdiction over similar contract counterclaim).

[*41] In anticipation that this court may determine that some or all of its counterclaims are permissive, Lucent argues that this court has jurisdiction over its counterclaims based on diversity jurisdiction. (D.I. 21 at 24) In response, plaintiffs argue that Lucent's counterclaims should be dismissed on forum non conveniens grounds.

2. Forum Non Conveniens

HN17 [↑] The court has the discretion to grant or deny a motion to dismiss a claim under the doctrine of forum non conveniens. Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno, 454 U.S. 235, 257, 70 L. Ed. 2d 419, 102 S. Ct. 252 (1981); Lacey v. Cessna Aircraft Co., 932 F.2d 170, 178 (3d Cir. 1991). Under this doctrine, the party seeking dismissal of a claim has the initial burden of establishing that an adequate alternative forum exists. Id. at 180. Once the moving party has established that an alternative forum exists, "it must then show that the private and public interest factors weigh heavily in favor of dismissal." Id.

Plaintiffs assert that an alternative forum exists in either the courts of China or the arbitration court of the International Chamber of Commerce in Sweden. (D.I. 24 at 8-9) Generally, [*42] an adequate alternative forum exists if the nonmoving party is amenable to process in the other jurisdiction. Id. Lucent does not argue that it is not amenable to process in either China or Sweden. Instead, Lucent argues that its claims are simply more conveniently adjudicated here since the plaintiffs have brought their claims in this court. (D.I. 21 at 24-25) Consequently, the court finds that an alternative forum exists for Lucent's intellectual property claims in either the courts of China or the arbitration court in Sweden.

HN18 [↑] Once an adequate alternative forum is established, the court must balance several private and public interest factors to determine whether dismissal is proper. Id.

The private interest factors include relative ease of access to sources of proof; availability of compulsory process for attendance of unwilling, and the cost of obtaining attendance of willing, witnesses; . . . and all other practical problems that make a trial of a case easy, expeditious and inexpensive.

[] The public interest factors include:

. . . the 'local interest in having localized controversies decided at home'; the interest in having the trial of a diversity [*43] case in a forum that is at home with the law that must govern the action; the avoidance of unnecessary problems in conflict of laws, or in application of foreign laws. . . .

Id. at 180 (quoting Piper, 454 U.S. at 241).

In reviewing the record, the court finds that, on balance, the private and public interest factors weigh in favor of dismissal. Lucent's claims involve telephones that were made by S. Megga for the Joint Venture, not for Lucent. The Joint Venture has not been joined as a party in this case and is governed by Chinese law. Furthermore, <sup>24</sup> Lucent's intellectual property counterclaims are based on Chinese law, whereas the GPAs and plaintiffs' claims are governed by New Jersey law. Furthermore, although Lucent's counterclaims are based on the GPAs, the telephones in dispute were intended for sale to the Joint Venture, which is governed by Chinese law.

Lucent's intellectual property claims would involve complex issues of Chinese procedural and substantive law. With respect to these private interest factors, the court finds that Lucent's claims would unnecessarily burden the trial of plaintiffs' claims. See Mars Inc. v. Kabushiki-Kaisha Nippon Conlux, 24 F.3d 1368, 1376 (Fed. Cir. 1994) (stating that trial court made findings sufficient to support dismissal of Japanese patent infringement claim on forum non conveniens grounds). With respect to the public interest factors, the court finds, as the Mars court recognized, that "general concerns respecting [*44] international comity counsel against exercising jurisdiction over matters involving" Chinese intellectual property law. Id. Consequently, the court shall grant plaintiffs' motion to dismiss counts I through IV of Lucent's counterclaims on forum non conveniens grounds.

C. Lucent's Motion for a Temporary Restraining Order

Based on the allegations set forth in its counterclaims, Lucent moved for a temporary restraining order. (D.I. 16) Since the court shall dismiss Lucent's counterclaims, its motion for a temporary restraining order is denied as moot.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the court shall deny Lucent's motion to dismiss as to counts I through V and grant its motion to dismiss as to counts VI and VII. The court shall grant plaintiffs' motion to dismiss Lucent's counterclaims. The court shall also deny Lucent's motion for a temporary restraining order as moot.

An order consistent with this memorandum opinion shall issue.

---

End of Document

Florida Seed Co. v. Monsanto Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit

February 18, 1997, Decided

No. 96-6080

Reporter

105 F.3d 1372 *; 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 2777 **; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,721; 10 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. C 710

FLORIDA SEED COMPANY, INC., a corporation, Frit Industries, Inc., a corporation, Plaintiffs-Counter-Defendants-Appellants, v. MONSANTO COMPANY, a corporation, Defendant-Counter-Claimant-Appellee.

Subsequent History: [\[\*\*1\]](#) Certiorari Denied October 14, 1997, Reported at: 1997 U.S. LEXIS 6035.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Middle District of Alabama. (No. CV-94-D-514-N). Ira De Ment, Judge.

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

---

antitrust, anti trust law, merger, distributors, acquisition, Sherman Act, distributorship, nonselective, terminated, herbicide, products

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The question of standing is one of law. Accordingly, the court reviews de novo the district court's judgment of dismissal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Private Actions, Standing

The court follows a two-pronged approach in deciding whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing. First, the plaintiff must establish that it has suffered "antitrust injury." Plaintiffs must prove more than injury casually linked to an illegal presence in the market. Plaintiffs must prove injury of the type that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful. Second, the plaintiff must establish that it is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws. This determination is predicated on the "target area test." The target area test requires that an antitrust plaintiff both prove that he is within that sector of the economy endangered by a breakdown of competitive conditions in a particular industry and that he is the target against which anticompetitive activity is directed. Basically, a plaintiff must show that it is a customer or competitor in the relevant antitrust market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

HN3 [down arrow] Horizontal Refusals to Deal, Sherman Act

Economic loss suffered as the result of a merger is not an antitrust injury because the loss does not flow from that which makes a merger unlawful. Courts have consistently denied standing to distributors who were terminated, or whose contracts were not renewed, following a merger. Distributors who are terminated following a merger suffer no antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Private Actions, Standing

Courts uniformly have held that stockholders lack standing to bring an antitrust suit for injury to their corporations.

Counsel: ATTORNEY(S) FOR APPELLANT(S): CHARLES M. CROOK, Balch & Bingham, Montgomery, Alabama. Phillip A. Nichols, Birmingham, AL. John F. Mandt, Balch & Bingham, Birmingham, AL.

ATTORNEY(S) FOR APPELLEE(S): Melody L. Hurdle, LIGHTFOOT, FRANKLIN & WHITE, L.L.C., Birmingham, AL. Kenneth A. Letzler, Arnold & Porter, Washington, D.C.

Judges: Before TJOFLAT and DUBINA, Circuit Judges, and STAGG, * Senior District Judge.

Opinion by: DUBINA

Opinion

---

* Honorable Tom Stagg, Senior U.S. District Judge for the Western District of Louisiana, sitting by designation.

[*1373] DUBINA, Circuit Judge:

Plaintiffs/Appellants Florida Seed Company, Inc. ("Florida Seed") and Frit Industries ("Frit") appeal the district court's judgment dismissing their Sherman Act claim against Defendant/Appellee Monsanto Company ("Monsanto"). The district court held that Plaintiffs lacked standing to assert their antitrust claims. We affirm.

I. BACKGROUND

This case arises out of Monsanto's 1993 acquisition of the Chevron Corporation's Ortho lawn and garden business ("Ortho"). Ortho markets some 200 lawn and garden products. Florida Seed is engaged in wholesale distribution and marketing of lawn and garden products. Prior to Monsanto's acquisition of Ortho, Florida Seed handled the product lines of both Monsanto and Ortho.

The Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") believed that Monsanto's acquisition of Ortho created competitive [*2] issues as to one of Ortho's products, a nonselective herbicide called "Kleenup." Kleenup is based on glyphosate, a patented ingredient that Ortho purchases from Monsanto. Monsanto also uses glyphosate in its nonselective herbicide called "Roundup." Monsanto entered into a consent decree with the FTC agreeing to divest to a suitable purchaser the trademark "Kleenup." The agreement also provided that Monsanto would sell a significant volume of glyphosate, plus manufacturing know-how and certain regulatory approvals and filings, on a time schedule acceptable to the FTC. The consent decree does not contain any reference to the distribution channels for Kleenup.

After acquiring Ortho, Monsanto notified Florida Seed that its distributorship agreement for Ortho products would not be renewed following its expiration. Monsanto stated that the decision was part of a broader strategic decision to use fewer distributors. Following expiration of the distributorship relationship, Florida Seed refused to pay Monsanto certain amounts owed. Monsanto therefore demanded payment from Frit, which had guaranteed Florida Seed's debt. Florida Seed and Frit then filed this antitrust suit.

Plaintiffs allege [*3] that Monsanto engaged in monopolization and attempted monopolization of the residential nonselective herbicide market in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act by its acquisition of Ortho and its termination of Florida Seed's distributorship.<sup>1</sup> Plaintiffs contend that Monsanto's decision was aimed at damaging the value of Kleenup prior to its divestiture under the FTC consent decree.

II. ISSUE

Whether the district court properly dismissed Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claim because they lacked standing to assert such claim.

[*1374] III. STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1 [↑] "The question of standing is one of law." Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Auth., 921 F.2d 1438, 1448 (11th Cir.1991). Accordingly, we review de novo the district court's judgment [*4] of dismissal. DeLong Equip. Co. v. Washington Mills Electro Minerals Corp., 990 F.2d 1186, 1194 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1012, 114 S. Ct. 604, 126 L. Ed. 2d 569 (1993).

IV. DISCUSSION

A private plaintiff seeking damages under the antitrust laws must establish standing to sue. Antitrust standing requires more than the "injury in fact" and the "case or controversy" required by Article III of the Constitution. Todorov, 921 F.2d at 1448. Rather, the doctrine of antitrust standing reflects prudential concerns and is designed to avoid burdening the courts with speculative or remote claims. Associated Gen. Contractors of California, Inc. v.

---

<sup>1</sup> Plaintiffs also brought a claim under the Clayton Act, which the district court dismissed. Plaintiffs do not contest this ruling on appeal. Moreover, Plaintiffs asserted various claims under state law that were not ruled on by the district court and have been stayed pending this appeal.

California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 545, 103 S. Ct. 897, 912, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). See also Todorov, 921 F.2d at 1448 ("Antitrust standing is best understood in a general sense as a search for the proper plaintiff to enforce the antitrust laws."); PHILIP AREEDA & HERBERT HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW P 334.2 at 409 (1993 Supp.).

HN2 [↑] We follow a two-pronged approach in deciding whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing. Municipal Utils. Bd. of Albertville v. Alabama Power Co., 934 F.2d 1493, 1499 (11th Cir. 1991). First, the plaintiff must establish that it has suffered "antitrust injury." Id. As the Supreme Court has made clear, to have standing antitrust plaintiffs "must prove more than injury casually linked to an illegal presence in the market [i.e., but for causation]. Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-o-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 697, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977).

Second, the plaintiff must establish that it is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws. Municipal Utils. Bd. of Albertville, 934 F.2d at 1499. This determination is predicated on the "target area test." Austin v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Ala., 903 F.2d 1385, 1388 (11th Cir. 1990). The target area test requires that an antitrust plaintiff both "prove that he is within that sector of the economy endangered by a breakdown of competitive conditions in a particular industry" and that he is "the target against which anticompetitive activity is directed." National Indep. Theatre Exhibitors, [**6] Inc. v. Buena Vista Distribution Co., 748 F.2d 602, 608 (11th Cir. 1984), cert. denied sub nom., Patterson v. Buena Vista Distribution Co., 474 U.S. 1013, 106 S. Ct. 544, 88 L. Ed. 2d 473 (1985). Basically, a plaintiff must show that it is a customer or competitor in the relevant antitrust market. Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 539, 103 S. Ct. at 909.

A. Standing of Florida Seed

Plaintiffs' complaint relates to Florida Seed's inability to purchase nonselective herbicides from Monsanto, not to an increase in prices or to a lessening of competition. At one time, Florida Seed was both a customer and a distributor of Kleenup. Now, Florida Seed is neither. In fact, Florida Seed admits that the "termination of [its] distributorship is at the heart of this case." Plaintiffs-Appellants Brief at 5. Nevertheless, Plaintiffs argue that they may maintain an antitrust action based on the terminated distributorship because, in their view, Monsanto violated the Sherman Act "by dealing with its own distributor in furtherance of an anticompetitive purpose." Id. at 26. We disagree.

The Supreme Court pointed out in Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-o-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977), that "every merger of two existing entities into one, whether lawful or unlawful, has the potential for producing economic readjustments that adversely affect some persons. But Congress has not condemned mergers on that account; it has condemned them only when they may produce anticompetitive effects." Id. at 487, 97 S. Ct. at 696. "The objective in preventing certain mergers is ... to prevent [the acquiring party] from obtaining sufficient market power to raise [*1375] prices...." Tugboat, Inc. v. Mobile Towing Co., 534 F.2d 1172, 1176 (5th Cir. 1976).<sup>2</sup> Obviously, mergers often have an adverse impact on those employees, suppliers, or distributors made redundant by a merger. In many instances, those displaced by a merger suffer an economic loss. However, HN3 [↑] this loss is not an antitrust injury because it does not flow from that which makes a merger unlawful. Injuries like that suffered by Florida Seed do not "coincide[] with the public detriment tending to result from the alleged violation." Todorov, 921 F.2d at 1450; see also Kenneth L. Glazer and Abbot B. Lipky, Jr., Unilateral Refusals to Deal Under Section 2 of the [**8] Sherman Act, 63 ANTIT. L.J. 749, 787-90 (1995) (suggesting "per se legality" for manufacturer's efforts to vertically integrate distribution of its own products).

Relying on Brunswick, courts have consistently denied standing to distributors who were terminated, or whose contracts were not renewed, following a merger. See Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328,

---

<sup>2</sup> In Bonner v. City of Prichard, 661 F.2d 1206 (11th Cir. 1981) (en banc), the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals adopted as binding precedent the decisions of the former Fifth Circuit issued before October 1, 1981.

345, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 1895, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 \(1990\); G.K.A. Beverage Corp. v. Honickman, 55 F.3d 762 (2nd Cir.), cert. denied, \_\_ U.S. \_\_, 116 S. Ct. 381, 133 L. Ed. 2d 304 (1995); Sierra Wine & Liquor Co. v. Heublein, Inc., 626 F.2d 129 (9th Cir. 1980); John Lenore & Co. v. Olympia Brewing Co., 550 F.2d 495 (9th Cir. 1977); Universal Brands, Inc. v. Philip Morris, Inc., 546 F.2d 30 (5th Cir. 1977); Return on Inv. Systems v. TransLogic Corp., 702 F. Supp. 677 (N.D.Ill. 1988); Bryant Heating & Air Conditioning Corp., Inc. v. Carrier Corp., 597 F. Supp. 1045, 1051-53 (S.D.Fla. 1984); A.G.S. Elecs., Ltd. v. B.S.R. \(U.S.A.\), Ltd., 460 F. Supp. 707, 710 (S.D.N.Y.), aff'd, 591 F.2d 1329 (2nd Cir. 1978). The teaching of these cases is clear: distributors who are terminated following a merger suffer no antitrust injury. Plaintiffs have not shown why we should treat Florida Seed differently. Florida Seed complains not about higher prices or about injury to competition, but about injury to itself. Thus, Florida Seed has suffered no antitrust injury.<sup>3</sup>

[**10] Because we hold that Florida Seed has suffered no antitrust injury, we need not address whether Florida Seed would be an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws as required by the second prong of our standing analysis. However, it is clear from the record that Florida Seed is not an efficient enforcer. Florida Seed cannot allege any nexus between the injury it has suffered and a lessening of competition in the United States. In this case, if the injury the antitrust laws address--the power to raise prices and reduce output--has occurred, the proper parties to challenge Monsanto's acquisition of Ortho are direct purchasers in the nonselective herbicide market.

B. Standing of Frit

Frit is not a customer or competitor in any relevant market, but merely the sole shareholder of Florida Seed and a guarantor of its debt. Plaintiffs allege injury to Florida Seed only, not to Frit. The only injuries allegedly suffered by Frit are as a shareholder and guarantor. Thus, Frit has suffered [*1376] no antitrust injury. HN4 Courts uniformly have held that stockholders, even sole stockholders such as Frit, lack standing to bring an antitrust suit for injury to their corporations. See, e.g., Lovett v. General Motors Corp., 975 F.2d 518 (8th Cir. 1992), rev'd in part, 998 F.2d 575 (1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1113, 114 S. Ct. 1058, 127 L. Ed. 2d 378 (1994); Rand v. Anaconda-Ericsson, Inc., 794 F.2d 843, 849 (2nd Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 987, 107 S. Ct. 579, 93 L. Ed. 2d 582 (1986); Bubar v. Ampco Foods, Inc., 752 F.2d 445, 450 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 472 U.S. 1018, 105 S. Ct. 3481, 87 L. Ed. 2d 616 (1985); Midwestern Waffles, Inc. v. Waffle House, Inc., 734 F.2d 705, 710 (11th Cir. 1984); Harris v. Shell Oil Co., 371 F. Supp. 376, 377 (M.D.Ala. 1974). We agree with the foregoing cases and hold that Frit has suffered no antitrust injury. Accordingly, the district court properly concluded that Frit did not have standing under the antitrust laws to challenge Monsanto's acquisition of Ortho.

V. CONCLUSION

In a recent Seventh Circuit case, Judge Easterbrook wrote that "this is a mundane commercial case, in which a buyer has used the antitrust laws to postpone paying its debts." Digital Equipment Corp. v. Uniq Digital Technologies, Inc., 73 F.3d 756, 763 (7th Cir. 1996). The same is true here. Simply put, this is not an antitrust case

---

<sup>3</sup> Two leading antitrust commentators have addressed whether those displaced by a merger have standing to sue under the antitrust laws.

Many mergers have been challenged by suppliers (including dealers, franchisees, and employees providing the merging firms with distribution and other services) displaced as a result of the merger. Injury-in-fact may be doubtful when equivalent opportunities are available elsewhere. If other opportunities do not exist [as alleged by Florida Seed], displaced suppliers made redundant by a merger suffer actual losses but not antitrust injury, for the rationale for condemning a merger lies in its potential for supracompetitive pricing, not in its potential for cost savings and other efficiencies. A merger that actually brings about supracompetitive prices and diminished output reduces the need for inputs and can therefore injure suppliers. Although such an injury connects more closely with the rationale for finding a violation, it is still not antitrust injury because it is neither the means by which output is restricted nor the direct concern of antitrust rules protecting product market competition.

but rather [**12] a breach of contract case. Plaintiffs' pursuit of this case has forestalled for almost three years Monsanto's efforts to collect the debt owed it by Plaintiffs. In the words of Judge Easterbrook, the "time for payment is at hand." Id.

We affirm the district court's judgment of dismissal.

AFFIRMED.

---

End of Document

Retina Assocs., P.A. v. Southern Baptist Hosp.

United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit

February 19, 1997, Decided

No. 96-3158, Non-Argument Calendar

Reporter

105 F.3d 1376 *; 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 2828 **; 1991-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,722; 10 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. C 701

RETINA ASSOCIATES, P.A., Plaintiff-Appellant, v. SOUTHERN BAPTIST HOSPITAL OF FLORIDA, INC., d.b.a. Baptist Medical Center; Richard L. Simmons, M.D.; Richard L. Simmons, M.D., P.A.; Gerald A. Coluccelli, M.D.; Gerald A. Coluccelli, M.D., P.A., et al., Defendants-Appellees, Baptist Eye Institute, Inc.; BEI, Inc., Movants.

Subsequent History: [\[\*\*1\]](#) Suggestion for Rehearing En Banc Denied April 17, 1997, Reported at: 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 13658.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida. (No. 94-255-CIV-J-10). William Terrell Hodges, Judge.

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

---

retina, anticompetitive, referrals, summary judgment, patients, rule of reason, boycott, network, group boycott, Sherman Act, join, concerted refusal, monopolize, venture, market power, ophthalmologists, contends, percent, ophthalmological, constitutes, effects, per se rule, Defendants', horizontal, antitrust, compete, genuine, markets

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Affidavits

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Initial Burden of Persuasion

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Methods of Discovery > Interrogatories > Purpose & Use of Interrogatories

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN1 Supporting Materials, Affidavits

Summary judgment is appropriate only when the court is satisfied that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). In making this determination, the court must examine the pleadings, affidavits and other evidence in the record in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. The moving party has the initial burden of establishing the nonexistence of a triable fact issue. If the movant is successful on this score, the burden shifts and the non-moving party must come forward with sufficient evidence of every element that he or she must prove. The non-moving party may not simply rest on the pleadings, but must use affidavits, depositions, answers to interrogatories, or other evidence to demonstrate that a genuine fact issue remains to be tried.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN2 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., prohibits every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states or with foreign nations. A 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 plaintiff must establish an agreement between two or more persons to restrain trade affecting interstate commerce. Unilateral conduct will not trigger the prohibition of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN3 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A restraint may be violative of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., because it is solely a naked restraint of trade so offensive to competition as to be unreasonable per se, or because it runs afoul of the more detailed rule of reason inquiry. Conduct is unreasonable per se when it always or almost always tends to restrict competition and decrease output. Claims under the Sherman Act are presumptively evaluated under the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4 [↓] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

The per se rule in antitrust cases requires a historically focused inquiry directed at ascertaining whether the behavior complained of is of the type that regularly poses anticompetitive consequences. Where prior cases have shown that a certain practice is of this type, a deleterious effect on the market will be presumed and no detailed market analysis is required. Where the anticompetitive effect of a practice is not historically clear, the practice may still be per se violative of the antitrust laws if a preliminary examination of market conditions surrounding the alleged restraint at issue reveals such an impact absent any procompetitive justification.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5 [↓] Sherman Act, Claims

Under the rule of reason, the test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To establish that conduct violates 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 under the rule of reason, plaintiff must prove that (1) defendant's conduct had an anticompetitive effect in the relevant market; and (2) that no procompetitive rationale would justify the conduct. In showing that the conduct has an anticompetitive effect, plaintiff may establish either actual anticompetitive effects of the conduct or the potential for genuine anticompetitive effect. To successfully show potential anticompetitive effects, the plaintiff must first define the relevant geographic and product markets and then prove that the defendants possessed power in that market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN6 [↓] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Where a plaintiff stands to benefit from a price increase, it cannot recover for a combination imposing nonprice restraints, here a group boycott, that has the effect of raising the market price.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN7 [↓] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

To prove attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must prove that: (1) defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct; (2) a specific intent on defendant's part to monopolize; and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN8[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Proof of the intent element in an attempt to monopolize requires proof of a specific intent to destroy competition or build a monopoly.

Counsel: ATTORNEY(S) FOR APPELLANT(S): David H. Lichter, James J. Kenny, Scott Eliot Perwin, Miami, FL.

ATTORNEY(S) FOR APPELLEE(S): Kevin E. Grady, H. Suzanne Smith, Atlanta, Ga. Michael J. Dewberry, Alexandra K. Hedrick, Clinton A. Wright, III, Jacksonville, FL. Earl M. Barker, Jr., Jacksonville, FL. Michael M. Eaton, Washington, DC. William E. Kuntz; Smith, Hulsey & Busey, Jacksonville, FL.

Judges: Before TJOFLAT, BIRCH and CARNES, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

---

[*1378] PER CURIAM

We affirm the judgment of the district court for the reasons set out in its dispositive order which is reproduced in the appendix.

AFFIRMED.

APPENDIX

ORDER

This antitrust case is before the Court on the parties' cross-motions for summary judgment. Because the Court finds that the rule of reason, as opposed to the per se doctrine, governs Count I of Plaintiff's complaint, and because there appears to be no genuine issue of material fact as to the lack of anticompetitive effects of the alleged concerted refusal to deal, Defendants' motions for summary judgment on Count I will be granted. Because Plaintiff has failed to demonstrate the existence of a triable fact issue with regard to Defendant Florida Retina Institute's alleged anticompetitive conduct or specific intent to monopolize, summary judgment will also be granted on Count II of the complaint.

FACTS

Retina Associates, P.A. ("RA"), the sole plaintiff in this case, is a Florida professional corporation [**2] whose shareholders are Dr. Fred H. Lambräu, Jr., M.D. and Dr. Michael Stewart, M.D. Drs. Lambräu and Stewart are board-certified ophthalmologists who have specialized in the diagnosis and treatment of diseases of the retina and vitreous. As the name would suggest, RA's practice is limited to retina-related ophthalmology.

[*1379] Defendant Southern Baptist Hospital of Florida, Inc., doing business as Baptist Medical Center ("Baptist"), is a not-for-profit Florida corporation that owns and operates the Baptist Medical Center, the largest acute care hospital in Jacksonville, Florida. Situated on the Baptist Medical Center campus is a four-story building that houses the Baptist Eye Institute ("BEI"). BEI is an amalgamation of non-specialized ophthalmologists comprised of Defendants Richard L. Simmons, M.D., Gerard A. Coluccelli, M.D., Ernst Nicolitz, M.D., Charles P. Adams, Jr., M.D., Frank W. Bowden, III, M.D., Neil T. Shmunes, M.D., and Jeffrey H. Levenson, M.D. All of the BEI defendants except Dr. Levenson have incorporated their medical practices and are the principal shareholders of these professional corporations. The professional corporations are also named defendants.

Sometime in 1989 [**3] Dr. Simmons, apparently on behalf of Defendants Coluccelli, Nicolitz, Adams and Bowden,<sup>1</sup> approached RA with a proposal for the formation of an ophthalmological services group involving several non-specialized ophthalmologists, one or more retina specialists, other ophthalmological specialists and a major local hospital. The proposal involved marketing the group and cross-referral relationships among the involved parties. Simmons goal for the venture was to offer a full range of ophthalmological services in one location.

General ophthalmologists typically refer patients with specific retina problems to retina specialists.<sup>2</sup> That being the case, a retina specialist was perceived as necessary for the venture to provide a wide array of ophthalmological practitioners under one roof. Prior to the events constituting the gravamen of the complaint, RA alleges that it received the majority of retina referrals from the BEI five.

[**4] RA declined Simmons' offer to participate in the group. Meanwhile, the BEI five searched for a hospital that would support the venture. Baptist ultimately decided to participate and agreed to construct a "state of the art and user friendly" building for the provision of myriad ophthalmological services. The building was to contain office space for the ophthalmologists involved as well as space for a diagnostic center and outpatient surgery.

True to the "one-stop shop" concept, the BEI five continued to look for retina specialists willing to participate. RA again declined an offer to join the group. The BEI five also approached Defendant James A. Staman, M.D., another retina specialist and the principal shareholder of Defendant Florida Retina Institute, James A. Staman, M.D., P.A. ("FRI").<sup>3</sup> In February of 1990, Staman accepted the proposal but withdrew from the venture in May 1990. Staman and FRI rejoined BEI permanently in September of 1991. The complaint alleges that the agreement with FRI included the promise that FRI would receive all of the retina referrals from the BEI physicians.

[**5] The BEI five started, as a group, seeing patients in early 1990, and the BEI building at the Baptist Medical Center campus opened in the fall of 1991. Staman and the other FRI specialists began seeing patients in the BEI building shortly thereafter. Defendant's Levenson and Shmunes joined the BEI five in 1993, and opened offices in the BEI building.

The parties estimate that there are between 45 and 50 practicing general ophthalmologists in the Jacksonville area. Plaintiff's best estimate, assuming the appropriateness of its definition of the relevant product and geographic markets, is that the BEI physicians referrals to retina specialists amount to fifteen percent of the total referrals made. While the record discloses some exceptions, FRI has received almost all of the referrals [*1380] for retina specialty work from the BEI physicians since Staman and FRI joined the group.

On March 21, 1994, Plaintiff filed a complaint (Doc. 1) alleging that the BEI physicians' referral of almost all of their retina cases to FRI violates federal antitrust laws. Count I, against all Defendants, maintains that the alleged exclusive referral agreement constitutes a horizontal concerted refusal to deal [**6] or group boycott in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C. § 1. Count II, against Staman and FRI only, alleges that their participation in the alleged exclusionary conduct constitutes an attempt to monopolize in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C. § 2. The complaint prays for monetary and injunctive relief. The parties have engaged in voluminous discovery. Plaintiff and all defendants have filed cross-motions for summary judgment on Count I of the complaint.

---

<sup>1</sup> For convenience, these defendants will be collectively referred to as the BEI five.

<sup>2</sup> Plaintiff's expert, Dr. McClave, estimates that approximately ninety percent of the patients treated by Jacksonville based retina specialists are referred by other health care providers.

<sup>3</sup> At the time this lawsuit was commenced, there were three retinal specialty practices in Jacksonville: RA, Florida Retina Institute and that of Dr. James Bolling who is affiliated with the Mayo Clinic.

Defendants Staman and Florida Retina Institute have filed a motion for summary judgment on Count II. All of the motions have been thoroughly briefed.

DISCUSSION

HN1[] Summary judgment is appropriate only when the Court is satisfied that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." F.R.Civ.P. 56\(c\). In making this determination, the Court must examine the pleadings, affidavits and other evidence in the record "in the light most favorable to the non-moving party." Samples on Behalf of Samples v. Atlanta, 846 F.2d 1328, 1330 \(11th Cir.1988\). The moving party has the initial burden of establishing the nonexistence of a [**7] triable fact issue. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1986\). If the movant is successful on this score, the burden shifts and the non-moving party must come forward with "sufficient evidence of every element that he or she must prove." Rollins v. TechSouth, Inc., 833 F.2d 1525, 1528 \(11th Cir.1987\). The non-moving party may not simply rest on the pleadings, but must use affidavits, depositions, answers to interrogatories or other evidence to demonstrate that a genuine fact issue remains to be tried. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 324, 106 S. Ct. at 2553.

A. The Horizontal Concerted Refusal to Deal Claim

Plaintiff contends that the exclusive referral agreement between the BEI physicians and Staman and the FRI constitutes a horizontal concerted refusal to deal or group boycott violative of Section 1 of the Sherman Act as a combination in restraint of trade. HN2[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, prohibits "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations...." A Section 1 Plaintiff must establish an agreement between [**8] two or more persons to restrain trade affecting interstate commerce. Unilateral conduct will not trigger the prohibition of Section 1. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 1469, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 \(1984\), Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Auth., 921 F.2d 1438, 1455 \(11th Cir.1991\).

Assuming, without deciding, that the conduct alleged here constitutes an agreement among several individuals <sup>4</sup> to refer retina cases solely to FRI and to thereby refuse to deal with RA, RA must still establish that the purported agreement unreasonably restrains competition. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 58-64, 31 S. Ct. 502, 515-17, 55 L. Ed. 619 \(1911\). HN3[] A restraint may be violative of the Sherman Act because it is solely a naked restraint of trade so offensive to competition as to be unreasonable per se, or because it runs afoul of the more detailed rule of reason inquiry. [F.T.C. v. Indiana Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 457-58, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 2017, 90 L. Ed. 2d \[\*1381\] 445 \(1986\)](#). Conduct is unreasonable per se when it "always or almost always tends to restrict competition and decrease output." [Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting \[\*91\] Sys., Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 19-20, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 1562, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 \(1979\)](#). Claims under the Sherman Act are presumptively evaluated under the rule of reason. Levine v. Cent. Florida Medical Affiliates, 72 F.3d 1538, 1549 \(11th Cir.1996\) (quoting Seagood Trading Corp. v. Jerrico, Inc., 924 F.2d 1555, 1567 \(11th Cir.1991\)).

1. Is the Conduct Per Se Unreasonable?

Plaintiff contends that it is entitled to summary judgment because the alleged horizontal concerted refusal to deal or group boycott is properly considered [**10] unreasonable per se. E.g., Klor's Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 \(1959\). However, the recent jurisprudence of the Supreme Court and of the Court of Appeals of this Circuit cautions against the haphazard expansion of the "group boycott label" and the concomitant imposition of per se liability. Indiana Fed'n, 476 U.S. at 458, 106 S. Ct. at 2018, Levine, 72 F.3d at

---

<sup>4</sup> Whether there is an actual combination or conspiracy appears to be an issue among the parties. Defendants seem to argue that BEI is a legitimate joint venture and that the referral of patients exclusively to FRI is reasonably necessary to effectuate its purpose. However, assuming defendants can establish the existence of a joint venture, its practices would not thereby automatically be immune from antitrust scrutiny. See 2 EARL W. KINTNER, FEDERAL ANTITRUST LAW § 9.15 (1980).

1550 (citing Consultants & Designers, Inc. v. Butler Serv. Group, Inc., 720 F.2d 1553, 1561 (11th Cir. 1983)). "The per se approach has generally been limited to cases in which firms with market power boycott suppliers or customers in order to discourage them from doing business with a competitor...." Indiana Fed'n, 476 U.S. at 458, 106 S. Ct. at 2018. Unless the conspirators imposing the group boycott possess "market power or exclusive access to an element essential to effective competition, the conclusion that expulsion is virtually always likely to have an anticompetitive effect is not warranted." Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery and Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 296, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 2621, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1985). [**11]

In sum, HN4[<sup>14</sup>] the per se rule requires a historically focused inquiry directed at ascertaining whether the behavior complained of is of the type that regularly poses anticompetitive consequences. Where prior cases have shown that a certain practice is of this type, a deleterious effect on the market will be presumed and no detailed market analysis is required. Where the anticompetitive effect of a practice is not historically clear, the practice may still be per se violative of the antitrust laws if a preliminary examination of market conditions surrounding the alleged restraint at issue reveals such an impact absent any procompetitive justification. Indiana Fed'n, 476 U.S. at 458-59, 106 S. Ct. at 2018 ("We have been slow ... to extend per se analysis to restraints imposed in the context of business relationships where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious...."); Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 15-19, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 1560-61, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984). This examination of market forces is not as detailed as the one required by the rule of reason, and has been referred to as a "quick look" at market conditions. U.S. [**12] Healthcare, Inc. v. Healthsource, Inc., 986 F.2d 589, 594 (1st Cir. 1993).

Plaintiff's argument for evaluation of this case under the per se rule must fail for two reasons: (1) the boycott alleged here is not of the type that has been historically shown to always or almost always adversely affect competition; and (2) the market power possessed by defendants in terms of patient referrals is insufficient as a matter of law to justify per se treatment.

Assuming, for the moment, that Plaintiff is able to establish that the BEI physicians have sufficient market power, analyzing this case under the per se rubric would remain inappropriate absent some demonstration that the practice at issue historically leads to anticompetitive effects in the market. Levine, 72 F.3d at 1550 (citing Consultants and Designers, 720 F.2d at 1562)). Levine involved a Section 1 attack by an internist excluded from a PPO panel and a physician provider network.

Levine alleged that the exclusion constituted a concerted refusal to deal. The PPO and provider network contended that Levine was excluded because no more internists were needed in Levine's area. In affirming a district court's [**13] grant of defendants' motion for summary judgment, the Eleventh Circuit declined [*1382] to apply the per se rule. 72 F.3d 1538 at 1550-51.

The court, relying on a recently issued DOJ Enforcement Policy, held that the courts have had insufficient experience with multiprovider networks to justify condemning their exclusion practices as per se violative of the Sherman Act. Id. at 1550. In an effort to contain costs and enhance the competitive ability of the network, multiprovider networks typically contract with some, but not all, health care providers in a given area. Additionally, multiprovider network membership restrictions may yield a procompetitive benefit by giving those excluded the impetus to form competing networks. Id. (quoting DOJ Enforcement Policy, available in WESTLAW, 1994 WL 642477, at *42).

Levine's analysis on this score is equally applicable to this case. Testimony, in the record, apparently uncontested, demonstrates that it is not at all unusual for networks like BEI to affiliate with only a single retina group. BEI's guiding goal is the provision of a "one-stop shop" for eye care and the cost-containment and convenience that it represents. Further, [**14] since BEI's inception, two competing multiprovider eye care networks formed.<sup>5</sup> The anticompetitive effect of the alleged boycott is far from being "immediately obvious" and, as such, analysis under the per se rule is improper. *Indiana Fed'n, 476 U.S. at 459, 106 S. Ct. at 2018.*

Plaintiff contends that the reasoning of Levine and the DOJ enforcement policy is inapplicable here because [**15] those authorities dealt with the ability of physicians to combine to jointly meet the needs of managed care organizations. Here, Plaintiff contends, the BEI physicians are illegally colluding to provide joint services to non-managed care patients for whom they would normally compete. However, here the Plaintiff is claiming injury from the alleged refusal to refer patients to RA, not from the underlying arrangement among the BEI physicians to treat non-managed care patients. It is, therefore, the exclusion from patient referrals that must be scrutinized for consistently anticompetitive effect before per se analysis may properly be applied. See *Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc., 472 U.S. at 295-96, 105 S. Ct. at 2620* (reasoning that where the Plaintiff is not objecting to the underlying arrangement but rather to expulsion from cooperative association, it is the act of exclusion that must be evaluated before the arrangement is condemned as illegal per se). The reasoning of Levine and the DOJ Enforcement Policy indicates that the anticompetitive effect of the challenged exclusionary conduct is not fully understood and therefore should not be condemned out of hand.

[**16] Plaintiff also argues that the BEI/FRI exclusive dealing arrangement represents control over retina referrals necessary for Plaintiff to compete because those referrals represent "relationships" which RA needs "in the competitive struggle." *Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341, 83 S. Ct. 1246, 10 L. Ed. 2d 389 \(1963\)*. The alleged boycott, plaintiff claims, has caused it to "lose a significant volume of trading" and has "hampered substantially" Plaintiff's ability to compete. *Id., 373 U.S. at 348, 83 S. Ct. at 1252*. However, apart from bald assertion, Plaintiff presents no factual or evidentiary justification for such a finding. Plaintiff has not demonstrated that the Defendants' power over the market of referrals is sufficient to hamper Plaintiff in its effort to compete.

Plaintiff's best case scenario is that the BEI physicians control fifteen percent of the referrals made by general ophthalmologists to retina specialists in the Jacksonville area. This leaves plaintiff capable of vigorously competing for the other eighty-five percent of referrals. Courts have refused to impose antitrust liability upon greater showings of market power. Jefferson Parish Hosp. [**17] *Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. at 16-25, 104 S. Ct. at 13831-1560-1565* (holding that in product-tying claim thirty percent control of relevant market was insufficient to warrant a finding of per se invalidity); *U.S. Healthcare, 986 F.2d at 596 \(1st Cir. 1993\)* (holding that power over twenty-five percent of relevant market insufficient to justify, under the rule of reason, Sherman Act liability for vertical exclusivity arrangement).

The determination that per se analysis is inapplicable in this case is reinforced by RA's remarkable success during the years of the alleged boycott. In 1990, when FRI participated in the venture for only three months, Plaintiff's gross revenues were slightly in excess of one and one-half million dollars. By contrast, RA's gross revenues, derived from the practice of only two physicians, consistently exceeded two million dollars annually between 1991 and 1994, when the asserted boycott was in full effect. In addition, Plaintiff's records disclose, during the years of the boycott, a referral base of one hundred and fifty physicians; and more, RA has opened satellite offices in St. Augustine, Florida and Waycross, Georgia. Further, Plaintiff has joined [**18] a competing comprehensive eye care network. It clearly appears, therefore, that RA has competed successfully despite the alleged refusal to deal. As such, RA should not be heard to complain that Defendants' use of fifteen percent of the available market is per se unreasonable. The antitrust laws were designed to protect competition, not competitors. *Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 344, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 1534, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 \(1962\)*. Attempts to win the "Super Bowl of remuneration" by invoking rules of per se invalidity cannot be countenanced. *Levine, 72 F.3d at 1551.*

2. Is the Conduct Illegal under the Rule of Reason?

---

<sup>5</sup>In early 1994, the Florida EyeCare Network was formed. Plaintiffs' principals were among the initial shareholders of the network and are the only retina specialists in the network, although, according to Plaintiff, there is no agreement to refer retina patients solely to RA. Plaintiff also refers to the Florida EyeCare Network as an unsuccessful venture, but does not appear to attribute that lack of success to any allegedly illegal conduct of defendants. A third network, Eye Care Associates of North Florida, has also been formed. Dr. Bolling, of the Mayo Clinic, is the exclusive retina care provider for that network.

Because Plaintiff has failed to establish the applicability of a per se analysis in the instant case, the presumption that the rule of reason inquiry governs Section 1 claims remains intact. HN5<sup>5</sup> Under the rule of reason, the "test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition." Chicago Bd. of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 38 S. Ct. 242, 244, 62 L. Ed. 683 \(1918\). To establish that conduct [\[\*\*19\]](#) violates Section 1 under the rule of reason, RA must prove that (1) Defendant's conduct had an anticompetitive effect in the relevant market; and (2) that no procompetitive rationale would justify the conduct. Levine, 72 F.3d at 1551. In showing that the conduct has an anticompetitive effect, Plaintiff may establish either actual anticompetitive effects of the conduct or the potential for genuine anticompetitive effect. Id. To successfully show potential anticompetitive effects, the Plaintiff must first define the relevant geographic and product markets and then prove that the Defendants possessed power in that market. Indiana Fed'n, 476 U.S. at 460-61, 106 S. Ct. at 2019.

a. is there any actual anticompetitive effect?

Plaintiff asserts three grounds upon which the alleged boycott may be found to have actual anticompetitive effects. First, Plaintiff argues that the alleged exclusive referral agreement between the BEI physicians and the Florida Retina Institute has resulted in higher prices to the consumer for common diagnostic procedures. As evidence of this claim, Plaintiff contends that FRI patients referred by BEI pay a higher price for fluorescein angiograms than [\[\*\*20\]](#) other patients because, in addition to FRI's charge for the service, Baptist charges its own fee for the use of its equipment and personnel at the BEI building.

Plaintiff is particularly poorly suited to raise this claim because, should the evidence bear the claim out, Plaintiff stands to benefit. Plaintiff, as a response, can either raise its fees for the same procedures and earn more money, or capitalize on its lower prices in the hope of competing more efficiently. HN6<sup>6</sup> Where a plaintiff stands to benefit from a price increase, it cannot recover for a combination imposing nonprice restraints, here a group boycott, that has the effect of raising the market price. [Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. \[\*1384\] v. Zenith Radio Co., Ltd., 475 U.S. 574, 582-83, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1354, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 \(1986\)](#). As a result, the claim by this Plaintiff that the alleged boycott has resulted in higher prices for some procedures is insufficient as a matter of law.

Second, the Plaintiff asserts, when Dr. Levenson joined the BEI physicians in 1993, he cancelled a subcontract with plaintiff to refer patients Levenson had under a contract with PruCare HMO to RA for any applicable retina treatments.<sup>6</sup> When Levenson [\[\*\*21\]](#) informed RA of his decision, RA offered to lower its price in order to keep the contract. Levenson subsequently awarded the contract to FRI. Plaintiff contends that this constitutes a detrimental effect on competition because the savings that could have been achieved by leaving the contract with RA could have been passed on to PruCare and its subscribers. Plaintiff, for the same reasons stated above, is particularly ill suited to raise this claim and it is therefore insufficient to raise an issue of actual detrimental effect.

Finally, Plaintiff contends that the six BEI physicians who perform radial keratotomy procedures have engaged in illegal price fixing. Deposition testimony of one of the BEI doctors establishes that the BEI physicians agreed on a price of $ 1350 as a benchmark for the procedure. This claim can be summarily dismissed as it has absolutely no relationship to the concerted [\[\*\*22\]](#) refusal to deal alleged by Plaintiff and has caused the Plaintiff no damages. The record is devoid of any evidence establishing that the alleged price fixing is in any way connected to the concerted refusal to deal of which Plaintiff complains.

b. is there any potential anticompetitive effect?

As noted above, to establish potential anticompetitive effect amounting to a violation of Section 1 under the rule of reason, the evidence must show that the defendants possess market power. This power must be shown to exist in properly defined geographic and product markets. Further inquiry into market definition in this case is, however, unnecessary. Assuming, arguendo, that plaintiff's definition of the relevant geographic and product markets pass legal muster, fifteen percent of the retina referral market is insufficient, as a matter of law, to establish market power.

---

<sup>6</sup> There is no allegation that Levenson breached any contractual relationship he had with RA when he cancelled the contract.

Because plaintiff has failed to establish that the per se rule governs the case and because there appears to be no triable fact issue under the rule of reason, defendants' motions for summary judgment on Count I of the complaint should be granted.

B. The Attempted Monopolization Claim

Plaintiff has also alleged [**23] that Staman and FRI have violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act by attempting to monopolize the market for retina services. Staman and FRI have moved for summary judgment on that claim.

HN7 To prove attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must prove that: (1) Defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct; (2) a specific intent on Defendant's part to monopolize; and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 \(1993\). There is no evidence to support either the first or second elements of the claim.

Staman and FRI argue that there is no evidence of anticompetitive or predatory conduct sufficient to support a Section 2 claim. They point to the fact that they did not actively seek to affiliate with the BEI physicians and their initial reluctance to join BEI. Plaintiff relies on Staman's and FRI's participation in an unlawful group boycott to establish the necessary predatory conduct. While participating in an unlawful horizontal group boycott may be sufficient to establish a Section 2 claim, here such a finding is precluded by the Court's grant of summary judgment against Plaintiff [**24] on Count I. As such, there is no genuine issue of material fact as to the existence of predatory conduct.

[*1385] HN8 Proof of the intent element requires proof of "a specific intent to destroy competition or build a monopoly." Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 626, 73 S. Ct. 872, 890, 97 L. Ed. 1277 \(1953\). Plaintiff, in addition to Defendant's participation in the boycott, points to a letter from FRI seeking a commitment from BEI to make it the exclusive recipient of retina referrals should it join the venture. Plaintiff claims that the letter independently established an intent to exclude RA and therefore to monopolize the market for retina patients. However the record shows that Staman and FRI were reluctant to join BEI, that they left the venture after the first few months and that they desired to split the BEI referrals fifty-fifty with RA should they join the venture. This Court's finding that no illegal group boycott existed in conjunction with these facts permits no inference of a specific intent to monopolize.

Because no triable fact issue exists with respect to two of the three elements of the Section 2 claim, summary judgment should be granted for [**25] Staman and FRI.

Delaware Health Care v. MCD Holding Co.

United States District Court for the District of Delaware

January 6, 1997, Argued ; February 20, 1997, Decided

Civil Action No. 94-406 MMS

Reporter

957 F. Supp. 535 *; 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2135 **; 1998-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,079

DELAWARE HEALTH CARE, INC., a corporation of the State of Delaware, Plaintiff, v. MCD HOLDING COMPANY, a corporation of the State of Delaware d/b/a INFUSION SERVICES and d/b/a INFUSION SERVICES OF DELAWARE, and MCD FOUNDATION, a corporation of the State of Delaware and its subsidiaries: THE MEDICAL CENTER OF DELAWARE, INC., a corporation of the State of Delaware, a/k/a (1) CHRISTIANA HOSPITAL, (2) WILMINGTON HOSPITAL d/b/a FIRST STATE HEALTH PLAN, GENESIS HEALTH NETWORK, GENESIS INTEGRATED HEALTH CARE SERVICES, MID-ATLANTIC INTEGRATED HEALTH CARE SERVICES, MID-ATLANTIC HEALTH NET, CHAMPION HEALTH SERVICES, CORNERSTONE HEALTHCARE, EASTERN INTEGRATED HEALTH CARE SERVICE, and VISITING NURSE ASSOCIATION OF DELAWARE, a corporation of the State of Delaware, Defendants.

Disposition: [**1] Defendants' motion for summary judgment on both of plaintiff's antitrust claims granted and plaintiff's state law claim for tortious interference with contract dismissed

Core Terms

---

patients, infusion, geographic, therapy, monopoly power, providers, consumers, market share, referrals, facilities, residents, monopolization, home health care, summary judgment, antitrust, upstream, increased price, relevant market, leveraging, market power, defendants', inpatient, prices, hospital service, state law claim, privileges, customers, summary judgment motion, anti trust law, managed care

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

**HN1** [down] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment is governed by *Fed. R. Civ. P. 56*, and will be granted when, on the record before the court, there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. *Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\)*. On the summary judgment motion, the evidence of the non-movant is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in their favor. The moving party bears the burden of proving that no genuine issue of material fact is in dispute. Once the moving party has carried its burden, the nonmoving party must come forward with specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. The non-movant must present concrete evidence supporting each essential element of its claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

**HN2** [down] Sherman Act, Penalties

Section 2 of the Sherman Act sanctions every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

**HN3** [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The elements of a claim of attempted monopolization are (1) the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. The plaintiff must additionally prove antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

**HN4** [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Illegal leveraging under antitrust laws involves use of monopoly power in one market (the "upstream" market) to gain or threaten monopoly power in another, related market (the "downstream" market).

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

957 F. Supp. 535, *535L<sup>1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2135, **1</sup>

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

If there is no monopoly power upstream, there can be no illegal leveraging of the downstream market. To prove monopoly power in the hospital market, plaintiff must show defendants had the power to control prices or exclude competition. Such power does not exist in a vacuum, however, and must be evaluated in terms of a "relevant market." Analysis of the relevant market has two components: a product market and a geographic market. Plaintiff bears the burden of defining the relevant market. Although market definition is a question of fact, summary judgment is appropriate if plaintiff fails to present sufficient evidence in support of its proffered market definition. To define a market is to identify producers that provide customers of a defendant firm (or firms) with alternative sources for the defendant's product or service. The relevant geographic market is the area in which a potential buyer may rationally look for the goods or services he or she seeks. The geographic market is not comprised of the region in which the seller attempts to sell its product, but rather is comprised of the area where his customers would look to buy such a product. Once the relevant market is defined, evidence of dominant market share within that market is a primary, but not sole, determinant of monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN6 [down arrow] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A market drawn too tightly creates the illusion of market power where none may exist. The geographic market must be broad enough that consumers would be unable to switch to alternative sellers in sufficient numbers to defeat an exercise of market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN7 [down arrow] Market Definition, Relevant Market

Under the merger guidelines, the relevant market is defined as the area in which a hypothetical monopolist could profitably impose a price increase: In determining whether a hypothetical monopolist would be in a position to exercise market power, it is necessary to evaluate the likely demand responses of consumers to a price increase. A price increase could be made unprofitable by consumers either switching to other products or switching to the same product produced by firms at other locations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

**HN8** [blue download icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The essential facilities doctrine is implicated where a monopolist controls a facility that its competitors need access to if they are to compete effectively. The elements of an essential facilities claim are: (1) control of the essential facility by a monopolist; (2) the competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility; (3) denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and (4) the feasibility of providing the facility.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

**HN9** [blue download icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

An "essential facility" is one which is not merely helpful but vital to the claimant's competitive viability. The denial of access must inflict a "severe handicap" on the competitor, one that threatens to eliminate competition in the market.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Pendent Claims

**HN10** [blue download icon] Jurisdiction, Jurisdictional Sources

28 U.S.C.S. § 1367\(c\) allows a federal district court, in its discretion, to decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over state law claims when the court has dismissed all claims over which it had original jurisdiction.

Counsel: For plaintiff: Christopher J. Curtin, Esq., of Erisman & Curtin, Wilmington, Delaware; Of Counsel: Joanne Zack, Esq., Michael J. Boni, Esq., and Craig W. Hillwig, of Kohn, Swift & Graf, P.C.; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

For defendants: Stephen E. Herrmann, Esq., of Richards, Layton & Finger, Wilmington, Delaware; Of Counsel: Brian M. Peters, Esq., Kathleen M. Chancler, Esq., Jonathan B. Sprague, Esq., Mark L. Mattioli, Mark L. Mattioli, Esq., and Katherine Layman, Esq., of Post & Schell, P.C., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Judges: Murray M. Schwartz, Senior District Judge

Opinion by: Murray M. Schwartz

Opinion

---

[*537] OPINION

Schwartz, Senior District Judge

INTRODUCTION

This lawsuit alleging violations of federal antitrust laws was brought in 1994 by Delaware Health Care, Inc. ("DHC"), a provider of home health care. See Docket Item ("D.I.") 1. Defendants are MCD Foundation ("the Foundation"), its wholly owned subsidiaries, The Medical Center of Delaware ("MCD"), MCD Holding Company ("MCD Holding") [**2] and the Visiting Nurse Association of Delaware ("VNA"), and related entities Infusion Services of Delaware ("ISD"), and the Christiana and Wilmington Hospitals. Id.; A-81; A-527-611. The two hospitals constitute MCD, which the parties agree is Delaware's largest hospital system. D.I. 121, at 4; D.I. 126, at 2.

Before the Court is the defendants' motion for summary judgment on Counts I, II and III of the plaintiff's complaint, and accompanying motion to dismiss the plaintiff's state claim for lack of supplemental subject matter jurisdiction. In opposition papers, the plaintiff informed the Court it was abandoning its claims under Counts I and III of the complaint; remaining for consideration is Count II, alleging "Attempted Monopolization, Monopolization and Predatory Conduct" under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. See D.I. 1, at 11-13; D.I. 126, at 31 n.15. Jurisdiction is based upon 28 U.S.C. § 1337 and 15 U.S.C. §§ 15, 26. D.I. 1, at 2.

FACTS

DHC was established by Lawrence and Margaret ("Peggy") Carroll in 1990 as a home health care agency designed to deliver infusion and other health care services to medical patients in their homes. A-1086-88.<sup>1</sup> Home infusion services [**3] include delivery of pharmaceutical or nutritional products to patients as well as related nursing care. A-913; B-100. DHC supplied both the pharmaceutical product and the nursing service components of home infusion services. B-99-101.

Home health care services are sought largely by individuals who have been discharged from hospitals yet remain in need of [*538] continuing medical care. A-913. Home health care providers often rely on referrals and contractual positioning (hereafter referred to collectively as "referrals") as sources of business; such referrals come from hospitals, physicians, insurance companies, health maintenance organizations ("HMO's"), nursing homes, state contracts and other patients. A-246; A-1454. Home infusion therapy is considered by some to be the most profitable of home health care services. A-770.

[**4] DHC originally operated as a corporate agent of Norrell Healthcare, Inc., a temporary staffing agency. A-1088; A-1428. In November 1993, Norrell's home health care division was sold to Nurse's House Call ("NHC"), and DHC did business under NHC's name. A-1089; A-1428. At the end of 1994, DHC and NHC terminated their relationship and DHC became known as Delaware Home Care, Inc. Id.; B-101.

Defendant ISD, an unincorporated division of defendant MCD Holding, was established in 1990, also with the goal of supplying home infusion pharmaceutical products. A-725. Defendant VNA, in turn, was to provide the home nursing services necessary to administer ISD's pharmaceutical product. A-1407. The relationship among ISD, VNA and MCD -- all owned by MCD Foundation -- and the resulting referral of MCD patients to ISD/VNA form the basis of this lawsuit.<sup>2</sup>

Plaintiff asserts prior [**5] to ISD's formation, discharge planners recommended home health care providers to patients on an informal rotating basis.<sup>3</sup> See e.g. B-35. This rotation process was dismantled at the same time ISD was formed, plaintiff says, and in its place a directive was issued to refer patients only to ISD/VNA. See e.g. B-180-182; B-612; B-800. In practice, plaintiff says, patients were channeled to ISD even when they specifically requested a different provider. See e.g. B-345-52; B-429.

<sup>1</sup> Citations to documents with the prefix "A" refer to documents found in defendants' appendices. Citations to documents with the prefix "B" refer to documents found in plaintiff's appendices.

<sup>2</sup> Plaintiff maintains no claims against VNA directly; VNA is a defendant only by virtue of its participation in the alleged leveraging scheme.

<sup>3</sup> Discharge planners are hospital staff members who assist patients in obtaining services for post-discharge.

In addition to patient channeling, plaintiff charges defendants permitted ISD -- and ISD alone -- access to patients in their hospital rooms. This practice allowed ISD to offer superior services which in turn led to even more referrals. While all the other home care providers were barred from soliciting patients in their hospital rooms, plaintiff proffered deposition testimony that ISD's administrative director Mary Fitzpatrick [**6] often met with patients in their hospital rooms, both before and after a formal relationship between the patient and ISD had been established. B-44; B-52; B-141; B-185-86. Plaintiff has adduced evidence Mary Fitzpatrick met with patients in need of home care and taught them about home health care services before they left their hospital beds. B-185-86; B-200. Plaintiff contends this access is a selling point for ISD. D.I. 126, at 12-14.

Since its inception, ISD quickly gained market share. According to plaintiff's experts Dr. Solow and Dr. Black, ISD served 44.9% of the New Castle County home infusion therapy market in 1993.<sup>4</sup> [**7] B-505; B-540. In 1994, the figure was 59%, and in 1995 it was 49.4%. B-505; B-540. The rest of the home infusion therapy market was divided among some 14 other providers.<sup>5</sup> B-542. ISD was even more successful among the group of home infusion therapy patients who were discharged from MCD. Of those patients, ISD cared for 60.2% in 1993, 76.4% in 1994, and 77.1% in 1995. B-505; B-535. ISD earned gross revenues of $ 4,585,066 in 1994 and $ 5,822,456 in 1995. B-674-75.

DHC on the other hand cared for 28 patients, or 3.6% of the New Castle County home infusion therapy market, in 1993. See B-542. In 1994, it cared for 35 patients, or 3.5% of the market. Id. In 1994, it earned gross revenues from its infusion products of $ 186,511. B-676; B-704. It appears it [*539] earned no income from infusion products in 1995. Id.<sup>6</sup>

[**8] DISCUSSION

I. Standard for Motion for Summary Judgment

HN1 [+] Summary judgment is governed by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56, and will be granted when, on the record before the Court, "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and . . . the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). On this summary judgment motion, "the evidence of [the non-movant] is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in [their] favor." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 456, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992) (citations omitted).

The moving party "bears the burden of proving that no genuine issue of material fact is in dispute." Ideal Dairy Farms, Inc. v. John Labatt, Ltd., 90 F.3d 737, 743 (3d Cir. 1996) (citation omitted). Once the moving party has carried its burden, the nonmoving party "must come forward with 'specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.'" Id. "The non-movant must present concrete evidence supporting each essential element of its claim." Id.

II. Plaintiff's Claims Under Count II of the Complaint

<sup>4</sup> Both hospitals comprising MCD, Wilmington and Christiana hospitals, are located in New Castle County, Delaware.

<sup>5</sup> An approximate number will be used in this opinion because the number fluctuated during the relevant time period.

<sup>6</sup> In addition to revenue from infusion pharmaceutical products, DHC also earned revenues from nursing services. In 1993, gross revenue from nursing services was $ 339,570; in 1994, it was $ 348,782, and in 1995, DHC earned $ 355,224 from nursing services. B-704. These figures are not relevant in comparison to ISD's revenues because ISD only provided infusion pharmaceutical products and did not provide nursing services. As noted above, plaintiff no longer asserts any direct claims against VNA, the entity that provides nursing services in conjunction with ISD products. See supra n. 2.

In Count II of the [**9] complaint, plaintiff alleges: "Defendants Medical Center and the VNA possess the monopoly power in the hospital and home health industry, respectively, which was wilfully acquired and maintained to effectuate predatory and unreasonable exclusionary acts in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. The said Defendants have attempted monopolization and have monopolized home health care . . . ." D.I. 1, at 12. In its brief opposing summary judgment, plaintiff limited its Sherman Act Section 2 claims to attempted monopolization.<sup>7</sup> D.I. 126, at 31.

HN3[] The elements of a claim of attempted monopolization are "(1) . . . the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability [**10] of achieving monopoly power." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 (1993). As in all antitrust cases, plaintiff here must additionally prove antitrust injury. Mathews v. Lancaster Gen. Hosp., 87 F.3d 624, 641 (3d Cir. 1996) (Sherman Act § 1 conspiracy claim); Schuylkill Energy Resources, Inc. v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7165, No. 95-4885, 1996 WL 284994, at *2 (E.D. Pa. May 21, 1996) (Sherman Act § 2 attempted monopolization claim).

Plaintiff has alleged two specific methods by which defendants have worked to achieve their attempted monopoly: "leveraging," and denial of access to an "essential facility."<sup>8</sup> With respect to the former, plaintiff says MCD Foundation "leveraged its monopoly power, in the hospital market, to extend its monopoly in the home health market through Defendant Hospitals." D.I. 1, at 12-13. Plaintiff's essential facilities argument is:

Defendant Hospitals denied the Plaintiff any access to home care patients already discharged, or about to be discharged, from Defendant Hospitals, and access to the patients' records; but allowed its subsidiary, Defendant VNA, and a related for-profit [*540] entity, [**11] Defendants Holding and ISD, access to these patients and their medical records . . . . Defendant Hospitals are the most important referral sources for the Plaintiff, and are, therefore, an essential facility . . . .

Id. at 12.

A. Leveraging

HN4[] Illegal leveraging under antitrust laws involves use of monopoly power in one market (the "upstream" market) to gain or threaten monopoly power in another, related market (the "downstream" market). See Fineman v. Armstrong World Industries, 980 F.2d 171, 198, 204-06 (3d Cir. 1992), cert denied, 507 U.S. 921, 122 L. Ed. 2d 677, 113 S. Ct. 1285 (1993).<sup>9</sup>

[**12] i. Proof of Monopoly Power: Market Definition

One element of plaintiff's leveraging claim is proof defendant MCD possessed monopoly power in the "upstream" hospital market. See Fineman, 980 F.2d at 198. HN5[] If there is no monopoly power upstream, there can be no illegal leveraging of the downstream market. Id. at 203. To prove monopoly power in the hospital market, plaintiff must show defendants had the "power to control prices or exclude competition[.]" Eastman Kodak Co., 504 U.S. at 481; Fineman, 980 F.2d at 201. Such power does not exist in a vacuum, however, and must be evaluated in terms of a "relevant market." See *Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 457* ("It is beyond a doubt that [a claim of monopolization] requires proof of market power in a relevant market.").

<sup>7</sup> HN2[] Section 2 of the Sherman Act sanctions, "every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States . . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 2.

<sup>8</sup> In its complaint, plaintiff also included allegations regarding vertical integration. Plaintiff informed the Court at oral argument it does not wish to pursue this claim.

<sup>9</sup> As noted in an earlier opinion in this case, the Court is aware the Third Circuit Court of Appeals, in Advo, Inc. v. Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc., 51 F.3d 1191, 1203 (3d Cir. 1995), indicated leveraging claims were under attack for being "economically groundless." See Delaware Health Care, Inc. v. MCD Holding Co., 893 F. Supp. 1279, 1288 n.2 (D. Del. 1995). Nevertheless, the Court does not read Advo to repudiate all leveraging claims. Id.

Analysis of the relevant market has two components: a product market and a geographic market. *Id. at 459.* Plaintiff bears the burden of defining the relevant market. *Pastore v. Bell Tel. Co., 24 F.3d 508, 512 \(3d Cir. 1994\)*; see also *Ideal Dairy Farms, 90 F.3d at 749*. Although market definition is a question of fact, *Borough of Lansdale v. Philadelphia Elec. Co., 692 F.2d 307, 311 \(3d Cir. 1982\)*, summary judgment is appropriate if plaintiff fails to present sufficient evidence in support of its proffered market definition. See *Ideal Dairy Farms, 90 F.3d at 749*; accord *Home Health Specialists, Inc. v. Liberty Health Sys., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11947*, No. 92-3413, 1994 WL 463406, at *2 (E.D.Pa. Aug. 24, 1994), aff'd, 65 F.3d 162 (3d Cir. 1995); *Miller v. Indiana Hosp., 814 F. Supp. 1254, 1266* (W.D. Pa.), aff'd, 975 F.2d 1550 (3d Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 952, 122 L. Ed. 2d 744, 113 S. Ct. 1366 (1993).

"To define a market is to identify producers that provide customers of a defendant firm (or firms) with alternative sources for the defendant's product or service." 2A Phillip E. Areeda et al. *Antitrust Law* P 530a, at 150 (1995); see also *Eastman Kodak Co., 504 U.S. at 481-82* ("The relevant market for antitrust purposes is determined by the choices available to Kodak equipment owners."). The relevant geographic market is "the area in which a potential buyer may rationally look for the goods or services he or she seeks[.]" *Tunis Bros. Co., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d 715, 726 \(3d Cir. 1991\)* (citation omitted), cert. denied, 505 U.S. 1221, 120 *\*\*141 L. Ed. 2d 903, 112 S. Ct. 3034 \(1992\)*. "The geographic market is not comprised of the region in which the seller attempts to sell its product, but rather is comprised of the area where his customers would look to buy such a product." Id.<sup>10</sup> [*\[\*541\]*](#) Once the relevant geographic market is defined, evidence of dominant market share within that market is a primary, but not sole, determinant of monopoly power. *Barr Labs., Inc. v. Abbott Labs., 978 F.2d 98, 112 \(3d Cir. 1992\)*.

[**\[\*\*15\]**](#) The parties agree the relevant upstream product market in this lawsuit is inpatient hospital services. The geographic market, on the other hand, is hotly disputed; defendants' motion for summary judgment hinges largely on their assertion that plaintiff has "not come close" to meeting its burden of defining the relevant geographic market. D.I. 121, at 17. According to plaintiff, the relevant upstream geographic market is New Castle County, Delaware. D.I. 126, at 32-34. Defendants urge it is an area within a 15 to 20 mile radius of MCD -- which would include some areas outside New Castle County. D.I. 121, at 18. The implications of such market definition are clear: **HN6** *A market drawn too tightly creates the illusion of market power where none may exist."* *Home Health Specialists, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11947, 1994 WL 463406*, at *2. "The geographic market must be broad enough

<sup>10</sup> This distinction is most vividly described in Herbert Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust Policy § 3.6d, at 113-14 (1994) (footnotes omitted) (quoted in *Bathke v. Casey's Gen. Stores, Inc. 64 F.3d 340, 346 \(8th Cir. 1995\)*):

Fifteen miles outside of City A is a small town, Town B, which contains a single shoe store, Smith's Clothing. The only people who ever shop in Smith's Clothing are residents of Town B. When Smith's is accused of monopolization, the plaintiffs argue that Town B defines the relevant geographic market, since all of the store's customers come from there. In that case, Smith's market share is 100%.

But further inquiry shows the following. Last year 800 residents of Town B purchased shoes. 400 of them purchased from Smith's Clothing, and the other 400 purchased from the numerous shoe stores in City A. Note that this conclusion is absolutely consistent with the proposition that Smith's "trade area" is Town B. The only customers Smith's had were from Town B, assuming no one drove from City A to buy shoes at Smith's. In fact, Smith's is probably in close competition with the City A shoe stores. To the extent Town B residents go into City A to work or to shop, they regard the City shoe stores as interchangeable, and would respond to any local price increase by purchasing even more of their shoes in City A.

In sum, "trade area" considers the extent to which customers will travel in order to do business at Smith's. "Relevant market" considers the extent to which customers will travel in order to avoid doing business at Smith's. Unfortunately, this means that using discovery to obtain the addresses of a seller's customers seldom provides us with useful information about geographic market. What we really need to know is the extent to which people from the immediate area can readily turn to alternative sellers . . . .

that consumers would be unable to switch to alternative sellers in sufficient numbers to defeat an exercise of market power." Id.

In this case, potential MCD customers could turn only to one other option for inpatient hospital services within plaintiff's proposed geographic market: St. Francis Hospital.<sup>11</sup> B-580. On the other hand, between [**16] six and 13 hospitals compete within defendants' proposed market comprising a 15 to 20 mile radius of MCD. A-938-40. Under defendants' proposed market, MCD possessed at most a 43% market share during the relevant time period. Id. The Third Circuit Court of Appeals has held a market share of less than 55%, without other evidence tending to show monopoly power, is insufficient as a matter of law to establish that an antitrust defendant had monopoly power. See Fineman, 980 F.2d at 201.

[**17] As support for their position plaintiff's market definition is incorrect, defendants argue plaintiff's expert, Dr. Solow, focused on historical patient migration data in constructing its geographic market, without also providing data of what patients would do if faced with an exercise of monopoly power by MCD. D.I. 121, at 21-23.

Specifically, defendants assert, in defining the relevant market, Dr. Solow relied solely on the Elzinga-Hogarty ("E-H") test instead of the "standard methodology" of the U.S. Department of Justice Merger Guidelines ("Merger Guidelines").<sup>12</sup> Id., at 19-20. The E-H test involves analysis of the flow of consumers in and out of the proposed market. First, a measurement is taken of the percentage of consumers in a proposed geographic [*542] market who purchased goods or services produced in the market, as opposed to those who left the market (called "LIFO" - Little In From Outside).<sup>13</sup> B-574. Second, the percentage of goods or services produced in the market that are purchased by residents, as opposed to non-residents, of the proposed market, is measured (called "LOFI" - Little Out From Inside).<sup>14</sup> Id. Both LIFO and LOFI must be considered. Id. [**18]

[**19] In essence, these calculations are used to test a proposed geographic market. The results can be evidence the proposed market is correctly defined when a large percentage of consumers purchase the goods or services at issue from within the market (LIFO), and when, additionally, a large percentage of people who purchase the goods or services produced in the market are residents of that market (LOFI). See id. A 90% ratio on the LIFO and the LOFI analysis -- meaning 90% of the consumers in the proposed market stayed in that market to purchase the goods or services, and 90% of the goods or services produced in that market were purchased by residents of that market -- is considered strong evidence that the proposed market is correctly defined. Id. A 75% ratio is considered weak, but still credible, evidence that the proposed market is correctly defined. Id.

<sup>11</sup> There are eight hospitals in New Castle County. Three are psychiatric hospitals, and thus compete with MCD but only to the limited extent MCD offers psychiatric inpatient hospital care. A fourth, the Veterans Affairs Medical Center, was not considered by plaintiff's expert to compete with MCD because it serves a different population. Of the remaining three, two are affiliated with MCD -- A.I. DuPont Institute, a children's hospital, and Riverside Hospital, which was acquired by MCD in 1995. The remaining hospital is St. Francis. See B-580 (Solow Decl.).

<sup>12</sup> The Guidelines "outline the present enforcement policy of the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission . . . concerning horizontal acquisitions and mergers. . . . They describe the analytical framework and specific standards normally used by the Agency in analyzing mergers." A-482 (Merger Guidelines).

<sup>13</sup> The label "Little In From Outside" may seem somewhat of a misnomer when what is measured is actually the percentage of customers who remain in the market or leave the market to purchase goods or services. However, the aim of "Little In From Outside" is to calculate the proportion of sales of goods or services purchased in the provisional market that were produced by suppliers located outside the provisional market -- which may be accomplished by measuring the percentage of customers who left the market when they purchased the goods or services at issue. See B-574.

<sup>14</sup> Similar to the LIFO label, "Little Out From Inside" seems the wrong designation for this calculation. However, its aim is to calculate the percentage of goods or services produced within the provisional market that are sold to consumers residing in the market versus those consumers who reside outside the provisional market. That calculation may be achieved by measuring the percentage of consumers who entered the market to purchase services. See id.

In the present case, plaintiff's experts found in 1992, 90.5% of the residents of New Castle County who used inpatient hospital services, used hospitals in the county. B-576. That corresponds to the LIFO inquiry. Further, the experts found 85% of the patients who used the hospitals in New Castle County in 1992 were residents [**20] of the county. B-575. That corresponds to the LOFI inquiry. Accordingly, Dr. Solow opined the proposed New Castle County inpatient hospital services market "clearly passed both the weak LIFO and the weak LOFI tests, and marginally passes the strong LIFO test as well." Id.

Defendants urge the E-H test is insufficient as a tool of market definition. They note critics have opined that the usefulness of the E-H test is limited to determining when a market is not correctly defined. See Dennis A. Yao, The Analysis of Hospital Mergers and Joint Ventures: What May Change?, 1995 Utah L. Rev. 381, 386 (1995) (A-661); see also United States v. Rockford Memorial Corp., 717 F. Supp. 1251, 1271 (N.D. Ill. 1989), aff'd, 898 F.2d 1278 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 920, 112 L. Ed. 2d 249, 111 S. Ct. 295 (1990). Additionally, defendants point out the antitrust law treatise with which Dr. Solow is associated indicates reliance solely on historical tests like the E-H test "can misstate the size of the market." See 2A Areeda, et al., supra P550, at 217.

The Merger Guidelines, on the other hand, emphasize what consumers would do if faced with a price increase in [**21] the proposed market. HN7[↑] Under the Merger Guidelines, the relevant market is defined as the area in which a hypothetical monopolist could profitably impose a price increase:

In determining whether a hypothetical monopolist would be in a position to exercise market power, it is necessary to evaluate the likely demand responses of consumers to a price increase. A price increase could be made unprofitable by consumers either switching to other products or switching to the same product produced by firms at other locations.

[*543] A-486 (Merger Guidelines). While Dr. Solow indicates his analysis is consistent with the Merger Guidelines, B-571, defendants argue the analysis lacks the crucial forward-looking component that asks what patients would do in the event of a price increase by MCD. D.I. 121, at 18.

As defendants indicate, there is authority for the proposition that plaintiff's reliance on historical patient migration data in the form of the E-H test, without analysis of where consumers could turn in the event of an exercise of monopoly power, is insufficient to avoid summary judgment. See Home Health Specialists, Inc., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11947, 1994 WL 463406, at *3-5; accord Bathke, 64 F.3d [**22] at 345. Plaintiff asserts, however, it has provided forward-looking evidence of how patients would respond to a price increase by MCD: "the consumer likely would do nothing." D.I. 126, at 50. That is because plaintiff's expert believes consumers of medical care are driven by factors other than cost in deciding which hospital to use. Dr. Solow states:

Patients generally do not have the sort of information necessary to make informed judgments about what medical procedures are appropriate, which hospital is best able to provide them, or what they will cost. It is often difficult and expensive for them to search for this sort of information, and they are unlikely to be in a position to evaluate the information they do receive. Moreover, patients whose services will be covered by third-party payors have little incentive to be responsive to prices. As a result, they rely on their doctors for advice, often allowing their doctors to select a hospital, and their doctors have little incentive to choose among hospitals so as to minimize the cost of treatment.

B-577-78.

Moreover, plaintiff has provided deposition testimony from doctors stating that they refer patients to hospitals [**23] outside New Castle County only infrequently. See B-20; B-158; B-210. This is due to the intersection of state licensure laws for physicians and the necessity for Delaware licensed physicians to have hospital privileges in Delaware. In New Castle County, this means privileges at MCD and/or St. Francis Hospital.

It is this basic fact which ultimately confers market power -- "the power 'to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market[.]" Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 464 (quoting Jefferson Parish Hosp. v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 14, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984)) -- upon MCD. Here, licensure and privileges define the actual market reality long favored in antitrust law. 504 U.S. at 464-65.

Defendants respond that Dr. Solow's opinion is the result of "outdated" assumptions specific to the health care industry. D.I. 121, at 25. Health care is no longer a localized industry, defendants assert, in fact the opposite is true: the rise of managed care is evidence the relevant market is larger than New Castle County. Id. Managed care entities have every reason to be price conscious, defendants say, and they are not shy about using the power [**24] of the purse to influence consumers' choice of hospitals. Id. To buttress their position, defendants point to U.S. Supreme Court and Third Circuit Court of Appeals authority indicating consumer apathy or ignorance is not a source of antitrust market power. See Jefferson Parish Hosp. v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984); Town Sound and Custom Tops, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 959 F.2d 468 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 868, 121 L. Ed. 2d 139, 113 S. Ct. 196 (1992).

Defendants miss the point. To be competitive, managed care entities must have MCD as an approved provider in New Castle County. While they might bargain for lower prices, managed care entities would not, as a practical matter, refuse to approve MCD in the event MCD raised its prices; even if all physicians had privileges at St. Francis Hospital, that hospital simply does not have anywhere close to a sufficient number of beds for New Castle County admittees. See B-593 (St. Francis has approximately 300 beds, compared to approximately 700 at MCD).
15

[**25] [**544] The market reality, as explained above, is doctors' hospital referrals are limited by hospital privileges and Delaware licensure requirements -- managed care must work within that framework. For this reason, defendants' argument predicated on Jefferson Parish Hosp. and Town Sound and Custom Tops -- both tying cases -- has no relevance to plaintiff's leveraging theory. A reasonable juror could conclude consumers of health care, unlike consumers of shoes for example, would not chose to leave their local hospital market as a result of a price increase. See 2A Areeda, supra § 553, at 242 ("Tribunals often find that a single municipality was a relevant geographic market for the provision of hospital services. . . . Even for hospital services that can be deferred, the hospital is often selected by the patient's doctor, who may be relatively insensitive to hospital prices and who may not have staff privileges in other towns. Hence, most patients would not turn to remote hospitals in response to a local price increase."). Defendants argument that plaintiff failed to correctly define the upstream geographic market cannot serve as the basis for a grant of summary judgment.

[**26] ii. Evidence of Monopoly Power

Defendants assert even adopting New Castle County as the relevant geographic market, MCD's market share is only 62%, and this is not sufficient to prove monopoly power. D.I. 121, at 28 (citing A-708, A-967). Plaintiff places MCD's market share in 1992 at 71.5%. B-529. Further, plaintiff explains, MCD acquired Riverside Hospital in 1995, increasing its market share to approximately 75%. D.I. 126, at 33 (citing B-581; B-529-31). Using figures from before MCD acquired Riverside Hospital, Dr. Solow found Riverside and St. Francis hospitals combined had insufficient capacity to cover the demand in the event MCD raised its prices. B-581-82. This is further evidence MCD possesses monopoly power, plaintiff says. D.I. 126, at 33 & n. 18.

The Third Circuit Court of Appeals has found as a matter of law that a market share under 55%, in the absence of other factors, does not establish monopoly power. Fineman, 980 F.2d at 201. As by all accounts MCD's market share is greater than 55%, and plaintiff has adduced evidence of other factors contributing to monopoly power, this likewise cannot provide a ground for summary judgment.

iii. Proof of "Actual or Threatened" [**27] Monopoly Power in Downstream Market: Market Definition

A second element of plaintiff's leveraging claim is proof that use of the "upstream" monopoly power has resulted in "actual or threatened" monopoly power in the "downstream" home infusion therapy market. Fineman, 980 F.2d at 206.<sup>16</sup> [**28] Like any other claim of monopolization or attempted monopolization, evaluation of defendant ISD's monopoly power in the downstream market requires a properly defined antitrust relevant product and geographic market, see Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 457-59; once again, defendants urge plaintiff's geographic market definition is flawed.<sup>17</sup> Plaintiff has asserted the relevant geographic market is New Castle County.

---

<sup>15</sup> The figure for MCD includes beds at the A.I. DuPont Institute, an MCD affiliate, and Riverside Hospital, which was acquired by MCD in 1995. See supra n. 11; B-580.

In support of plaintiff's position, Dr. Solow pointed out 75.9% of ISD's patients are residents of New Castle County. B-584. That figure, he said, met the weak LOFI part of the E-H test. Id. He continued, "Even home infusion therapy providers located inside New Castle County have had difficulty in gaining access to Medical Center of Delaware patients, so it is unlikely that providers located further away would be able to serve those patients." Id. As a result, he stated, the LIFO portion of the E-H test also was met. Id.

As to forward-looking analysis, Dr. Solow stated:

[*545] In terms of geographic market, we must address whether home infusion patients living in New Castle County would leave that location to receive home infusion therapy, whether patients living outside of New Castle County but being served by New Castle County infusion therapy providers would switch to providers located outside of New Castle County, and whether home infusion providers located outside New Castle [**29] County would be able to serve patients located within New Castle County.

B-583-84. Of these possibilities, he opined, "only the second is a reasonable possibility." B-584. Dr. Solow concluded, "It is my opinion that a single seller of home infusion therapy in New Castle County that could restrict access to a large share of the patients referred for home infusion in that area would have market power . . ." Id.

Plaintiff's market definition, as set forth here, is flawed. Although Dr. Solow purported to rely on the E-H test, he applied the LOFI prong of the test only to ISD, instead of considering all home infusion therapy services produced in New Castle County -- the proposed geographic market. Information as to the residences of ISD patients does not help define New Castle County as the antitrust relevant geographic market, it is merely evidence of defendant ISD's service area. See Home Health Specialists, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11947, 1994 WL 463406, at *4 (fact that vast majority of defendant's customers live in Delaware County, Pennsylvania, does not establish a geographic market; that fact merely points to Delaware County as defendant's service area); see also Hovenkamp, supra n. [**30] 10, at 113-14. Dr. Solow completed the LIFO prong of the E-H test with the conclusory statement: "Even home infusion therapy providers located inside New Castle County have had difficulty in gaining access to Medical Center of Delaware patients, so it is unlikely that providers located further away would be able to serve those patients." B-584. This purported application of the E-H test is, to say the least, unconvincing.

Moreover -- although not adequately addressed by either party -- it appears to the Court that home infusion therapy presents an atypical market for analysis under the E-H test. The market is unusual because home infusion therapy consumers are not mobile; by definition, they must receive infusion services in their homes. They cannot physically travel to another market to purchase home infusion therapy services in the event ISD raises its prices.<sup>18</sup> It further appears from deposition testimony in the record that the offices of home infusion therapy providers are merely administrative, while the actual delivery of infusion therapy occurs in the home. B-150-152. The prong of the E-H test that measures the percentage of the goods or services produced outside the market [**31] that were purchased by consumers within the market does not aid the analysis, therefore, because the services are always produced in the same location as the consumer's residence.

As noted above, the parties have not weighed in on how this unique aspect of the home infusion therapy market affects the geographic market analysis. Yet there is no dispute that market definition involves identification of

<sup>16</sup> In requiring proof of this element, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals differs from the Second and Sixth Circuits, which require a lesser showing of "competitive advantage" in the "downstream" market, see Kerasotes Michigan Theatres, Inc. v. National Amusements, Inc., 854 F.2d 135 \(6th Cir. 1988\); Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263 \(2d Cir. 1979\), cert denied, 444 U.S. 1093, 62 L. Ed. 2d 783, 100 S. Ct. 1061 \(1980\).

<sup>17</sup> The parties agree the product market is home infusion therapy. D.I. 121, at 31-32; D.I. 126, at 26.

<sup>18</sup> Of course, patients are free to switch from one home infusion therapy provider to another.

"producers that provide customers of a defendant firm (or firms) with alternative sources for the defendant's product or service[,]'" 2A Areeda, supra P530a, at 150. As a matter of logic, therefore, the geographic market inquiry in this case must focus on which providers are willing to provide services to consumers in the potential market. Any home infusion therapy patient, even one already using ISD, is free to switch; if providers are willing to come from the other two counties of Delaware, as well as nearby Pennsylvania, [**32] New Jersey and Maryland, there is no reason to limit the relevant geographic market in this case to New Castle County.<sup>19</sup>

The record is silent on the subject of which providers serve, or are willing to serve, consumers of home infusion therapy located in New Castle County. The only relevant submission [*546] by plaintiff is its argument that the referral process at MCD acted to limit choices available to MCD consumers of home infusion therapy. Similar to plaintiff's position with respect to the upstream inpatient services market, it argues because of information costs, consumers of health care often do not possess the full range of choices that seem logically to be available to them. Plaintiff's point is MCD patients were steered to ISD, and therefore, other providers -- particularly those outside of New Castle County -- could not have gained access to them [**33] to provide home infusion services.

While this is not an implausible argument, it also does not support plaintiff's definition of the relevant geographic market as New Castle County. At most, the argument entitles plaintiff to an inference that a subgroup of New Castle County residents were steered to ISD and thus did not enjoy full choice of home infusion therapy providers. That inference, coupled with the fact approximately 75% of ISD patients reside in New Castle County, is not sufficient to prove the relevant geographic market is New Castle County. Unlike plaintiff's assertion regarding the "upstream" hospital inpatient services market, plaintiff just has not put enough information in the record to support its geographic market definition.

B. Essential Facilities

HN8[↑] The essential facilities doctrine "is implicated 'where a monopolist controls a facility that its competitors need access to if they are to compete effectively.'" Delaware Health Care, 893 F. Supp. at 1287 (quoting Monarch Entertainment Bureau, Inc. v. New Jersey Highway Auth., 715 F. Supp. 1290, 1300 (D.N.J.), aff'd, 893 F.2d 1331 (3d Cir. 1989)). The elements of an essential facilities claim are: [**34]

- (1) control of the essential facility by a monopolist;
- (2) the competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility;
- (3) denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and
- (4) the feasibility of providing the facility.

Id.; accord Ideal Dairy Farms, 90 F.3d 737, 748 (3d Cir. 1996). In this case, the claimed essential facility is "the inpatient discharge and referral process at MCD." D.I. 126, at 44.

Defendants make several arguments that summary judgment must be granted against plaintiff. They argue with respect to the first required element, MCD is not a monopolist. D.I. 121, at 44. Earlier in this opinion, it was held an issue of material fact exists with respect to MCD's monopoly power;<sup>20</sup> accordingly, the Court must reject defendants' same argument directed to essential facilities.

Defendants next urge MCD patients are not, as a matter of law, an essential facility. Id. HN9[↑] "An 'essential facility' is one which is not [**35] merely helpful but vital to the claimant's competitive viability." Cyber Promotions, Inc. v. America Online, Inc., 948 F. Supp. 456, 1996 WL 689103, at *7 (E.D. Pa. 1996) (citation omitted). The denial of access must inflict a "severe handicap" on the competitor, one "that threaten[s] to eliminate competition in the market . . ." Advanced Health-Care Servs., Inc. v. Giles Mem'l Hosp., 846 F. Supp. 488, 498 (W.D.Va. 1994).

The essential facilities doctrine has been traced to the Supreme Court's opinion in United States v. Terminal R.R. Assoc., 224 U.S. 383, 56 L. Ed. 810, 32 S. Ct. 507 (1912). See Areeda, et al., supra P736.1b, at 620 (1995 Supp.).

<sup>19</sup> The Court takes judicial notice that any geographic point in New Castle County is no more than 30 minutes by car from the Pennsylvania or Maryland borders.

<sup>20</sup> See supra pp. 8-19.

In Terminal Railroad, the Court ordered an association controlling all three means of crossing the Mississippi River into St. Louis to grant reasonable access to all competing railroads. Although the Court did not use the term "essential facility," it is clear the river passages were considered essential to competition among the railroads because it was impossible to enter or pass through St. Louis without crossing the river. See 224 U.S. at 397. The Court stated:

The physical conditions which [**36] compel the use of the combined system by every road which desires to cross the river, either to serve the commerce of the city or to connect with lines separated by the river, [*547] is the factor which gives greatest color to the unlawfulness of the combination as now controlled and operated.

Id. at 398.

A leading antitrust treatise often quoted in essential facilities opinions urges the essential facilities doctrine should "at most" extend to "facilities that are a natural monopoly, facilities whose duplication is forbidden by law, and perhaps those that are publicly subsidized and thus could not practicably be built privately." Areeda et al. supra P736.2b, at 645 (1995 Supp.); see Cyber Promotions, 948 F. Supp. 456, 1996 WL 689103, at \*4; Monarch Entertainment Bureau, 715 F. Supp. at 1300; but see Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536, 544 n.10 \(9th Cir. 1991\) (suggesting this strict limitation on the essential facilities doctrine is not supported by Supreme Court case law).

Defendants argue the MCD patient discharge process is not an essential facility because -- as DHC principal Lawrence Carroll conceded -- referrals for patients come from a variety [**37] of sources including physicians, insurers, case managers, and other patients. A-1454.

The Western District of Virginia's Advanced Health-Care is factually similar to this one. Plaintiff, in the business of durable medical equipment ("DME") sued Giles Memorial Hospital and Medserv, another DME provider.<sup>21</sup> The two defendants had formed a joint venture to provide DME to residents in the service area of the hospital. Under the agreement Medserv rented office space in the hospital and did business under the name Home Connections. A strict policy was maintained under which patients were advised of all DME suppliers in the community, no particular provider was recommended, and the patient was required to pick the provider. 846 F. Supp. at 495.

[**38] The court rejected plaintiff's essential facilities argument. It stated: "Access to patients was not essential to competition in Giles County, nor do Giles Memorial's policies completely deny [plaintiff] patient access, nor is it feasible to permit [the plaintiff] to solicit business directly in patient's hospital rooms." Id. at 498. As proof access to Giles Memorial patients was not essential, the court relied on market information and found, "throughout Home Connections' existence, rival DME companies continued to do substantial business and . . . were consistently gaining market share." Id.

The reasoning of Advanced Health-Care is equally applicable here. DHC's essential facilities claim must fail because the patient referral and discharge process at MCD is not an essential facility. First, similar to Advanced Health-Care, the market data does not support a finding that MCD was an essential facility during the period ISD was gaining market share. At best, ISD only possessed a 59% market share of home infusion therapy patients in New Castle County -- a figure which dropped below 50% in 1995. B-505; B-540. That leaves open approximately 50% of the New Castle [**39] County home infusion therapy market for ISD's rivals.

Additionally, following the reasoning of Advanced Health-Care, plaintiff's statistics demonstrate other home health care providers maintained, or increased, their market share during the relevant time. For example, Brandywine had a market share of 15.4% in 1993, 12.4% in 1994, and 17% in 1995. See B-542. Apria/Homedco maintained a 2.6% market share in New Castle County for 1993 and 1994, and in 1995, its market share jumped to 4.9%. Id.

<sup>21</sup> DME refers to durable medical equipment and includes "canes, crutches, oxygen equipment, wheelchairs, walkers, hospital beds and other items used by persons recuperating at home from an illness or accident." Advanced Health-Care Services, 846 F. Supp. at 492 n.1.

More importantly, however, plaintiff has not limited itself to seeking referrals from hospitals in New Castle County.<sup>22</sup> Plaintiff [*548] defined its service area as the entire state of Delaware. A-1179. Plaintiff also stated it has solicited hospitals in three states surrounding Delaware -- Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Maryland -- for referrals of the business of Delaware residents. A-1178-80. Plaintiff's statistics indicate 24,239 Delaware residents used hospitals in Delaware's other two counties, Sussex and Kent counties. B-533. For comparison, 30,361 Delaware residents used MCD in 1992, and 11,376 Delaware residents used St. Francis Hospital. Id. While it is likely only a percentage [**40] of all hospital patients require home infusion therapy, the approximately 25,000 patients in the other two counties of Delaware, plus the 11,376 patients who used St. Francis, represented a sizeable source of business for plaintiff.

Accordingly, accepting plaintiff's alleged inability to gain referrals for MCD patients as true, other sources of business for plaintiff exist in a sufficient amount that the patient discharge and referral process at MCD cannot be considered an "essential facility." Given these other sources of business to plaintiff within plaintiff's [*41] service area, it can not be said access to MCD's patient discharge process is "vital to [DHC's] competitive viability"; nor can it be said denial of such access inflicts a "severe handicap . . . that threatens to eliminate competition in the market." See Cyber Promotions, 948 F. Supp. 456, 1996 WL 689103, at *7; Advanced Health-Care, 846 F. Supp. at 498. Plaintiff has not put forth sufficient evidence here to survive summary judgment on its essential facilities claim.<sup>23</sup> Accordingly, summary judgment will be granted for defendants on plaintiff's federal claims.

C. Plaintiff's State Law Claim of Tortious Interference with Contract

Having granted summary judgment for defendants on all plaintiff's federal claims, the Court is left to consider whether, under 28 U.S.C. I**421 § 1367(c)(3), it should decline to decide the state law claim. HN10  Section 1367\(c\) allows a federal district court, in its discretion, to decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over state law claims when the court has dismissed all claims over which it had original jurisdiction. The Third Circuit Court of Appeals, finding section 1367\(c\) a codification of "preexisting pendent jurisdiction law," has opined, "Where the claim over which the district court has original jurisdiction is dismissed before trial, the district court must decline to decide the pendent state claims unless considerations of judicial economy, convenience, and fairness to the parties provide an affirmative justification for doing so." Borough of West Mifflin v. Lancaster, 45 F.3d 780, 788 (3d Cir. 1995).

The parties have not raised any considerations that would cause the Court to deviate from the general rule and instead exercise supplemental jurisdiction over plaintiff's state law claims. Accordingly, supplemental jurisdiction will not be exercised and plaintiff's state law claims will be dismissed.

D. Conclusion

In conclusion, the Court grants defendants' motion for summary judgment on both of plaintiff's [**43] antitrust claims and dismisses plaintiff's state law claim for tortious interference with contract.

End of Document

<sup>22</sup> The fact that hospitals outside New Castle County are a potential source of business for plaintiff is not inconsistent with the Court's earlier holding a question of fact exists as to whether New Castle County is the relevant geographic market for inpatient hospital services in this case. The relevant geographic market measures where consumers could look for services; however, DHC does not face similar constraints in where it can market patients.

<sup>23</sup> Because of the Court's holdings in this opinion granting summary judgment for defendants, it is not necessary to address defendants' other arguments that plaintiff has failed to introduce sufficient evidence of anticompetitive conduct and antitrust injury.

Mandat v. Community Mut. Life Ins. Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit

February 25, 1997, FILED

No. 96-3137

Reporter

1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 3757 *; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,774

THOMAS E. MANDAT, M.D., Plaintiff-Appellant, -v- COMMUNITY MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Defendant-Appellee.

Notice: [*1] NOT RECOMMENDED FOR FULL-TEXT PUBLICATION. SIXTH CIRCUIT RULE 24 LIMITS CITATION TO SPECIFIC SITUATIONS. PLEASE SEE RULE 24 BEFORE CITING IN A PROCEEDING IN A COURT IN THE SIXTH CIRCUIT. IF CITED, A COPY MUST BE SERVED ON OTHER PARTIES AND THE COURT. THIS NOTICE IS TO BE PROMINENTLY DISPLAYED IF THIS DECISION IS REPRODUCED.

Subsequent History: Reported in Table Case Format at: 107 F.3d 871, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 7832.

Prior History: On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio. 95-01978. Matia.

Disposition: Order of the District Court dismissing the complaint is affirmed.

Core Terms

---

laboratory, district court, insureds, Sherman Act, restraint of trade, purchases, patients, buyer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, provides in part: Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. A tying arrangement is one form of an illegal restraint of trade. It is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Performance > Rights of Buyers

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Insurers

HN2 [down arrow] Performance, Rights of Buyers

Health insurance companies are purchasers of medical services on behalf of their insurers and as such have the right to dictate the terms of their purchase.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN3 [down arrow] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

A firm has monopolized in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act if it has deliberately followed a course of market conduct through which it has obtained or maintained power to control price or exclude competition in some part of the trade or commerce covered by the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

The antitrust laws are designed to protect competition, not competitors.

Counsel: For FEDERAL PACKAGING CORPORATION, Plaintiff - Appellant: Mark E. Lutz, Robert M. Lamb, Denlinger, Rosenthal & Greenberg, Cincinnati, OH.

For UNITED PAPERWORKERS INTERNATIONAL UNION, Defendant - Appellee: Melvin S. Schwarzwald, Michael E. Jackson, Ann E. Knuth, Schwarzwald & Rock, Cleveland, OH.

Judges: BEFORE: KENNEDY, NELSON, and VAN GRAAFEILAND, Circuit Judges. *

Opinion

---

PER CURIAM.

Thomas E. Mandat, M.D. appeals from an Order granting Community Mutual Insurance Company's ("CMIC") Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss his complaint, which alleges violations of the [\[\*2\]](#) Sherman Act and related state law claims. For the reasons that follow, we affirm.

---

* The Honorable Ellsworth A. Van Graafeiland, United States Circuit Judge for the Second Circuit, sitting by designation.

In 1983, Dr. Mandat entered into a preferred provider agreement with CMIC pursuant to which CMIC agreed to reimburse Mandat for covered services rendered his patients who were insured by CMIC. As originally written, the agreement allowed Mandat to provide necessary laboratory tests for his patients.

In 1994, CMIC unilaterally modified the agreement to require that Mandat and other providers refer all "ancillary services", which include lab work, to third parties who are under contract with CMIC. Because of provider protests, CMIC agreed that certain tests still might be performed by the treating physician. However, CMIC required that approximately seventy percent of laboratory tests be referred to outside laboratories designated by CMIC.

Mandat alleges that (1) CMIC's use of a substantial market power in the Ohio insurance market to restrain competition for laboratory services is an unlawful tying arrangement in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1; (2) that the same conduct constitutes a group boycott of providers such as Mandat also in violation of Section 1; and (3) that CMIC [*3] uses its "willfully acquired" economic power to restrain trade in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. Mandat also alleges related state law causes of action. The District Court granted CMIC's motion to dismiss. It held that the complaint fails to state a legally cognizable federal antitrust claim and it declined to exercise jurisdiction over the state claims.

THE ALLEGED TYING ARRANGEMENT

HN1[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides in pertinent part:

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal . . . .

A tying arrangement is one form of an illegal restraint of trade. It is "an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 \(1958\). The district court held that the complaint failed to state an unlawful tying claim because CMIC is a buyer of laboratory services [*4] and thus does not sell a tied product. In Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Company, 440 U.S. 205, 59 L. Ed. 2d 261, 99 S. Ct. 1067 \(1979\), which involved a preferential prescription arrangement available to insureds, the Court, in holding that the agreement was not "the business of insurance", described it as merely an arrangement "for the purchase of goods and services by the insurer. Id. at 214. Since the decision in Royal Drug, courts generally have held that HN2[] health insurance companies are purchasers of medical services on behalf of their insurers and as such have the right to dictate the terms of their purchase. For example, in Kartell v. Blue Shield of Massachusetts, Inc., 749 F.2d 922 \(1st Cir. 1984\), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1029, 85 L. Ed. 2d 322, 105 S. Ct. 2040, 105 S. Ct. 2049 \(1985\), Blue Shield paid doctors for treating patients insured by Blue Shield so long as each doctor promised not to charge the patient an additional fee for the service. Although this practice in combination with Blue Shield's size and buying power resulted in rigidly low set prices, the court held that it did not unreasonably restrain trade because Blue Shield was a purchaser [*5] of health services for its insureds. The court said, "antitrust law rarely stops the buyer of a service from trying to determine the price or characteristics or the product that will be sold." 749 F.2d at 925.

In Westchester Radiological Associates P.C. v. Empire Blue Cross & Blue Shield, Inc., 707 F. Supp. 708 (S.D.N.Y.), aff'd. on opin. below, 884 F.2d 707 \(2d Cir. 1989\), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1095 \(1990\), radiologists claimed that agreements between Blue Cross and certain hospitals prevented plaintiffs from directly billing patients who were Blue Cross subscribers and thereby restrained competition in violation of Section 1. The District Court followed Kartell and similar cases and granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants. It stated that, "Blue Cross is simply acting as a rational buyer attempting to get the best possible terms for its subscribers. Id. at 713; see also Brillhart v. Mutual Medical Ins., Inc., 768 F.2d 196, 199 \(7th Cir. 1985\); Medical Arts Pharmacy of Stamford, Inc. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Connecticut, Inc., 675 F.2d 502, 505 \(2d Cir. 1982\).

Mandat's reliance upon Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., [*6] 504 U.S. 451, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\), is misplaced. In that case, plaintiffs were service agencies that repaired Kodak equipment whose parts were unique and not compatible with the equipment of other manufacturers. The Supreme Court held that this uniqueness created a relevant market under the Sherman Act. There is no such limited relevant market in the instant case. CMIC's alleged anticompetitive conduct therefore must be viewed with respect to the general pertinent markets for laboratories and health insurance. Viewed in this manner, no Sherman Act violation has been alleged.

GROUP BOYCOTT

The agreement at issue herein was not between competitors so as to ease Mandat's burden of proving conspiracy. See Royal Drug Co. v. Group Life & Health Ins. Co., 737 F.2d 1433, 1436-37 \(5th Cir. 1984\), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1160, 83 L. Ed. 2d 925, 105 S. Ct. 912 (1995); Brillhart, supra, 768 F.2d at 199-200. It was a vertical arrangement between buyer and seller. CMIC did not engage in any concerted conduct with others nor did it prevent Mandat from selling his laboratory services to others. There are no allegations in the complaint that CMIC acted other than alone in directing its own purchases [*7] of laboratory services. Its unilateral refusal to deal is not a group boycott.

WILLFUL ACQUISITION OF ECONOMIC POWER AND RESTRAINT OF TRADE

HN3 "A firm has monopolized in violation of Section 2 if it has deliberately followed a course of market conduct through which it has obtained or maintained power to control price or exclude competition in some part of the trade or commerce covered by the act." Lawrence A. Sullivan, Anitrust 29 (1977); see also Beard v. Parkview Hosp., 912 F.2d 138, 144 \(6th Cir. 1990\). The District Court held that the complaint does not adequately allege how the agreements at issue restrain trade. Although Mandat himself claims injury because of the decrease in his lab sales, the District Court correctly noted that HN4 the antitrust laws are designed to protect competition, not competitors. See Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\). The District Court reasoned that the agreements are pro-competitive because they are likely to benefit health care consumers by opening the door to lower costs and higher quality services. We agree.

CMIC did not exclude anybody from competing. CMIC merely transferred [*8] its purchases or laboratory services from participating doctors to certain designated third parties. There is no allegation that CMIC's insureds could not use Mandat's laboratory services, or anyone else's, so long as they were willing to pay for them. The agreements did not result in an unreasonable restraint of trade.

The Order of the District Court dismissing the complaint is affirmed.

Maddock v. Greenville Retirement Community, L.P.

Court of Chancery of Delaware, New Castle

December 30, 1996, Date Submitted ; February 26, 1997, Date Decided

Civil Action No. 12564

Reporter

1997 Del. Ch. LEXIS 24 *; 1997 WL 89094

CHARLES S. MADDOCK, Plaintiff, v. GREENVILLE RETIREMENT COMMUNITY, L.P., and FORUM GROUP, INC., Defendant.

Notice: [*1] THIS OPINION HAS NOT BEEN RELEASED FOR PUBLICATION. UNTIL RELEASED, IT IS SUBJECT TO REVISION OR WITHDRAWAL.

Disposition: Mr. Maddock's motion for summary judgment denied and that of Defendants granted.

Core Terms

---

residents, repurchase, retirement community, condominium, injunction, violations, antitrust, purposes, unreasonable restraint on alienation, antitrust claim, alienation, contracts, restraint on alienation, amended complaint, entrance fee, modifications, constitutes, lease, entitled to summary judgment, subject matter jurisdiction, residential unit, cause of action, residential, asserting, formula, invalid, hear, buy

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

HN1 [] Defenses, Illegal Bargains

Individuals have authority in law to enter into all sorts of contracts. But this general power to make contracts does not of course mean that every term in a contract which individuals may choose to adopt, shall in every instance be recognized as valid and binding. No individual may exercise his broad power to enter into contract relations with another so as to offend against what the law deems to be sound public policy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN2 Jurisdiction, Exclusive Jurisdiction

Federal courts have original and exclusive jurisdiction to enforce Section 1 of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN3 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

However, the Delaware statute does not permit individuals to enforce their rights by bringing private actions. In contrast, the federal antitrust acts expressly create a private right of action. 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 15 and 26. Instead of providing for a private right of action, the Delaware statute expressly grants the state attorney general the right to bring remedial actions. Del. Code Ann. tit. 6, § 2108 specifically empowers the state attorney general to initiate parens patriae suits on behalf of state residents whose business or property have been injured by alleged antitrust violations.

Real Property Law > Estates > Future Interests > Invalid Restraints & Rule Against Perpetuities

Real Property Law > Estates > Future Interests > General Overview

HN4 Future Interests, Invalid Restraints & Rule Against Perpetuities

As a general rule, conditions on the sale of property which prevent its owner from conveying it when it would be economically efficient to do so may constitute an invalid unreasonable restraint on the alienation of property. However, if such a restraint is deemed reasonable under the circumstances, it will be upheld.

Real Property Law > Estates > Future Interests > Invalid Restraints & Rule Against Perpetuities

HN5 Future Interests, Invalid Restraints & Rule Against Perpetuities

A preemptive right at a fixed price constitutes an unreasonable restraint on alienation unless it is reasonable under the circumstances.

Counsel: Bernard A. Van Ogtrop, Esquire, of COOCH AND TAYLOR, Wilmington, Delaware; Attorneys for Plaintiff.

Richard J. Abrams, Esquire, of RICHARDS, LAYTON & FINGER, Wilmington, Delaware; Attorneys for Defendant.

Judges: ALLEN, Chancellor

Opinion by: ALLEN

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM OPINION

ALLEN, Chancellor

Pending are cross-motions for summary judgment. The action is brought by Charles Maddock who since 1987 has been a resident of a retirement community, Stonegates Condominiums, in New Castle County; it asserts a number of claims against Greenville Retirement Community, L.P., ("Greenville"), a Delaware limited partnership that manages the retirement community.<sup>1</sup>

[*2] Mr. Maddock makes three main contentions in his amended complaint. First, he alleges that Greenville's use of two former residential units to provide additional health care, dining, and sales services to residents, violates his rights because the condominium rules state that such units are to be used solely for residential purposes.<sup>2</sup> [*3] Second, he attacks the validity of a repurchase option agreement held by Greenville with respect to his residential unit, which, together with a property transfer restriction concerning who may purchase a unit at Stonegates, he says constitutes an invalid restraint on alienation of property.<sup>3</sup> Finally, Mr. Maddock asserts that a mandatory monthly fee paid by residents of the retirement community for health care, food, and other maintenance and housekeeping services provided by Greenville, is a form of illegal tying which violates state and federal antitrust laws.

In addition to denying the substantive validity of Mr. Maddock's claims, Defendants, Greenville and its general partner, Forum Group, Inc., contend that Mr. Maddock is barred from asserting such claims at this time. Although the amended complaint expressly states that each cause of action is based on violations arising since April 3, 1992, Defendants claim that all the claims, in fact, arose prior to that date and are barred by a Bankruptcy Court order issued in connection with a Chapter 11 proceeding involving Forum Group. Further, Defendants claim Mr. Maddock is estopped from challenging contractual agreements that he voluntarily and knowingly entered into when purchasing a unit at Stonegates. Finally, Defendants assert that this Court has no subject matter jurisdiction to hear the antitrust claims, regardless of whether the claims are foreclosed [*4] by the Bankruptcy Court order or equitable estoppel.

In my opinion, after reviewing the record and legal arguments, the Defendants are entitled to summary judgment dismissing the antitrust claims for want of jurisdiction (federal claims) and failure to state a claim (state claims), and dismissing the remaining claims with prejudice for the reasons stated below. In relevant part, the factual record is as follows.

I. BACKGROUND

A. Stonegates: Management, Services, and Financial Structure

---

<sup>1</sup> Originally this action was brought solely against Greenville, but it was amended to include Greenville's general partner, Forum Group, Inc., an Indiana corporation, as an additional defendant. Greenville is 50% owned by Forum Group and 50% owned by three individual limited partners. Forum Group manages or owns 44 retirement facilities throughout the United States.

<sup>2</sup> The Stonegates Declaration provides that "each unit, other than the Service Units, and all Common Elements shall be used and occupied exclusively for residential purposes and as a single family dwelling."

<sup>3</sup> Article 11 of the Residence Agreement entered into by all Stonegates' unit owners grants Greenville an "exclusive and irrevocable option" to repurchase their unit in the event of the owner's death or termination of residency for any other reason.

Greenville Retirement Community, L.P., ("Greenville") is a Delaware limited partnership that manages a retirement community, Stonegates Condominiums, in New Castle County. Stonegates was established as a condominium on May 1, 1984, subject to the Delaware Unit Property Act.<sup>4</sup> 25 Del. C. § 2201. Pursuant to the Stonegates Declaration, the structure was to have eighty-eight "cottage" units, seventy-six apartment units, and two "service" units which would be used to provide residents with health care and dining services. Residents own their individual living units in fee simple and jointly own the common elements with all other residents, in proportion to their ownership of condominium [*5] units. Greenville owns the two service units and two former apartments units which have been converted into commercial space.

Pursuant to a Management Agreement, entered into between Greenville and the Condominium Council<sup>5</sup> when the condominium was established, Greenville was granted the right to operate and manage Stonegates for twenty years. Greenville then contracted with Forum Group to manage Greenville's commercial activities and assume its management responsibilities at Stonegates.<sup>6</sup> This contract originally had a ten year term, with an option to renew for an additional ten [*6] years, which has been exercised.

From the beginning, each residential unit at Stonegates was sold on the condition that Greenville hold an option to repurchase the unit at the time of a resident's death or termination of residency for any reason, including a breach of the Residence Agreement or offer to sell a Stonegates unit to a third party.<sup>7</sup> Pursuant to the Residence Agreement, if the repurchase option is triggered, the option price is the original purchase price less a depreciation allowance. Specifically, the depreciation allowance reduces the option price by 7 percent of the sales price, for the first year of residence, and an additional [*7] 4 percent for each subsequent year, up to a maximum depreciation allowance of 47 percent of the sales price.<sup>8</sup>

In the past, when residents have died or left Stonegates for other reasons, Greenville has repurchased their units at a price determined by applying this formula. [*8] See Greenville Retirement Community, L.P. v. Koke, Del. Ch., C.A. No. 12487, Allen, C. (Aug. 11, 1993). After exercising this option, Greenville resells the repurchased units at current market prices. The net proceeds from such sales constitute one of Greenville's principal supplemental sources of revenue and, apparently, were intended as a key element of the financial structure of Stonegates from its inception.<sup>9</sup>

---

<sup>4</sup> It appears that Greenville chose to use the condominium structure for Stonegates, rather than entering into leasing agreements with tenants, in order to obtain financing and tax benefits for both the residents and Greenville. This structure for a continuing care retirement community is not entirely unique and is recognized as a viable structure for such a facility by the Delaware Life Care Registration Act 18 Del. C. Ch. 46.

<sup>5</sup> Pursuant to the Code of Regulations, the Council has complete governance control over the affairs of the condominium. The Declaration of Stonegates provides that Greenville, as the owner of the two service units, is entitled to designate the majority of its members.

<sup>6</sup> Forum Group receives 8 percent of the gross operating revenue of Stonegates as its management fee.

<sup>7</sup> Greenville is under no obligation to enter into a Residence Agreement with any individual who applies to purchase a condominium unit. Therefore, Greenville has the ability to control who buys units in the retirement community, whether from Greenville itself or from a unit owner, in the event that Greenville did not exercise its repurchase option.

<sup>8</sup> As of March 1995, only two types of improvements made by unit owners were entitled to be calculated into the repurchase sales price formula. Unit owners would be given credit for up to $ 8,000 spent on constructing a screened in porch and up to $ 25,000 for adding a glass enclosed room on the patio of a unit. The sales price would not be increased for any other types of improvements.

<sup>9</sup> Net proceeds of unit sales are used by Greenville to pay for operating expenses, improvements, and services provided at Stonegates, as well as providing Greenville with net profit. If Greenville did not receive these proceeds, it contends that it would be operating Stonegates at a net loss unless it increased certain fees.

Apparently, residents of typical similar continuing care retirement communities, who lease units instead of buying them, are required to pay an up front substantial lump sum entrance fee<sup>10</sup>, only partially refundable, if at all, based on a declining formula. See Affidavit [*9] of William S. Gee. The Delaware Life Care Registration Act states that the purchase price paid for a condominium unit in a continuing care retirement community will be deemed equivalent to an entrance fee charged by other facilities in which the residential unit is not purchased. See 18 Del. C. § 4601\(3\).

In addition, comparable retirement communities tend to require residents to enter into an agreement for both the lease of a unit and a package of services. Stonegates has a similar practice. Section 11 of the Residence Agreement requires all residents to pay a monthly fee which provides them with a package of health care<sup>11</sup> and other services, such as meals, housekeeping, and various basic conveniences. The monthly fee covers common area, sewage, electricity, maintenance and other services as well.

[*10] As was mentioned above, Greenville has acquired two former residential units at Stonegates, in addition to its service units, to provide additional services to current and potential future residents of the retirement community.<sup>12</sup> In May 1988, Greenville acquired Unit 157 to use both as a dining room for residents and as a marketing office for the condominium. The Condominium Council approved the modifications to be made by Greenville, using its own funds, and residents were informed about the plans. Both the dining room and marketing office have been operational since early 1990.

A second unit, Unit 158, was acquired by Greenville in August 1988, apparently [*11] to remedy the shortage of beds in the Health Center. Unit 158 was modified to permit six additional beds for nursing care services. As the project was underway, completely funded by Greenville, the Residents Advisory Board and all residents were kept informed regarding the details. In addition, the Condominium Council reviewed the plan.

Several clauses in the Stonegates Declaration are arguably relevant to the issue of whether the above modifications were permissible. Although the Stonegates Declaration states that the units are to be used for residential purposes only, Section 6B(d) provides that Greenville may use a unit owned by it for "sales, leasing, and display purposes." In addition, the Declaration and Declaration Plan may be amended to alter the permitted use of the units, by an 80% vote of all unit owners. No such formal amendment has been made.<sup>13</sup> Section 29 states that the provisions of the Declaration are to be "liberally construed to effectuate its purpose of creating a uniform plan for the development of a retirement living condominium development." In addition, Article 8, Section 1 of the Code of Regulations provides that the Condominium Council may approve the use [*12] of the units for non-residential, commercial purposes. It appears that the Council gave at least informal approval for the modifications and intended commercial uses of Units 157 and 158.

B. Relationship Between the Parties

Prior to filing this action, Mr. Maddock had many dealings with Greenville in his capacity as a member of the Residence Board, a committee elected by the residents which makes non-binding recommendations to management, and as the sole representative of the residents on the Condominium Council, from 1990-1992. During his participation in these committees, Mr. Maddock voiced concerns regarding the management of Stonegates on

---

<sup>10</sup> Generally, such fees appear to be of the same magnitude, or higher, than the purchase price of a unit at Stonegates.

<sup>11</sup> Each resident is assured the availability of a semi-private room in the Health Care unit, if needed, and has access to a 24 hour on call nursing staff.

<sup>12</sup> Apparently, there has been no change in the number of units or impact on common expenses since Greenville pays the proportionate share of common expenses owed by the two units and covered all costs of the modifications. Greenville's expenses are offset by the additional revenues it receives from the services provided to residents in these units.

<sup>13</sup> Greenville has stated that it could and would seek retroactive 80% approval of its uses of the two units, and reconvert such units to residential use, at its own expense, if such approval was not granted. Mr. Maddock concedes apparently that this would ameliorate any continuing technical violation of the Declaration.

several occasions and attempted to have the [*13] Council bring a lawsuit against Greenville for alleged failure to comply with the provisions of the Declaration, Declaration Plan, Code of Regulations, and Condominium Management Agreement, but others would not agree.

During his residency at Stonegates, it appears that Mr. Maddock used his legal background, as a formerly practicing attorney, to advise other residents regarding their decision to purchase units at Stonegates. Mr. Maddock advised at least six other residents, both before and after the filing of this action, that he believed the Residence Agreement and repurchase option to be of questionable legality. However, Mr. Maddock himself signed such an agreement in June 1987.

Mr. Maddock filed this action on May 7, 1992. Since then, his complaint and the posture of the litigation has been altered in two ways. Originally, the action was filed on his own behalf and on behalf of all of the Stonegates unit owners. Mr. Maddock, however, subsequently withdrew his representation of the other unit owners, and is currently pursuing the litigation entirely on his own behalf. In addition, Mr. Maddock filed an amended complaint in order to specify that all of his claims arose after April [*14] 2, 1992, the explanation for which is discussed below, to add Forum Group as an additional defendant, and to assert the claim of antitrust violations. See Maddock v. Greenville Retirement Community L.P., Del. Ch., C.A. No. 12564, Allen, C. (Aug. 9, 1995) Mem. Op.

C. Bankruptcy Court Proceeding

To understand both why Mr. Maddock filed an amended complaint asserting that all his claims arose after April 2, 1992, and Defendants' argument that all of Mr. Maddock's claims are barred, a brief review of Forum Group's bankruptcy proceeding and related actions is necessary. On February 19, 1991, Forum Group filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy in the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Indiana. Pursuant to Section 362 of the Bankruptcy Code, such filing effected an automatic stay of all proceedings against Forum Group and its subsidiaries and affiliates, all of which would be involved in the consolidated reorganization proceedings.

Significantly, on April 2, 1992, one month before this action was filed, Forum Group obtained final approval of a Plan of Reorganization.<sup>14</sup> Pursuant to Sections 524 and 1041(d) of the Bankruptcy Code, Article 11.2 of the approved plan stated [*15] that all claims against Forum Group and its affiliates, including Greenville, and any of its or their assets, were discharged and barred if "based upon any document, instrument, act, omission, transaction or other activity of any kind or nature that occurred prior to the Confirmation Date."

When Mr. Maddock filed this action on May 7, subsequent to the effective date of the Confirmation Order, Forum Group responded by bringing an adversary proceeding against him in the Bankruptcy Court. Forum Group claimed that Mr. Maddock's claims had been discharged and barred by the Bankruptcy Court's Confirmation Order. On August 24, 1992, the Bankruptcy Court issued a temporary restraining order to prohibit Mr. Maddock from continuing this Delaware action. An attempt to modify the temporary restraining order to allow him to file an amended complaint with the phrase "since [*16] April 3, 1992," to limit each claim to the time period after the Confirmation Order, was denied by such court and a permanent injunction granted on September 17, 1993.

Mr. Maddock appealed the permanent injunction to the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana. The District Court, concerned that the injunction could be interpreted to bar new suits or causes of actions based on future violations, vacated the injunction, remanding the matter to the Bankruptcy Court. The District Court stated that the "Bankruptcy Court cannot enjoin suits premised on Greenville's actions occurring after Greenville has emerged from Forum Group's reorganization. That the post reorganization activity generating the suit is a continuing breach does not change this outcome." U.S. District Court Opinion (Aug. 30, 1994).

---

<sup>14</sup> Mr. Maddock apparently was aware of the Bankruptcy Court proceeding when he filed his original complaint which expressly refers to the proceeding.

A final injunction, issued by the Bankruptcy Court on remand on December 19, 1994, only prohibits Mr. Maddock from asserting in this litigation claims that arose prior to the Confirmation Order. Specifically, the injunction order states that Mr. Maddock may not assert any:

claims based upon acts and omissions of Forum Group, Inc. or Greenville Retirement Community, [*17] L.P., or either of them, occurring prior to April 2, 1992 . . . The actions prohibited by this Order shall not include a claim arising after April 2, 1992 from either a new cause of action or a new breach of any continuing agreement.

U.S. Bankruptcy Court Final Injunction Order, on remand (Dec. 19, 1994).

To comply with this order, Mr. Maddock filed a motion to amend his complaint on March 13, 1995, to modify each claim with the words "since April 3, 1992." In addition, as mentioned above, the amended complaint added Forum Group as an additional defendant, and asserted a new antitrust claim against both defendants. In granting the motion to amend the complaint on August 9, 1995, this Court stated that "to the extent that the discharge of bankruptcy may represent a defense to any of the specific claims alleged it may be pleaded and adjudicated." Maddock v. Greenville Retirement Community L.P., Mem. Op. at 6. Defendants now assert the defense that all of Mr. Maddock's claims are based upon acts or omissions which occurred prior to April 2, 1992 which are barred by the final injunction.

II LEGAL PRINCIPLES AND ANALYSIS

A. Defenses

As a preliminary matter, it [*18] is useful to discuss the defenses asserted by Greenville in its own motion for summary judgment. Defendants contend that all of the legal claims made by Mr. Maddock are barred by the Bankruptcy Court injunction or, in the alternative, that Mr. Maddock is equitably estopped from bringing claims based on contracts which he knowingly signed.

In response to the first defense, Mr. Maddock argues that each of his three claims are based on acts of the Defendants that occurred after April 2, 1992. First, as to Units 157 and 158, while their conversion to commercial facilities preceded that date, Defendants have continued occupying and using such units for nonresidential purposes, allegedly violating the Declaration and Plan anew every day since April 2, 1992. Second, as to the mandatory requirement that each resident enter into a Residence Agreement, thereby agreeing to grant Greenville the repurchase option, Mr. Maddock contends that its existence constitutes an unreasonable restraint on alienation which has caused injury each day since the original agreement was signed, including the post-bankruptcy period. Third, as to the alleged antitrust violations, Mr. Maddock claims that each new [*19] payment of the required monthly fee by residents, for goods and services to be supplied by Greenville, constitutes actionable tying due to Greenville's control over the market for units at Stonegates.<sup>15</sup> Despite the fact that each of these claims arises out of contracts and transactions which occurred well before April 2, 1992, I will assume with respect to the first and third of them that the reoccurring nature of each is sufficient for Mr. Maddock to go forward on such claims without contravening the Bankruptcy Court injunction.<sup>16</sup> (I cannot so assume with respect to the claim of unreasonable restraint on alienation).

<sup>15</sup> In a Fifth Circuit case involving tying, Imperial Point Colonades-Condominium v. Mangurian, the court found that a collection of payment for the tied product created a new cause of action which was actionable regardless of whether the tying contract was executed prior to the statute of limitations period. See 549 F.2d 1029 \(5th Cir. 1977\), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 859.

<sup>16</sup> See Sherrellein Price v. Wilmington Trust Company, Del. Ch., C.A. No. 12476, Allen, C. \(May 19, 1995\), 1995 Del. Ch. LEXIS 65 at *6-8 (finding in breach of contract case that each alleged overcharging gave rise to a separate cause of action, triggering a new statute of limitations period, because the continuing wrong could be segmented into independent wrongful acts).

[*20] Further, I will assume that Mr. Maddock is not estopped from making claims of unreasonable restraint on alienation and illegal tying, as is argued by Defendants as an alternative defense. Mr. Maddock has alleged that the contracts entered into with Greenville violate rules based on strong public policy concerns. In my opinion, therefore, this Court may still invalidate the contracts if they are found to be illegal on the alleged grounds, despite the fact that Mr. Maddock knowingly signed contracts containing the terms of which he is now complaining.<sup>17</sup>

[*21] A third defense asserted by Defendants, however, has merit. Defendants contend correctly that this Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction to hear Mr. Maddock's antitrust claims. Mr. Maddock has alleged that Greenville is engaging in illegal tying which violates both Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and, in the alternative, the Delaware Antitrust Act, 6 Del. C. § 2103, both of which prohibit contracts, combinations, and conspiracies undertaken with the purpose and effect of unreasonably restraining trade. As to the Sherman Act claim, it is settled that HN2<sup>18</sup> federal courts have original and exclusive jurisdiction to enforce Section 1 of the Sherman Act. General Investment Co. v. Lake Shore & Mich. S.R. Co., 260 U.S. 261, 67 L. Ed. 244, 43 S. Ct. 106 (1922); Blumenstock Bros. v. Curtis Pub. Co., 252 U.S. 436, 64 L. Ed. 649, 40 S. Ct. 385 (1920); Williamson v. Columbia Gas & Electric Corp., 27 F. Supp. 198, 204 (D. Del. 1939). As a state court, the Court of Chancery has no subject matter jurisdiction to hear Mr. Maddock's federal antitrust claim.<sup>19</sup> Therefore, Defendants are entitled to summary judgment as to the federal antitrust claims.

[*22] As to Mr. Maddock's state antitrust claims, again it appears that this Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction. Theoretically, a cause of action for illegal tying could be stated based on Section 2103 of Delaware's antitrust statute which was substantially modeled after, and expressly intended to be interpreted in harmony with, Section 1 of the Sherman Act. See 6 Del. C. § 2113. HN3<sup>20</sup> However, the Delaware statute does not permit individuals to enforce their rights by bringing private actions. In contrast, the federal antitrust acts expressly create a private right of action. See, e.g., 15 U.S.C. § 15; 15 U.S.C. § 26. Instead of providing for a private right of action, the Delaware statute expressly grants the state attorney general the right to bring remedial actions. Section 2108 specifically empowers the state attorney general to initiate parens patriae suits on behalf of state residents whose business or property have been injured by alleged antitrust violations.<sup>21</sup> Since Mr. Maddock has failed to bring any case to this Court's attention in which an individual has been permitted to bring an action on his own behalf pursuant to Delaware's antitrust statute, and the act [*23] itself does not expressly provide such a right, I believe that this Court lacks the necessary subject matter jurisdiction to hear this claim.<sup>22</sup>

<sup>17</sup> In Greene v. E.H. Rollins & Sons, Inc., Del. Ch., 22 Del. Ch. 394, 2 A.2d 249, 252 (1938), this Court stated that:

HN1<sup>23</sup> Individuals have authority in law to enter into all sorts of contracts. But this general power to make contracts does not of course mean that every term in a contract which individuals may choose to adopt, shall in every instance be recognized as valid and binding. No individual may exercise his broad power to enter into contract relations with another so as to offend against what the law deems to be sound public policy.

<sup>18</sup> Mr. Maddock has cited several cases to support the proposition that state courts have power to refuse to enforce contracts found to violate the Sherman Act. While this is true, it is not relevant in this case where it is the plaintiff asking for relief pursuant to the federal antitrust law. In Lyons v. Westinghouse Electric Corp., Judge Hand explained that violations of federal antitrust law may be raised in a state court as a defense only where the plaintiff's claim is an attempt to enforce "an undertaking itself forbidden." 222 F.2d 184, 190 \(2d. Cir. 1955\); see Rohm and Haas Co. v. Polycast Technology Corp., 297 A.2d 53, 55 (1972).

<sup>19</sup> Using this power, the state attorney general pursued an illegal tying action involving a trailer park which required purchasers of their lots to purchase their mobile homes from a specific company. See In the Matter of Attorney General's Investigation of Creekside Homes, Inc., Del. Ch., C.A. No. 6869, Longobardi, V.C. (Sept. 15, 1982).

<sup>20</sup> Recent United States Supreme Court jurisprudence, tending to narrowly construe statutes when asked to recognize an implied private cause of action, suggests that this is the correct result. See Touche Ross & Co. v. Redington, 442 U.S. 560, 578, 61 L. Ed. 2d 82, 99 S. Ct. 2479 (1979) (Rehnquist opinion discussing a new, stricter standard to be applied where a party is

[*24] In light of the two assumptions stated above and the ruling regarding subject matter jurisdiction, I will discuss the legal merits of the two remaining claims. As will become clear, the assumptions made in Mr. Maddock's favor in no way altered the outcome of this action because, in my opinion, Defendants are entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law on both claims.

B. Substantive Claims

The first of Mr. Maddock's remaining substantive claims is that by converting Units 157 and 158 to commercial use, Greenville violated Stonegates' Declaration and Plan. Mr. Maddock's second remaining claim is that the combination of the repurchase option and conditions related to who is entitled to purchase a Stonegates unit constitute an unreasonable restraint on alienation. In my opinion, Mr. Maddock is not entitled to relief based on either of these claims for the following reasons.

I. Units 157 and 158

Mr. Maddock's allegation that Greenville violated Stonegates' Declaration and Plan by modifying two of the units and using them for commercial purposes, does not state a cause of action. First, I note that the Declaration expressly states that it is to be given a liberal interpretation. [*25] While it is true that the Declaration states that the units are to be used for residential purposes only, and that the Declaration was never amended to permit commercial uses, in my opinion, all of the current uses of the units are collateral residential use (residents use them residentially and do use them when they sleep there while housed there for treatment). Thus, Greenville's use of Unit 158 for health care services and the portion of Unit 157 which is used to provide food services, although not expressly permitted, does not violate the Declaration liberally construed.

Beyond that, the portion of the Unit 157 which is being used as a sales office is authorized by the Declaration without question. Section 6B(d) expressly provides that Greenville may use a unit owned by it for such purposes.

Even if these modifications were found to technically violate the Declaration and Plan, it would be difficult to imagine a course of equity affording Mr. Maddock an equitable remedy. What damages has Mr. Maddock suffered; what injury to others would an injunction do? Apparently, Greenville covered all of the expenses incurred in connection with the modifications and has continued to contribute [*26] the share of the common expenses which would ordinarily be paid by residents living in the two units. Mr. Maddock has provided no evidence to suggest that economic injury has resulted from the use of the two units for commercial purposes. Without such evidence, even if the claim in the merits were stronger, it would be difficult for a court of equity to order Greenville to discontinue using the units in the current manner, given that the continuation of such services appears to be in the best interest of Stonegates' residents as a group. The fact that Greenville may be profiting from the provision of these services does not entitle Mr. Maddock to any remedy under these circumstances. Defendants are entitled to summary judgment in their favor with regard to this claim.

2. Restraint on Alienation

Mr. Maddock's second substantive claim is plagued by a similar problem in that he is attempting to invalidate a condition of property ownership at Stonegates which is reasonable given the apparent purpose of the agreements of providing continuing retirement community care. In my opinion, the combination of the repurchase option and transfer restrictions related to who is entitled to purchase [*27] a Stonegates unit, constitute a reasonable restraint on alienation, and should be upheld. Only a very strong showing that a contract term is a gross violation of the requesting the recognition of an implied private cause of action). The fact that Section 2109 of the state statute provides that a final judgment in an action initiated by the attorney general "is prima facie evidence against [the defendant] in any other action as to all matters with respect to which the judgment or decree would be an estoppel between the parties thereto," is insufficient to find that a implied private cause of action was intended by the legislature.

---

policies embodied in this common law rule would permit Mr. Maddock to escape the economic bargain that he entered into when he purchased his condominium.

HN4 As a general rule, conditions on the sale of property which prevent its owner from conveying it when it would be economically efficient to do so may constitute an invalid unreasonable restraint on the alienation of property. See 61 Am. Jur. 2d, Restraints on Alienation and Use § 100, at 108-109 (1981). However, if such a restraint is deemed reasonable under the circumstances, it will be upheld. See Restatement of the Law, Property (2d), Donative Transfers § 4.4 (1983).

Although reasonableness is a fact intensive inquiry, the undisputed facts on the record permit the determination of this matter on summary judgment. According to Mr. Maddock, four aspects of the repurchase option are critical. Greenville's repurchase option gives it (1) a preemptive right of first refusal, (2) of unlimited duration, (3) at a fixed price which is, (4) always lower [*28] than the original price paid for the unit.<sup>21</sup> In addition, Mr. Maddock argues that the fact that Greenville has discretion with regard to who it will permit to buy a unit at Stonegates, constitutes a further impediment to the alienability of Stonegates' units. In my opinion, neither the repurchase option nor the transfer restriction constitutes an unreasonable restraint on alienation under Delaware law. Rather, the terms taken together constitute a reasonable, jointly advantageous means to finance retirement home occupancy.

a. repurchase option

First, it is important to recognize that a restraint [*29] on alienation claim cannot be analyzed without considering the entity of the contractual bargain which created the restraint. The repurchase option reflects an agreement between Greenville and each resident, that Greenville would have the right to buy back the unit on termination of the individual's residency, paying a price determined by the set formula. Given that real estate prices have risen steadily throughout the past century, it is only reasonable to assume that the parties contemplated that the value of the units would likely rise over the term of the residency, assuring that Greenville would elect to buy the unit back at a below market price. Presumably, the original price paid for the unit reflected all of the economic terms of the contract, including this condition.

Mr. Maddock is now asking this Court to use the loosely worded common law doctrine prohibiting restraints on alienation to undo a complex, highly rational bargain reached between the parties. In my opinion, it is entirely clear that the contract should be enforced as written. The law of restraints on alienation supports this conclusion.

Delaware has adopted the view held by the Restatement of the Law, Property, [*30] Sections 406 and 413 (1944), that HN5 a preemptive right at a fixed price constitutes an unreasonable restraint on alienation unless it is reasonable under the circumstances. See McInerney v. Slights, Del. Ch., C.A. No. 1096-S, Allen, C. (April 12, 1988) 1988 Del. Ch. LEXIS 47 at *20. The Comments to Section 406 of the Restatement list several factors which tend to show reasonableness and unreasonableness, some of which are applicable to the facts of this case.<sup>22</sup> Significantly, the Comments suggest that a restraint tends to be reasonable if the one imposing the restraint has an interest in land which it is seeking to protect with the restraint, the enforcement of the restraint accomplishes a worthwhile purpose, and the restraint has a limited duration. The repurchase option has all of these characteristics.

Principally, the rule against restraints on alienation is aimed at serving "social policy" goals, rather than [*31] protecting the "rights of the party on whom the restraint is imposed." Id. at *19. To determine whether a restraint is reasonable, therefore, the countervailing positive and negative effects of a restraint on alienation on society as a whole must be weighed. As to the potential benefits of the repurchase option, Defendants assert that it is an integral element of Stonegates' financing structure and plan to provide continuing care retirement community services. Instead of using the more traditional entrance fee and lease financing structure, Greenville used a condominium ownership structure with the repurchase option to secure tax benefits for both themselves and the residents.

<sup>21</sup> This type of restraint on alienation can have the effect of preventing or discouraging the sale of property, or property improvements, because the owner is unable to realize the full value of the property at the time of sale. See, e.g., American Law of Property, Little Brown & Co., 1952, A. James Casner, Editor-in-Chief, § 26.65; Restatement of the Law, Property (2d), Donative Transfers, § 4.4 (1983).

<sup>22</sup> For a complete list of the factors, see McInerney, 1988 Del. Ch. LEXIS 47 at *20-21.

The countervailing negative side effects of the repurchase option appear minimal. Economically, the repurchase option is no greater a restraint on alienation than fees and penalties that are charged by other retirement communities. As discussed above, the fixed price repurchase option can be viewed as comparable to the entrance fee paid by residents who lease units at other types of continuing care facilities. Once a resident has paid an entrance fee, there is a similar disincentive to terminating a lease.

[*32] In fact, the Stonegates repurchase option may be less of a restraint on alienation than an upfront entrance fee, depending on its magnitude. The repurchase option's fixed price formula is financially akin to a standard rental arrangement. In Greenville Retirement Community, L.P. v. Koke, this Court analogized the repurchase price formula to a depreciation allowance, stating that it is the "financial equivalent of a deferred yearly fee made payable in full to Stonegates upon termination of the residency." Del. Ch., C.A. No. 12487 (1993). Such a yearly fee is paid regularly by tenants who rent, instead of own, an apartment or house. Although this scenario is different because Stonegates' residents purchase their condominium units in fee simple, the restraint is not unreasonable given the apparently beneficial purpose discussed above and the minimal economic disincentive in comparison to other retirement community options. I conclude that this type of bargained for reasonable restraint is valid and enforceable.<sup>23</sup>

[*33] b. transfer restriction

An application of the same type of analysis and the reasonableness test to the transfer restriction leads to the conclusion that it is a valid restraint on alienation as well. Given the presumption discussed above, that Greenville would buy back the unit, and has done so apparently in all cases in order to capture the expected appreciation in property value, the transfer restriction has no practical effect on the ability of residents to freely sell their units. Even if the transfer restriction did restrain the alienability of property somewhat, however, by enabling Greenville to restrict who a unit may be sold to, I would find that it is reasonable under the circumstances.

An essential service provided at Stonegates is guaranteed access to its health care facilities for all residents. In order to fulfill this promise, Greenville contends that it must maintain discretionary control regarding new residents. In this context, such a transfer restriction is reasonable provided that Greenville exercises its discretion in good faith. There is no indication to the contrary based on the record presented. If, as Greenville contends, it reserved such discretion [*34] in order to maintain reasonable eligibility requirements related to the health and financial ability of Stonegates' residents (a seemingly worthwhile purpose), then it does not constitute an unreasonable restraint on alienation. Again, the benefits to society as a whole, and specifically the other residents at Stonegates, appear to outweigh the restraint on Mr. Maddock's rights as an individual property owner. The transfer restriction is a valid, enforceable element of the contract entered into between the parties.

Finally, independently of the foregoing, it seems clear that the "reasonableness" of these transactions is a subject that is barred against Greenville by reason of the Bankruptcy Court discharge. The alleged invalidity of that repurchase agreement as an unreasonable restraint on alienation arises from documents entered into prior to April 2, 1992 and does not arise thereafter. All of the terms of the contract and the relevant event preceded the discharge in bankruptcy. (See quoted discharge language, supra, at 10). Because I conclude as above on the merits, I need not develop that point however.

---

<sup>23</sup> Mr. Maddock argues that this case is analogous to McInerney v. Slights, where a contract providing the plaintiff with a right of first refusal to purchase land at a set price, substantially below the market value of the property at the time of trial, was held to be an unreasonable restraint on alienation. Id. at *2. Although several of the elements of the restraint were similar, this Court found that none of the Restatement factors tending to indicate reasonableness were present in McInerney v. Slights. Id. at 21. Only the unique set of facts presented in McInerney v. Slights merited this Court to take the highly unusual step of invalidating a contract. See Filasky v. von Schnurbein, Del. Ch., C.A. 10545, Jacobs, V.C. \(Jan. 17, 1990\) 1990 Del. Ch. LEXIS 5 at *7-8. The restraint on alienation imposed on Stonegates' residents appears to be reasonable and enforceable when analyzed in the context of Greenville's plan to provide continuing care retirement community services.

III. CONCLUSION

As a matter of law, I find that Mr. Maddock [*35] has failed to state a claim upon which relief can be granted with regard to the unit modifications, repurchase option, and transfer restriction. Having determined, as well, that this Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction to hear Mr. Maddock's antitrust claims, I conclude that Defendants are entitled to summary judgment. Mr. Maddock's motion for summary judgment is denied and that of the Defendants will be granted.

Defendant may submit an order on notice.

---

End of Document

ABC Internat. Traders, Inc. v. Matsushita Electric Corp.

Supreme Court of California

February 27, 1997, Decided

No. S051417.

Reporter

14 Cal. 4th 1247 *; 931 P.2d 290 **; 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 112 ***; 1997 Cal. LEXIS 405 ****; 97 Cal. Daily Op. Service 1430; 97 Daily Journal DAR 2105; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,736

ABC INTERNATIONAL TRADERS, INC., Plaintiff and Appellant, v. MATSUSHITA ELECTRIC CORPORATION OF AMERICA, Defendant and Respondent.

Prior History: [****1] Superior Court of Los Angeles County, No. BC 098609. Eric E. Younger, Judge.

Disposition: The judgment of the Court of Appeal is reversed.

Core Terms

---

discounts, sellers, purchasers, retailers, competitors, buyers, chains, unfair practice, restitution, injunction, destroy the competition, price discrimination, wholesalers, allowance, antitrust, horizontal, vertical, distributors, prices, secondary, unearned, secret, unfair competition, purposes, locality discrimination, competitive injury, fair trade, Robinson-Patman Act, discriminatory, monopoly

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review

HN1[] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

For purposes of an appeal of the dismissal of an action without leave to amend, an appellate court takes the properly pleaded material allegations of plaintiff's complaint as true; the appellate court's only task on review is to determine whether the complaint states a cause of action.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN2[] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17045.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN3 Legislation, Interpretation

On its face, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17045 is aimed at preventing a distributor from discriminating between customers. The statute is focused patently on discrimination among purchasers; therefore, it is reasonable to assume the legislative purposes include protecting purchasers, such as wholesalers and retailers, against the competitive injury resulting from discrimination by those higher up the marketing chain.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN4 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17046 makes it unlawful to use any threat, intimidation, or boycott, to effectuate any violation of the Unfair Practices Act (UPA), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17000 et seq. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17047 makes it illegal to solicit the same. Similarly, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17048 makes it unlawful to participate or collude in violating the UPA.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN5 Legislation, Interpretation

In light of the legislative mandate under that a court construe section Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17045 liberally so that its beneficial purposes may be subserved, a court must, in the absence of clear evidence of a contrary legislative intent, interpret the statute to protect against competitive injury in the secondary, as well as primary, lines of commerce. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17002.

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN6 Legislation, Statutory Remedies & Rights

An action to enjoin a violation of or recover damages under the Unfair Practices Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17000 et seq. may be brought by any person or trade association. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17070.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

14 Cal. 4th 1247, *1247L<sup>1</sup> 931 P.2d 290, **290L<sup>1</sup> 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 112, ***112L<sup>1</sup> 997 Cal. LEXIS 405, ****1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN7 [down] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17045 by its terms requires a plaintiff to prove not only injury to a competitor, but, in addition, a tendency to destroy competition. Thus, whatever may be the federal law or enforcement pattern, § 17045 applies only when the discriminatory rebate, discount or allowance has a tendency to destroy competition generally. For purposes of § 17045, competition is competition, whether among retailers, wholesalers or producers.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN8 [down] Legislation, Interpretation

It is not for a court to determine whether or not the policy of a statute is economically sound or beneficial. That is a matter solely for the legislature.

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN9 [down] Legislation, Statutory Remedies & Rights

See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203.

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN10 [down] Legislation, Statutory Remedies & Rights

Nothing in the actual language of Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203 indicates the availability of restitution is contingent on the issuance of an injunction. The statute contains no language of condition linking restitution and injunctive relief. On its face, § 17203 authorizes injunctive relief to prevent unfair competition, and/or restitution (i.e. disgorgement) of money or property wrongfully obtained.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Summary

CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS SUMMARY

A wholesale distributor of telephone equipment and other electronic products brought an action against a manufacturer of electronic products and two other competing wholesale distributors for violations of the Unfair Practices Act (UPA) Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17000 et seq., alleging that the manufacturer was providing an unearned, secret 5 percent discount to the two other distributors (a practice prohibited by Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045), and for violations of the unfair competition law (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17203). The trial court sustained the manufacturer's demurrer to both causes of action without leave to amend, and dismissed plaintiff's complaint against the manufacturer. (Superior Court of Los Angeles County, No. BC098609, Eric E. Younger, Judge.) The Court of Appeal, Second Dist., Div. Two, No. B087534, affirmed. As the the UPA cause of action, the Court of Appeal held that the elements of a violation of Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045, were not met, because the complaint did not allege any injury to the manufacturer's competitors or any tendency to destroy competition among electronics producers. As to the second cause of action, the court held the complaint was deficient because it sought restitution and disgorgement without injunctive relief.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeal. As to the UPA cause of action, the court held that the class of "competitors" and the "competition" protected under Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045, is not restricted to competitors of the person allowing an unearned discount (the "primary" line of commerce), as opposed to competitors of the person receiving it (the "secondary" line of commerce). The statutory language contains no such restriction. Furthermore, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045, is aimed at preventing a distributor from discriminating between customers; hence the legislative purposes include protecting purchasers, such as wholesalers and retailers, against the competitive injury resulting from discrimination by those higher up the marketing chain. Furthermore, the language, context, purposes, and history of Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045, all point to the conclusion its protection extends to competitors of the purchasers receiving the discount. The court also held the trial court erred when it dismissed the cause of action on demurrer for violations of the unfair competition law (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17203). Although plaintiff prayed for restitution, and not for an injunction against future unfair competition, nothing in the actual language of Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17203, indicates the availability of restitution is contingent on the issuance of an injunction. In the absence of such statutory restriction, a court of equity retains the full range of its inherent powers in order to accomplish complete justice between the parties, restoring if necessary the status quo ante as nearly as may be achieved. An order for restitution, therefore, was within the court's power. (Opinion by Werdegar, J., with George, C. J., Kennard, Baxter, and Chin, JJ., concurring. Concurring opinion by Mosk, J., and dissenting opinion by Brown, J.)

Headnotes

CA(1) [1] (1)

Appellate Review § 128—Scope of Review—Rulings on Demurrs.

--For purposes of an appeal of a trial court's dismissal of an action after the court sustains a defendant's demurrer without leave to amend, the reviewing court takes the properly pleaded material allegations of the complaint as true; the only task of the reviewing court is to determine whether the complaint states a cause of action.

CA(2) [2] (2)

Unfair Competition § 3—Unfair Trade Practices Act—Seller Providing Unearned Discounts to Purchaser—Competitive Injury to Wholesale Purchaser.

--In an action brought by a wholesale distributor of electronic products against a manufacturer of electronic products and two other competitive wholesale distributors for violations of the Unfair Practices Act (UPA) Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17000 et seq., alleging that the manufacturer was providing an unearned, secret 5 percent discount to the two other distributors (a practice prohibited by Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045), the trial court erred when it sustained the manufacturer's demurrer without leave to amend and dismissed the complaint. The class of "competitors" and the "competition" protected under Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045, is not restricted to competitors of the person allowing an unearned discount--the "primary" line of commerce--as opposed to competitors of the person receiving it--the "secondary" line. The statutory language contains no such restriction. Furthermore, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045, is aimed at preventing a distributor from discriminating between customers; hence the legislative purposes include protecting purchasers, such as wholesalers and retailers, against the competitive injury resulting from discrimination by those higher up the marketing chain.

[See 1 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (9th ed. 1987) Contracts, § 592]

CA(3) [ ] (3)

Unfair Competition § 3—Unfair Trade Practices Act—Seller Providing Unearned Discounts—Legislative Intent—Competitive Injury to Purchaser.

--The language, context, purposes, and history of Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045, which prohibits a seller from secretly allowing a purchaser special unearned discounts, all point to the conclusion its protection extends to competitors of the purchasers receiving the discount, i.e., the "secondary" line of commerce. While Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045, itself does not focus directly on the purchaser's acts in obtaining a discriminatory price or other preference, the immediately following sections of the Unfair Practices Act (UPA) (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17000 et seq.) do (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 17046, 17047, 17048). Thus, the Legislature was concerned with the wrongful receipt, as well as the payment, of discriminatory prices, and, inferentially, with the injurious effect such wrongful receipt would have on the recipient's competitors. The UPA is a legislative attempt to regulate business as a whole by prohibiting practices that the Legislature has determined constitute unfair trade practices. Offense against this policy, is no less clear when it produces the evil in respect of the line of commerce in which the purchaser is engaged than when it produces the evil in respect of the line of commerce in which the seller is engaged. Hence, a retailer or wholesaler, or a trade organization representing such a class of merchants, clearly has standing to sue a producer for offering secret rebates or discounts to some members of the group but not to others.

CA(4a) [ ] (4a) CA(4b) [ ] (4b)

Unfair Competition § 3—Unfair Trade Practices Act—Seller Providing Unearned Discounts to Purchasers—Legislative History—Competitive Injury to Purchaser.

--The historical evidence strongly suggests the statute later codified as Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045 (prohibiting the practice of providing unearned, secret discounts to purchasers), was aimed primarily at protecting against competitive injury among buyers of goods, rather than sellers. The statute's prohibitions on secret discriminatory prices and rebates appear to have been intended mainly to restrain the quickly growing chain stores from certain well-documented abuses of their buying power, abuses that, together with other factors, were thought to have a highly destructive effect on wholesale and retail competition in the food industry and other trades. A primary concern in the enactment of the Unfair Practices Act (UPA) (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17000 et seq.), of which Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045, is a part, was the protection of smaller, independent retailers, especially grocers, against unfair competitive practices of the large chain stores. The competitive injury involved was to the disfavored buyers, and the tendency to destroy competition was in the line of commerce practiced by the favored buyer. Furthermore, the protection of fair and honest competition in the secondary line of commerce does not necessarily impede retail competition, but may well benefit the ultimate consumer.

CA(5) [ ] (5)

Statutes § 20—Construction—Judicial Function.

--It is not for the courts to determine whether or not the policy of a statute is economically sound or beneficial. That is a matter solely for the Legislature.

CA(6) [ ] (6)

Unfair Competition § 3—Unfair Trade Practices Act—Locality Discrimination.

--The locality discrimination prohibition of the Unfair Practices Act (UPA) (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17000 et seq.), while somewhat broadened by a 1931 amendment, retained a necessary element of geographic price difference; what was fundamentally prohibited was discrimination between locations, rather than between purchasers as such. Hence, locality discrimination cannot be proven where two locations are owned by competing buyers, but only where they are owned by the same seller (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 17031, 17040).

CA\(7\) [ ] (7)

Unfair Competition § 3—Unfair Trade Practices Act—Seller Providing Unearned Discounts to Purchasers—Applicability to Advertising Allowances.

--Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045, which prohibits the practice of providing unearned, secret discounts to purchasers, does not apply to advertising allowances allegedly granted to a competing retailer, where the allowances are neither secret nor discriminatory, being available to all purchasers buying on like terms and conditions.

CA\(8\) [ ] (8)

Unfair Competition § 3—Unfair Trade Practices Act—Comparison Between Provisions Prohibiting Unearned Discounts and Locality Discrimination.

--Both the section of the Unfair Practices Act (UPA) (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17000 et seq.) that prohibits a seller's provision of unearned, secret discounts to select purchasers (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045) and the provisions that prohibit locality discrimination (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 17031, 17040) are designed to foster competition and prevent monopoly conditions, but the particular threats to competition they are principally intended to meet are fundamentally different. The threat to competition caused by locality discrimination is typically to primary line competition: locality discrimination is an anticompetitive abuse engaged in by chain retailers as sellers, to the injury of competing sellers. In contrast, the solicitation and extortion of secret rebates, unearned discounts, and other discriminatory allowances was an anticompetitive abuse historically engaged in by chains as buyers, to the injury of competing buyers, i.e. the independent retailers and wholesalers. The difference in primary application between these provisions is reflected in their language. While neither of the provisions dealing with locality discrimination (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 17031, 17040) refers to individual purchasers, but rather require different prices at different locations, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045, is patently concerned with preventing a distributor from discriminating between customers.

CA\(9\) [ ] (9)

Unfair Competition § 8—Actions—Availability of Restitution Absent Request for Injunction.

--In an action brought by a wholesale distributor of electronic products against a manufacturer of electronic products and two other competitive wholesale distributors for violations of the unfair competition law (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17203), the trial court erred when it dismissed the cause of action on demurrer. Although plaintiff prayed for restitution, and not for an injunction against future unfair competition, nothing in the actual language of Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17203, indicates the availability of restitution is contingent on the issuance of an injunction. In the absence of such statutory restriction, a court of equity retains the full range of its inherent powers in order to accomplish complete justice between the parties, restoring if necessary the status quo ante as nearly as may be achieved. An order for restitution, therefore, was within the court's power.

Counsel: Blecher & Collins, Maxwell M. Blecher, John E. Andrews and James Robert Noblin for Plaintiff and Appellant.

Daniel E. Lungren, Attorney General, Herschel T. Elkins and Thomas Greene, Assistant Attorneys General, Ronald A. Reiter, Deputy Attorney General, Gil Garcetti, District Attorney Los Angeles, Thomas A. Papageorge, Deputy Distirct Attorney, and Daniel Berko as Amici Curiae on behalf of Plaintiff and Appellant.

David B. Bloom, James E. Adler, Golenbock, Eiseman, Assor & Bell and Martin S. Hyman for Defendant and Respondent.

Judges: Opinion by Werdegar, J., with George, C. J., Kennard, Baxter, and Chin, JJ., concurring. Concurring opinion by Mosk, J., and dissenting opinion by Brown, J.

Opinion by: WERDEGAR

Opinion

---

[*1252] [**291] [***113] WERDEGAR, J.

Business and Professions Code section 17045,<sup>1</sup> part of California's Unfair Practices Act (hereafter the UPA; see § 17000), prohibits a seller from secretly allowing a purchaser special "unearned discounts" that injure "a competitor" and tend to destroy [**292] [***114] "competition." The question [****2] before us is whether the competition referred to is limited to competition among sellers of the particular good or service, or includes economic competition among buyers as well. More concretely, does a disfavored buyer adequately plead a cause of action against a seller for violation of section 17045 by alleging the seller's secret discrimination injured the buyer and tended to destroy competition among buyers, or must the disfavored buyer allege injury to one or more of the seller's competitors and a tendency to destroy competition among sellers? Upon an examination of the statutory language, context, purposes and history, we conclude a cause of action may be pled by alleging competitive injury among buyers.

This case also calls upon us to interpret another section of the Business and Professions Code, section 17203, one of several statutes that together are sometimes referred to as the "unfair competition [****3] law." (§ 17200-17209; see, e.g., Committee on Children's Television, Inc. v. General Foods Corp. (1983) 35 Cal. 3d 197, 209 [197 Cal. Rptr. 783, 673 P.2d 660].) The question presented is whether a plaintiff may, under section 17203, seek restitution of money lost by the plaintiff or gained by the defendant as a result of the defendant's acts of unfair competition, without also seeking an injunction against future acts of unfair competition. We will hold injunctive relief is not a prerequisite to restitution under section 17203.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Plaintiff ABC International Traders, Inc. (ABC) is a wholesale distributor of telephone equipment and other electronic products. ABC's second [*1253] amended complaint names as defendants Matsushita Electric Corporation of America (MECA), Procom Supply Corporation (Procom), and Tele-Com Office Products Corporation (Tele-Com). MECA produces electronic products under the brand name Panasonic. Procom and Tele-Com are wholesale distributors of electronics, in competition with ABC.

The case comes to us following ABC's appeal of the trial court's dismissal of the action against MECA after the court sustained MECA's [****4] demurrer without leave to HN1 amend. CA(1) (1) For purposes of such an appeal, we take the properly pleaded material allegations of ABC's complaint as true; our only task on review is to determine whether the complaint states a cause of action. ( Garcia v. Superior Court (1990) 50 Cal. 3d 728, 732 [268 Cal. Rptr. 779, 789 P.2d 960].)

---

<sup>1</sup> Unless otherwise specified, all statutory references are to the Business and Professions Code.

The complaint sets forth two causes of action as to all defendants. The first is for violation of the UPA, "and in particular Sections 17045-17048." ABC alleges that in 1989 it suspected, but had no direct information to confirm, MECA was providing Procom and Tele-Com a 5 percent discount on Panasonic products, a discount not provided to ABC. In October 1991, MECA stopped selling to ABC altogether. In September 1992, ABC learned from employees of Procom that MECA had "for years" been giving Procom and Tele-Com a 5 percent discount from the price charged to other wholesalers.

ABC alleges the 5 percent discount was unearned, in that the recipients' wholesale marketing services were identical to those performed by ABC and others, and was secret, in that neither MECA nor any recipient of the discount confirmed its existence to ABC or to the market generally. ABC [****5] alleges damages in the amount of the lost discount plus lost profits from reduced sales of Panasonic products. It also charges that the discriminatory discount "tended to destroy competition" among electronics wholesalers, in that the favored wholesalers were in turn able to offer retailers lower prices than those offered by the disfavored wholesalers.

In its second cause of action, ABC alleged the above acts also constituted violations of the unfair competition law. Pursuant to section 17203, ABC sought restitution of all moneys ABC lost and disgorgement of all profits defendants received as a result of their acts of unfair competition.

The trial court granted MECA's demurrer on both causes of action without leave to amend. The Court of Appeal affirmed. As to the first cause of action, the court held the elements of a section 17045 violation were not met, because ABC did not allege any [**293] [***115] injury to MECA's competitors or any [*1254] tendency to destroy competition among electronics producers. The court believed our decision in [Harris v. Capitol Records etc. Corp. \(1966\) 64 Cal. 2d 454 \[50 Cal. Rptr. 539, 413 P.2d 139\]](#), which reached a similar result [****6] in an action brought under other provisions of the UPA, compelled that conclusion. On the second cause of action, the Court of Appeal held the complaint deficient "because it sought restitution and disgorgement without injunctive relief." For reasons explained below, we conclude the Court of Appeal erred in both these respects.

I. Competitive Injury Under Section 17045

A. Statutory Language and Context

HN2 Section 17045 provides: "The secret payment or allowance of rebates, refunds, commissions, or unearned discounts, whether in the form of money or otherwise, or secretly extending to certain purchasers special services or privileges not extended to all purchasers purchasing upon like terms and conditions, to the injury of a competitor and where such payment or allowance tends to destroy competition, is unlawful."

CA\(2\) (2) MECA contends the class of "competitors" and the "competition" protected under section 17045 is restricted to competitors of the person allowing an unearned discount--sometimes called the "primary" line of commerce--as opposed to competitors of the person receiving it--the "secondary" line. As is immediately apparent, however, the statutory language contains no such [****7] express restriction. Indeed, to the extent any inference can be drawn from the law's wording, it is to the contrary. HN3 On its face, section 17045 is "aimed at preventing a distributor from discriminating between customers." ([Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp. \(1968\) 69 Cal. 2d 305, 323 \[70 Cal. Rptr. 849, 444 P.2d 481\]](#)) The statute being focused patently on discrimination among purchasers, one might reasonably assume the legislative purposes included protecting purchasers, such as wholesalers and retailers, against the competitive injury resulting from discrimination by those higher up the marketing chain. Judicial and academic writers concerning themselves specifically with section 17045 have, in fact, so assumed. (See [Diesel Electric Sales & Service, Inc. v. Marco Marine San Diego, Inc. \(1993\) 16 Cal. App. 4th 202, 213-214 \[20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 62\]](#); McCarthy, Whatever Happened to the Small Businessman? The California Unfair Practices Act (1968) 2 U.S.F. L.Rev. 165, 181-182.)

CA\(3\) (3) MECA contends the intent to protect only against competitive injury in the primary line can be discerned from the Legislature's omission of certain language contained in [****8] federal price discrimination statutes. Section 2 [*1255] of the federal Clayton Act of 1914 forbids certain types of price discrimination in interstate commerce "where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce." (15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\); see [Van Camp & Sons v. Am. Can Co. \(1929\) 278 U.S. 245, 252-253 \[49 S. Ct. 112, 113, 73 L. Ed. 311, 60 A.L.R. 1060\]](#)) [section 2 of Clayton Act includes lessened competition in secondary line].) In the Robinson-Patman Act of 1936, Congress amended this section of the Clayton Act, inter alia, by additionally prohibiting discrimination the effect of which is "to injure, destroy or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them." (15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\); see [F.T.C. v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. \(1960\) 363 U.S. 536, 542-545 \[80 S. Ct. 1267, 2170-1272, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1385\]](#)) [added language, like original Clayton Act language, includes injury in either primary or secondary line].) The Robinson-Patman Act also made it unlawful "knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination [****9] in price which is prohibited by this section." (15 U.S.C. § 13\(f\)). MECA argues that section 17045, by contrast, focuses on the acts of sellers, rather than buyers, and contains no specific reference to competition in the secondary line.

MECA's argument ignores the statutory context of section 17045. While section 17045 itself does not focus directly on the purchaser's acts in obtaining a discriminatory price or other preference, the immediately following sections of the UPA do. HN4[] Section 17046 makes it unlawful to "use any threat, [**294] [***116] intimidation, or boycott, to effectuate any violation" of the UPA. Section 17047 makes it illegal to "solicit" the same. Similarly, section 17048 makes it unlawful to "participate or collude" in violating the UPA. It thus appears the Legislature, like Congress in enacting section 2(f) of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 U.S.C. § 13\(f\)), was concerned with the wrongful receipt, as well as the payment, of discriminatory prices, and, inferentially, with the injurious effect such wrongful receipt would have on the recipient's competitors.

Section 17045, to be sure, does not contain an explicit reference to secondary line competitive injury like the [****10] quoted language of the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts. Our interpretive task would be easier if it did. But the absence of a specific reference does not, in this context, constitute an implied restriction. The statute requires injury to a "competitor," and a tendency to destroy "competition," without any further inclusive or restrictive language delineating the scope of those terms. As we have seen, section 17045's evident concern with discrimination between competing purchasers suggests its intended protection extends to such competition. That the language used is somewhat less explicit than that of federal price discrimination [*1256] laws does not persuade us we should read into the statute a restriction contrary to its apparent intent.<sup>2</sup>

[****11] B. Statutory Purposes and Historical Background

Our conclusion is strengthened when we consider the purposes and history of the UPA in general and section 17045 in particular.

The declared purposes of the UPA are "to safeguard the public against the creation or perpetuation of monopolies and to foster and encourage competition, by prohibiting unfair, dishonest, deceptive, destructive, fraudulent and discriminatory practices by which fair and honest competition is destroyed or prevented." (§ 17001.) In upholding the law against an early constitutional challenge, this court described it as a legislative attempt "to regulate business as a whole by prohibiting practices which the legislature has determined constitute unfair trade practices." ([Wholesale T. Dealers v. National etc. Co. \(1938\) 11 Cal. 2d 634, 643 \[82 P.2d 3, 118 A.L.R. 486\]](#); see also [Max Factor & Co. v. Kunsman \(1936\) 5 Cal. 2d 446, 478 \[55 P.2d 177\]](#) (dis. opn. of Shenk, J.) [UPA "appears to be a painstaking endeavor by the legislature to combat the abuses which the business interests have deemed unfair practices in the competitive field."].) The Legislature thus, as a Court of Appeal has remarked, [****12] "set itself no small goal." (Paramount Gen. Hosp. Co. v. National Medical Enterprises, Inc. \(1974\) 42 Cal. App. 3d 496, 500

---

<sup>2</sup> Needless to say, we repudiate the dissent's suggestion we have "perverse[ly]" attempted to "introduce[] into the statute an ambiguity that is not present if the words are taken to mean what they say." (Dis. opn., post, at p. 1272.) In our view, the text of section 17045 is not so much ambiguous as simply silent on the question before us; it neither restricts "competition" to the primary line, nor expressly extends to competition in the secondary line. The dissent, like MECA, relies heavily on a supposed implication arising from section 17045's reference to the prohibited acts of sellers, but, as we have seen, any such implication dissolves when the statutory context--especially sections 17046, 17047 and 17048--is considered. In any event, the dissent's inferential method of interpretation hardly justifies its claim of unique fidelity to the plain statutory text.

[117 Cal. Rptr. 42].) That it might have a better chance of success, the Legislature specifically directed that the UPA's provisions "shall be liberally construed that its beneficial purposes may be subserved." (§ 17002.)

Section 17045 seeks to foster "fair and honest competition" (§ 17001) by prohibiting certain "dishonest, deceptive . . . and discriminatory practices" (ibid.), including the secret allowance of an unearned discount where such allowance injures a competitor and tends to destroy competition. We think it clear section 17045 would more fully serve the UPA's purposes if its protections were to extend to the secondary line. Business competition among buyers of a product is competition, no less than that among sellers. A [\*1257] deceptive practice that tends to destroy competition is no less repugnant to the policy of the UPA because the competitive injury occurs among wholesalers or retailers, rather [\*\*295] [\*\*\*117] than among producers. As the United States Supreme Court explained in holding the Clayton Act's anti-price-discrimination [\*\*\*\*13] provision applicable to secondary line injury, "[t]he fundamental policy of the legislation is that, in respect of persons engaged in the same line of . . . commerce, competition is desirable and that whatever substantially lessens it or tends to create a monopoly in such line of commerce is an evil. Offense against this policy, by a discrimination in prices exacted by the seller from different purchasers of similar goods, is no less clear when it produces the evil in respect of the line of commerce in which they are engaged than when it produces the evil in respect of the line of commerce in which the seller is engaged." ([Van Camp & Sons v. Am. Can Co., supra, 278 U.S. at p. 254 \[49 S. Ct. at p. 114\]](#).) HN5↑ In light of the legislative mandate that we construe section 17045 "liberally . . . that its beneficial purposes may be subserved" (§ 17002), we must, in the absence of clear evidence of a contrary legislative intent, interpret the statute to protect against competitive injury in the secondary, as well as primary, lines of commerce.

HN6↑ In further aid of the UPA's effective enforcement, moreover, its enactors provided that an action to enjoin a violation or recover damages [\*\*\*\*14] may be brought by "[a]ny person or trade association." (§ 17070.) Thus the law "denounces unfair competition and so-called piratical trade transactions, and was designed to afford full relief against such abuses on behalf of anyone aggrieved." (Max Factor & Co. v. Kunsman, supra, 5 Cal. 2d at p. 478 (dis. opn. of Shenk, J.), italics added; see also Grether, Experience in California with Fair Trade Legislation Restricting Price Cutting (1936) 24 Cal.L.Rev. 640, 647 (hereafter Grether) broad standing provision later codified as [section 17070 was designed to allow trade groups to "police" competition in their various trades].) Hence, a retailer or wholesaler, or a trade organization representing such a class of merchants, clearly has standing to sue a producer for offering secret rebates or discounts to some members of the group but not to others. Yet, under MECA's interpretation of section 17045, such plaintiffs may not rely on their own injury, or on the destruction of competition among themselves, but must instead, or in addition, plead and prove injury at the producer's level.<sup>3</sup> Such a construction would work to frustrate, rather than further, the UPA's goal [\*\*\*\*15] of furthering competition at all levels of trade.

[\*1258] CA\(4a\)↑ (4a) Turning to the UPA's historical background, we find additional confirmation for our conclusion.<sup>4</sup> As will be seen below, the historical evidence strongly suggests the statute later codified as section 17045 was aimed primarily at protecting against competitive injury among buyers of goods, rather than sellers. More specifically, the statute's prohibitions on secret discriminatory prices and rebates appear to have been intended mainly to restrain the quickly growing chain stores from certain well-documented abuses of their buying power, abuses that, together with other factors, were thought to have a highly destructive effect on wholesale and retail competition in the food industry and other trades.

[\*\*\*\*16] The UPA came into being piecemeal. Although a prohibition on locality discrimination (now § 17040) was first enacted in 1913, two other major substantive provisions, the prohibitions on secret rebates and unearned discounts (§ 17045) and on sales below cost (§ 17043), were not added until 1933. (Stats. 1913, ch. 276, § 1, p.

---

<sup>3</sup> MECA concedes ABC had standing to bring this action, but maintains ABC is nonetheless required to plead and prove injury to one of MECA's competitors.

<sup>4</sup> The parties have not provided, and our own research has not discovered, any direct legislative history relating to the enactment of section 17045's predecessor. Of necessity we rely on broader evidence of the legal and economic concerns motivating the law.

508; Stats. 1933, ch. 261, § 1, p. 793; Stats. 1933, ch. 504, § 1, p. 1280.) In 1935, the entire law was repealed and reenacted as a whole, supplemented and given its present name. (Stats. 1935, ch. 477, § 1, pp. 1546-1551.) In 1941 it was codified in the Business and Professions Code with the basic structure it has today. (Stats. 1941, ch. 526, § 1, pp. 1839-1846.) The pertinent historical background, then, is that of the early to middle 1930's.

[**296] [***118] The chain store problem "became important in the 1920's [and] resulted in political action that culminated in the 1930's." (Edwards, The Price Discrimination Law (1959) p. 10 (hereafter Edwards).) Between 1919 and 1927, retail sales by grocery chains almost quadrupled; those by drug, candy and variety chains more than doubled. (Id. at p. 9.) While lawmakers had earlier been concerned primarily [****17] with geographic discrimination used to obtain a local monopoly, new problems came to the fore during the 1920's as the chains grew in size, integrated wholesale and retail functions, and gained extraordinary purchasing power. (Id. at pp. 8-9.) The perceived importance of the chain store problem grew with the coming of the Depression, which "added to the economic distress of independents and intensified their fear and hatred of the chains, whose price appeal was sharpened by the slash in consumer income." (Palamountain, The Politics of Distribution (1955) p. 160 (hereafter Palamountain).)

In 1926, the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) began an investigation of the chain stores; the investigation produced numerous interim reports and a [*1259] final report issued in December 1934. (Edwards, supra, at p. 10.) The FTC found a pattern of "special discounts and allowances" granted to chains in preference to independent wholesalers and retailers. (FTC, Final Rep. on Chain-Store Investigation, Sen. Doc. No. 4, 74th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 60 (1935).) Grocery manufacturers reported selling to chain stores at a discount from the price charged other customers. In many cases the discount [***18] was purportedly for volume buying, but "the quantity purchased ha[d] no relation to the difference in price," the discount actually being only the result of hard bargaining by the chain purchaser. (Id. at p. 61.) Some manufacturers, in grocery and other industries, regularly granted chains a discount of up to 10 percent, with other distributors allowed only a much lower discount. For example, one manufacturer gave buyers a "confidential rebate" at year's end, "the rate to wholesalers being 2 percent, to chains generally it was 5 percent, but to two particular chains, it amounted to 10 percent." (Id. at p. 62.) In addition, a large number of manufacturers in the grocery, drug, tobacco and candy industries reported that the chain purchasers, through bargaining, had obtained preferential "promotional allowances," which in some cases were "not used for that purpose [advertising] at all" and bore "no direct relation to the volume of sales." (Id. at p. 61.) Similarly, the chains demanded and were granted special allowances for brokerage. (Id. at p. 62.)

As in the case just noted, of a manufacturer whose year-end rebates to buyers were kept "confidential," preferential [***19] rebates and unearned discounts were typically not disclosed publicly or to the trade generally. To the contrary, these discounts--or their unearned character--were frequently kept secret so that the buyer's competitors would not demand the same treatment. (See Fulda, Food Distribution in the United States: The Struggle Between Independents and Chains (1951) 99 U.Pa. L.Rev. 1051, 1086 (hereafter Fulda) [unearned advertising allowance constitutes "an indirect secret rebate"]; id. at pp. 1130-1131 [New York Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company's (A & P's) use of illusory quantity discounts as disguised preference]; id. at pp. 1132-1133 [examples of A & P's efforts to keep its unique price concessions secret].)

Depression conditions, moreover, gave chains greater relative buying power; "[c]onsequently, the difference between the prices charged chains and those charged smaller distributors apparently widened, and the attention of independents was increasingly focused on discounts." (Palamountain, supra, p. 192.) The resulting "secret rebates" and other discriminatory allowances were not insignificant in size; in the best known case, that of the A & P chain, they [***20] totaled more than $ 8 million in the single year 1934. ( New York Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co. v. Grosjean (1937) 301 U.S. 412, 421 [57 S. Ct. 772, 775, 81 L. Ed. 1193, 112 A.L.R. 293].) "The leverage which [*1260] accomplished this was the enormous purchasing power of the company." (Ibid.)

The perceived impact of such deceptive and discriminatory practices on the chains' competitors--the independent retailers and wholesalers--was the primary evil targeted in the Robinson-Patman Act. "It is . . . too [**297] [***119] well known to require extensive exposition . . . that the 1936 Robinson-Patman amendments to the Clayton Act were motivated principally by congressional concern over the impact upon secondary-line competition of the burgeoning of mammoth purchasers, notably chain stores." (F.T.C. v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., supra, 363 U.S. at pp. 543-544 [80 S. Ct. at p. 1271], fn. omitted.) The problem was perceived to have both economic and, more broadly, social aspects. Economically, price discrimination in favor of chains added to their cost advantage over competing retailers, helping them to undersell the independents and ultimately drive them from the field, thereby [****21] tending to create monopoly conditions. (FTC, Final Rep. on the Chain-Store Investigation, supra, Sen. Doc. No. 4, 74th Cong., 1st Sess., at p. 64; see also Rowe, The Evolution of the Robinson-Patman Act: A Twenty-Year Perspective (1957) 57 Colum. L.Rev. 1059, 1062 [while chain stores grew in the 1920's and 1930's, independent retailers went out of business at an average rate of 10 percent per year].) Socially, it was feared the result of chain store domination would be the loss of an endangered middle class, the "prosperous bourgeois class [that] has been considered one of the mainstays of our civilization." (Comment (1933) 22 Cal.L.Rev. 86, 101.)<sup>5</sup>

[****22] The pressure for remedial legislation was not confined to Washington. In California, a fair trade law, authorizing retail price maintenance agreements [*1261] with respect to trademarked products, had been passed in 1931 and strengthened in 1933. (Stats. 1931, ch. 278, p. 583; Stats. 1933, ch. 260, § 1, p. 793, repealed Stats. 1975, ch. 402, § 1, p. 878.) In part because much of the grocery trade dealt in unbranded goods, however, the law was of limited usefulness in that industry. (Fulda, supra, 99 U.Pa. L.Rev. at p. 1117.) The independent grocers therefore led the political fight for the UPA, which was opposed by the grocery chains. (Grether, supra, 24 Cal.L.Rev. at pp. 647-648; see also Fulda, supra, 99 U.Pa. L.Rev. at pp. 1117-1118, fn. 288 [quoting an officer of the California Retail Grocers and Merchants Association as saying the UPA "is the finest law ever enacted on the Statute books of any state, as far as our industry is concerned"].)

This history teaches that a primary concern in the enactment of the UPA was the protection of smaller, independent retailers, especially grocers, against unfair competitive practices of the large chain stores. As a contemporary [****23] commentator explained, the prohibitions added in 1933 on secret rebates and unearned discounts (now section 17045) and below-cost sales (now section 17043) "are designed to protect the retailer whose more powerful neighbor is attempting to drive him out of business." (Comment, supra, 22 Cal.L.Rev. at p. 102; see also G.H.I.I. v. MTS, Inc. (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 256, 271 [195 Cal. Rptr. 211, 41 A.L.R.4th 653] [UPA closely parallels, and is based upon same policies as, Robinson-Patman Act]; Uneedus v. California Shoppers, Inc. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 932, 937 [150 Cal. Rptr. 596] [same].) More specifically, the provision that became section 17045 was almost certainly designed to prohibit and protect against the practice of granting to chains [**298] [***120] and other large distributors, as a result of their much greater bargaining power, secret rebates, unearned discounts and other unearned allowances not granted to smaller, independent merchants. These practices had been thoroughly investigated and were widely known, and were believed to have highly destructive effects on competition at the wholesale and retail levels in a variety of industries. The competitive injury [****24] involved was to the disfavored buyers, and the tendency to destroy competition was in the line of commerce practiced by the favored buyer.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>5</sup> Representative Wright Patman, introducing his 1935 bill in the House of Representatives, described both aspects of the chain store problem in characteristically vivid language: "In the field of merchandise distribution a Goliath stands against divided forces plying a powerful weapon with a skillful hand against the vulnerable weaknesses of his opponents. [P] The Goliath is the huge chain stores sapping the civic life of local communities with an absentee overlordship, draining off their earnings to his coffers, and reducing their independent business men to employees or to idleness. [P] His weapon is huge buying power, by the manipulation of which he threatens manufacturers and others with financial stringency or even bankruptcy if they refuse him the prices and terms he demands. His opponents are not only these manufacturers, not only the independent competitors whom he seeks to eliminate, but the consuming public, whom he hopes then to have at his mercy." (Remarks of Rep. Wright Patman introducing H.R. No. 8442, 74th Cong., 1st Sess., 79 Cong. Rec. 9077 (June 11, 1935) reprinted in 4 Kintner, The Legislative History of the Federal Antitrust Laws and Related Statutes (1980) p. 2927 (hereafter Kintner).) Elsewhere Representative Patman emphasized that the chains were enriching themselves at the expense of independent merchants not through fair and open competition but through "secret rebates" and "special discounts" not available to the independents. (House Debate on H.R. No. 8442, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., 80 Cong. Rec. 8102 (May 27, 1936) reprinted in 4 Kintner, supra, at p. 3268.)

<sup>6</sup> By 1938, there were a large number of state unfair practices acts, commonly prohibiting unjustified price discrimination as well as sales below cost. A commentator at that time identified an important purpose of the anti-discrimination provisions as "the

[****25] Thus, the background of the UPA's prohibition on unearned discounts, codified as section 17045, confirms our view the statute was intended [*1262] primarily to protect against competitive injury in the secondary line of commerce, i.e. at the level of the discount's recipient. In the present case, ABC alleged just such injury and tendency to destroy competition.

MECA accuses ABC of construing section 17045 "as though it were designed to protect individual dealers from price competition at the expense of consumers." Such an interpretation would assertedly be inconsistent with the statutory purpose, as MECA characterizes it, of "insuring the continued existence of vigorously competitive markets." While some commentators, MECA notes, have criticized aspects of the Robinson-Patman Act or its enforcement as anticompetitive and therefore in conflict with other antitrust laws, the California Legislature, MECA argues, avoided such conflicts in policy by "limiting the [UPA's] scope entirely to pro-competitive regulation of primary-line competition."

For three reasons, we find MECA's policy arguments unpersuasive. First, the interpretive question in this case does not concern protection [****26] of individual competitors versus competition generally. HN7 [↑] By its terms, section 17045 requires the plaintiff to prove not only injury to a competitor, but, in addition, a tendency "to destroy competition." (Cf. Fulda, supra, 99 U.Pa. L.Rev. at p. 1109 disjunctive language of Robinson-Patman Act section 2(a), [15 United States Code section 13\(a\), has been interpreted as including discrimination that causes injury only to a particular competitor].) Thus, whatever may be the federal law or enforcement pattern, section 17045 applies only when the discriminatory rebate, discount or allowance has a tendency to destroy competition generally. The only question here is whether "competition" includes business competition at the level of the favored purchaser, as well as at the level of the seller. For reasons already discussed, we conclude that, for purposes of section 17045, competition is competition, whether among retailers, wholesalers or producers.

Second, MECA's view of the statutory purposes is unjustifiably narrow. Section 17045, and the UPA as a whole, reflect a Legislative concern not only with the maintenance of competition, but with the maintenance of "fair [****27] and honest competition." (§ 17001, italics added; see also State v. Langley, supra, 84 P.2d at p. 772 [The aim of the Wyoming unfair practices act "is to maintain fair competition, but to prevent unfair and ruinous competition."].) [*1263] Our law attempts to foster such competition through the prohibition of certain "unfair, dishonest, deceptive, destructive, fraudulent and discriminatory [**299] [***121] practices" (§ 17001), including the solicitation and allowance of secret discriminatory discounts and rebates (§ 17045, 17047). As long ago as 1903, a leading commercial court observed that "[w]hile public policy demands a healthy competition, it abhors favoritism, secret rebates, and unfair dealing . . ." ( [John D. Park & Sons Co. v. National W. Druggists' Ass'n \(1903\) 175 N.Y. 1 \[67 N.E. 136, 139\]](#)). Section 17045 reflects the same policy viewpoint.

Finally, to the extent MECA's arguments go to the wisdom of protecting secondary line competition, rather than to the legislative intent, they are irrelevant to our interpretive task. CA\(5\) [↑] (5) As this court said 59 years ago, in rejecting a constitutional challenge to the UPA, HN8 [↑] "[i]t is not for the courts, except [****28] within the limits herein set forth, to determine whether or not the policy of a statute is economically sound or beneficial. That is a matter solely for the legislature." ( Wholesale T. Dealers v. National etc. Co., supra, 11 Cal. 2d at pp. 646-647.) CA\(4b\) [↑] (4b) MECA has not shown, to the degree of certainty required to exclude the possibility of a contrary legislative view, that the protection of fair and honest competition in the secondary line necessarily impedes retail competition and inures to the detriment of the ultimate consumer. It has been argued, with at least equal prevention of discriminatory sales by manufacturers to customers with unusually strong bargaining power who can force large price concessions." (Comment, Prohibiting Price Discrimination and Sales Below Cost: The State Unfair Practices Acts (1938) 32 Ill. L.Rev. 816, 819-820, fn. omitted; see also Dewell & Gittenger, The Washington Antitrust Laws (1961) 36 Wash. L.Rev. 239, 277 Washington's "secret rebate" statute, worded similarly to [section 17045, was designed to prohibit similar types of business conduct as the federal Robinson-Patman Act]; [Ideal Plumbing Co. v. Benco \(8th Cir. 1976\) 529 F.2d 972, 978, fn. 7 \[42 A.L.R.Fed. 266\]](#) same as to Arkansas statute, enacted in 1937, whose prohibitory language is identical to that of [section 17045]; [Jaquet Lumber v. Kolbe & Kolbe Millwork \(1991\) 164 Wis.2d 689 \[476 N.W.2d 305, 309\]](#) Wisconsin statute worded almost identically to [section 17045 "was designed to accomplish the same goals" as Robinson-Patman Act]; [State v. Langley \(1938\) 53 Wyo. 332 \[84 P.2d 767, 774\]](#) [Wyoming unfair practices act "probably intended mainly for their [independent merchants'] benefit."].)

---

persuasiveness, that the chain stores' solicitation and receipt of secret favoritism from producers hurt consumers in two ways: In the short term, it was believed, the producers recouped the losses in sales to chains by charging higher prices to the independent wholesalers and retailers, who passed them on to consumers; in the long term, the secret rebates helped chains move toward monopoly or dominance in some markets, allowing them ultimately to raise consumer prices. (FTC, Final Rep. on the Chain-Store Investigation, supra, Sen. Doc. No. 4, 74th Cong., 1st Sess., at p. 64; Fulda, supra, 99 U.Pa. L.Rev. [****29] at pp. 1105-1106.) Some have thought these concerns exaggerated (see, e.g., Edwards, supra, p. 10, fn. 19 [reporting dispute over FTC's conclusion that price discrimination in favor of chains contributed substantially to chains' ability to undersell independent retailers]), but where the truth lies in such economic debates is not for us to say.

C. Prior Judicial Interpretation: Harris v. Capitol Records etc. Corp.

MECA, like the Court of Appeal, relies principally on certain language in our decision in Harris v. Capitol Records etc. Corp., supra, 64 Cal. 2d 454 (hereafter Harris). Read in context of the issues actually presented in that case, however, Harris neither binds us precedentially to MECA's position nor persuades us to adopt it. [*1264]

In Harris, a phonograph record retailer sued three record distributors, alleging they had given a competing retailer, a former "rack-jobber" who had opened his own retail store across the street from plaintiff's, larger dealer discounts than those allowed the plaintiff. The plaintiff contended the differential discounts constituted "locality discrimination" as defined in section 17031 and prohibited [****30] in section 17040. (Harris, supra, 64 Cal. 2d at pp. 456-457).<sup>7</sup> This court affirmed summary judgment for the defendants.

[****31] CA(6)[↑] (6) We held, first, that the UPA's locality discrimination prohibition, while somewhat broadened by a 1931 amendment, retained a necessary element of geographic price difference; what was fundamentally prohibited was discrimination between locations, rather [**300] [***122] than between purchasers as such. (Harris, supra, 64 Cal. 2d at pp. 458-460.) In particular, the defining language of section 17031 ("selling . . . at a lower price . . . in one location . . . than in another") implied that a seller, to violate section 17040, "must have at least two different places of business and must sell at a lower price in one than in the other." (64 Cal. 2d at p. 460.) Locality discrimination could therefore not be proven in Harris, as the two locations involved were owned by the competing buyers, not by any of the sellers. (Ibid.) Apparently as an alternative ground of decision, we went on to agree with the defendants' argument that "section 17040 is intended to apply only to competition on the same 'level' as the person allegedly creating the locality discrimination." (Ibid.)

CA(7)[↑] (7) The above summarized discussion in Harris was addressed solely to the claim the defendants [****32] had committed locality discrimination, as defined in section 17031 and prohibited in section 17040. Although the plaintiff apparently did not claim the defendants had also violated section 17045, we briefly addressed that possibility later in the decision. We held section 17045 did not apply to advertising allowances allegedly granted to the competing retailer, because the allowances were neither secret nor discriminatory, being available to all purchasers buying on like terms and conditions. (Harris, supra, 64 Cal. 2d at p. 463.)

[*1265] MECA does not rely on this portion of Harris, in which we directly addressed section 17045, but on an earlier parenthetical mention of the statute in our discussion of locality discrimination. The cited passage is as follows: "Throughout the Act the Legislature has manifested its intent to discourage practices which injure the

<sup>7</sup> Section 17040 provides: "It is unlawful for any person engaged in the production, manufacture, distribution or sale of any article or product of general use or consumption, with intent to destroy the competition of any regular established dealer in such article or product, or to prevent the competition of any person who in good faith, intends and attempts to become such dealer, to create locality discriminations. [P] Nothing in this section prohibits the meeting in good faith of a competitive price."

Section 17031 provides: "Locality discrimination means a discrimination between different sections, communities or cities or portions thereof, or between different locations in such sections, communities, cities or portions thereof in this State, by selling or furnishing an article or product, at a lower price in one section, community or city, or any portion thereof, or in one location in such section, community, or city or any portion thereof, than in another."

seller's competitors (§ 17040, 17043, 17045, 17071) and thereby tend to create the monopolies condemned by section 17001 [citation]. Equally apparent is the Legislature's concern to allow the seller to meet in good faith the prices of his competitors (§ 17040, 17050), thereby fostering the competition [****33] promoted by section 17001. Together these constitute the 'horizontal' concept of price regulation, one of the fundamental characteristics of this legislation." (Harris, supra, 64 Cal. 2d at p. 461.)

The issue under discussion in this part of Harris was whether the differential discount offered by a record company to one of two retailers--record stores located across the street from one another--constituted locality discrimination within the meaning of sections 17031 and 17040. Not surprisingly, we held it did not. Neither our discussion of locality discrimination as a whole, nor the above quoted inclusion of section 17045 in a parenthetical dictum, can reasonably be read as holding that a disfavored buyer alleging a violation of section 17045 must plead and prove competitive injury in the primary line of commerce. This is especially so in light of the later passage, already discussed, in which we specifically focused on section 17045 and held it inapplicable for reasons unrelated to the fact the injuries alleged by the Harris plaintiff were to the buyer's competitors, rather than the seller's. (64 Cal. 2d at p. 463.) Thus, the Harris decision has no binding [****34] precedential effect on the current case.<sup>8</sup>

CA(8)[↑] (8) Nor does the Harris court's analysis of section 17040 persuade us to MECA's interpretation of section 17045. In our view, both sections of the UPA are designed to foster competition and prevent monopoly conditions, but the particular threats to competition they are principally intended [****35] to meet are fundamentally different. As we observed in Harris, the threat to competition caused by locality discrimination was typically to primary [**301] [***123] line competition. A "large retail chain," we explained, could "lower its prices at a [*1266] store in one area, constituting a severable market, until the competition from smaller, local businesses in that community had been eliminated, concurrently offsetting the losses it thus suffered by charging higher prices in its other areas of operation. After the demise of competitors, the chain outlet would then realize monopoly profits, and the process of attrition would be repeated elsewhere." (Harris, supra, 64 Cal. 2d at p. 458.) Locality discrimination was an anticompetitive abuse engaged in by chain retailers as sellers, to the injury of competing sellers. As we have seen earlier, however (see ante, pt. I.B.), the solicitation and extortion of secret rebates, unearned discounts and other discriminatory allowances was an anticompetitive abuse historically engaged in by the chains as buyers, to the injury of competing buyers, i.e. the independent retailers and wholesalers. That the Legislature [****36] may have intended section 17040 to protect mainly against injury in the primary line, therefore, does not detract from our earlier conclusion that the protections of section 17045 extend to injury in the secondary line.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>8</sup> In support of its interpretation, MECA also cites Plotkin v. Tanner's Vacuums (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 454 [125 Cal. Rptr. 697], and Carlock v. Pillsbury Co. (D.Minn. 1989) 719 F. Supp. 791. Plotkin did not involve unearned discounts or any form of discriminatory pricing, and discussed only sections 17040 and 17043. The discussion in Carlock concerned only section 17040. Similarly, the dissenting opinion's reliance on Beam v. Monsanto Co., Inc. (1976) 259 Ark. 253 [532 S.W.2d 175, 181-182] (dis. opn., post, at p. 1279, fn. 2) is misplaced, as that decision concerned only a locality discrimination prohibition modeled on sections 17031 and 17040.

<sup>9</sup> For the proposition that the UPA operates "horizontally" rather than "vertically," we cited, in Harris, three law review articles, two of which MECA cites for the same proposition. None specifically addresses the question before us. The principal authority relied upon, Professor Ewald Grether, appears to have meant, in distinguishing between the "horizontal" UPA and the "vertical" Fair Trade Law, merely that under the UPA "action . . . need not wait upon the initiative of manufacturers or distributors at the apex of the distributive pyramid, but may arise at any level." (Grether, supra, 24 Cal.L.Rev. at p. 686.) One should also note that Professor Grether, in the cited article, focused on the historical background and prospects for enforcement of the UPA and Fair Trade Law, and disavowed any intent to engage in "[i]nterpretation of the law, technically speaking." ( Id. at p. 641.) The reference to "the horizontal concept of trade regulation" in Cupp, The Unfair Practices Act (1936) 10 So.Cal.L.Rev. 18, is brief and nonspecific. The final academic passage quoted in Harris, supra, 64 Cal. 2d at pages 461-462, deals specifically with primary versus secondary line injury, but was concerned only with the locality discrimination provisions, which, of course, were also the only provisions at issue in this part of Harris. (Birmingham, Legal Aspects of Petroleum Marketing Under Federal and California Laws (1960) 7 UCLA L.Rev. 161, 246-247.) None of the cited passages persuades us to MECA's view of section 17045.

[****37] The difference in principal application between section 17045 and the locality discrimination prohibition in sections 17040 and 17031 is reflected in their language. Neither section 17040 nor section 17031 refers to individual purchasers. Locality discrimination, as defined in section 17031, requires different prices at different "locations." Thus "the smallest geographic unit [section 17031] envisages is the individual store or outlet, not the individual purchaser regardless of location." (Harris, supra, 64 Cal. 2d at p. 460.) Sections 17031 and 17040 are tailored to address the problem of a distributor, typically a retailer, selling out of many locations, who might use geographical price discrimination as a predatory practice against its own competitors.

Section 17045, in contrast, forbids discrimination in favor of "certain purchasers" at the expense of other "purchasers." As discussed earlier (pt. [*1267] I.A., ante), the section is patently concerned with "preventing a distributor from discriminating between customers." (Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp., supra, 69 Cal. 2d at p. 323.) Moreover, section 17045, unlike the locality [****38] discrimination provisions, applies only to "secret" rebates and discounts. A retail seller, needing to attract buyers in large number, typically advertises any available discounts and rebates widely, rather than keeping them secret. In contrast, a producer from whom a large retailer has extracted special concessions might well prefer to keep such concessions secret. Section 17045 is thus tailored to address the problem of a manufacturer or other producer who is forced or induced to give preferential prices to one or more individual purchasers, typically retailers. This practice, of course, is likely to be injurious to the disfavored buyers' business position and may tend to destroy competition among such buyers.

The dissent imagines that our reading of section 17045 originates in a "desire to do [**302] [***124] good, be universally fair, and make everybody happy." (Dis. opn., post, at p. 1272.) While we need not go so far as to disclaim all interest in fairness and human happiness, our goal in this case has been narrower and simpler: we have attempted to discover the legislative intent by examining the statutory language, the stated purposes of the law and the historical [****39] background of its enactment. If we have mistaken that intent, or if the Legislature determines today's economic conditions require a different regulatory scheme, the remedy lies with that body "on the other side of Tenth Street." (Osborn v. Hertz Corp. (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 703, 711 [252 Cal. Rptr. 613].)

Reading beyond the dissenting opinion's hyperbolic rhetoric, its main argument seems to be that "interbrand competition" is the sole proper end of antitrust legislation, that "vertical restrictions" on trade are per se unobjectionable, and that fair and open competition among wholesalers and retailers could not, therefore, possibly be considered worthy of legislative protection. In response, it is perhaps sufficient to observe that none of these precepts are reflected in the language, stated purposes, or history of the UPA. Section 17045 requires proof of injury to, and a tendency to destroy, "competition," not "interbrand competition." Whether economists, professors of law or our dissenting colleague believe today that the use of secret, discriminatory rebates and discounts is an efficient "vertical restriction," is immaterial, because it is clear that in 1933 the [****40] California Legislature considered such hidden discrimination to be a "dishonest, deceptive, . . . and discriminatory practice" destructive of "fair and honest competition." (§ 17001) Finally, whatever the current economic orthodoxy may be, the historical background we have rehearsed above belies the dissent's assumptions. During the period [*1268] of section 17045's enactment, the chain stores' receipt of secret rebates, unearned discounts and allowances was widely understood as a threat to vigorous and fair competition at the retail and wholesale levels, and the potential loss of independent merchants engaged in such competition was regarded as an economic and social problem requiring legislative redress.

In summary, the language, context, purposes and history of section 17045 all point to the conclusion its protection extends to competition in the secondary line. The Court of Appeal therefore erred in affirming the order sustaining MECA's demurrer to ABC's first cause of action and the subsequent dismissal.<sup>10</sup>

---

<sup>10</sup> In its brief, MECA also contends certain allegations in ABC's current and superseded complaints contradict and "negate" ABC's necessary allegations of competitive injury (at any level) and secrecy. The issues thus raised were not among those specified in the petition for review or the answer, and are not fairly included in them. (See Cal. Rules of Court, rule 29.3(c).) We decline to expand the scope of review.

[****41] II. Restitution Under Section 17203

CA(9)[↑] (9) HN9[↑] Section 17203 provides, in pertinent part: "Any person who engages, has engaged, or proposes to engage in unfair competition may be enjoined in any court of competent jurisdiction. The court may make such orders or judgments . . . as may be necessary to restore to any person in interest any money or property, real or personal, which may have been acquired by means of such unfair competition." <sup>11</sup> MECA contends restitution is available as relief under section 17203 only when ancillary to an injunction. The Court of Appeal agreed, holding ABC's cause of action under section 17203 was properly dismissed on demurrer because no prayer was made for an injunction against future unfair competition.

[****42] Nothing in the actual language of section 17203 indicates the availability of restitution is contingent on the issuance of an injunction. The statute contains, as ABC notes, no language of condition linking injunctive and restitutionary relief. On its face, section 17203 appears to authorize "injunctive relief to prevent [unfair competition], and/or restitution" [\[\*\*303\]](#) [\[\*\*\*125\]](#) (i.e. disgorgement) of money or property wrongfully obtained." ([State Farm Fire & Casualty Co. v. Superior Court \(1996\) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1102 \[53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 229\]](#), italics added.)

The appellate court below did not discuss the statutory language, relying instead on three prior cases: [People v. Superior Court \(Jayhill\) \(1973\) 9 Cal. 3d 283 \[107 Cal. Rptr. 192, 507 P.2d 1400, 55 A.L.R.3d 191\]](#) (hereafter Jayhill), [Fletcher v. Security Pacific National Bank \(1979\) 23 Cal. 3d 442 \[153 Cal. Rptr. 28, 591 P.2d 51\]](#) (hereafter Fletcher), and [People v. Thomas Shelton Powers, M.D., Inc. \(1992\) 2 Cal. App. 4th 330 \[3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34\]](#) (hereafter Powers). MECA relies on the same cases.<sup>12</sup> None of those decisions, however, holds--or even states in dictum--that [****43] restitution or disgorgement under section 17203 is contingent on injunctive relief.

[****44] In Jayhill, this court considered the availability of restitution under section 17535, which, in language similar to that of 17203, sets out remedies for fraudulent advertising. At the time the complaint was filed, section 17535 provided only that violations could be enjoined, making no reference to restitution. (9 Cal. 3d at p. 286.) We observed, however, that the statute did not purport to restrict a court's equitable powers, and concluded that, in the absence of such restriction, a court of equity retained the "full range of its inherent powers in order to accomplish complete justice between the parties, restoring if necessary the status quo ante as nearly as may be achieved." (Ibid.) An order for restitution, therefore, was within the court's power. Although in Jayhill an injunction had been sought and allowed, and we therefore described restitution as "a form of ancillary relief" (ibid.), we did not hold or state that a court would lack the power to issue a restitutionary order under section 17535 if no injunction were also sought.

<sup>11</sup> Section 17200 defines "unfair competition," for purposes of the code chapter that includes section 17203, to include any unlawful business act or practice. In its second cause of action, ABC alleged MECA's violation of section 17045 constituted unfair competition within this definition.

HN10[↑]

<sup>12</sup> MECA also cites and provides the court with selected staff analyses, reports and letters accompanying the 1976 amendment of section 17203 by which the explicit authorization for restitutionary relief was added. None of them discuss the question before us, although the language of some reveals the authors' assumptions that restitution would be ancillary to an injunction. Whatever value these materials might have provided in resolving the present question evaporates upon examination of other reports, analyses and letters cited and provided by an amicus curiae supporting ABC's position--materials that, in some cases, reflect the opposite assumption as to the independence of restitution from injunctive relief, and in other cases neutrally describe the proposed amendments without making any such assumption. Neither set of legislative materials indicates the Legislature actually considered and resolved the question before us. (See [California Teachers Assn. v. Governing Bd. of Rialto Unified School Dist. \(1997\) 14 Cal. 4th 627, 648 \[59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671, 927 P.2d 1175\]](#) ["we hesitate to accord much weight to an anonymous staff report that was merely summarizing the effect of a proposed bill"].)

In Fletcher, this court again construed section 17535. Although we again described restitution as "a form of ancillary [****45] relief in such an injunctive action" (23 Cal. 3d at p. 454), we did not hold or assert that restitution was permitted only as ancillary relief. The question under discussion, moreover, was not whether restitution is available as an independent remedy, but whether it is available in a class action without proof that each individual plaintiff lacked knowledge of the fraudulent nature of the practice when he [*1270] or she did business with the defendant. (Id. at pp. 449-454.) We held the lack of such proof was not fatal to certification of the class; section 17535, we explained, "authorizes a trial court to order restitution in the absence of proof of lack of knowledge in order to deter future violations of the unfair trade practice statute and to foreclose retention by the violator of its ill-gotten gains." (Fletcher, supra, 23 Cal. 3d at p. 449.)

Finally, in Powers, the Court of Appeal held an order for disgorgement or restitution of illegal profits was permitted under section 17203, despite the lack of specifically identifiable victims who lost money as a result of the defendant's unfair business practice (sale of designated moderate-income housing units [****46] at illegally high prices). (2 Cal. App. 4th at pp. 339-344.) As an injunction had also been sought and granted in that case, the appellate court described the order for disgorgement or restitution as "a form of relief ancillary to an injunction" (id. at p. 341), but nothing in the opinion [\[\*\*304\] \[\*\*\*126\]](#) states or suggests restitution under section 17203 is restricted to such a circumstance. Rather, the Powers court, like this court in Fletcher, stressed the independent deterrent value of restitutionary orders: "[T]he laws against unfair business practices were drafted in large part to prevent a wrongdoer from retaining the benefits of its illegal acts. That purpose would be frustrated if a party were entitled to retain its profits simply because it is difficult to specify the victim." (Powers, supra, 2 Cal. App. 4th at pp. 341-342.) Simply stated, "the necessity for deterring future acts require[s] that the wrongdoer be prevented from retaining the illegal profits." (Id. at p. 343.)

Fletcher, Jayhill and Powers provide insufficient reason to read a restriction on relief into the statute. Indeed, ABC and the Attorney General, appearing as an [****47] amicus curiae, argue that the deterrent policy expressed in Fletcher and Powers supports their interpretation of section 17203. We agree; it is unlikely the Legislature, in providing courts with broad equitable powers to remedy violations under section 17203, intended those powers be limited in an illogical, unfair and counterproductive manner. As the Attorney General explains, "[o]ften, no logical connection exists between an order of restitution or disgorgement of past illicit gains and an injunction addressing future conduct. Sometimes, a court may find that an injunction is moot as a practical matter, for example because of the age, illness, disability or even death of the defendant. In other circumstances, a court may find that an injunction is unwise or impractical because of the difficulty of enforcement, for example when the defendant is located out of state. Occasionally, a court is disinclined to issue an injunction because of the technical expertise needed for proper enforcement . . . . In other situations, a court may find that an injunction may not be the most appropriate remedy to redress unfair practices committed only during a brief and unique [****48] circumstance involving a [*1271] change in business circumstance, such as the acquisition or spin off of another company. In all of these cases, however, the offender is not entitled to keep the fruits of its unfair, deceptive, or unlawful conduct. The defendant's victims may be entitled to restitution, and the court may also conclude that deterrence is more effectively accomplished through restitution than through an injunction of little practical significance." MECA's interpretation of section 17203 would frustrate the deterrent purposes of restitution by allowing a defendant who successfully opposed an injunction to retain its illicit profit.

For the above reasons, we conclude section 17203 authorizes a trial court to order restitution of money lost through acts of unfair competition, as defined in section 17200, whether or not the court also enjoins future violations.<sup>13</sup> The Court of Appeal erred in concluding otherwise.

[****49] DISPOSITION

---

<sup>13</sup> In light of our conclusion, we need not address the question whether ABC should have been permitted to amend its complaint to seek an injunction. Nor do we address MECA's contention ABC has "disguised" a claim for damages as one for restitution. To the extent MECA's unelaborated assertion can be understood, it appears to dispute ABC's ability to prove MECA illegally enriched itself at ABC's expense, rather than the sufficiency of the complaint to state a cause of action.

The judgment of the Court of Appeal is reversed.

George, C. J., Kennard, J., Baxter, J., and Chin, J., concurred.

Concur by: MOSK

Concur

---

MOSK, J.

I concur in the opinion of the court prepared by Justice Werdegar. It addresses all the questions presented in this cause, and answers them correctly. Of course, issues remain for resolution in the future. On its face, or only slightly underneath, Business and Professions Code section 17045 requires unfair competition, injury to a competitor, and a tendency to destroy competition. It implicitly defines "unfair competition" as secret discrimination by a seller between or among its buyers. It similarly defines "injury to a competitor" as harm to a competitor of either the seller or a favored buyer. By contrast, it does not define a "tendency to [**305] [***127] destroy competition." Whether the phrase should be understood so as to further "[c]onsumer welfare," which is "a principal, if not the sole, goal of antitrust laws" ( [Cianci v. Superior Court \(1985\) 40 Cal. 3d 903, 918 \[221 Cal. Rptr. 575, 710 P.2d 375\]](#)), and to prevent "output restriction," which is "one of their principal targets" ([State of California ex rel. \[\*\*\*\*50\] Van de Kamp v. Texaco, Inc. \(1988\) 46 Cal. 3d 1147, 1183 \[252 Cal. Rptr. 221, 762 P.2d 385\]](#) (conc. and dis. opn. of Mosk, J.))--as it apparently should be--is a question for another day. [*1272]

Dissent by: BROWN

Dissent

---

BROWN, J.,

Dissenting.--The declared purpose of the Unfair Practices Act is to "safeguard the public against the creation or perpetuation of monopolies and to foster and encourage competition." (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17001.) In pursuit of that goal, the act prohibits the "secret payment or allowance of rebates, refunds, commissions, or unearned discounts . . . to the injury of a competitor and where such payment or allowance tends to destroy competition . . ." (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045; hereafter all undesignated statutory references are to the Business and Professions Code.) Given the ordinary rules of English usage, this prohibition is implicated only by competitive injury to a competitor of the one prohibited. Such a result is abhorrent to the majority. It suggests that some victims of commercial discrimination might have no remedy under the act. The quixotic desire to do good, be universally fair, and make everybody happy is understandable. Indeed, [***51] the majority's zeal is more than a little endearing. There is only one problem with this approach. We are a court.

As a court, we are constrained to work with the tools available and to play by the rules. When the task is statutory construction, our inquiry begins with the words of the statute. It ends there if the words are sufficient. The majority's insistence on "interpreting" the unambiguous language of section 17045 prompts me to repeat Justice Frankfurter's tongue-in-cheek advice for a court with an overactive lawmaking gland: "[W]hen the legislative history is doubtful," he wrote, "go to the statute." ( [Greenwood v. United States \(1956\) 350 U.S. 366, 374 \[76 S. Ct. 410, 414-415, 100 L. Ed. 412\]](#).)

Here, of course, lacking even the guidance a legislative history of section 17045 would furnish, there is all the more reason for a cautious fidelity to the text of the statute. Undaunted, the majority creates doubt where none exists and, marshaling a patchwork of secondary comments that provide no clear evidence of what the Legislature had in mind in 1933, jettisons the settled understanding of the statute more than half a century after it was passed. By reading the [***52] language of section 17045 as referring to competitors of those who receive prohibited price discounts, the majority introduces into the statute an ambiguity that is not present if the words are taken to mean what they say. To use rules of statutory construction to create ambiguity is perverse. The sole justification of the canonical apparatus is to remove doubt, ambiguity, or uncertainty where they exist.

Apart from a couple of exceptions that only serve to prove the rule, in the more than 60 years that the price discrimination provision of the Unfair Practices Act has been on the books, neither the Legislature, this court, the antitrust bar nor the business community has regarded it as applying to [*1273] so-called "vertical" price discrimination. Indeed, the decision which until today had been regarded as the definitive opinion on the scope of the act reached the opposite conclusion. ( Harris v. Capitol Records etc. Corp. \(1966\) 64 Cal. 2d 454 /50 Cal. Rptr. 539, 413 P.2d 139 (hereafter Harris).) In a striking reversal of settled law--notable as much for its retrospective reinterpretation as for its result--the majority abandons that orthodox view [****53] and strikes out along a path that is not only contrary to the language of the statute itself, but one whose underlying view of economics has been repeatedly repudiated by national authorities on antitrust policy as "giv[ing] artificial protection to the individual competitor" (Oppenheim, Federal Antitrust Legislation: Guideposts to a Revised National Antitrust Policy (1952) 50 Mich. L.Rev. 1139, 1201 (hereafter Oppenheim)); "unleavened by economic understanding" and "safeguard[ing] not competition, but competitors" (Adelman, Effective [**306] [***128] Competition and the Antitrust Laws (1948) 61 Harv. L.Rev. 1289, 1328, 1335); and as "antithetical to antitrust policy and unnecessary for antitrust enforcement" (Rowe, Price Discrimination, Competition, and Confusion: Another Look at Robinson-Patman (1951) 60 Yale L.J. 929, 974, fn. omitted); indeed, the United States Supreme Court has described the interpretation espoused by the majority as promoting "a price uniformity and rigidity in open conflict with the purposes" of the antitrust laws. ( Automatic Canteen Co. v. F.T.C. \(1953\) 346 U.S. 61, 63 /73 S. Ct. 1017, 1019, 97 L. Ed. 1454).

The majority reaches its [****54] conclusion by ignoring a bedrock rule of statutory interpretation: Where there is no ambiguity, there is nothing to "interpret"--the statute means what it says. Once free of the inconvenient impediments presented by a straightforward text, the majority indulges in an extravagant bout of post hoc judicial lawmaking. Long after the events that provoked section 17045 have passed from memory, the majority imbues the statute with a sweeping scope that is not only unwarranted by its language, but protectionist and anticompetitive in effect.

This case involves competition among distributors of the same product, competition that cannot conceivably have any significant effect on the touchstones of antitrust policy--interbrand competition, the structure of competitive markets, and the ultimate economic welfare of the California consumer. With the utmost respect for the views of my colleagues, I fear today's decision will not only eliminate price discounts as a means of enhancing competition; it will encourage precisely the kind of vexatious and costly litigation which serves only to burden the economy.

[*1274] I. THE TEXT OF SECTION 17045

On its face, the language of section 17045 [****55] indicates a legislative concern with the business practices of sellers, rather than purchasers. The operative language condemns the "allowance of . . . discounts . . . to certain purchasers . . . not extended to all purchasers purchasing upon like terms and conditions . . ." (Italics added.) These words evince a concern on the part of the drafters of section 17045 with the conduct of the party allowing or extending a discount or rebate, that is, with sellers. For the prohibition applies only to them and not, at least by the statute's express terms, to those who receive the price discount--purchasers. That conclusion, read in light of the act's overriding purpose of enhancing competition, suggests it is anticompetitive conduct with respect to other sellers that triggers a violation of the statute, a reading that tends to confirm its horizontal focus. Moreover, the statute condemns only those price discounts resulting in an "injury . . . to . . . competition." Although it may be possible to read this language as directed at injury to competitors of the buyer, such a reading is a stretch. The more natural sense of the text, given the several references [****56] to the conduct of sellers and the absence of a buyer referent, is that section 17045 is directed at injuries to competitors of the party "extending" or "allowing" the discount or allowance; again, other sellers.

Thus, a seller who grants a price discount to less than all of its customers commits an unlawful act, provided the discount injures a competitor and tends to destroy competition. Neither of these two qualifying phrases suggests to me (or, I imagine, to the ordinary reader) that the use of these words was meant to refer to "competitors" of the purchaser to whom the discount was given, or to "destroying competition" among purchasers from the seller. A more natural sense of the words is that they refer to competitors of the party granting the price discount--the one referred to earlier in the sentence --sellers who "pay," "allow," or "extend" the prohibited discount.

The majority reasons that because section 17045 is "focused patently on discrimination among purchasers," it is reasonable to assume that the Legislature had their interests in mind in enacting the prohibition on price discrimination. (Maj. opn., ante, at p. 1254.) Yes and no. Purchasers are mentioned, [****57] as they would have to be in any statute whose subject [***129] is a bilateral transaction, but only because [**307] purchasers are essential to any sale, discriminatory or not. Beyond that, however, there is no basis in the statutory language itself to warrant the conclusion that a prohibition on granting [*1275] a price discount was intended for the protection of those purchasers not receiving it.

The majority also reasons that section 17045 contains no "express restriction" to horizontal injury. (Maj. opn., ante, at p. 1254.) Granted, the statute does not affirmatively state that competitive injury to buyers is insufficient to plead a cause of action, but it would be both odd and unnecessary if it went out of its way to do so. Conceding that the language of section 17045 "does not contain an explicit reference to secondary line competitive injury like the . . . language of the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts," the majority declares that "the absence of a specific reference does not . . . constitute an implied restriction." (Maj. opn., ante, at p. 1255.) This is said to be so because the statute "requires injury to a 'competitor,' and a tendency to destroy 'competition,' [****58] without any further inclusive or restrictive language delineating the scope of those terms." (Ibid., italics in original.)

In the context of another statute, one not focused so "patently" on the conduct of those who "pay," "allow," or "extend" discounts, such reasoning might persuade. But here, the language of the statute does contain a "specific reference" which, in context, does "constitute an implied restriction." That reference is to those who make the payments, allow the rebates, or extend the privileges made unlawful; in a word, sellers. The statute's "evident concern with discrimination between competing purchasers," the majority concludes, "suggests its intended protection extends to such competition." (Maj. opn., ante, at p. 1255.) But what "evident concern," apparent on the surface of the statute, does the majority have in mind? A disinterested reader of the text, I suggest, would come away with a clear impression, not of an "evident concern" with purchasers, but with those who "grant," "pay," or "allow" discounts and their competitors. It strikes this reader as improbable to conclude that the words "competition" and "competitor" refer, not to [****59] competitors of the price-cutting seller, which may suffer commercial injury as a result of such a practice, but to competitors of the purchaser. Sellers, of course, do not compete with buyers but with other sellers, their "competitors," and it is to them that the statute evidently refers.

Had the Legislature intended the statute to apply to competitors of purchasers receiving prohibited discounts, it would have been easy enough to insert language in section 17045 making that point clear. Indeed, three years after section 17045 was passed, Congress passed the Robinson-Patman Act, outlawing price discounts on goods in interstate commerce. That legislation, however, left no doubt whatever that its prohibition applied to those who received, as well as those who granted, discounts. How did Congress express [*1276] such a "bilateral" prohibition? Quite simply. By making unlawful price differences which injure competition "with any person who grants or . . . receives" their benefit. (15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\), italics added.)

II

Harris v. Capitol Records

Some 30 years ago, Justice Mosk, writing for a unanimous court in Harris, supra, 64 Cal. 2d 454, described [****60] the Unfair Practices Act--including section 17045--as intended to proscribe only horizontal price discrimination, that is, differences in the price a seller charges buyers, the effect of which is to impair competition with other sellers. He wrote that "[t]hroughout the Act the Legislature has manifested its intent to discourage practices which injure the seller's competitors (§ 17040, 17043, 17045, 17071) and thereby tend to create the monopolies condemned by section 17001 . . . Together these constitute the 'horizontal' concept of price regulation, one of the fundamental characteristics of this legislation. In his exhaustive study entitled Experience in California

With Fair Trade Legislation Restricting Price Cutting (1936) 24 Cal.L.Rev. 640, 686, Professor Ewald T. Grether explained: 'Whereas the Fair Trade [**308] [***130] Law has to do with vertical price relations, the Unfair Practices Act operates horizontally.' (Italics in original.) And in Cupp, The Unfair Practices Act (1936) . . . 10 So.Cal.L.Rev. 18, the author said that 'The act may be said to be the consummation of years of effort by businessmen to carry out the horizontal concept of trade [****61] regulation.' More recently, it has been pointed out that . . . the Unfair Practices Act 'protects only first-line competition against predatory price cutting on an area basis and does not make illegal price discriminations which only injure second or third-line competition at the buyer level or lower. . . . [A] seller can lawfully discriminate in favor of one of his purchasers for the purpose of enabling that purchaser to meet his competition, so long as there is no intent on the part of the seller to prevent or destroy the competition of other sellers at his level.' (Birmingham, Legal Aspects of Petroleum Marketing Under Federal and California Law[s] (1960) 7 U.C.L.A. L.Rev. 161, 246-247.)" (Harris, supra, 64 Cal. 2d at pp. 461-462, first italics added.)

From the context in which these statements appear, it is clear that Justice Mosk was speaking of the Unfair Practices Act as a whole ("Throughout the Act"), characterizing it as fundamentally "horizontal" in effect. (Harris, supra, 64 Cal. 2d at p. 461.) I cannot subscribe to the majority's dismissal of those statements in Harris, supra, 64 Cal. 2d 454, as standing for something other than what [****62] their ordinary meaning conveys. Not only Justice Mosk's [*1277] statement, but also the authorities he relied on in support of it, make an unqualified case for a horizontal interpretation of the Unfair Practices Act as a whole, including section 17045. The article by Professor Ewald T. Grether, for example, discusses the near concurrent rise of state fair trade statutes, companion legislation to the national outbreak of unfair competition laws in the 1930's. "The Unfair Practices Act," Grether concluded, "represented the culmination of legislation begun in 1913. . . . The core of this act was a provision"--now section 17040--"declaring it unlawful to discriminate between different sections, communities, cities or between different locations in the state by selling at a lower rate . . . 'with the intent to destroy the competition of any regular established dealer.' " (Grether, Experience in California With Fair Trade Legislation Restricting Price Cutting (1936) 24 Cal.L.Rev. 640, 645, italics omitted (hereafter Grether).)

As Grether's comments indicate, a consistent theme--restraints on horizontal price discrimination--runs through the act from its origin in 1913 to 1935, [****63] the year in which its major provisions were consolidated. As the Sherman and Clayton Acts were aimed at structural reforms of the economy by promoting horizontal competition, so state antitrust legislation--including California's act of 1913--was aimed at thwarting the growth of monopolies and business combinations that had a restraining effect on competition among sellers. Like the federal antitrust acts of the same era, these state antitrust statutes were aimed at prohibiting so-called locality or area price discrimination, the paradigmatic condition for the rise of cartels. (See, e.g., 3 Kintner, Federal Antitrust Law (1984) § 19.1, pp. 42-50 & accompanying fns. (hereafter Kintner).) As the majority points out, the act of 1931, popularly named the "Anti-Discrimination Act" (Stats. 1931, ch. 617, pp. 1333-1335), was aimed primarily at these "large scale distributors, especially chain store systems." (Grether, supra, 24 Cal.L.Rev. at p. 645.) It carried forward the proscription on geographic price discrimination of the original 1913 act and coupled to it, in amendments adopted in 1933, two significant additions--the prohibition on "secret rebates" (now § 17045), and a provision [****64] prohibiting sales below cost (now § 17043). (Stats. 1933, chs. 261, 504, pp. 793, 1280-1281; see Wilson, California Unfair Practices Act and Fair Trade Act (1941) 27 ABA J. 249.) Throughout this series of amendments, however, there is nothing to indicate that the legislation lost its original horizontal focus. In particular, there is no convincing basis in the text of section 17045 to indicate that the Legislature had adopted the vertical prohibitions on price discrimination that were soon to appear in section 2(a) of the federal Robinson-Patman Act. Parallel events suggest the contrary.

[**309] [***131] Almost concurrently with the consolidation of what is now the Unfair Practices Act, the Legislature enacted the "Fair Trade Act" (Stats. 1931, ch. [*1278] 278, p. 583; Stats. 1933, ch. 260, p. 793), legislation that was expressly vertical in orientation. <sup>1</sup> The product of pressure by the same retailers and distributors threatened by the chains who pushed for the Unfair Practices Act, the fair trade movement had been popularized by the National Industrial Recovery Act (Act of June 16, 1933, ch. 90, 48 Stat. 195), Depression-era legislation authorizing the establishment and self-policing [****65] of "codes of competition" designed to prohibit "unfair competitive practices." Fair trade legislation, which swept the states in the 1930's, was not antitrust legislation in the classic mold of the Sherman, Clayton and Federal Trade Commission Acts of the monopoly era. It was directed at providing relief to distributors and small retailers, squeezed more than ever by a weak economy and the highly competitive chains. Rather than seeking to promote a structurally competitive market, fair trade and similar legislation was aimed at relieving the pressure on the individual competitor--permitting floors to be set on prices, for example, and authorizing resale price maintenance--thus in a sense restraining competition. (See, e.g., Rowe, Price Discrimination, Competition, and Confusion: Another Look at Robinson-Patman, supra, 60 Yale L.J. at p. 1067; Oppenheim, supra, 50 Mich. L.Rev. at pp. 1198-1202.)

---

<sup>1</sup> Prior to its repeal in 1975 (Stats. 1975, ch. 402, p. 878), section 1 of the Fair Trade Act declared legal contract terms for the sale of "commodit[ies]" by which the buyer agreed not to resell "except at the price stipulated by the vendor," and authorized

[****66] As Grether summarized the situation in 1936, "[I]t is . . . essential to note that these statutes [i.e., the Unfair Competition and Fair Trade Acts] were promulgated during depression years. Both the vigor of the demands and the weakness of opposition were decidedly tempered by the condition of the glutted market. The impact upon the legislature showed itself not only in the fair trade acts, but in a great number of measures aimed at economic control. Apparently, legislators had accepted the proposition that price cutting in the distributive trades engenders a series of repercussions that react harmfully upon primary producers." (Grether, supra, 24 Cal.L.Rev. at p. 648, fn. omitted.) Contrasting the California fair trade and unfair practices legislation, Grether pointed to the differing orientation and scope of the two trade regulation acts: Although it applied vertically, the Fair Trade Act reached only a select group of commodities--those that were tradeor brand-marked. The "horizontal procedure under the Unfair Practices Act," Grether wrote, "may develop possibilities for wider, perhaps, even general application, in [*1279] contrast to the relatively limited possibilities [****67] of the Fair Trade Act. The strength of the Unfair Practices Act is that action under it need not wait upon the initiative of manufacturers or distributors at the apex of the distributive pyramid but may arise at any level, and that it is not limited merely to trade-marked, identified goods." (Grether, supra, 24 Cal.L.Rev. at p. 686.)

The majority dismisses these comments as of marginal value in reaching an understanding of the scope of the act. (Maj. opn., ante, at pp. 1265-1266.) I disagree. It was not until 1936 that congressional passage of the Robinson-Patman Act, validating vertical restraints by extending prohibitions on discriminatory pricing to those granting or receiving discounts, or customers of either, set the stage for a rush of similar state statutes. (See Kintner, supra, § 19.1, pp. 47-50.) Although some of these state acts were modeled on the "vertical" Robinson-Patman Act, others, enacted earlier in the decade, including our own act, carried forward the original horizontal antidiscrimination model. (See Comment, Prohibiting Price Discrimination and Sales Below Cost: The State Unfair Practice Acts (1938) 32 Ill. L.Rev. 816; 819-820, [***132] fn. 5; see [****68] also Harris, supra, 64 Cal. 2d at p. 459, fn. 5 [**310] ["By contrast [to the Unfair Practices Act], as of 1938 seven states specifically prohibited discrimination between purchasers as well as between localities."]; McAllister, Price Control by Law in the United States: A Survey (1937) 4 Law & Contemp. Probs. 273, 298 (hereafter McAllister) ["The [California] Unfair Practices Act is directed at the horizontal level of prices and, unlike the Fair Trade Act, it applies to all goods. . . . Another provision outlaws price discrimination 'with the intent to destroy . . . or to prevent the competition of any person' but this precursor of the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts has long been familiar in state anti-trust laws."].)<sup>2</sup> buyers to require their buyers "to agree that [they] will not, in turn, resell except at the price stipulated by such vendor or by such vendee." (Stats. 1931, ch. 278, § 1, p. 583.) As Grether pointed out, "The vertical nature of the rights under the [Fair Trade] Act are clearly indicated by Section 2: 'This act shall not apply to any contract or agreement between producers or between wholesalers or between retailers as to sale or resale prices.' " (Grether, supra, 24 Cal.L.Rev. at p. 641.)

---

<sup>2</sup> Opinions from other jurisdictions with unfair competition statutes of the same provenance as the California act follow the horizontal interpretation we adopted in Harris, supra, 64 Cal. 2d 454, often relying on our opinion. In Beam v. Monsanto Co., Inc. (1976) 259 Ark. 253 [532 S.W.2d 175, 181-182], for example, the Arkansas Supreme Court wrote that "It is apparent that the [Unfair Practices Act] is intended to foster competition for the primary benefit of the general public by protecting dealers . . . from unfair competition by large dealers. . . . Appellants' argument for 'vertical competition' would broaden the Act to not only protect dealers . . . from unfair competition by other dealers, but would also protect buyers from competition by [other] business buyers who use and purchase the same . . . product for use in their . . . businesses." (See also Carlcock v. Pillsbury (D.Minn. 1989) 719

[****69] It is possible that the available extrastatutory materials Justice Mosk relied on in *Harris, supra, 64 Cal. 2d 454*, are simply too equivocal to establish [*1280] satisfactorily the Legislature's intent, one way or the other. If so, our response ought to be a refusal to extend the act beyond the horizontal view, one that is supported by the words of *section 17045*, is consistent with the act's purpose of enhancing competition, and is congruent with the ruling horizontal orthodoxy of the day--precisely the view reflected in Harris itself. If that cautious view turns out to be mistaken, Justice Mosk prescribed the appropriate remedy in Harris: "Plaintiff complains that this [horizontal] construction of the Act will allow a predatory company 'to vertically feed on those beneath it.' Such arguments should be addressed to the Legislature, which alone is equipped to determine the gravity of the economic evil here alleged, and to take such steps as it deems appropriate." (*Harris, supra, 64 Cal. 2d at p. 462*, fn. omitted.)

III. VERTICAL RESTRAINTS ON PRICE COMPETITION

It is worth pointing out just how far from the contemporary antitrust mainstream the [**311] [****70] [***133] majority's construction of California's Unfair Practices Act strays. (See, e.g., [*Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc. \(1977\) 433 U.S. 36, 54 \[97 S. Ct. 2549, 2559-2560, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568\]*](#) ["Vertical restrictions reduce intrabrand competition by limiting the number of sellers of a particular product competing for the business of a given group of buyers. . . . [P] [Such] restrictions promote interbrand competition by allowing the manufacturer to achieve certain efficiencies in the distribution of his products."]; Bork, Vertical Restraints: Schwinn Overruled (1977) Sup. Ct. Rev. 171; [*1281] Posner, The Next Step in the Antitrust Treatment of Restricted Distribution: Per Se Legality (1981) 48 U.Chi. L.Rev. 6; 8 Areeda, *Antitrust Law* (1989) § 1609e, pp. 139-143.) Whatever its business motivation, the alleged price differential at issue in this case reflects an implicit preference for two distributors of the same brand of telephone over a third. I find it difficult to comprehend how a discount offered to some but fewer than all distributors of the same product can even affect, much less "tend to destroy" the only kind of competition that matters to the consumer--competition [****71] among brands.

If the net economic effect on the retail buyer of telephones of a price differential between intrabrand competitors is nil, how can competition in any sense that justifies "trundling out the great machinery of antitrust enforcement" (*Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd. \(7th Cir. 1982\) 678 F.2d 742, 745*) have been affected by the allegedly discriminatory price involved here? It seems evident that competition among manufacturers of telephones and related consumer electronic goods is robust, and that nothing respondent does in its dealings with distributors of its own products is likely to affect significantly that hard economic fact. The lesson in all of this is one that belies the majority's tautology that "competition is competition." (Maj. opn., ante, at p. 1262.) For antitrust purposes at least, it is not necessarily so. (See, e.g., *Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., supra, 678 F.2d at p. 745* ["We reject the casual equation of intrabrand price competition with interbrand competition. . . . The plaintiff in a restricted distribution case must show that the restriction he is complaining of was unreasonable because, weighing [****72] effects on both intrabrand and interbrand competition, it made consumers worse off."); Bork, Vertical Restraints: Schwinn Overruled, supra, Sup. Ct. Rev. at p. 172 ("The Court's Sylvania opinion not only counted efficiencies in favor of a challenged business practice but did so in a sophisticated way, perceiving that the elimination or mitigation of competition among a manufacturer's dealers was essential to the achievement of certain distributional efficiencies.").) In this very case, the majority imposes a ban on vertical, intrabrand price differences as a legitimate business method, an interpretation that may not only hobble structural competition, but may also fuel claims of California's "unfriendly" regulatory and legal climate. On the basis of what appears to be some misplaced principle of distributive equality, the majority today virtually rules out vertical price differences as a method of enhancing competition.

*F. Supp. 791, 849* [applying Harris to state-based unfair practices claim]; *USA Petroleum Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co. \(C.D.Cal. 1983\) 577 F. Supp. 1296, 1307* [distinguishing Harris in a "true" horizontal case]; *Chapiewsky v. G. Heilemann Brewing Co. \(D.Wis. 1968\) 297 F. Supp. 33, 41* [following Harris]; *William Ingliss, etc. v. I.T.T. Continental Baking Co. \(9th Cir. 1982\) 668 F.2d 1014* & *William Inglis & Sons v. Continental Baking \(9th Cir. 1991\) 942 F.2d 1332* [relying on Harris as to state law claims]; [*Burge v. Pulaski County Special Sch. Dist. \(1981\) 272 Ark. 67 \[612 S.W.2d 108\]*](#) [Arkansas Unfair Practices Act applies only horizontally]; [*Rose v. Vulcan Materials Co. \(1973\) 282 N.C. 643 \[194 S.E.2d 521, 67 A.L.R.3d 1\]*](#) [same].)

This account of the scope of unfair practice provisions of other states differs, it is apparent, from the majority's evaluation. (Maj. opn., ante, at p. 1261, fn. 6.) The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals' gloss on the Arkansas act, cited by the majority, merely declares, without analysis or discussion, that it was passed in 1937 shortly after the Robinson-Patman Act, "and was obviously designed to prohibit similar types of business conduct." ([*Ideal Plumbing Co. v. Benco, Inc. \(8th Cir. 1976\) 529 F.2d 972, 978, fn. 7 \[42 A.L.R.Fed. 266\]*](#).) I am persuaded by the contrary reasoning and result of the Arkansas cases cited above interpreting that state's statute as "horizontal." The opinion of the Wyoming Supreme Court in [*State v. Langley \(1938\) 53 Wyo. 332 \[84 P.2d 767\]*](#), also cited by the majority, involved a criminal prosecution under a statute prohibiting sales below cost; although a provision of the statute contains language similar to *section 17001*, the opinion is too obscure to stand for much, other than the statement that the provision prohibiting such sales "was probably intended mainly for" the independent merchant. (*84 P.2d at p. 774*.) The price discrimination provision of the Wisconsin act, also cited by the majority, is almost identical to *section 17045*, and at least one Wisconsin appellate court has construed it as applying vertically. ([*Jauquet Lumber v. Kolbe & Kolbe Millwork \(1991\) 164 Wis.2d 689 \[476 N.W.2d 305, 309\]*](#).) As noted, however, the Arkansas statute, also modeled on the California provision (see McAllister, supra, 4 Law & Contemp. Probs. at p. 298, fn. 141), has received a contrary construction.

The conclusion that there is no sound basis in the text of the statute or relevant materials for the idea that in enacting the Unfair Practices Act the Legislature anticipated the vertical, secondary line innovations introduced [*1282] three [****73] years later in the Robinson-Patman Act, is reinforced by these views of national authorities on antitrust and trade regulation policies. If vertical restrictions on price discrimination are both anticompetitive in effect and protectionist in intent, then the Legislature's explicit declaration in section 17001 of an intention to "foster competition" is thwarted by the majority's innovative gloss on section 17045. We ought to be especially reluctant to engraft onto the statute so dramatic and counterproductive a policy innovation, doubly so in the absence of a clear legislative directive.

Conclusion

There is a lesson in the half-century-plus of legislative inactivity since section 17045 was enacted; unfortunately, it is one lost on the majority. Today's result is not only bad law, it is demonstrably bad policy and even worse economics. Why? Because the fundamental aim of antitrust legislation is to protect the [*312] [***134] competitive process. Protecting the individual business from the benefits of competition will cost the California consumer in the form of higher prices; it will cost the state as a whole in a flood of wasteful price discrimination litigation unrelated to the [****74] only goal section 17045 was meant to protect--a competitive market.

For that constituency whose interests alone justify legislative intervention in market-pricing forces--the California consumer--price competition, including discounts, is an unmixed good. It lowers prices and maximizes buying power. Yet the majority condemns it, rewriting the act in the process, to import a construction that is not only bad economics but questionable policy as well. For object lessons we need look no further than the national experience with the heavily criticized Robinson-Patman Act. Confronted with a text that fails to support the majority's construction, and the likelihood of anticompetitive consequences, we ought to pause to consider whether we do more harm than good.

I dissent.

Morrison v. Viacom

Court of Appeal of California, First Appellate District, Division Two

February 27, 1997, Decided

No. A071263.

Reporter

52 Cal. App. 4th 1514 *; 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544 **; 1997 Cal. App. LEXIS 147 ***; 97 Cal. Daily Op. Service 1491; 97 Daily Journal DAR 2163; 1997-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,886

CHRISTOPHER MORRISON et al., Plaintiffs and Appellants, v. VIACOM, INC., et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Subsequent History: [***1] As Modified on Denial of Rehearing of March 21, 1997, Reported at: 1997 Cal. App. LEXIS 207.

Prior History: Marin County Super. Ct. No. 161687. Honorable Beverly B. Savitt.

Disposition: The judgment is reversed. Costs on appeal are awarded to appellants.

Core Terms

---

cable, preempted, regulation, rates, provisions, tier, cable service, Cartwright Act, channels, state law, appellants', rate regulation, franchising, preemption, customers, trial court, programming, cable operator, charging, cable company, present case, anti-tying, television, broadcast, effective, legislative history, state antitrust law, basic service, indirectly, Consumer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Demurrsers

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN1 [blue icon] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Demurrsers

When reviewing a judgment based on an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend, the court accepts as accurate the factual allegations of an appellant's complaint. If a complaint states a cause of action, a judgment must be reversed.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

52 Cal. App. 4th 1514, *1514L<sup>61</sup> Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, **544L<sup>997</sup> Cal. App. LEXIS 147, ***1

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Relations With Governments

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Supreme Law of the Land

HN2 Supremacy Clause, Federal Preemption

See U.S. Const. art. VI, § 2.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Relations With Governments

Governments > Federal Government > US Congress

HN3 Constitutional Law, Supremacy Clause

Whether federal law preempts state law fundamentally is a question of congressional intent. When addressing a preemption question, the court starts with the assumption that the historic police powers of the states are not to be superseded by federal act unless that is the clear and manifest purpose of Congress. Courts should proceed on the conviction that the proper approach is to reconcile the operation of both statutory schemes with one another rather than holding one completely ousted.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Relations With Governments

HN4 Constitutional Law, Supremacy Clause

Preemption may arise in three ways. First, Congress can define explicitly the extent to which its enactments preempt state law. Second, in the absence of explicit statutory language, state law is pre-empted where it regulates conduct in a field that Congress intends the federal government to occupy exclusively. Finally, state law is pre-empted to the extent that it actually conflicts with federal law.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Communications Law > Federal Acts > Cable Television Consumer Protection & Competition Act

HN5 Federal Acts, Cable Television Consumer Protection & Competition Act

See 47 U.S.C.S. § 543\(b\)\(7\).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Communications Law > Federal Acts > Cable Television Consumer Protection & Competition Act

HN6 Federal Acts, Cable Television Consumer Protection & Competition Act

Only regulated companies must comply with 47 U.S.C.S. § 543\(b\)\(7\).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Communications Law > Federal Acts > Cable Television Consumer Protection & Competition Act

HN7 Federal Acts, Cable Television Consumer Protection & Competition Act

See 47 U.S.C.S. § 543\(a\)\(2\).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Communications Law > Federal Acts > Cable Communications Policy Act

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Communications Law > Federal Acts > Cable Television Consumer Protection & Competition Act

HN8 Federal Acts, Cable Communications Policy Act

47 U.S.C.S. § 543\(b\)\(8\) expressly prohibits a cable operator from requiring the subscription to any tier other than the basic service tier as a condition of access to video programming that is offered on a per channel or per program basis.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Communications Law > Federal Acts > Cable Television Consumer Protection & Competition Act

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Entities > Cable Systems > Rate Regulation

HN9 Federal Acts, Cable Television Consumer Protection & Competition Act

See 47 U.S.C.S. § 543\(a\)\(1\).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Communications Law > Federal Acts > Cable Communications Policy Act

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Practices > Franchises > Authorities

Communications Law > Overview & Legal Concepts > General Overview

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Practices > Franchises > General Overview

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Entities > Cable Systems > Rate Regulation

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Communications Law > Federal Acts > Cable Television Consumer Protection & Competition Act

HN10 Federal Acts, Cable Communications Policy Act

47 U.S.C.S. § 543\(a\)\(2\) provides that a cable system which is subject to effective competition is not subject to rate regulation by the commission or by a state or franchising authority. § 543\(a\)\(2\) further provides that if a cable system is not subject to effective competition that system's rates for the provision of basic cable service shall be subject to limited regulation by the franchising authority and by the commission.

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Entities > Cable Systems > Rate Regulation

Communications Law > Overview & Legal Concepts > General Overview

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Entities > Cable Systems > General Overview

HN11[ Cable Systems, Rate Regulation

A cable operator's "rate" is the amount of money charged to subscribers to receive cable services. To "regulate" means to fix, establish, or control; to adjust by rule, method, or established mode; to direct by rule or restriction; to subject to governing principles or laws. A rate regulation is a law which fixes, establishes or controls the amount of money a cable operator may charge subscribers for the provision of cable services.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN12[ Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720 of the Cartwright Act defines a "trust" as a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons for numerous specified purposes including to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce and to prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity. Except as otherwise stated in the Cartwright Act, every trust is unlawful, against public policy and void. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §16726.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN13[ Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16727.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN14[ Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that a buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees not to purchase that product from any other supplier. Tying arrangements are illegal per se if a party has sufficient economic power and substantially forecloses competition in a relevant market. Even when not per se illegal, a tying arrangement violates the Cartwright Act if it unreasonably restrains trade.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Communications Law > Federal Acts > Cable Television Consumer Protection & Competition Act

52 Cal. App. 4th 1514, *1514L<sup>61</sup> Cal. Rptr. 2d 544, **544L<sup>997</sup> Cal. App. LEXIS 147, ***1

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Relations With Governments

HN15 [blue icon] Federal Acts, Cable Television Consumer Protection & Competition Act

In determining the scope of an acts preemptive effect, the court begins with the language of the federal statute; if that language is ambiguous the court considers the statute's legislative history.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Communications Law > Federal Acts > Cable Television Consumer Protection & Competition Act

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Entities > Cable Systems > Rate Regulation

HN16 [blue icon] Federal Acts, Cable Television Consumer Protection & Competition Act

The statutory language employed in the Cable Television Consumer Protection and Competition Act of 1992 and the Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984, 47 U.S.C.S. § 521 et seq., indicates that Congress intended the preemptive scope of section 47 U.S.C.S. § 543\(a\) to be narrow.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Communications Law > Federal Acts > Cable Television Consumer Protection & Competition Act

HN17 [blue icon] Federal Acts, Cable Television Consumer Protection & Competition Act

47 U.S.C.S. § 544\(f\) of the Cable Television Consumer Protection and Competition Act of 1992 and the Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984, 47 U.S.C.S. § 521 et seq., provides that a state may not impose requirements regarding the provision or content of cable services, except as expressly provided in the subchapter.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Communications Law > Overview & Legal Concepts > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

The anti-tying provisions of the Cartwright Act do not regulate the manner in which cable services are packaged. Rather, the provisions preclude a cable operator from depriving its customer, in a manner which unreasonably restrains trade, of a choice as to what package the customer wishes to purchase.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Summary

CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS SUMMARY

In an action against a cable television company, plaintiffs alleged that defendant unlawfully restrained trade in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16720, 16727 (Cartwright Act), by illegally tying the sale of satellite channels to the sale of broadcast channels and the sale of premium channels to the sale of both broadcast and satellite channels. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend on the ground the antitrust claims were preempted by provisions of the Cable Television Consumer Protection and Competition Act of 1992 (47 U.S.C.A. § 540 et seq.) (the 1992 Cable Act), and the Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984 (47 U.S.C.A. § 521 et seq.), and entered a judgment of dismissal. (Superior Court of Marin County, No. 161687, Beverly B. Savitt, Judge.)

The Court of Appeal reversed. The court held that plaintiffs' claim that defendant violated the Cartwright Act by requiring customers to subscribe to defendant's basic service tier in order to access other tiers of service was preempted, as such conduct is expressly required by 47 U.S.C.A. § 543\(b\)\(7\). However, that provision only applies to cable companies that are regulated under the 1992 Cable Act, that is, those not subject to effective competition. Accordingly, to the extent defendant's conduct occurred when it was not so regulated, the claims were not preempted. Moreover, by its own terms, 47 U.S.C.A. § 543\(b\)\(7\) applies only to the provision of the "basic service tier," which in the present case would be defendant's tier of broadcast channels, but plaintiffs' claims were not limited to the allegation that it is illegal to require customers to buy the basic service tier in order to obtain access to other tiers. They also complained that defendant's practice of requiring a subscription to the basic and satellite cable tier in order to obtain access to the premium channels constituted illegal tying, and 47 U.S.C.A. § 543\(b\)\(7\) neither requires nor authorizes this latter practice. The court also held that the trial court erred in finding that 47 U.S.C.A. § 543\(a\), prohibiting states from regulating rates, preempted the Cartwright Act provisions on which plaintiffs relied. A rate regulation is a law that fixes, establishes, or controls the amount of money a cable operator may charge subscribers for the provision of cable services. The anti-tying law does not preclude a cable operator from charging whatever rate it desires, but only prohibits the operator from entering into an agreement which forces a customer to accept one service in order to obtain another. And, to the extent the anti-tying provisions had some indirect effect on cable company rates, there was insufficient evidence that Congress intended to preempt those provisions. The court further held that the trial court properly found that 47 U.S.C.A. § 544\(f\), providing that a state "may not impose requirements regarding the provision or content of cable services, except as expressly provided in this subchapter," did not preempt plaintiffs' claims. 47 U.S.C.A. § 544\(f\) targets regulation of the content of cable services and did not, therefore, preempt the Cartwright Act provisions at issue. (Opinion by Haerle, J., with Kline, P. J., and Lambden, J., concurring.)

Headnotes

CA\(1\) [ ] (1)

Constitutional Law § 34—Distribution of Governmental Powers—Between Federal and State Governments—Federal Preemption.

--The preemption doctrine derives from the supremacy clause (U.S. Const., art. VI, § 2), and whether federal law preempts state law fundamentally is a question of congressional intent. When addressing a preemption question, courts start with the assumption that the historic police powers of the states are not to be superseded by federal law unless that is the clear and manifest purpose of Congress. Therefore, courts should proceed on the conviction that the proper approach is to reconcile the operation of both statutory schemes with one another rather than holding one completely ousted. Preemption may arise in three ways. First, Congress can define explicitly the extent to which its enactments preempt state law. Second, in the absence of explicit statutory language, state law is preempted where it regulates conduct in a field that Congress intended the federal government to occupy exclusively. Finally, state law is preempted to the extent that it actually conflicts with federal law.

CA\(2\) [ ] (2)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 7.4—Under Cartwright Act—Tying Arrangements—Cable Television—Federal Preemption.

--A claim that a cable television company violated the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16720, 16727) by requiring customers to subscribe to its basic service tier in order to access other tiers of service was preempted, as such conduct is expressly required by 47 U.S.C.A. § 543\(b\)\(7\), which is part of the Cable Television Consumer Protection and Competition Act of 1992 (47 U.S.C.A. § 540 et seq.). However, that provision only applies to cable companies that are regulated under the Act, that is, those not subject to effective competition. Accordingly, to the extent defendant's conduct occurred when it was not regulated, the claims were not preempted. Moreover, by its own terms, 47 U.S.C.A. § 543\(b\)\(7\) applies only to the provision of the "basic service tier," which in the present case would be defendant's tier of broadcast channels, but plaintiffs' claims were not limited to the allegation that it is illegal to require customers to buy the basic service tier in order to obtain access to other tiers. They also complained that defendant's practice of requiring a subscription to the basic and satellite cable tier in order to obtain access to the premium channels constituted illegal tying, and 47 U.S.C.A. § 543\(b\)\(7\) neither requires nor authorizes this latter practice.

CA\(3a\) [ ] (3a) CA\(3b\) [ ] (3b)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 7.4—Under Cartwright Act—Tying Arrangements—Cable Television—Federal Preemption.

--In an action against a cable television company alleging that defendant unlawfully restrained trade in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16720, 16727 (Cartwright Act), by illegally tying the sale of satellite channels to the sale of broadcast channels and the sale of premium channels to the sale of both broadcast and satellite channels, the trial court erred in finding that 47 U.S.C.A. § 543\(a\) (part of the Cable Television Consumer Protection and Competition Act of 1992; 47 U.S.C.A. § 540 et seq.), prohibiting states from regulating rates, preempted the Cartwright Act provisions on which plaintiffs relied. A rate regulation is a law that fixes, establishes or controls the amount of money a cable operator may charge subscribers for the provision of cable services. The anti-tying law does not preclude a cable operator from charging whatever rate it desires, but only prohibits the operator from entering into an agreement which forces a customer to accept one service in order to obtain another. And, to the extent the anti-tying provisions had some indirect effect on cable company rates, there was insufficient evidence that Congress intended to preempt those provisions. The cable act prohibits states from directly regulating cable rates; it does not prohibit states from enforcing any law which may indirectly affect the rates any company may charge.

[See 1 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (9th ed. 1987) Contracts, § 589.]

CA\(4\) [ ] (4)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 7.4—Under Cartwright Act—Tying Arrangements—General Principles.

--A tying arrangement under Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16720, 16727 (Cartwright Act), is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he or she will not purchase that product from any other supplier. Tying arrangements are illegal per se if the party has sufficient economic power and substantially forecloses competition in the relevant market. Even when not per se illegal, a tying arrangement violates the Cartwright Act if it unreasonably restrains trade.

CA\(5\) [ ] (5)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 7.4—Under Cartwright Act—Tying Arrangements—Cable Television—Federal Preemption.

--In an action against a cable television company alleging that defendant unlawfully restrained trade in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16720, 16727 (Cartwright Act), by illegally tying the sale of satellite channels to the sale of broadcast channels and the sale of premium channels to the sale of both broadcast and satellite channels, the trial court properly found that 47 U.S.C.A. § 544\(f\), providing that a state "may not impose requirements regarding the provision or content of cable services, except as expressly provided in this subchapter," did not preempt plaintiffs' claims. 47 U.S.C.A. § 544\(f\) targets regulation of the content of cable services and did not, therefore, preempt the Cartwright Act provisions at issue.

Counsel: Joseph M. Alioto, John H. Boone, Michael Dietrick and Jon P. Rankin for Plaintiffs and Appellants.

George Shapiro, David M. Balabanian, Terry J. Houlihan, Christopher B. Hockett and Stephanie S. Lamarre for Defendants and Respondents.

Judges: Opinion by Haerle, J., with Kline, P. J., and Lambden, J., concurring.

Opinion by: HAERLE

Opinion

---

[*1517] [**547] HAERLE, J.

I. INTRODUCTION

The question presented by this appeal is whether provisions of California's antitrust law prohibiting anticompetitive "tying" practices are preempted by federal law regulating the cable television industry. The trial court found that appellants' state law antitrust claims against a cable operator were preempted and sustained a demurrer to their complaint, without leave to amend. We disagree and reverse the judgment.

[*1518] II. STATEMENT OF FACTS

On September 22, 1994, appellants filed an antitrust action against respondent, Viacom, Inc., seeking damages [***2] and injunctive relief. Appellants are alleged representatives of a class consisting of all persons who have purchased cable television services in San Francisco or Marin County from respondent during the four years prior to the filing of their complaint. The complaint charges respondent with violating California's Cartwright Act by restraining trade in the San Francisco and Marin county markets for cable television services.

According to the complaint, respondent offers customers three distinct categories of services: (1) broadcast channels, consisting of local television channels concurrently available over the noncable airwaves without charge, such as KGO, KPIX and KRON; (2) satellite cable channels, consisting of geographically remote broadcast television channels and nonbroadcast channels such as CNN and ESPN; and (3) premium channels, consisting of nonbroadcast channels such as HBO and Showtime.

Appellants allege that respondent has unlawfully restrained trade in violation of Business and Professions Code sections 16720 and 16727 (the Cartwright Act) by illegally tying the sale of satellite channels to the sale of broadcast channels and the sale of premium channels to the [***3] sale of both broadcast and satellite channels. In other words, appellants complain that respondent has illegally restrained trade by making the purchase of broadcast channels a prerequisite for the purchase of satellite cable channels and by making the purchase of both broadcast channels and satellite cable channels a prerequisite for the purchase of premium channels.

Respondent demurred to the complaint, arguing that appellants failed to state a cause of action because the antitrust claims alleged in the complaint are preempted by provisions of the Cable Television Consumer Protection and Competition Act of 1992 (Pub.L. No. 102-385 (Oct. 5, 1992) 106 Stat. 1460, 1992 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News, No. 1) (the 1992 Cable Act), and the Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984 (Pub.L. No. 98-549 (Oct. 30, 1984) 98 Stat. 2779, codified in part at 47 U.S.C.A. § 521 et seq.) (the 1984 Cable Act). Respondent argued that its practice of offering customers several "tiers of service" is required by federal law and that, in any event, states are expressly prohibited by the cable acts from regulating rates charged by cable operators.

On July 12, 1995, the trial court sustained respondent's [***4] demurrer without leave to amend. Judgment was entered on August 21, 1995. Appellants timely appealed.

[*1519] III. DISCUSSION

Appellants contend the trial court erred by sustaining the demurrer to their complaint; they argue the complaint states valid causes of action because the 1984 and 1992 Cable Acts do not preempt their state Cartwright Act claims. HN1 When reviewing a judgment based on an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend, we accept as accurate the factual allegations of appellants' complaint. ([Endler v. Schutzbanks \(1968\) 68 Cal. 2d 162, 165 \[65 Cal. Rptr. 297, 436 P.2d 297\]](#).) If the complaint states a cause of action, the judgment must be reversed. ([Black v. Browne \(1940\) 39 Cal. App. 2d 606, 607-608 \[103 P.2d 1012\]](#))

A. The Preemption Doctrine

CA\(1\) (1) The preemption doctrine derives from the supremacy clause, which declares that the HN2 "laws of the United States . . . shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in [**548] every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding." (U.S. Const., art. VI, § 2.)

HN3 "Whether federal law preempts state law 'fundamentally is a question of [***5] congressional intent . . . .' [Citations.]" ([Smiley v. Citibank \(1995\) 11 Cal. 4th 138, 147 \[44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 441, 900 P.2d 690\]](#), affd. [U.S. \[116 S. Ct. 1730, 135 L. Ed. 2d 25\]](#).) When addressing a preemption question, we "start[] with the assumption that the historic police powers of the States [are] not to be superseded by . . . Federal Act unless that [is] the clear and manifest purpose of Congress." ("[Cipollone v. Liggett Group, Inc. \(1992\) 505 U.S. 504, 516 \[112 S. Ct. 2608, 2617, 120 L. Ed. 2d 407\]](#); see also Smiley v. Citibank, supra, 11 Cal. 4th at p. 148.) "Therefore, courts should proceed on 'the conviction that the proper approach is to reconcile the operation of both statutory schemes with one another rather than holding one completely ousted.' ("Storer Cable Com. v. City of Montgomery, Ala. \(M.D.Ala. 1992\) 806 F. Supp. 1518, 1531, quoting [Merrill Lynch, Pierce Fenner & Smith v. Ware \(1973\) 414 U.S. 117, 127 \[94 S. Ct. 383, 389-390, 38 L. Ed. 2d 348\]](#).)

HN4 Preemption may arise in three ways. " 'First, Congress can define explicitly the extent to which its enactments pre-empt state law.' [Citations.] 'Second, [***6] in the absence of explicit statutory language, state law is pre-empted where it regulates conduct in a field that Congress intended the Federal Government to occupy exclusively.' [Citations.] 'Finally, state law is pre-empted to the extent that it actually conflicts with federal law.' [Citations.]" (Smiley v. Citibank, supra, 11 Cal. 4th at p. 147.)

In the present case, the trial court found two types of preemption. First, it concluded that the anti-tying provisions of the Cartwright Act conflict with [*1520] federal law which compels cable operators to require customers to subscribe to a basic service tier as a prerequisite to providing access to other tiers of service (conflict preemption). Second, the court found that statutory provisions in the 1984 and 1992 Cable Acts prohibiting states from regulating cable company rates explicitly preempt the Cartwright Act claims at issue in this case (express preemption). In addition, respondent contends that the lower court's preemption ruling can be sustained under another provision of the cable acts which allegedly expressly precludes states from regulating cable operators' "tiering" decisions.

For the reasons that [***7] follow, we hold that the 1992 Cable Act preempts only a portion of appellants' claims and that neither act precludes appellants from stating a valid cause of action under the Cartwright Act. Therefore, the judgment must be reversed.

B. The 1992 Cable Act Provision Requiring Subscription to a Basic Tier of Service for Access to Other Tiers of Service Conflicts With Only a Portion of the Cartwright Act Claims

The trial court found that appellants' claims are preempted to the extent that they are based on conduct occurring after the enactment of 47 United States Code Annotated section 543\(b\)\(7\), of the 1992 Cable Act (section 543\(b\)\(7\)). Section 543\(b\)\(7\) states in relevant part: HN5 "Each cable operator of a cable system shall provide its subscribers a separately available basic service tier to which subscription is required for access to any other tier of service." (§ 543\(b\)\(7\)\(A\).)

CA\(2\) (2) Appellants have alleged that respondent violated the Cartwright Act by requiring customers to subscribe to its basic service tier in order to access other tiers of service. This part of the allegedly illegal conduct is expressly required by section 543\(b\)\(7\). Thus, it appears appellants' claims are ***8 partially preempted. Appellants contend, however, that section 543\(b\)\(7\) does not preempt any of their claims because this provision applies only to those cable companies that are regulated under the cable act and there is no evidence in the record that respondent is regulated.

Respondent half-heartedly disputes appellants' contention that only cable companies whose rates are regulated are subject to \*\*549 section 543\(b\)\(7\). Respondent cites no authority for its contention that all cable operators, whether regulated or not, are subject to section 543\(b\)\(7\). The only authority on the subject which has been brought to our attention states that section 543\(b\)\(7\) applies only to regulated companies. (See [Time Warner Entertainment Co., L.P. v. F.C.C. \(D.C. Cir. 1995\) 56 F.3d 151, 192 \[312 App.D.C. L\*1521\] 187](#).) We are persuaded by the Time Warner court's interpretation of the relevant statute and agree with its conclusion that HN6 only regulated companies must comply with section 543\(b\)\(7\). (56 F.3d at p. 192.)

Respondent next claims that its San Francisco and Marin cable systems are regulated. Indeed, the trial court took judicial notice of documentation which establishes that ***9 respondent's San Francisco and Marin county operations are currently being regulated.<sup>1</sup> Nevertheless, the court's conclusion that appellants' claims are preempted by section 543\(b\)\(7\) to the extent they are based on conduct occurring after the enactment of that statute is erroneous in two important respects.

First, the trial court erred by using the date section 543\(b\) was enacted as the cutoff date for appellants' claims rather than determining when respondent actually became subject to ***10 regulation.<sup>2</sup> The documents of which the trial court took judicial notice do not establish when respondent became subject to rate regulation. Section 543\(a\)\(2\) of the 1992 Cable Act provides that HN7 "[i]f the Commission finds that a cable system is subject to effective competition, the rates for the provision of cable service by such system shall not be subject to regulation by the Commission or by any State or franchising authority under this section." (47 U.S.C.A. § 543\(a\)\(2\).)<sup>3</sup> Thus, respondent was subject to rate regulation at all times that it was not subject to effective competition.

***11 In its brief, respondent contends it was subject to "effective competition" "[f]rom September 22, 1990 (the starting date for the Complaint's allegations) through June 21, 1993 (when the Commission changed its effective competition regulations). . . ." We have not been directed to any factual evidence in the record to support this contention. But if it is correct, section 543\(b\)\(7\), the preemption provision relied on by both the trial court and respondent, could not have applied to respondent before June 21, 1993. In a petition for rehearing, however, respondent submits a new and different contention and asks us to rule as a matter of law that it was subject to effective competition (and hence not subject to rate regulation by anyone) [*1522] only until the effective date of the 1992 Cable Act, April 3, 1992. We decline the invitation to so rule for at least two reasons: (a) the statute seems to suggest that a Commission finding is determinative of whether a cable system is or is not subject to "effective competition" (see § 543\(a\)\(2\)) and (b) bearing in mind the procedural posture of this case, we think the issue of the effective date of rate regulation is one best left to [***12] the trial court for consideration in the course of future proceedings.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> At oral argument, appellant's counsel argued that while Viacom's San Francisco and Marin systems are subject to regulation, they are not currently being regulated. However, the documents of which the trial court took judicial notice indicate that both the San Francisco and Marin systems are currently being regulated. The documents include two Federal Communications Commission (FCC) opinions and orders resolving complaints about the prices respondent charged for cable programming service in Marin and in San Francisco.

<sup>2</sup> Even if section 543\(b\)\(7\) applies to nonregulated companies, as respondent contends, it would be error to focus on the enactment date of the statute as the trial court did in this case. Section 543\(b\) did not become effective until 180 days after its enactment. (See 47 U.S.C.A. § 543, Historical and Statutory Notes.)

<sup>3</sup> The substance of this provision was also contained in the 1984 Cable Act. (See 47 U.S.C.A. § 543\(b\)\(1\).)

The trial court's second error was in concluding that all of appellants' claims are partially preempted by section 543\(b\)\(7\). By its own terms, section 543\(b\)\(7\) applies only to the provision of the "basic service tier," which in the present case would be respondent's tier of broadcast channels. But appellants' claims are not limited to the allegation that it is illegal to require customers to buy the basic service tier in order [***13] to obtain access to other tiers. Appellants also complain [**550] that respondent's practice of requiring a subscription to the basic and satellite cable tier in order to obtain access to the premium channels constitutes illegal tying. Section 543\(b\)\(7\) neither requires nor authorizes this latter practice. Indeed, HN8 [↑] section 543\(b\)\(8\) expressly prohibits a cable operator from requiring "the subscription to any tier other than the basic service tier . . . as a condition of access to video programming offered on a per channel or per program basis." (47 U.S.C.A. § 543\(b\)\(8\).)

In summary, although section 543\(b\)\(7\) may temporally and substantively limit the scope of appellants' claims, it does not preclude appellants from stating a cause of action for violation of California's Cartwright Act. Thus, section 543\(b\)\(7\) does not justify sustaining respondent's demurrer to the complaint.

C. The Provision in the Cable Acts Prohibiting States From Regulating Rates Does Not Preempt the Cartwright Act Provisions Upon Which Appellants Rely

CA\(3a\) [↑] (3a) The second ground for the court's ruling is that 47 United States Code Annotated section 543\(a\) of the 1984 and 1992 Cable Acts (section 543\(a\)), which precludes [***14] states from regulating cable company rates, preempts appellants' antitrust claims. The court reasoned that appellants' prayers for relief establish that they seek to regulate respondent's rates because appellants seek damages for allegedly illegal rates and also seek to enjoin respondent from charging illegal rates in the future.

[*1523] Section 543\(a\)\(1\) of the 1992 Cable Act states that HN9 [↑] "[n]o Federal agency or State may regulate the rates for the provision of cable service except to the extent provided under this section and section 532 of this title." (§ 543\(a\)\(1\).) HN10 [↑] Section 543\(a\)\(2\) provides that a cable system which is subject to "effective competition" is not subject to rate regulation by "the Commission or by a State or franchising authority under this section." (§ 543\(a\)\(2\).) This section further provides that if a cable system is not subject to "effective competition" that system's rates for the provision of basic cable service shall be subject to limited regulation by the franchising authority and by the commission. (Ibid.) Prior to the enactment of the 1992 Cable Act, the 1984 Cable Act contained comparable statutory provisions severely limiting states' [***15] authority to regulate rates for the provision of cable services. (See 47 U.S.C.A. § 543\(a\)-\(b\).)

Appellants do not dispute that both cable acts preclude states from regulating cable rates. Rather, they contend that the anti-tying provisions of the Cartwright Act do not regulate rates. According to appellants, the antitrust laws are the antithesis of regulation in that their design and purpose is to promote competition and not regulation. Respondent, on the other hand, contends that using the Cartwright Act to regulate its "tiering" practices would directly affect how much it could charge customers, since rates are determined according to the tiering structure it has adopted. According to respondent, the cable acts preempt any state law, including antitrust laws, which necessarily affect cable rates.

<sup>4</sup> As noted above, during oral argument, appellants' counsel attempted for the first time to distinguish between companies that are regulated and companies that are subject to regulation. Whether this distinction is valid and relevant to the determination as to when respondent became subject to section 543\(b\)\(7\) (i.e., when it became subject to regulation or when it was actually regulated) is an issue the parties may address to the trial court, which has not yet had the opportunity to consider this matter.

Although both parties cite authority useful to our analysis, we have found no case which addresses the specific issue we face, i.e., whether the anti-tying provisions of the California Cartwright Act constitute rate regulation and are therefore preempted by the cable acts. We conclude that these provisions do not constitute direct rate regulation and that Congress has not expressed [***16] an intent to preempt all state regulation which indirectly affects rates charged by cable operators. Therefore, appellants' claims are not preempted by section 543\(a\).

1. The Anti-tying Provisions Do Not Constitute Rate Regulation

We employ respondent's proffered definition of rate regulation: HN11[<sup>1</sup>] a cable operator's "rate" is "the amount of money charged to subscribers to receive cable services." (Storer Cable Com. v. City of Montgomery, Ala., supra, 806 F. Supp. at p. 1543.) To "regulate" means "[t]o fix, establish, or control; to adjust by rule, method, or established mode; to direct by rule or restriction; to subject to governing principles or laws." (Black's Law Dict. (6th ed. 1990) p. [**551] 1286, col. 1.) Thus, in the present context, a rate regulation is a law which fixes, establishes or controls the amount of money a cable operator [*1524] may charge subscribers for the provision of cable services. The Cartwright Act provisions upon which appellants rely, sections 16720 and 16727 of the Business and Professions Code, do not fall within this definition.

The purpose of the Cartwright Act is to protect and foster competition by preventing combinations and conspiracies [***17] which unreasonably restrain trade. (See [State of California ex rel. Van de Kamp v. Texaco, Inc. \(1988\) 46 Cal. 3d 1147, 1153 \[252 Cal. Rptr. 221, 762 P.2d 385\]](#); [People v. Santa Clara Valley Bowling etc. Assn. \(1965\) 238 Cal. App. 2d 225, 238 \[47 Cal. Rptr. 570\]](#).) HN12[<sup>1</sup>] Section 16720 of the Cartwright Act defines a "trust" as a "combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons" for numerous specified purposes including "(a) [t]o create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce" and "(c) [t]o prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity." (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720.) Except as otherwise stated in the Cartwright Act, "every trust is unlawful, against public policy and void." (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16726.)

Section 16727 of the Cartwright Act, which expressly prohibits illegal tying arrangements, states: HN13[<sup>1</sup>] "It shall be unlawful for any person to lease or make a sale or contract for the sale of goods, merchandise, machinery, supplies, commodities for use within the State, or to fix a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon, such price, on the condition, agreement or [***18] understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, merchandise, machinery, supplies, commodities, or services of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of trade or commerce in any section of the State." (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16727.)

CA\(4\)[<sup>1</sup>] (4) Case law construing Business and Professions Code section 16727 defines HN14[<sup>1</sup>] a tying arrangement as " 'an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier.' " ([Corwin v. Los Angeles Newspaper Service Bureau, Inc. \(1971\) 4 Cal. 3d 842, 856 \[94 Cal. Rptr. 785, 484 P.2d 953\]](#); [Kim v. Servosnax, Inc. \(1992\) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1346, 1360 \[13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 422\]](#).) Tying arrangements are illegal per se if the party has sufficient economic power and substantially forecloses competition in the relevant market. (Ibid.) Even when not per se illegal, a tying arrangement [***19] violates the Cartwright Act if it unreasonably restrains trade. (Kim v. Servosnax, Inc., supra, 10 Cal. App. 4th at p. 1361.)

Neither the language of the Cartwright Act provisions at issue nor authority construing them indicates that the purpose or effect of those provisions is [*1525] to dictate or otherwise control what price a company, such as a cable operator, may charge for its services or goods. Instead, these provisions preclude agreements which restrain trade by conditioning the consumer's access to a product or service on his or her relinquishment of the freedom to choose whether to purchase another product or service. CA\(3b\)[<sup>1</sup>] (3b) To the extent cable rates are affected at all by enforcement of these provisions, the effect is indirect at best.

That the state laws at issue are not designed to and do not directly regulate cable rates distinguishes the present case from most of the preemption cases upon which respondent relies. (See Storer Cable Com. v. City of Montgomery, Ala., supra, 806 F. Supp. at pp. 1542-1544 [preempting portion of local ordinance prohibiting cable companies from charging anticompetitive rates]; [Town of Norwood v. Adams-Russell Co. \(1990\) 406 Mass. 604 \[549 N.E.2d 1115\]](#) [preempting rate-freeze provision in contract between cable operator and franchising authority]; Westmarc Com. v. Conn. Dept. of Public Utility \(D.Conn. 1990\) 807 F. Supp. 876, 884-889 [state agency ruling providing that fine imposed on cable operator could not be passed on to cable subscribers constituted impermissible rate regulation]; [\[\*\*552\] Cablevision Systems Corp. v. Town of East Hampton \(E.D.N.Y. 1994\) 862 F. Supp. 875, 883-885](#) [recognizing that 1992 Cable Act limited franchising authority's power to regulate rates to regulation of basic service tier]; Time Warner Entertainment Co. v. Briggs \(D.Mass. 1993\) 1993 WL 23710, 3-4 [preempting local ordinance to the extent it regulated cable company rates]; City of Dubuque v. Group W Cable, Inc. \(N.D.Iowa 1987\) 1987 WL 11826, 4-7 [preempting cable franchise regulation of cable equipment rates]; City of Gillette v. TCI Cablevision of Wyoming, Inc. \(D.Wyo. 1991\) 1991 WL 329587 [preempting portions of city ordinances which overstepped franchising authority's power to regulate rates for cable services].)

Nevertheless, respondent contends the Cartwright Act provisions [\[\*\*\*21\]](#) constitute rate regulation because applying these state law provisions to respondent's activities necessarily affects the rates it can charge. We reject this argument for two reasons. First, the anti-tying law does not preclude a cable operator from charging whatever rate it desires but only prohibits the operator from entering into an agreement which forces a customer to accept one service in order to obtain another. Thus, so long as access to services is not restricted in a way prohibited by the law, cable rates are not affected at all. Second, to the extent the anti-tying provisions have some indirect effect on cable company rates, we find insufficient evidence Congress intended to preempt those provisions.

2. An Indirect Effect on Cable Rates Does Not Warrant Preemption

HN15 In determining the scope of the cable acts' preemptive effect, we begin with the language of the federal statute; if that language is ambiguous we [\[\*1526\]](#) consider the statute's legislative history. (See Storer Cable Com. v. City of Montgomery, Ala., supra, 806 F. Supp. at p. 1542; Westmarc Com. v. Conn. Dept. of Public Utility, supra, 807 F. Supp. at p. 885.) Here, section 543\(a\) of the [\[\*\*\*22\]](#) 1992 Cable Act provides that no state "may regulate the rates for the provision of cable service" except as provided under the act, and that the "rates" for the "provision of basic cable service" and "for cable programming services" "shall not be subject to regulation" except under limited circumstances not relevant in this case. (§ 543\(a\)\(1\)-\(2\).) The 1984 Cable Act similarly restricted the states' power to "regulate the rates for the provision of cable services." (§ 543\(a\).)

The language used in both the 1992 and the 1984 versions of section 543\(a\) is not indicative of a congressional intent to extend the statute's preemptive effect so as to include all state regulation which might indirectly affect cable rates. ( Cable Television Ass'n v. Finneran \(2d Cir. 1992\) 954 F.2d 91 (Finneran).) The Finneran court held that the provision of the 1984 cable act prohibiting states from regulating cable rates does not preempt state authority to regulate charges by cable operators to customers wishing to downgrade to a less expensive level of cable service. The court found that downgrade charges are not rates for the provision of cable services and, therefore, are not expressly [\[\*\*\*23\]](#) preempted by the cable act. ( Id. at p. 100.) The court also rejected the argument that regulation of downgrade charges was preempted because it would necessarily affect rates for the provision of cable services. The court was unable to discern a congressional intent to preempt regulations only indirectly affecting rates. ( Id. at pp. 100-102.) The court based its ruling on, among other things, the language employed in section 543\(a\) which "fails to evince an intention to carve out a wide area free of state regulation." (954 F.2d at p. 101.)

As the Finneran court recognized, "[w]here Congress has intended to pre-empt all state laws affecting a particular subject, it has employed language well suited to the task." (Finneran, supra, 954 F.2d at p. 101.) Thus, for example, statutes which expressly preempt state regulations which "relate to" a given subject matter or field are indicative of an expansive preemptive intent. (Ibid.; see, e.g., [Morales v. Trans World Airlines, Inc. \(1992\) 504 U.S. 374, 383-387 \[112 S. Ct. 2031, 2036-2039, 119 L. Ed. 2d 157\]](#) [finding that the term "relating to" indicates that a preemption clause is intended to have a broad reach].) [\[\*\*\*24\]](#) The cable acts do not employ such [\[\*\*553\]](#) broad language; they do not preempt state laws that "relate to" rate regulation. Rather the language employed suggests that ". . . Congress meant to pre-empt only those state rules that regulate rates charged by cable companies for providing services to customers." (Finneran, supra, 954 F.2d at p. 102.)

We conclude, as have courts construing both the 1984 and the 1992 Cable Acts, that HN16<sup>5</sup> the statutory language employed in the cable acts indicates that [*1527] Congress intended the preemptive scope of section 543\(a\) to be narrow. (See, e.g., Finneran, supra, 954 F.2d at p. 102; Total TV v. Palmer Communications, Inc. (9th Cir. 1995) 69 F.3d 298, 302, cert. dism. U.S. [116 S. Ct. 1459, 134 L. Ed. 2d 576].) Thus, the cable acts prohibit states from directly regulating cable rates; they do not prohibit states from enforcing any law which may indirectly affect the rates any company may charge.

Our conclusion is supported by the acts' legislative history, history which is relevant to the extent the acts are arguably ambiguous as to the scope of their intended preemptive effect. An important purpose of the [***25] cable acts is to foster competition in the cable industry. (47 U.S.C.A. § 521\(6\).) This purpose is consistent with and promoted by enforcing the Cartwright Act's prohibition against tying arrangements which unreasonably restrain competition.<sup>5</sup> [***26] Further, section 27 of the 1992 Cable Act, an uncodified provision recorded in the act's legislative history, indicates it was not designed or intended to preclude enforcement of federal and state antitrust laws. (Pub.L. No. 102-385 (Oct. 5, 1992) § 27, 106 Stat. 1503, 1992 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News, No. 1, § 27, p. 1503 "Nothing in this Act or the amendments made by this Act shall be construed to alter or restrict in any manner the applicability of any Federal or state [antitrust law."].)<sup>6</sup>

[*1528] Our conclusion is also consistent with the Ninth Circuit's recent decision in Total TV v. Palmer Communications, Inc., supra, 69 F.3d 298 (Total TV), a case decided after the lower court issued its decision in the present case. Total TV was a nonfranchised "cable television dealer" which sued a franchised cable operator and the company that owned it, alleging defendants were attempting to drive it out of the relevant market by engaging in below-cost [***27] predatory pricing with the intent to destroy competition in violation of the California Unfair Practices Act, Business and Professions Code section 17043 \(UPA\). (69 F.3d at p. 300.) Total TV sought damages and injunctive relief. After removing the case to federal court, defendants filed a motion to dismiss, arguing Total

<sup>5</sup> Respondent contends it is irrelevant that enforcing the Cartwright Act in this context may actually further the purpose of the cable acts because the United States Supreme Court has held that "an express preemption clause displaces all state laws that fall within its sphere, including consistent ones." (Citing Morales v. Trans World Airlines, Inc., supra, 504 U.S. at pp. 386-387 [112 S. Ct. at pp. 2038-2039] (Morales).) But the preemption clause at issue in Morales, a provision of the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978 (ADA), is not comparable to section 543\(a\) of the cable acts. In contrast to section 543\(a\), the ADA preemption provision prohibited "States from enforcing any law 'relating to rates, routes, or services.'" ([504 U.S. at pp. 378-379 \[112 S. Ct. at p. 2034\].](#)) The Morales court held that the scope of this preemption clause was so wide that it preempted even consistent state laws which had a connection with or reference to airline rates, routes, or services. ([Id. at pp. 386-387 \[112 S. Ct. at pp. 2038-2039\].](#)) However, the court did not announce a general rule that all preemption clauses automatically preempt consistent state laws.

The additional cases cited by counsel during oral argument are similarly unavailing because, among other things, they involve federal statutes which Congress clearly intended to have broad preemptive effects. (See San Diego Unions v. Garmon (1959) 359 U.S. 236, 239 [79 S. Ct. 773, 776, 3 L. Ed. 2d 775] [National Labor Relations Act]; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts (1985) 471 U.S. 724, 739 [105 S. Ct. 2380, 2388-2389, 85 L. Ed. 2d 728] [Employee Retirement Income Security Act].).

<sup>6</sup> Respondent's contention that section 27 cannot negate statutory provisions which expressly preempt appellants' claims begs the question. Our review of the relevant statutes and authority leads us to the conclusion that no statutory provision expressly preempts appellants' claims.

Respondent's reliance on section 556\(c\) of the cable acts is also misplaced. Section 556\(c\) provides that state laws inconsistent with the acts are "deemed to be preempted and superseded." (47 U.S.C.A. § 556\(c\).) As our analysis illustrates, the Cartwright Act provisions at issue in the present case are not inconsistent with the cable acts.

TV's claims were preempted because the relief sought would prohibit defendants from charging their current rates and thereby effectively [**554] regulate them in contravention of the cable acts. (Ibid.)

The Total TV court held that the cable acts did not preempt the UPA provision upon which Total TV relied because the provision does not regulate rates but "merely fixes a level below which the producer or distributor may not sell with intent to injure a competitor." (Total TV, supra, 69 F.3d at p. 301.) The court rejected the precise argument embraced by the trial court in the present case, i.e., that a state law could be characterized as rate regulation because it authorized relief which would indirectly affect rates. The court reasoned that "[e]ven assuming that Total TV receives the relief it requests, Colony's and Palmer's prices will not be regulated [***28] directly and, as long as they do not act with discriminatory purpose, they will be free to 'sell [their] merchandise at any price [they] please in the ordinary course of business.' [Citation.]" (Ibid.)

The Total TV court's preemption analysis properly focused on discerning and effectuating congressional intent. The court found that (1) the statutory language used in the acts signified a limited preemptive intent; (2) the cable acts' purpose of fostering competition in the cable industry was complimented rather than undermined by declining to preempt the UPA provisions; and (3) the legislative history of the cable acts indicates Congress did not intend to preempt state antitrust laws of general applicability. (Total TV, supra, 69 F.3d at pp. 302-304.) In this third regard, the court specifically relied on section 27 of the 1992 Cable Act, which expresses Congress's intent not to preempt federal and state antitrust laws. The Total TV court held that " [i]n light of the clear mandate of Section 27 that state antitrust laws not be preempted, § 543(a)(1) applies only to those situations involving a statute (or local ordinance) directly aimed at the cable [***29] industry and affecting or regulating rates." (69 F.3d at p. 303.)

Respondent contends Total TV is inapposite because it involved the UPA rather than the Cartwright Act. However, this distinction is not material to [*1529] our analysis. Indeed, we think it undeniable that the predatory pricing law at issue in Total TV has a more direct effect on cable rates than the anti-tying prohibition of the Cartwright Act. In any event, Total TV squarely supports our conclusion that neither the language nor the legislative history of the cable acts warrant preemption of state antitrust laws which may have an indirect effect on cable rates.

Respondent also argues that Total TV should not be followed because it is inconsistent with Time Warner Cable v. Doyle (7th Cir. 1995) 66 F.3d 867, certiorari denied — U.S. — [116 S. Ct. 974, 133 L. Ed. 2d 894] (Doyle). Doyle addressed the legality of a cable operator's restructuring of its tiered services. Time Warner deleted certain channels from its basic tier and its standard tier and offered the deleted channels to new customers as a separate "a la carte" service. Time Warner continued to provide [***30] the "a la carte" channels to existing customers but began charging them an additional fee. (Id. at pp. 870-871.) The State of Wisconsin (State) argued that Time Warner's policy of charging customers for an unordered service and requiring those who did not want the service affirmatively to reject the charge constituted "negative option billing" in violation of the State's unfair trade practice law. (Id. at p. 871.) Both the 1992 Cable Act and an FCC regulation proscribed negative option billing. (See 47 U.S.C.A. § 543(f); 47 C.F.R. § 76.981 (1996).) However, the regulation carved out an exception in cases involving "the addition or deletion of specific channels from an existing tier of service." Time Warner argued that the State's unfair trade practice law was preempted by the federal regulation. (Doyle, supra, 66 F.3d at p. 872.)

Recognizing that preemption may occur through the promulgation of federal regulations, the Doyle court focused on the question whether the federal regulation authorizing Time Warner's conduct was consistent with the 1992 Cable Act. (Doyle, supra, 66 F.3d at p. 875.) The Doyle court found that (1) the 1992 Cable Act's statutory [***31] language prohibiting negative option billing was sufficiently ambiguous to require some agency interpretation (id. at pp. 876-877) and (2) the federal regulation at issue was a permissible interpretation of the congressional authority given to the FCC by the 1992 Cable Act. (Id. at pp. 877-881.) Though recognizing the act was not intended to preempt state consumer protection laws, the court found that section 543(a) of the act, which prohibits states from [**555] regulating rates, supported the FCC interpretation of its authority under the act as including the power to preempt state consumer protection laws which jeopardized the rate structure of cable company operators. (66 F.3d at pp. 877-881.) Thus, the court concluded that the FCC regulation which authorized Time Warner's challenged activities preempted the State's consumer protection law.

[*1530] Respondent characterizes Doyle as "directly on point." In fact, Doyle addressed a much different question, i.e., whether the FCC had authority under the 1992 Cable Act to promulgate a regulation which expressly preempts state law. The Doyle court did not hold that the 1992 Cable Act preempts any state law which indirectly [***32] affects rates. It held, rather, that the FCC had authority under the act to promulgate a regulation which preempted a state law that only indirectly affected rates. Since we are faced with no comparable federal regulation in the present case, Doyle is inapposite.<sup>7</sup>

[***33] We conclude that the trial court erred by characterizing the Cartwright Act provisions as rate regulation. Further, state law provisions are not preempted because they may have some indirect effect on cable rates. In the present case, enforcing the Cartwright Act provisions would not have a sufficiently direct effect on rates to justify finding those provisions preempted by section 543\(a\) of the Cable Acts.

D. The Provision in the Cable Acts Precluding States From Imposing Requirements Regarding the Provision or Content of Cable Services does not Preempt the Provisions of the Cartwright Act Upon Which Appellants Rely [CA\(5\) \[↑\]](#) (5) [HN17 \[↑\]](#) 47 United States Code Annotated section 544\(f\) of the 1984 and 1992 Cable Acts (section 544\(f\)) provides that a state "may not impose requirements regarding the provision or content of cable services, except as expressly provided in this subchapter." (§ 544\(f\)\(1\).) According to respondent, section 544\(f\) prohibits states from regulating cable operators' tiering decisions. Respondent contends that section 544\(f\) is an alternative ground upon which to sustain the judgment.

The lower court found that section 544\(f\) does not preempt appellants' claims because [***34] that section prohibits state regulation of the content of cable [*1531] programming and the Cartwright Act claims at issue in this case do not seek to regulate content. The court cited Storer Cable Com. v. City of Montgomery, Ala., supra, 806 F. Supp. 1518 (Storer) as support for its conclusion.

In Storer, several cable operators argued that a local ordinance regulating competition among cable operators was preempted by section 544\(f\). (Storer, supra, 806 F. Supp. at pp. 1544-1546.) Rejecting this contention, the Storer court adopted the analysis of the only federal appellate court to interpret section 544\(f\) and found that the language of that section sheds little light on the provision's proper application but that its legislative history indicates that "§ 544\(f\)'s concern is with 'content-based rules' which require or forbid cable providers from carrying particular programming." (806 F.Supp at p. 1545.) The court concluded that the ordinance at issue was content-neutral and thus not preempted by section 544\(f\). (Id. at p. 1546.)

The appellate decision upon which the Storer court relied was [United Video, Inc. v. F.C.C. \(D.C. Cir. \[\*\*\*35\] 1989\) 890 F.2d 1173 \[281 App.D.C. 368\]](#) (United [**556] Video). In that case, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia rejected several cable operators' challenge to FCC "syndicated exclusivity" rules which enabled a supplier of syndicated programs to agree with a broadcast television station that the station would be the exclusive presenter of the program in its area. (Id. at p. 1176.) The court held, among other things, that section 544\(f\) of the Cable Act did not forbid the FCC from adopting the challenged rules. (890 F.3d at pp. 1187-1190.) Finding the language of section 544\(f\) to be ambiguous, the United Video court concluded that the legislative history of this provision revealed that it was intended to prohibit content-based regulation of cable services: "[T]he key is whether a regulation is content-based or content-neutral. Section 544\(f\), one must note, does not simply forbid

<sup>7</sup> The Doyle court did embrace the view that "[t]he rate structure is a federal matter and state consumer laws that impact upon it conflict with the operation of the rate structure." (Doyle, supra, 66 F.3d at p. 882.) However, we decline to take this statement out of the context in which it occurs. Indeed, the Doyle court expressly acknowledged the limitation of its holding by declining to disagree with Time Warner Entertainment Co., L.P. v. F.C.C., supra, 56 F.3d 151. In that case, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia held that the cable act did not preempt state and local negative option billing laws. (Id. at p. 194.) Instead of disagreeing with the Time Warner court's analysis (an analysis consistent with our conclusion in the present case), the Doyle court simply found that it faced a different issue, i.e., "whether the FCC regulation specifically preempts the enforcement of state negative option billing laws in the narrow situation of relatively minor adjustments in programming." (Doyle, supra, 66 F.3d at p. 880, fn. 17.)

'requirements'; it forbids 'requirements regarding the provision or content of cable services.' (emphasis added). The House report suggests that Congress thought a cable company's owners, not government officials, should decide what sorts of programming the company would provide. But [***36] it does not suggest a concern with regulations of cable that are not based on the content of cable programming, and do not require that particular programs or types of programs be provided. Such regulations are not requirements 'regarding the provision or content' of cable services." (890 F.2d at p. 1189.)

Storer and United Video support the conclusion that section 544\(f\) targets regulation of the content of cable services and does not, therefore, preempt the Cartwright Act provisions at issue in this case. Respondent does not argue that the anti-tying provisions regulate content. Instead it contends that [*1532] section 544\(f\) should be construed more broadly to preempt any suit "challenging a cable company's tiering decision." Respondent's contention is not supported by the only authority it cites, Cablevision Systems Corp. v. Town of East Hampton, supra, 862 F. Supp. 875 (Town of East Hampton). The discussion in that case upon which respondent relies addressed whether a franchising authority could revoke a cable operator's franchise for violating a franchise agreement by eliminating a previously available "tier" of service without obtaining prior City [***37] approval. The Town of East Hampton court held that such a revocation was precluded by the cable act which limited a franchising authority's power to regulate cable services to enforcing valid requirements "for broad categories of video programming or other services." (47 U.S.C.A. § 544\(a\)-\(b\).) The court noted that the cable operator's re-structuring of its tiers did not affect a broad category of programming or services but merely restructured the manner in which its programming was packaged. According to the court, the cable act precludes franchising authorities from enforcing franchise requirements "that usurp the cable operator's power to determine the details and particulars of the provision of cable service." (Town of East Hampton, supra, 862 F. Supp. at p. 886.) Thus, the court held that the franchising authority had "no authority to regulate such a particular as the manner in which Cable service is packaged for the Consumer." (Ibid.)

Town of East Hampton does not advance respondent's argument that this case is preempted by section 544\(f\) for several reasons. First and foremost, Town of East Hampton did not discuss or even refer to section 544\(f\). [***38] Second, Town of East Hampton is distinguishable from the present case because it involved a regulation which expressly and directly regulated cable services. Here, any effect on the cable operator's tiering decisions is only incidental to the enforcement of state antitrust law. Finally, to the extent Town of East Hampton stands for the general proposition that the Cable Acts preclude regulation of the "manner in which Cable service is packaged for the Consumer," that proposition is not offended by our holding in the present case. HN18↑ The anti-tying provisions of the Cartwright Act do not regulate the manner in which cable services are packaged. Rather, they preclude a cable operator from depriving its customer, in a manner which unreasonably restrains trade, of a choice as to what package the customer wishes to purchase.

In any event, respondent has failed to provide authority to support its broad interpretation of section 544\(f\). Since the Cartwright Act provisions relied on by appellants do not seek to regulate the content of cable services, [*557] they are not preempted by section 544\(f\). Thus, none of the grounds asserted [*1533] by respondent support the trial court's [***39] ruling that appellants' state law claims are preempted by the 1984 and 1992 Cable Acts.

IV. DISPOSITION

The judgment is reversed. Costs on appeal are awarded to appellants.

Kline, P. J., and Lambden, J., concurred.

A petition for a rehearing was denied March 21, 1997, and the opinion was modified to read as printed above.

Doe v. Norwest Bank Minn., N.A.

United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

December 11, 1996, Submitted ; February 28, 1997, Filed

No. 96-1763

Reporter

107 F.3d 1297 *; 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 3571 **

John Doe; John Roe, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Appellants, v. Norwest Bank Minnesota, N.A., a national banking association; Voyager Guaranty Insurance Company, Appellees.

Subsequent History: [\[\*\*1\]](#) Rehearing and Suggestion for Rehearing En Banc Denied May 12, 1997, Reported at: 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 11337.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota. CIV 3-94-1434. Honorable Michael Davis.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

---

charges, coverage, borrower, premiums, district court, collateral, unauthorized, impair, national bank, extend credit, allegations, state statute, anti-competitive, endorsements, regulation, argues, tie, insurance business, insurance premium, interest rate, late fee, provisions, repayment, insured, federal statute, McCarran-Ferguson Act, policyholders, compensating, anti-tying, repossess

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > National Bank Act

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > National Banks > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > National Banks > Interest & Usury > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > National Banks > Interest & Usury > Rate & Recovery of Interest

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > National Banks > Usury Litigation

**HN1** Federal Acts, National Bank Act

The National Bank Act permits a national bank to charge interest at the rate allowed by the laws of the State where the bank is located and no more. 12 U.S.C.S. § 85. Section 86 provides a federal cause of action for usury against a national bank that "takes, receives, reserves, or charges a rate of interest greater than is allowed by 12 U.S.C.S. § 85. 12 U.S.C.S. § 86.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The appellate court reviews a grant of summary judgment de novo, affirming only if the record, viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, shows no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > National Bank Act

Insurance Law > Claim, Contract & Practice Issues > Appraisals

Banking Law > ... > National Banks > Interest & Usury > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > National Banks > Interest & Usury > Rate & Recovery of Interest

HN3 Federal Acts, National Bank Act

The term "interest" as used in 12 U.S.C.S. § 85 includes any payment compensating a creditor or prospective creditor for an extension of credit, making available of a line of credit, or any default or breach by a borrower of a condition upon which credit was extended. It includes, among other things, the following fees connected with credit extension or availability: numerical periodic rates, late fees, not sufficient funds fees, overlimit fees, annual fees, cash advance fees, and membership fees. It does not ordinarily include appraisal fees, premiums and commissions attributable to insurance guaranteeing repayment of any extension of credit, finders' fees, fees for document preparation or notarization, or fees incurred to obtain credit reports.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Motions on Appeal

HN4 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In considering a motion to dismiss, the appellate court assumes all facts alleged in the complaint are true, construes the complaint liberally in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, and affirms the dismissal only if it appears beyond a doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts which would entitle the plaintiff to relief.

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > Bank Holding Company Act

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

HN5 Federal Acts, Bank Holding Company Act

See 12 U.S.C.S. § 1972\(1\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Company Act

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > Bank Holding Company Act

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

**HN6** Financial Institutions, Bank Holding Company Act

The plaintiff in an action under 12 U.S.C.S. § 1972\(1\) must show that the bank imposed a tie, that the practice was unusual in the banking industry, that it resulted in an anti-competitive arrangement, and that it benefitted the bank.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Company Act

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > Bank Holding Company Act

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

**HN7** Financial Institutions, Bank Holding Company Act

A plaintiff in a 12 U.S.C.S. § 1972 action need not show that a tie has anti-competitive effects. But a § 1972 plaintiff is required to show an anti-competitive practice, that is, that the practice results in unfair competition or could lessen competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > General Overview

**HN8** Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

The McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012\(b\), provides that no Act of Congress shall be construed to invalidate, impair, or supersede any law enacted by any State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance unless such Act specifically relates to the business of insurance. The McCarran-Ferguson Act bars the application of a federal statute if (1) the statute does not specifically relate to the business of insurance; (2) a state statute has been enacted for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance; and (3) the federal statute would invalidate, impair, or supersede the state statute.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Actions > Actions Against Corporations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Costs > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HNG Shareholder Actions, Actions Against Corporations

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\), expressly grants treble damages, costs, and attorney fees to a victorious plaintiff.

Counsel: Counsel who presented argument on behalf of the appellant was Ronald Goldser of Minneapolis, Minnesota. Appearing on the brief were Barry G. Reed, J. Gordon Rudd, Jr., Howard Specter, Michael P. Malakoff, and Tom Lyons.

Counsel who presented argument on behalf of the appellee was Bradley Clary of Minneapolis, Minnesota. Appearing on the brief for Voyager Guaranty Insurance was ronald H. Groth. Appearing on the brief for Norwest Bank was James L. Volling, Randall E. Kahnke, and Timothy E. Rank.

Judges: Before BOWMAN and HEANEY, Circuit Judges, and SMITH,<sup>1</sup> District Judge.

Opinion by: BOWMAN

Opinion

---

[*1299] BOWMAN, Circuit Judge.

John Doe and John Roe brought a class action against Norwest Bank Minnesota, N.A. (Norwest) and Voyager Guaranty Insurance Company (Voyager), alleging violations of the usury provisions of the National Bank Act, 12 U.S.C. § 85-86 (1994), the anti-tying provisions of the Bank Holding Company Act Amendments of 1970, 12 U.S.C. § 1972 \(1994\), and the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\) \(1994\). Doe settled his claims and was dismissed from the case. The District Court<sup>2</sup> granted judgment in favor of the defendants on the federal claims and declined to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the plaintiffs' state-law claims. Roe appeals, and we affirm.

[**2] I.

Before summarizing the facts, we consider the relevance of Doe's claim to this case. Although Doe settled his claim and was dismissed from the case, Roe argues that "Doe's suitability as a class representative remains in issue." Roe's Br. at 1 n.2. We disagree. This action was filed on November 3, 1994, and Doe agreed to settle on February 28, 1995. When Doe apparently had misgivings, the defendants moved the court to enforce the settlement agreement and dismiss Doe from the case. The District Court did so, dismissing Doe on September 11, 1995, and Doe has not appealed that order. Accordingly, Doe is no longer a party to this action, individually or in his capacity as a class representative.

---

<sup>1</sup> The Honorable Ortrie D. Smith, United States District Judge for the Western District of Missouri, sitting by designation.

<sup>2</sup> The Honorable Michael J. Davis, United States District Judge for the District of Minnesota, adopting two reports and recommendations of The Honorable John M. Mason, United States Magistrate Judge for the District of Minnesota.

Of course, the dismissal of Doe did not affect the claim of Roe or the claims of the unnamed class members in any way. This case remains a putative class action with Roe as representative. We will therefore summarize the facts of Roe's claim. In 1989, Roe purchased a pickup truck from a dealer and entered into an installment contract, granting the dealer a security interest in the pickup truck. The dealer assigned the contract to Norwest. Several provisions of the installment contract [**3] addressed insurance on the pickup truck:

Insurance on property I [Roe] give as security is required. If insurance is required, I may buy it through any insurance agent or company of my choice. . . .

. . .
If you [Norwest] require property insurance, it must cover all risks of physical damage to the property and the risk that the vehicle may be lost. . . . I promise to keep the property insured throughout the term of my loan and to deliver a certificate of insurance to you that shows I have purchased insurance of this kind.

. . .
I also agree that, if I fail to keep any required insurance on the property, you may purchase such insurance for me. I will immediately repay you for any amounts you spend in purchasing that insurance, plus interest at the "annual percentage rate" disclosed on the other side of this contract.

Roe's App. at 135-36. At the same time, Roe signed a document entitled "Agreement to Provide Accidental Physical Damage Insurance," which read:

I understand that to provide protection from serious financial loss, should an accident or loss occur, Norwest . . . requires the collateral securing [**4] my loan to be continuously covered with insurance against the risks of fire, theft, and collision, and that failure to provide such insurance [*1300] gives Bank the right to declare the entire unpaid balance immediately due and payable or alternatively to purchase coverage for its interest and add the premium plus interest to the balance. . . .

I further understand and agree to maintain insurance, as described above, in force during the term of the loan and will furnish Norwest . . . with a loss payable endorsement upon each renewal of said insurance.

Norwest's App. at 69.

In February 1993, Norwest notified Roe that it had not received proof of insurance and warned him that if he failed to provide proof of insurance, Norwest could exercise its right to purchase insurance. Norwest's letter notified Roe that if the bank purchased insurance, the premium of $ 902 (for a year of coverage) would be added to his loan balance. When Roe did not provide proof of insurance, Norwest purchased insurance from Voyager and added $ 902 to Roe's balance. Voyager then sent Roe a certificate of coverage, which indicated that only Norwest's interest in the vehicle was insured.

When that [**5] coverage expired in January 1994, Norwest again warned Roe that it had not received proof of insurance. The same process was repeated, and Norwest purchased insurance and added the premium of $ 549 to Roe's loan balance. In June 1994, Roe apparently proved to Norwest that he had procured his own insurance, and Norwest credited his loan with $ 233, the unearned portion of the $ 549 premium. At about the same time, Norwest added to Roe's loan a charge of $ 11.60 for interest on the insurance charge.

As part of its collateral protection insurance program, Norwest has an umbrella insurance policy with Voyager, pursuant to which Norwest purchases insurance when borrowers fail to provide their own insurance. When Norwest purchases insurance from Voyager with respect to a particular piece of collateral, the insurance covers only Norwest's interest in the collateral. The coverage, which is otherwise similar to ordinary comprehensive and collision coverage, is limited to either the damage to the collateral or the balance of the customer's loan, whichever is smaller in amount. The umbrella policy also contains two endorsements that are significant in this case. The first endorsement, entitled [**6] "Waiver of Repossession Requirement," waives the requirement that Norwest repossess the borrower's vehicle before making a claim. The second, the "Waiver of Salvage Deduction on Non-Repossession Claims," modifies the policy so that the amount payable to Norwest on a claim is not reduced by the salvage value of the borrower's vehicle.<sup>3</sup> Roe's arguments that insurance charges attributable to these endorsements were unauthorized form the basis of this action.

The plaintiffs brought this action in federal district court, asserting [**7] claims under the National Bank Act and the Bank Holding Company Act against Norwest only and a RICO claim against Voyager only. After permitting discovery and dismissing Doe from the case, the District Court granted summary judgment to the defendants on the National Bank Act claim and dismissed the anti-tying and RICO allegations for failure to state a claim on which relief could be granted. See Doe v. Norwest Bank Minn., N.A., 909 F. Supp. 668 (D. Minn. 1995) (order dismissing RICO count). The court dismissed these federal claims with prejudice and declined to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the state-law claims, dismissing them without prejudice. Roe's appeal challenges the dismissal of the federal claims.

II.

We address the National Bank Act claim first. Insofar as it is relevant here, HN1↑ the National Bank Act permits a national bank to charge "interest at the rate allowed by the laws of the State . . . where the bank is [*1301] located . . . and no more." 12 U.S.C. § 85 \(1994\). Section 86 provides a federal cause of action for usury against a national bank that "takes, receives, reserves, or charges a rate of interest greater than is allowed by section 85 of this title."
[\[\*\*8\]](#) 12 U.S.C. § 86 \(1994\); see also M. Nahas & Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, 930 F.2d 608, 612 (8th Cir. 1991) (remedy of § 86 completely preempts state-law usury actions against national banks); Fisher v. First Nat'l Bank, 548 F.2d 255, 257 (8th Cir. 1977) (interest rate a national bank may charge is ultimately a question of federal law).

Roe argues that the "unauthorized" charges attributable to the repossession and salvage waivers, and perhaps the full amount of insurance charges, should be considered interest with respect to his installment loan. Norwest argues that charges for insurance are not interest at all, but even if they were considered interest, the total interest rate on Roe's loan would be below the allowable cap under Minnesota law. The parties' experts assumed that all the charges were interest but used different interpretations of the Federal Reserve's Regulation Z (12 C.F.R. pt. 226 (1996)) to support their conclusions: Roe's expert calculated the interest rate by amortizing the insurance charges over the period of time from when they were imposed to the end of the loan term, while Norwest's expert amortized the insurance charges, like the ordinary interest charges, [**9] over the entire length of the loan. The District Court assumed that all the insurance charges were interest and approved the calculation method of Norwest's expert. Because that method resulted in an interest rate below the maximum allowed by Minnesota law, the court granted summary judgment to Norwest.

HN2↑ We review a grant of summary judgment de novo, affirming only if the record, viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, shows no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See Smith v. City of Des Moines, 99 F.3d 1466, 1468-69 (8th Cir. 1996). We may affirm on any ground supported by the record. See Phillips v. Marist Soc'y, 80 F.3d 274, 275 (8th Cir. 1996).

We need not resolve the parties' thorny dispute about the correct interpretation of Regulation Z, nor need we decide the less-complicated question of the applicable interest-rate cap under Minnesota law. Instead, we conclude that collateral protection insurance premiums charged to a borrower's account do not, as a matter of federal law, constitute "interest" within the meaning of § 85.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Prior to January 1991, Norwest had a different policy with Voyager that contained additional endorsements. This policy is not relevant here. Roe also claims that Norwest imposed an additional charge for calculating his premium based on the outstanding principal balance rather than the sum of principal and interest. However, Norwest introduced undisputed evidence that no such charge was made to Roe's account because the charge applies only to simple-interest accounts, which Roe's was not.

<sup>4</sup> Roe argues that Norwest has raised this issue for the first time on appeal. This assertion is patently untrue. See Report and Recommendation of Dec. 21, 1995, at 4 ("Defendant makes a compelling argument that [the charges] are not interest for any purpose.").

[**10] The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency recently issued an interpretive ruling regarding the meaning of the term "interest" in § 85. That ruling reads:

HN3 [↑] The term "interest" as used in 12 U.S.C. 85 includes any payment compensating a creditor or prospective creditor for an extension of credit, making available of a line of credit, or any default or breach by a borrower of a condition upon which credit was extended. It includes, among other things, the following fees connected with credit extension or availability: numerical periodic rates, late fees, not sufficient funds (NSF) fees, overlimit fees, annual fees, cash advance fees, and membership fees. It does not ordinarily include appraisal fees, premiums and commissions attributable to insurance guaranteeing repayment of any extension of credit, finders' fees, fees for document preparation or notarization, or fees incurred to obtain credit reports.

Interpretive Rulings, 61 Fed. Reg. 4849, 4869 (1996) (to be codified at 12 C.F.R § 7.4001\(a\)) (emphasis added). Although this ruling is a recent one, it has already received the imprimatur of the Supreme Court. In Smiley v. Citibank \(S.D.\), N.A., 135 L. Ed. 2d 25, 116 S. Ct. 1730 [**11] (1996), the Court unanimously held that the word "interest" in § 85 was ambiguous and that the Comptroller's judgment as to its meaning was entitled to deference under Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. National Resources Defense Council, Inc., 467 U.S. 837, 81 L. Ed. 2d 694, 104 S. Ct. 2778 \(1984\). See Smiley, 116 S. Ct. at 1732-33. The Court then concluded that the Comptroller's inclusion of late fees within the meaning of "interest" was a reasonable interpretation of the statute. See id. at 1735. Because the law of South Dakota, Citibank's home state, permitted banks to charge late fees, the determination that late fees are interest for National Bank Act purposes put an end to the state-law claims of Smiley, a California resident. See id. at 1732; Marquette Nat'l Bank v. First of Omaha Serv. Corp., 439 U.S. 299, 313, 58 L. Ed. 2d 534, 99 S. Ct. 540 \(1978\) (national bank may charge interest allowed by its home state even if such interest would not be allowed to bank in borrower's home state).

In the instant case, we are faced with a slightly different issue. If we accept the Comptroller's judgment that "premiums and commissions attributable to insurance guaranteeing repayment of any extension of credit" are not "interest," and we conclude [**12] that the charges involved here are premiums within that definition, Roe's claim must fail because he cannot show that Norwest charged "a rate of interest greater than is allowed by section 85." 12 U.S.C. § 86 \(1994\) (emphasis added).

We have little difficulty concluding that the Comptroller's interpretation of "interest" as excluding insurance premiums is reasonable. The Supreme Court has already determined that "interest," as it is used in § 85, is not an unambiguous term. See Smiley, 116 S. Ct. at 1732-33. Our inquiry, therefore, is whether "the agency's answer is based on a permissible construction of the statute." Chevron, 467 U.S. at 843. Certainly the ordinary definition of "interest" does not include insurance premiums passed along from creditor to debtor. See Black's Law Dictionary 812 (6th ed. 1990) ("Interest is the compensation allowed by law or fixed by the parties for the use or forbearance of borrowed money."); Smiley, 116 S. Ct. at 1735 (interest is "compensation which is paid by the borrower to the lender or by the debtor to the creditor for . . . use [of money]") (quoting 1 J. Bouvier, A Law Dictionary 652 (6th ed. 1856)) (alterations [**13] in Smiley). Indeed, we believe it is quite sensible to conclude that such premiums are not interest but rather additions to the principal of the loan, or perhaps separate extensions of credit entirely. See Kenty v. Bank One, Columbus, N.A., 92 F.3d 384, 393 \(6th Cir. 1996\). And, as the Court stated in Smiley, it is "quite possible and rational to distinguish, as the regulation does," between charges that are specifically assigned to the expenses of the bank in undertaking such activities as processing an application, insuring a loan, or appraising collateral and, on the other hand, charges "that are assessed for simply making the loan, or for the borrower's default." Smiley, 116 S. Ct. at 1734. We conclude that the Comptroller's ruling excluding "premiums and commissions attributable to insurance guaranteeing repayment of any extension of credit" from the definition of "interest" is reasonable.

The question remains whether the charges involved here fit within the Comptroller's definition. Although collateral protection insurance has produced a substantial body of case law in recent years, we have been unable to locate any cases addressing the precise issue presented [**14] here in light of Smiley. Cf. Giddens v. Hometown Fin.

Servs., 938 F. Supp. 801, 806-07 (M.D. Ala. 1996) (suggesting that insurance premiums are not interest; holding that case was improperly removed); Kenney v. Farmers Nat'l Bank, 938 F. Supp. 789, 793-94 (M.D. Ala. 1996) (same). But cf. Moss v. Southtrust Mobile Servs., Inc., No. CV-95-P-1647-W (N.D. Ala. Sept. 22, 1995) (holding, without discussion of Comptroller's ruling, that unauthorized premiums are interest and finding state-law claims completely preempted).<sup>5</sup> [*1303] Roe argues that the charges added to his account are in fact not premiums attributable to insurance, but rather charges "compensating a creditor or prospective creditor for . . . a default or breach by a borrower," which would fit them within the Comptroller's definition of "interest." See 61 Fed. Reg. at 4869. It is true that Norwest charges a borrower for insurance only after the borrower breaches the covenant to maintain insurance. But there is a notable difference between a late fee, which compensates the creditor solely for the effects of the debtor's default, and an insurance charge, which compensates the creditor for the cost of protecting [**15] its security, a cost the debtor is supposed to bear anyway. In addition, the limitation of the coverage in this case to the lesser of the damage to the collateral or the loan balance indicates that the insurance is designed to guarantee the repayment of the loan. Accordingly, we believe that these collateral protection insurance premiums are excluded by the Comptroller's interpretive ruling from the general category of charges compensating a creditor for a default or breach and placed in the category of premiums attributable to insurance guaranteeing the repayment of credit extended.

[**16] Roe also argues that even if the basic insurance coverage is not interest, the allegedly unauthorized aspects of the insurance must be considered interest. We disagree. The charges related to the waiver of repossession and waiver of salvage endorsements are not trivial; Roe's expert calculated that these endorsements accounted for more than thirty percent of the total premium charged to Roe. But Norwest introduced undisputed evidence that these endorsements placed Norwest in exactly the same position in which it would have been if Roe had purchased a standard Minnesota automobile insurance policy and named Norwest as loss payee, as the loan agreement required him to do. In other words, under an ordinary policy in Minnesota, a lender named as loss payee would not have to repossess a wrecked car in order to make a claim, and the amount received by the lender would not be reduced by the salvage value of the car. We therefore see no reason to treat the charges related to the waiver endorsements any differently from the basic insurance charge. Although they may be differentiated for insurance purposes, they are in essence a single package designed to replicate the coverage Roe should have [**17] provided himself.<sup>6</sup>

In sum, unlike late fees, NSF fees, and the like, the insurance charges in this case benefitted both creditor and borrower by making it easier for Roe to repay the loan in case his truck were physically damaged or stolen. (Roe, after all, would remain liable on the note even if the collateral were valueless.) Norwest merely passed along to Roe the exact cost Norwest incurred in procuring insurance that restored it to the same situation in which it would have been had Roe kept his end of the bargain. The charges therefore are "premiums . . . attributable to insurance guaranteeing repayment of [an] [**18] extension of credit," and under the Comptroller's reasonable interpretation of the statute, they are not "interest." We conclude that the events that form the basis of this cause of action do not amount to a violation of the National Bank Act.

<sup>5</sup> The opinions in the Kenty case express different views of the collateral protection insurance in that case. On a motion to dismiss, the district court held that insurance charges that were "unauthorized and unnecessary to protect the collateral" could be considered interest on the loan. See Kenty v. Bank One, Columbus, N.A., 1992 WL 170605, at *4 (S.D. Ohio Apr. 23, 1992). At the summary judgment stage, however, the court concluded that state law imposed no maximum on the allowable interest rate, so that it did not matter whether any portion of the insurance charges was considered interest. See Kenty v. Bank One, Columbus, N.A., 1993 WL 592532, at *5 (S.D. Ohio Oct. 25, 1993). The Sixth Circuit saw Kenty's argument slightly differently, believing Kenty was complaining about the bank's charging interest on the insurance charges. That court concluded that the insurance premiums were themselves loans, and so state law permitted the bank to charge any amount of interest on the premiums. See 92 F.3d at 393. None of these opinions addresses the Comptroller's interpretation of § 85.

<sup>6</sup> At times in his brief and at oral argument, counsel for Roe seemed to be challenging a third endorsement, entitled "Automatic Coverage," which covers collateral retroactively to the date on which the borrower's own insurance lapsed. We see no reason to treat this endorsement any differently from the others, as it also merely replicates the coverage Roe was contractually obligated to provide.

III.

The District Court dismissed Roe's anti-tying allegations for failure to state a claim on which relief could be granted. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). HN4↑ In considering a motion to [\[\*1304\]](#) dismiss, we assume all facts alleged in the complaint are true, construe the complaint liberally in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, and affirm the dismissal only if "it appears beyond a doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts which would entitle the plaintiff to relief." Coleman v. Watt, 40 F.3d 255, 258 \(8th Cir. 1994\). Our review is de novo. See id.

The relevant provisions of HN5↑ the Bank Holding Company Act Amendments of 1970 state as follows:

- (1) A bank shall not in any manner extend credit, lease or sell property of any kind, or furnish any service . . . on the condition or requirement--

(A) that the customer shall obtain some additional credit, property, or service from such bank other than a loan, [\[\*\*19\]](#) discount, deposit, or trust service;

...

(C) that the customer provide some additional credit, property, or service to such bank, other than those related to and usually provided in connection with a loan, discount, deposit, or trust service.

12 U.S.C. § 1972\(1\) \(1994\). HN6↑ The plaintiff in an action under this section must show that the bank imposed a tie, that the practice was unusual in the banking industry, that it resulted in an anti-competitive arrangement, and that it benefitted the bank. See Alpine Elec. Co. v. Union Bank, 979 F.2d 133, 135 \(8th Cir. 1992\).

Roe alleged two potential ties in his complaint: when he purchased insurance through the bank, he was required to accept an automatic extension of credit to pay for the insurance; and when he purchased property damage insurance through the bank, he was also required to purchase additional insurance that was unauthorized and undisclosed. On appeal, Roe emphasizes that he does not suggest that the purchase of insurance through the bank was a condition of the extension of credit for the original loan. See Kenty, 92 F.3d at 395 (where borrower is free to purchase insurance on open market, [\[\*\*20\]](#) insurance is not tied to original loan).

Roe first complains that when he elected to purchase insurance through the bank rather than from an independent agent--a highly debatable characterization of the facts, but one we will entertain for purposes of this motion to dismiss--he found that the only way he was permitted to pay for the insurance was to have it added to his loan balance, where it bore interest at the loan rate. But this contention is belied by the language of the installment agreement itself, which was attached to Roe's complaint and forms a part of the pleadings: "I MAY PREPAY MY OBLIGATIONS UNDER THIS AGREEMENT, IN WHOLE OR IN PART, AT ANY TIME WITHOUT PENALTY." Roe's App. at 135. It is therefore clear that Roe was not required to accept an automatic extension of credit to pay for the insurance; he could have tendered payment to Norwest in the amount of the insurance premium (or in any other amount) at any time. Because Roe's complaint itself demonstrates that this supposed tie did not exist, this allegation does not state a claim on which relief could be granted.

The second alleged tie presents a more substantial question. Roe here argues that when he elected to purchase [\[\*\*21\]](#) property damage coverage through Norwest, he was also required to purchase other unauthorized and undisclosed coverages. Norwest suggests that we adopt the reasoning of the Sixth Circuit, which held on nearly identical allegations in Kenty that because the borrower never agreed to purchase the unauthorized insurance, that purchase could not have been a "condition or requirement" of the purchase of the authorized insurance, as § 1972\(1\) requires. See Kenty, 92 F.3d at 395. In effect, that court held that "a valid breach of contract claim cannot be converted into an anti-tying claim." Id. We are not sure that we agree with the reasoning of the Sixth Circuit, particularly in the context of a motion to dismiss. Fairly read, Roe's complaint alleges that Norwest provides property damage insurance only if borrowers also pay for other, unauthorized insurance coverage. It therefore appears that the purchase of the unauthorized coverage is a "requirement" of the purchase of property damage coverage, for the latter is not available without [*1305] the former. We do not believe that the fact that the unauthorized coverage is undisclosed should affect this portion of the analysis. Roe's complaint [**22] thus alleges a tie and satisfies the first requirement of an anti-tying claim.

We reach the same result as the Sixth Circuit by another route, however, for we believe Roe's complaint does not allege an anti-competitive tie. Unlike a Sherman Act plaintiff, HN7↑ a plaintiff in a § 1972 action need not show that a tie has anti-competitive effects. See, e.g., Palermo v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 894 F.2d 363, 368 (10th Cir. 1990); Davis v. First Nat'l Bank, 868 F.2d 206, 208 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 816, 107 L. Ed. 2d 35, 110 S. Ct. 68 (1989); Parsons Steel, Inc. v. First Ala. Bank, 679 F.2d 242, 245 (11th Cir. 1982); cf. Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 13-16, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984) (Sherman Act tying plaintiff must show that defendant has market power in tying market and that tie forecloses substantial volume of commerce). But a § 1972 plaintiff is required to show an anti-competitive practice, that is, "that the practice results in unfair competition or could lessen competition." Palermo, 894 F.2d at 368 (emphasis added); see also Davis, 868 F.2d at 208; Parsons Steel, 679 F.2d at 246.<sup>7</sup>

[**23] In this case, Roe has not alleged an anti-competitive practice. In the market for property damage insurance (the tying market), it is undisputed that Roe was permitted to purchase from any vendor of his choice. Roe has alleged nothing from which a factfinder could conclude that the tie would have any anti-competitive disruption in the tying market. Nor can there be any anti-competitive result in the tied market, the market for the unauthorized insurance coverage, for the simple reason that Roe did not want to purchase such coverage from any vendor. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 16 ("When a purchaser is 'forced' to buy a product he would not have otherwise bought even from another seller in the tied-product market, there can be no adverse impact on competition because no portion of the market which would otherwise have been available to other sellers has been foreclosed."). When these circumstances are considered together--that is, Roe can buy basic property damage insurance anywhere and does not want to buy other coverage at all--it is clear that Norwest's practice cannot possibly lessen competition. It therefore cannot be considered an anti-competitive practice. See Palermo, [**24] 894 F.2d at 368. The District Court properly dismissed this allegation for failure to state a claim.

IV.

Finally, we consider Roe's RICO allegations. The District Court concluded that Roe failed to state a claim on which relief could be granted because the application of RICO to the alleged actions of Voyager was barred by the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1012\(b\) \(1994\). We agree.

The relevant portion of HN8↑ the McCarran-Ferguson Act provides that "No Act of Congress shall be construed to invalidate, impair, or supersede any law enacted by any State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance . . . unless such Act specifically relates to the business of insurance." 15 U.S.C. § 1012\(b\) \(1994\). The McCarran-Ferguson Act bars the application of a federal statute if (1) the statute does not specifically relate to the business of insurance; (2) a state statute has been enacted for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance; and (3) the federal statute would invalidate, impair, or supersede the state statute. See Murff v. Professional Med.

---

<sup>7</sup> We disagree with trial court decisions from within our Circuit opining that a tie is a per se violation of § 1972. See JST Properties v. First Nat'l Bank, 701 F. Supp. 1443, 1449 (D. Minn. 1988); Sharkey v. Security Bank & Trust Co., 651 F. Supp. 1231, 1232 (D. Minn. 1987).

Ins. Co., 97 F.3d 289, 291 (8th Cir. 1996) (citing United States Dep't of Treasury v. Fabe, 508 U.S. 491, 501, 124 L. Ed. 2d 449, 113 S. Ct. 2202 [**25] (1993)).<sup>8</sup>

[*1306] The parties agree that RICO does not specifically relate to the business of insurance. Nor does Roe seriously dispute Voyager's contention that Minnesota has enacted a comprehensive statutory scheme to regulate the business of insurance. See Minn. Stat. ch. 59A-72C (1996). The only substantial question for our review, therefore, is whether [*26] the application of RICO to the activities of Voyager would invalidate, impair, or supersede Minnesota's insurance laws.

Fairly summarized, Roe's complaint contains two substantive allegations. First, Roe alleges that Voyager contracted to function as Norwest's automobile insurance department, sending notices to borrowers which appeared to be from Norwest and causing borrowers to be charged for unauthorized insurance coverage.<sup>9</sup> [*27] Second, Roe claims that Voyager paid or caused to be paid to Norwest "illegal and unauthorized kickbacks, rebates, and/or commissions" with respect to the borrowers' collateral insurance premiums.<sup>10</sup> Compl. P 57. All of this alleged activity, Roe claims, constitutes a massive pattern of racketeering activity, particularly mail fraud and wire fraud, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) (1994).

Voyager argues that the allegedly fraudulent activities with which it is charged fall squarely within several sections of Minnesota's insurance laws. See Minn. Stat. §§ 72A.08(2) (1996) (prohibiting payment of rebate to insured), 72A.20(1) (1996) (prohibiting misrepresentation of terms of policy issued or to [*28] be issued), 72A.20(12)(1) (1996) (prohibiting misrepresentation of pertinent facts or policy provisions relating to coverages). Minnesota law does not provide a private cause of action for violations of these prohibitions. See Morris v. American Family Mut. Ins. Co., 386 N.W.2d 233, 238 (Minn. 1986). Instead, the Commissioner of Commerce is empowered to investigate violations, file charges, issue orders, and impose fines. See Minn. Stat. §§ 72A.201(1), 72A.21, 72A.08(3) (1996). In certain circumstances, the Commissioner may also obtain injunctive relief against an insurer. See Minn. Stat. § 72A.25(2)-(3) (1996).

HN9 RICO, by contrast, expressly grants treble damages, costs, and attorney fees to a victorious plaintiff. See 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c) (1994). Voyager argues that the application of RICO in this case would impair the operation of Minnesota's administrative remedial system by providing private plaintiffs with a remedy Minnesota does not provide and affording plaintiffs a recovery significantly greater than that which the state has authorized. In particular,

<sup>8</sup> Despite the apparent agreement of the parties to the contrary, the application of the McCarran-Ferguson Act in this case does not require a specific conclusion that the allegedly improper activities of Voyager constituted the "business of insurance." Fabe recognizes that the three-part test of Union Labor Life Ins. Co. v. Pireno, 458 U.S. 119, 129, 73 L. Ed. 2d 647, 102 S. Ct. 3002 (1982), for determining whether a particular practice constitutes the business of insurance is relevant only in cases involving a conflict between state law and federal antitrust law, a conflict which is the subject of a separate provision of the McCarran-Ferguson Act. See Fabe, 508 U.S. at 504-05.

<sup>9</sup> Roe argues that our opinion in First Nat'l Bank v. Taylor, 907 F.2d 775 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 972, 112 L. Ed. 2d 425, 111 S. Ct. 442 (1990), holds that the McCarran-Ferguson Act is inapplicable to a national bank, and that because he alleges that Voyager was acting as the agent of a national bank, the Act cannot apply here. We believe Roe misreads that case, which relies on the conclusion that the bank was specifically authorized by the National Bank Act to undertake the insurance-like activity that was the subject of the case. See Taylor, 907 F.2d at 778-79. In any event, Voyager is an insurance company and is subject to Minnesota's laws regulating insurance companies; that it may have been working on behalf of a bank adds nothing to this analysis.

<sup>10</sup> Evidence in the record on appeal suggests that the actual goings-on were quite different. Norwest contracts with G.D. Van Wagenen Company, which is not a party here, to administer the collateral protection program by verifying whether borrowers have provided proof of insurance and sending notices to borrowers about Norwest's right to purchase insurance to protect its collateral. Van Wagenen is also a Voyager agent and is authorized to place insurance with Voyager when Norwest purchases it. An affiliate of Norwest, Norwest Insurance, Inc., which is also not a party to this suit, serves as the broker for the purchase of the insurance and receives commissions from Voyager on the premiums. Nevertheless, for purposes of this motion to dismiss, we must accept Roe's allegations as true.

Voyager suggests that the possibility of treble damages and attorney fees would eviscerate the administrative [**29] system by diverting any rational aggrieved policyholder from the Commissioner's office to federal court. Consequently, Voyager claims, an insurer that found itself the subject [*1307] of an inquiry by the Commissioner would be unlikely to cooperate in the administrative process for fear of prejudicing its litigation position if a RICO suit should arise later.

The precise degree of impairment of a state statute that is required to trigger the operation of the McCarran-Ferguson Act is not settled. In its only opinion to address the question directly, the Supreme Court concluded that application of the federal securities laws to a merger of insurance companies would not impair the state's laws protecting policyholders. See SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S. 453, 463, 21 L. Ed. 2d 668, 89 S. Ct. 564 \(1969\). The Court noted that "Arizona has not commanded something which the Federal Government seeks to prohibit" but also recognized that the federal interest was directed toward protecting shareholders, while the state statute was directed toward protecting policyholders. See id. The Court concluded, "in these circumstances, we simply cannot see the conflict." Id. In the case at bar, Minnesota has not commanded [**30] anything which RICO would prohibit; in other words, there is no direct conflict between federal and state law. But, in contrast to National Securities, the federal and state statutes at issue here are directed toward the same end: the protection of policyholders and prospective policyholders from fraudulent insurance practices. The issue presented here, therefore, is whether a federal statute that is essentially parallel in substance to a state statute may impair the state statute because of a difference in the availability and the magnitude of the remedies they provide.

Several courts addressing this question have concluded that the McCarran-Ferguson Act is not implicated by federal law that is substantively parallel to state law. See Villafane-Neriz v. FDIC, 75 F.3d 727, 736 \(1st Cir. 1996\) (Federal Deposit Insurance Act); Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co. v. Cisneros, 52 F.3d 1351, 1363 \(6th Cir. 1995\) (Fair Housing Act), cert. denied, 133 L. Ed. 2d 893, 116 S. Ct. 973 (1996); Merchants Home Delivery Serv., Inc. v. Frank B. Hall & Co., 50 F.3d 1486, 1492 (9th Cir.) (RICO), cert. denied, 116 S. Ct. 418, 133 L. Ed. 2d 335 (1995); NAACP v. American Family Mut. Ins. Co., 978 F.2d 287, 295-97 \(7th Cir. 1992\) (Fair Housing Act), cert. denied, 508 U.S. 907, 124 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 2335 (1993); Thacker v. New York Life Ins. Co., 796 F. Supp. 1338, 1342-43 \(E.D. Cal. 1992\) (RICO). Other courts have disagreed, concluding that the intrusion of RICO's substantial damage provisions into a state's insurance regulatory program may so impair the state law as to bar application of RICO. See Kenty, 92 F.3d at 392 (collateral protection insurance case; distinguishing Nationwide); Ambrose v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 891 F. Supp. 1153, 1165-68 \(E.D. Va. 1995\), aff'd, 95 F.3d 41 (4th Cir. 1996) (unpublished per curiam); Everson v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 898 F. Supp. 532, 544 \(N.D. Ohio 1994\); Wexco Inc. v. IMC, Inc., 820 F. Supp. 194, 203-04 \(M.D. Pa. 1993\); LeDuc v. Kentucky Cent. Life Ins. Co., 814 F. Supp. 820, 829 \(N.D. Cal. 1992\); Senich v. Transamerica Premier Ins. Co., 766 F. Supp. 339, 341-42 \(W.D. Pa. 1990\) (collateral protection insurance case).

We find the latter line of cases more persuasive in the RICO context. As one court has noted, "the remedies available under RICO are among the most severe ever enacted in a federal civil statute." Ambrose, 891 F. Supp. at 1166. [*32] The state of Minnesota has determined that its insurance market can best be regulated by the Commissioner's pursuit of fines and injunctive relief. Congress has expressed its intention to leave the regulation of the business of insurance to the states unless a federal statute expressly addresses that subject or the application of a general federal statute would not invalidate, supersede, or impair a state statute. Were the question presented here, we might agree with the Sixth and Seventh Circuits that the federal civil rights statutes do not impair state insurance regulation. Cf. Murff, 97 F.3d at 292 (application of Age Discrimination in Employment Act to insolvent insurance company does not impair state insurance insolvency procedures).<sup>11</sup> But Voyager [*1308] makes a compelling case that the extraordinary remedies of RICO would frustrate, and perhaps even supplant, Minnesota's carefully developed scheme of regulation. We do not read the term "impair" so narrowly as to permit the conclusion that the McCarran-Ferguson Act does not apply in the circumstances presented here. See Webster's Third New International Dictionary 1131 (1981) (defining "impair" as "diminish in quantity, value, [**33] excellence, or strength; do harm to"). The District Court correctly held that Roe's RICO allegations failed to state a claim.

---

<sup>11</sup> Although Murff contains language suggesting that impairment will exist only in the case of a direct conflict between state and federal law, that language is certainly dictum in light of the Court's conclusion that application of the ADEA would have a de minimis effect, at most, on the insolvency proceedings. See Murff, 97 F.3d at 292 (citing Missouri statute giving policyholders priority over claims of employees). In addition, the ADEA, like the federal securities laws, is designed to protect parties other than policyholders. Murff therefore fits well within the framework of National Securities, see 393 U.S. at 463, and does not control here.

V.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

Concur by: HEANEY

Dissent by: HEANEY

Dissent

---

HEANEY, Circuit Judge, concurring and dissenting.

I concur in Sections III and IV of the court's opinion. I disagree, however, with the [**34] conclusions reached in Section II. I believe the district court erred in granting summary judgment on the question of whether the payments that were made were premiums rather than interest payments. I think this question can only be decided after an evidentiary hearing by the district court and that we should remand to the district court to hold such a hearing. If the district court decides after an evidentiary hearing that the payments are interest payments in whole or in part, then it must determine whether the payments were usurious. In reaching this decision, I believe it is clear that the rate of interest should be computed over the life of the loan rather than over the life of the agreement.

---

End of Document

Allergan Sales v. Pharmacia & Upjohn

United States District Court for the Southern District of California

March 5, 1997, Decided ; March 5, 1997, FILED

CASE NO. 96-CV-1430 H(JFS)

Reporter

1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7648 *

ALLERGAN SALES, INC., Formerly Known As Allergan Medical Optics, a California corporation, and STAAR SURGICAL CO., a Delaware corporation, Plaintiff, vs. PHARMACIA & UPJOHN, INC., a Delaware corporation, Formerly Known As Pharmacia & Upjohn Company, Defendant.

Disposition: [*1] Plaintiffs' motion to dismiss Defendant's first, second, and third counterclaims denied, the motion to strike the related affirmative defenses denied, and Plaintiffs' motion to stay the counterclaims and related affirmative defenses denied. Defendant's ex parte application denied in part and granted in part by extending the discovery cut-off date to April 14, 1997.

Core Terms

---

counterclaims, patent, antitrust, alleges, affirmative defense, infringement, motion to dismiss, denies, baseless, scheduling order, leverage

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN1 [blue icon] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) dismissal is proper only in extraordinary cases. Courts should grant Rule 12(b)(6) relief only where a plaintiff's complaint lacks a cognizable legal theory or sufficient facts to support a cognizable legal theory. Courts should not dismiss a complaint unless it appears beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. Courts must construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Accordingly, courts must accept as true all material allegations in the complaint, as well as reasonable inferences to be drawn from them. Conclusory allegations of law and unwarranted inferences, however, are insufficient to defeat a Rule 12(b)(6) motion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

HN2 Sherman Act, Claims

A Handgards claim alleges a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act for infringement actions initiated and conducted in bad faith.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Fraudulent Procurement of Patent

HN3 Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse, Fraud

A Walker Process claim alleges the obtainment of a patent by knowing and willful misrepresentation or fraud and the enforcement of such patent in violation of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Infringing Acts > Intent & Knowledge

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Fraudulent Procurement of Patent

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > Grounds

HN4 Regulated Practices, Intellectual Property

Where an antitrust plaintiff alleges that the defendant's patent infringement suit is attempting to enforce a patent obtained by intentional fraud, the plaintiff sufficiently alleges that the infringement suit is objectively baseless.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

HN5 Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

A patentee may not use a patent's leverage to extend the monopoly of the patent to derive a benefit not attributable to use of the patent's teachings.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

HN6 [+] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Strike

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(f\), the court may strike any insufficient defense.

Counsel: JEFFREY T THOMAS, GIBSON DUNN & CRUTCHER, SAN FRANCISCO, CA, For defendant. HALL MARSTON, MARK REIDEL, DICKSON CARLSON & CAMPILLO, SANTA MONICA, CA, For defendant.

DOUGLAS E OLSON, JOHN M BENASSI, LYON & LYON LLP, LA JOLLA, CA, For plaintiff. FRANK FRISENDA, MARK ESTES, FRISENDA QUINTON & NICHOLSON, LOS ANGELES, CA., For plaintiff.

Judges: MARILYN L. HUFF, JUDGE, UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

Opinion by: MARILYN L. HUFF

Opinion

---

Order Denying Plaintiffs' Motion to Dismiss; Denying Plaintiffs' Motion to Stay (Doc. 121); Granting in Part and Denying in Part Defendant's Ex Parte Application for Modification of Scheduling Order (Doc. 129)

Plaintiffs/Counterdefendants Allergan Sales, Inc. and Staar Surgical Co. move to dismiss Defendant/Counterclaimant's counterclaims and to strike affirmative defenses nos. 7 and 9, or in [*2] the alternative, to stay the counterclaims and related affirmative defenses. Defendant opposes the motion. Having fully considered the papers submitted in the matter, the court denies Plaintiffs' motion to dismiss and denies Plaintiffs' motion to stay.

BACKGROUND

On January 6, 1997, Plaintiffs filed a second amended complaint for patent infringement. Defendant's answer to the first amended complaint and counterclaims filed November 13, 1996 are deemed responsive to the second amended complaint per stipulation and order filed January 6, 1997. Defendant's counterclaim alleges violations of federal antitrust laws, California antitrust laws, CAL.BUS. & PROF. CODE § 16700 et seq., and California unfair competition laws, CAL. BUS. & PROF. CODE § 17200 et seq.. Defendant has also asserted affirmative defenses of patent misuse and enforcement of an invalid patent in the seventh and ninth affirmative defenses. Plaintiffs now move to dismiss Defendant's first, second, and third claims, to dismiss or strike Defendant's seventh and ninth affirmative defenses, or in the alternative, to stay the counterclaims and affirmative defenses.

DISCUSSION

HN1 [+] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure [*3] 12\(b\)\(6\) dismissal is proper only in "extraordinary" cases. United States v. Redwood City, 640 F.2d 963, 966 (9th Cir. 1981). Courts should grant 12(b)(6) relief only where a plaintiff's complaint lacks a "cognizable legal theory" or sufficient facts to support a cognizable legal theory. Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dept., 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990). Courts should not dismiss a complaint "unless it appears beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Moore v. City of Costa Mesa, 886 F.2d 260, 262 (9th Cir. 1989) (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957)), cert. denied, 496 U.S. 906 (1990). Finally, courts must construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Concha v. London, 62 F.3d 1493, 1500 (9th Cir. 1995), cert.

dismissed, 116 S. Ct. 1710 (1996). Accordingly, courts must accept as true all material allegations in the complaint, as well as reasonable inferences to be drawn from them. Holden v. Hagopian, 978 F.2d 1115, 1118 (9th Cir. 1992). Conclusory allegations of law and unwarranted inferences, however, are insufficient to defeat a Rule 12(b)(6) [*4] motion. In Re Syntex Corp. Sec. Litig., 95 F.3d 922, 926 (9th Cir. 1996).

Plaintiffs contend that Defendant's first counterclaim under federal antitrust laws attempts to allege (1) a Handgards <sup>1</sup> claim, (2) a Walker Process claim, <sup>2</sup> and (3) a "tying" claim. They argue that Defendant fails to state a Handgards claim because Plaintiffs are entitled to antitrust immunity under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine and Defendant has failed to establish an exception to such immunity. Defendant argues in response that the claim is not even based on Handgards. (See Opposition, at 14). HN2[<sup>3</sup>] A Handgards claim alleges a violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act for infringement actions initiated and conducted in bad faith. 601 F.2d at 993. Paragraph 32 of the counterclaim alleges that Plaintiffs Staar and Allergan initiated the litigation in bad faith. (Counterclaim, P 32.b(2), c). Although such allegations appear to attempt to state a Handgards claim, Defendant disavows attempting to make such a claim. Therefore, the court denies Plaintiffs' motion to dismiss the Handgards claim on the basis that Defendant has stated that such a claim is not being asserted. [*5]

As to Defendant's Walker Process claim, <sup>3</sup> Plaintiffs contend that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine also applies and that Defendants must satisfy the "objectively baseless" standard as set forth in Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indust., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993), before being permitted to proceed on such a claim. Defendants argue, citing Hydranautics v. Filmtec Corp., 70 F.3d 533 (9th Cir. 1995), that the Ninth Circuit has held that Columbia Pictures does not apply to Walker Process claims.

[*6] In Hydranautics, the court discussed on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss whether an infringement action based on a fraudulently obtained patent is "objectively baseless" under Columbia Pictures. Contrary to Defendant's reading, the court did not hold that Walker Process claims are an exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine or that the "sham" test set forth in Columbia Pictures does not apply to Walker Process claims. Rather, the court noted that the holdings in Columbia Pictures and Liberty Lake <sup>4</sup> left open "the question of whether an infringement action based on a fraudulently obtained patent is 'objectively baseless.'" Hydranautics, 70 F.3d at 538. The court appears to have answered that question in the affirmative. In distinguishing the case from a parallel case in the Federal Circuit, the court noted that the "[defendant's] alleged fraud would render [the defendant's] patent infringement claim objectively baseless." Id. 70 F.3d at 538 n.1. The rationale for holding that such infringement claims are objectively baseless is that the basis for the antitrust immunity, the patent itself, is invalid and a nullity. 70 F.3d at 538. Therefore, HN4[<sup>5</sup>] [*7] where an antitrust plaintiff alleges that the defendant's patent infringement suit is attempting to enforce a patent obtained by intentional fraud, the plaintiff sufficiently alleges that the infringement suit is objectively baseless.

In the present case, Defendant alleges that plaintiffs seek to enforce an invalid patent which it procured through fraud. Taking these allegations as true, as the court must on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the court finds that such allegations are sufficient to allege that Plaintiffs' infringement suit is objectively baseless. The court therefore denies Plaintiffs' motion to dismiss Defendant's Walker Process claim.

Finally, as to Defendant's tying/leverage claim, Plaintiffs argue that Defendant's theory fails to state a "tying" claim, primarily because manufacturers pay a royalty on the very product they intend to manufacture pursuant to the

<sup>1</sup> Handgards, inc. v. Ethicon, Inc., 601 F.2d 986, 995 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1025, 62 L. Ed. 2d 659, 100 S. Ct. 688, 100 S. Ct. 689 (1980).

<sup>2</sup> Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Mach. and Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965).

<sup>3</sup> HN3[<sup>6</sup>] A Walker Process claim alleges the obtainment of a patent by knowing and willful misrepresentation or fraud and the enforcement of such patent in violation of the antitrust laws. Walker Process, 382 U.S. at 177-78, 86 S. Ct. at 350-51.

<sup>4</sup> 12 F.3d 155 (9th Cir. 1993).

patent, and thus, there is no tie to a separate product. Defendant responds that the alleged claim is a leveraging [*8] claim, not a tying claim. Having examined Defendant's claim, the court finds that Defendant has sufficiently alleged a leveraging claim under Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 (1969). Under Zenith Radio, HN5<sup>1</sup>] a patentee may not use a patent's leverage to extend the monopoly of the patent to derive a benefit not attributable to use of the patent's teachings. Id. at 136, 89 S. Ct. 1583.

In the instant case, Defendant's counterclaim alleges that non-rigid IOLs are staple items which have substantial non-infringing uses, and that Plaintiff is attempting to extend the monopoly to sales of IOLs which will be used for non-infringing purposes. Further, Defendant alleges that Plaintiffs have market and economic power and that a significant amount of commerce has been adversely affected. Whether labeled a "tying" claim or a "leverage" claim, the court finds that Defendant has sufficiently alleged an antitrust claim under Zenith Radio.

Plaintiff also argues that Defendant's state law claims in the second and third counterclaims should be dismissed under Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co., 50 Cal. 3d 1118, 270 Cal. Rptr. 1, 791 P.2d 587 (1990). In Pacific [*9] Gas, the court noted that the only common law tort claim for instigating or bringing a lawsuit is an action for malicious prosecution, and that such an action requires a legal termination of the underlying action in plaintiff's favor. Id. at 1131. Relying upon, inter alia, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the court extended such a requirement to a claim for intentional interference with contract or prospective economic advantage. Id. at 1137.

Pacific Gas, however, did not address whether statutory claims under California's antitrust Cartwright Act and the Unfair Competition Act may only be brought after resolution in the claimant's favor in the underlying action. Moreover, Defendant alleges that the state law claims arise from the same conduct underlying the federal antitrust claim. As noted above, Defendant's Walker Process claim is not defeated by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine and the Columbia Pictures "objectively baseless" requirement. This indicates that Pacific Gas, and its reliance on Noerr-Pennington, is distinguishable from the facts and claims of the instant action. Therefore, having considered the arguments presented, the court denies [*10] the motion to dismiss Defendant's state law counterclaims.

Having fully considered the parties' arguments, the court denies Plaintiffs' motion to dismiss Defendant's first, second, and third counterclaims. Plaintiffs also seek to strike Defendant's related seventh and ninth affirmative defenses. HN6<sup>1</sup>] Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(f), the court may strike any insufficient defense. Plaintiffs contend the related defenses should be stricken for the same reasons that the federal antitrust claims should be dismissed. The court has denied Plaintiff's motion to dismiss, and therefore also denies the motion to strike the affirmative defenses.

In the alternative, Plaintiffs have argued that in the interests of fairness and judicial economy, that if not dismissed, the counterclaims and related defenses should be stayed pending resolution of the infringement action. Having duly considered the arguments raised, the court denies Plaintiffs' request to stay the counterclaims and related defenses without prejudice. The court notes, however, that the antitrust claims involve significant questions separate and apart from those raised in the infringement action, and the court explicitly reserves [*11] the right at the final pretrial conference to sever, stay, bifurcate, or otherwise set the order of proof of the antitrust counterclaims and related affirmative defenses.

Finally, the court is in receipt of Defendant's ex parte application for modification of the scheduling order. Defendant seeks to continue all remaining pretrial dates and the trial date by six months. Plaintiffs oppose the motion. Defendants state that it anticipates conducting approximately 50 depositions, filing various motions, and preparing and deposing approximately 20 experts. The complaint, however, was filed in August 1996 and the original scheduling order set forth in October 1996. Plaintiffs note that Defendant did not take any depositions until February 15, 1997, and as of the date this request for continuance was made, was the only deposition taken. The court finds that good cause for modification of the scheduling order has not been shown, and therefore, the court generally denies Defendant's request without prejudice. At a time closer to the current trial date, Defendant may renew its request for continuance of the scheduling order upon a showing of good cause. However, the court will grant in [*12] part Defendant's request by extending the discovery cut-off date from April 7, 1997 to April 14, 1997. All other dates shall remain the same.

CONCLUSION

Having fully considered the papers submitted in the matter and the relevant authorities, the court denies Plaintiffs' motion to dismiss Defendant's first, second, and third counterclaims, denies the motion to strike the related affirmative defenses, and denies Plaintiffs' motion to stay the counterclaims and related affirmative defenses. The court also denies in part Defendant's ex parte application and grants in part by extending the discovery cut-off date to April 14, 1997.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: 3/5/97

MARILYN L. HUFF, JUDGE

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

---

End of Document

Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co.

United States District Court for the District of Nevada

March 5, 1997, Decided ; March 5, 1997, RECEIVED AND FILED

CV-S-90-76-PMP (RLH)

Reporter

957 F. Supp. 1184 *; 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2749 **; 1998-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,162

REBEL OIL COMPANY, INC., a Nevada corporation, and AUTO FLITE OIL COMPANY, INC., a Nevada corporation, Plaintiffs, v. ATLANTIC RICHFIELD COMPANY, a Pennsylvania corporation, Defendant.

Disposition: [**1] Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment ( # 617) GRANTED and Judgment entered in favor of Defendant ARCO and against Plaintiff Rebel. Pretrial Conference currently scheduled for March 14, 1997 and trial date previously scheduled for March 24, 1997 vacated.

Core Terms

---

prices, predatory, gasoline, costs, summary judgment, measurement, market power, price discrimination, damages, retail, recoupment, marginal cost, antitrust, competitors, sales, margins, losses, oil, market price, wholesale, markets, anticompetitive conduct, summary judgment motion, opportunity cost, crude oil, stations, variable, Appeals, anti trust law, Clayton Act

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

HN1 [ ] Remedies, Damages

957 F. Supp. 1184, *1184L 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2749, **1

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, allows private parties to sue for damages for violations of antitrust laws.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN2 Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56, summary judgment is proper if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Directed Verdicts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN3 Judgment as Matter of Law, Directed Verdicts

The party moving for summary judgment has the initial burden of showing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. A material issue of fact is one that affects the outcome of the litigation and requires a trial to resolve the differing versions of the truth. Once the movant's burden is met by presenting evidence which, if uncontested, would entitle the movant to a directed verdict at trial, the burden then shifts to the respondent to set forth specific facts demonstrating that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Affidavits

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

957 F. Supp. 1184, *1184L 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2749, **1

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Hearings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Hearings > Oral Arguments

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

HN4 Supporting Materials, Affidavits

If the party seeking summary judgment meets its burden, then summary judgment will be granted unless there is significant probative evidence tending to support the opponent's legal theory. Parties seeking to defeat summary judgment cannot stand on their pleadings once the movant has submitted affidavits or other similar materials. Affidavits that do not affirmatively demonstrate personal knowledge are insufficient. Likewise, legal memoranda and oral argument are not evidence and do not create issues of fact capable of defeating an otherwise valid motion for summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN5 Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

In opposing a motion for summary judgment in an antitrust case, the nonmoving party must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. While summary judgment has historically been disfavored in antitrust cases, this may no longer be so. All facts and inferences drawn must be viewed in the light most favorable to the responding party when determining whether a genuine issue of material fact exists for summary judgment purposes. After drawing inferences favorable to the respondent, summary judgment will be granted only if all reasonable inferences defeat the respondent's claims.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN6 Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

957 F. Supp. 1184, *1184L 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2749, **1

Summary judgment is appropriate if a party fails to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of the case on which it would bear the burden of proof at trial. Failure of proof as to such an element renders all other facts immaterial. Summary judgment procedure is properly regarded not as a disfavored procedural shortcut, but rather as an integral part of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure as a whole, which are designed to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every action.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Law of the Case

HN7 Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

The law of the case doctrine provides that an appellate court's decision of legal issues must be followed in all subsequent proceedings either in the same case in the trial court or on a later appeal. The only exception to the law of the case doctrine is when evidence in a subsequent trial is substantially different, controlling authority has made a contrary decision of law that applies to the issues previously decided, or the decision was clearly erroneous and would work a manifest injustice.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Law of the Case

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

HN8 Preclusion of Judgments, Law of the Case

The law of the case doctrine addresses legal issues decided by a court, not observations, commentary, or mere dicta touching upon issues not formally before the court. Any issue not expressly or impliedly dealt with on appeal is open for the trial court's consideration on remand. It is critical to determine what issues were actually decided in order to define what is the "law" of the case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Law of the Case

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > Primary Line Injuries

HN9 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

To hold a defendant liable for charging below-cost prices, a primary-line plaintiff must show that the predator stands some chance of recouping his losses. [Brook Group, 509 U.S. at 224. Under the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, the standard is a "reasonable prospect" of recoupment. Id. This requires the plaintiff to show that the predator has market power, or that he has some reasonable prospect of obtaining it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

957 F. Supp. 1184, *1184L 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2749, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN10 [  ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

A plaintiff in a price discrimination case must show a causal connection between the price discrimination and the injury suffered. A plaintiff need not rule out all possible alternative sources of injury, but must show that the anticompetitive conduct was a material cause of its injury. The evidence linking the anticompetitive conduct must be more precise than the evidence establishing the extent to which a party is damaged. Once this is established, antitrust plaintiffs are excused from an unduly rigorous standard of proving antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN11 [  ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A plaintiff alleging primary-line discrimination must prove antitrust injury in the same manner that a Sherman Act plaintiff does, by showing that his injury flows from those aspects or effects of the conduct that are harmful to consumer welfare.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN12 [  ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A primary line price discrimination claim exists when the price differential is between geographical markets, as opposed to price discrimination between two purchasers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN13 [  ] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

When calculating lost profits, a plaintiff must provide a sufficient evidentiary base from which damages can be calculated. In antitrust cases, as long as the fact of damage is certain, uncertainty as to the extent of that damage is not fatal to a plaintiff's case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14 [  ] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

In order to state a cause of action under section 2 of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, a plaintiff bears essentially the same substantive burden as a plaintiff under the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

**HN15** Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

A failure to show price is below average variable or marginal cost is usually fatal to a predatory pricing claim. Cost based methods involve determining numerous costs of the seller who is accused of predatory pricing. Whether prices are predatory depends not on their effectiveness in minimizing losses, but on their tendency to eliminate rivals and create a market structure enabling the seller to recoup his losses.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

**HN16** Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

If the defendant's prices were below average total cost but above average variable cost, the plaintiff bears the burden of showing defendant's pricing was predatory. If, however, the plaintiff proves that the defendant's prices were below average variable cost, the plaintiff has established a prima facie case of predatory pricing and the burden shifts to the defendant to prove that the prices were justified without regard to any anticipated destructive effect they might have on competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

**HN17** Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Marginal cost is the cost a firm incurs in the production of one additional unit of output. Average variable cost measures costs which vary with output, and is a generally accepted substitute for marginal cost in antitrust cases. Average total cost (ATC) is an average of variable costs and fixed costs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

**HN18** Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Predatory pricing schemes are rarely tried, and even more rarely successful, since the predator must make a substantial investment with no assurance that it will pay off. A significant purpose of antitrust laws is to foster competition, and cutting prices to increase market share is the very essence of competition. Mistaken inferences in predatory pricing cases are therefore especially costly, since they chill the very conduct the laws are intended to protect. Competitors are not protected from a loss in profits due to a decision by another firm to cut prices in order to increase market share. It is in the interest of competition to permit dominant firms to engage in price competition. Accordingly, an objective cost analysis is the crucial component in a prima facie case of predatory pricing. This requirement may make it extremely difficult for plaintiffs to prove predatory pricing in antitrust cases, but that difficulty, however, reflects the economic reality that predatory pricing schemes are rarely tried, more rarely successful.

957 F. Supp. 1184, *1184L 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2749, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

**HN19** [down] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Opportunity costs are the benefits a firm foregoes by choosing one course of action over another. The opportunity costs of a decision are not one of the costs of implementing a particular business decision. It is improper as a matter of law to use opportunity costs to show below cost pricing. Opportunity costs are not reflected in a profit and loss statement, and allowing opportunity costs as a method of cost measure in predatory pricing cases would impermissibly restrict the decision making power of businesses.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Judgment Notwithstanding Verdict

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

**HN20** [down] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

To show below costs sales by a parent corporation and a subsidiary, the costs of both parent and subsidiary must be proved.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

**HN21** [down] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Operating at a substantially reduced profit margin is not pricing in a predatory matter, rather it was simply pricing in a competitive manner. In order to meet the requirements of predatory pricing, the plaintiff must present some evidence that the defendant priced below its costs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Clear & Convincing Proof

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

**HN22** [down] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Under Ninth Circuit authority, a plaintiff in a price discrimination case can also state a claim by showing clear and convincing evidence of predatory intent.

Counsel: For plaintiffs: William H. Bode, John M. Mason, Robert A. Jaffee, James M. Ludwig, Laura D. Seidman, William H. Bode & Associates, Washington, D.C. Donald J. Campbell, John D. O'Brien, Las Vegas, NV.

For defendant: Donald C. Smaltz, Leighton M. Anderson, Theodore Spanos, Smaltz & Anderson, Los Angeles, CA. Thomas F. Kummer, Kummer, Kaempfer, Bonner & Renshaw, Las Vegas, NV.

Judges: PHILIP M. PRO, United States District Judge

Opinion by: PHILIP M. PRO

Opinion

---

[*1192] ORDER

Presently before the Court is Defendant Atlantic Richfield Company's ("ARCO") Motion for Summary Judgment (# 617) filed on November 18, 1996.<sup>1</sup> Plaintiffs Rebel Oil Company, Inc., and Auto Flite Oil Company, Inc., (collectively "Rebel") filed an Opposition Brief (# 631) on December 13, 1996. ARCO filed a Reply Brief (# 636) on December 30, 1996.

[**2] I. Factual Background<sup>2</sup>

The basic structure of the gasoline market in Las Vegas flows from the fact that gasoline is first produced from crude oil in Los Angeles refineries. Wholesale marketers then transport gasoline to Las Vegas storage terminals over the Cal-Nev Pipeline. Wholesale marketers sell the gasoline to retailers, who then sell the gasoline to consumers.

Rebel is a retail marketer of gasoline in Las Vegas that sells gasoline on a self-serve, cash-only basis. Rebel operates retail stations under various gasoline brand names. Rebel is also a wholesaler, shipping gasoline over the Cal-Nev pipeline for sale in the retail markets in Las Vegas. ARCO is a major driller and refiner of crude oil in Los Angeles, as well as a retail and <sup>3</sup> wholesale marketer of gasoline in Las Vegas. ARCO supplies gasoline to retail stations in Las Vegas bearing the ARCO brand name.

Rebel asserts that between 1985 and 1989, ARCO executed a pricing policy in Las Vegas of charging predatory prices in an attempt to increase its market share and eventually monopolize the Las Vegas gasoline market. Rebel contends that ARCO's pricing scheme drove competitors out of the Las Vegas market, and that its own share of self-serve, cash-only gasoline sales dropped as a result.

[*1193] According to Rebel, once ARCO drove competitors from the market, it engaged in price gouging in order to recoup the losses from its predatory practices. It supports this allegation by alleging that ARCO's Las Vegas prices were higher than its Los Angeles prices. Rebel alleges that Las Vegas marketers had been disciplined by ARCO's behavior, and that they refused to challenge ARCO's supra competitive prices. Rebel contends that today the Las Vegas market is a disciplined oligopoly in which each oligopolist shares supra competitive profits.

II. Procedural History

---

<sup>1</sup> The Court has also ruled on several motions in limine to exclude expert testimony. The expert testimony at issue in those motions is only relied upon by this Court in deciding ARCO's Summary Judgment Motion to the extent that testimony was deemed admissible in this Court's previous rulings.

<sup>2</sup> This factual background is a condensed version of the extensive background given in Rebel Oil Co. Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., ("Rebel I") 51 F.3d 1421 \(9th Cir.\), cert. denied, U.S. , 116 S. Ct. 515, 133 L. Ed. 2d 424 \(1995\).

In January of 1990, Rebel filed an antitrust suit against ARCO under HN1 [↑] Section 4 of the Clayton Act, which [**4] allows private parties to sue for damages for violations of antitrust laws. Rebel sought relief under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, and under section 2 of the Clayton Act (as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act). This Court limited discovery to the issues of antitrust injury and whether ARCO had sufficient market power to charge prices above competitive levels. Rebel Oil Co. Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1432 \(9th Cir. 1995\), cert. denied, U.S. ___, 116 S. Ct. 515, 133 L. Ed. 2d 424 (1995). ("Rebel I"). This Court held that Rebel failed to put forth sufficient evidence of market power to support a jury verdict, and therefore failed to sufficiently prove antitrust injury, which is a necessary element of an antitrust claim.

Rebel appealed, and the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals analyzed the issue of market power separately as to each of Rebel's three antitrust claims. Id. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld this Court's grant of summary judgment in favor of ARCO on the Sherman Act attempted monopolization claims. Id. at 1443. The court reversed as to the Clayton Act claim for predatory pricing. The Ninth Circuit held [**5] that a lesser showing of market power was required for a claim of price discrimination, and that Rebel's showing of market power was enough to create a material issue of fact as to this claim. Id. at 1448. The court therefore reversed and remanded as to the price discrimination claim only.

III. Standard for Summary Judgment

HN2 [↑] Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56, summary judgment is proper "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56.

HN3 [↑] The party moving for summary judgment has the initial burden of showing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. See Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142, 90 S. Ct. 1598 \(1970\); Zoslaw v. MCA Distrib. Corp., 693 F.2d 870, 883 \(9th Cir. 1982\), cert. denied, 460 U.S. 1085, 76 L. Ed. 2d 349, 103 S. Ct. 1777 (1983). A material issue of fact is one that affects the outcome of the litigation and requires a trial to resolve the differing versions of the truth. [**6] See Admiralty Fund v. Hugh Johnson & Co., 677 F.2d 1301, 1305-06 \(9th Cir. 1982\). Once the movant's burden is met by presenting evidence which, if uncontested, would entitle the movant to a directed verdict at trial, the burden then shifts to the respondent to set forth specific facts demonstrating that there is a genuine issue for trial. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 250, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\).

HN4 [↑] If the party seeking summary judgment meets its burden, then summary judgment will be granted unless there is significant probative evidence tending to support the opponent's legal theory. First Nat'l Bank v. Cities Serv. Co., 391 U.S. 253, 290, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569, 88 S. Ct. 1575, \(1968\), reh'g denied, 393 U.S. 901, 21 L. Ed. 2d 188, 89 S. Ct. 63 (1968); Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n v. Savage, 611 F.2d 270 \(9th Cir. 1979\). Parties seeking to defeat summary judgment cannot stand on their pleadings once the movant has submitted affidavits or other similar materials. Affidavits that do not affirmatively demonstrate personal knowledge are insufficient. British Airways Bd. v. Boeing Co., 585 F.2d 946, 952 \(9th Cir. 1978\), cert. [**7] denied, 440 U.S. 981, 60 L. Ed. 2d 241, 99 S. Ct. 1790 (1979), reh'g denied, 441 U.S. 968, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1074, 99 S. Ct. 2420 (1979). Likewise, "legal memoranda and oral [*1194] argument are not evidence and do not create issues of fact capable of defeating an otherwise valid motion for summary judgment." Id.

HN5 [↑] In opposing a motion for summary judgment in an antitrust case, the nonmoving party must "do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\). In Sicor Ltd. V. Cetus Corp., 51 F.3d 848, 853 \(9th Cir. 1995\), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 116 S. Ct. 170, 133 L. Ed. 2d 111 (1995), the Ninth Circuit noted that while summary judgment has historically been disfavored in antitrust cases, this may no longer be so given the Matsushita case.<sup>3</sup> Id. All facts and inferences drawn must be viewed in the light most favorable to the responding party when determining whether a genuine issue of material fact exists for summary judgment purposes. Poller v. CBS, Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. [**8] 486 (1962). After drawing inferences favorable to the respondent, summary judgment will be granted only if all reasonable inferences defeat the respondent's claims. Admiralty Fund v. Tabor, 677 F.2d 1297, 1298 (9th Cir. 1982).

HN6[↑] Summary judgment is appropriate if a party fails to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of the case on which it would bear the burden of proof at trial. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322. Failure of proof as to such an element renders all other facts immaterial. Id. at 323. The [*9] Matsushita, Liberty Lobby, and Celotex cases cited above establish that "summary judgment procedure is properly regarded not as a disfavored procedural shortcut, but rather as an integral part of the Federal Rules as a whole, which are designed 'to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every action.'" Celotex, 477 U.S. at 327 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 1).

IV. Law of the Case

Rebel cites the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal's decision in Rebel I as law of the case, arguing that it prohibits this Court from granting ARCO's current motion for summary judgment. HNT[↑] The law of the case doctrine provides that an appellate court's decision of legal issues must be followed in all subsequent proceedings either in the same case in the trial court or on a later appeal. Vucinich v. Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis, Inc., 803 F.2d 454, 459 (9th Cir. 1986). The only exception to the law of the case doctrine is when evidence in a subsequent trial is substantially different, controlling authority has made a contrary decision of law that applies to the issues previously decided, or the decision was clearly erroneous and would work a manifest injustice. [*10] Id. The law of the case encompasses both a court's explicit decisions, and those issues decided by necessary implication. Eichman v. Fotomat Corp., 880 F.2d 149, 157 (9th Cir. 1989).

Rebel argues that ARCO's entire motion for summary judgment must be denied based on the Rebel I decision. In its Opposition Brief (# 631), Rebel states that the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal's decision held that Rebel had adduced sufficient evidence to preclude summary judgment on Rebel's price discrimination claim. (Rebel Oppo. at 15). Therefore, Rebel argues that ARCO's motion for summary judgment is "unsupportable" under controlling law of the case doctrine.

Rebel's interpretation of Rebel I is an overstatement of both the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals' holding and the law of the case doctrine.<sup>4</sup> HN8[↑] The law of the case doctrine [*1195] addresses legal issues decided by a court, not "observations, commentary, or mere dicta touching upon issues not formally before the Court." Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc., 680 F.2d 527, 533 (7th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1226, 75 L. Ed. 2d 467, 103 S. Ct. 1233 (1983). Any issue not expressly or impliedly dealt with on appeal is open for the [*11] trial court's consideration on remand. Beltran v. Myers, 701 F.2d 91, 93, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1134 (1983). As the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals found in Gertz, "It is critical to determine what issues were actually decided in order to define what is the 'law' of the case." 680 F.2d at 533. Thus, the only law of the case in the present case is the issues that were decided by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in Rebel I.

<sup>3</sup> ARCO alleges that Matsushita creates a new summary judgment standard for antitrust plaintiffs, one in which if circumstantial evidence is as consistent with competition as with conspiracy, plaintiffs must come forth with additional evidence. However, Matsushita addressed a Sherman Act § 1 conspiracy, not a Robinson-Patman Act case. Therefore, this Court analyzes Rebel's claim under the traditional summary judgment standard in light of the principles of the Matsushita decision.

<sup>4</sup> Rebel's misinterpretation of the Ninth Circuit's holding in Rebel I is illustrated by Rebel's argument that the Ninth Circuit found that "Rebel's evidence is sufficient . . . to raise a disputed question of material fact" precluding summary judgment. What the Ninth Circuit in fact found was that "Rebel's evidence is sufficient . . . to raise a disputed question of material fact as to whether ARCO achieved sufficient market power to enforce supra competitive oligopoly pricing." (emphasis added).

In Rebel I, the court of appeals reviewed this Court's [**12] determination that Rebel failed to put forth sufficient evidence of market power to support a jury verdict on its claims under the Sherman Act sections 1 and 2, and Clayton Act section 2 (as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act). Addressing the Sherman Act claims, the Ninth Circuit held that since Rebel failed to sufficiently prove ARCO's ability to increase prices above competitive levels and sustain them for an extended period, there was no proof ARCO's alleged actions threatened consumer welfare, and therefore Rebel failed to sufficiently prove antitrust injury. Rebel I, 51 F.3d at 1434. The issues of market power and antitrust injury were the only issues decided by this Court in ARCO's summary judgment motion, and they were the only issues before the Ninth Circuit on appeal.<sup>5</sup>

[**13] Certain other findings were necessary implications to the Ninth Circuit's holding that market power did not exist for Rebel's Sherman Act claims. The Ninth Circuit held that since Rebel attempted to prove its case through circumstantial evidence, a showing of market power would be met by proving three separate elements. First, Rebel must define the relevant market. In Rebel I, the Ninth Circuit found that the relevant market was all retail sales of gasoline in Las Vegas. 51 F.3d at 1437.<sup>6</sup> Secondly, a plaintiff must show that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market. The Ninth Circuit found that Rebel's evidence that ARCO owned 44 percent of the market was sufficient to meet this burden. Id. at 1438.

[**14] Finally, the court held that a plaintiff must show significant barriers to entry and that existing competitors lack capacity to increase output in the short run. The Ninth Circuit found that Rebel's evidence on barriers to entry was sufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact, but that there was no genuine issue as to ARCO's competitors ability to increase output if ARCO increased prices. Because ARCO's competitors had the excess capacity to increase output if ARCO raised its prices, ARCO did not have the requisite market power to sustain its Sherman Act claims. However, since the Clayton Act required a lesser showing of market power, Rebel's evidence was sufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact on this claim, and the court remanded as to this issue.

V. ARCO's Motion for Summary Judgment

Three different elements of a price discrimination claim are at issue in ARCO's Motion for Summary Judgment: recoupment, damages, and below cost pricing. Rebel must provide evidence, which when analyzed in the light most favorable to Rebel, [*1196] creates a material issue of fact on each issue. The first two elements, recoupment and damages, are determined by the Rebel [**15] I decision and the law of the case doctrine. The third element, below cost pricing, is not.<sup>7</sup> As Rebel has failed to adequately allege below cost pricing or provide evidence of such pricing, summary judgment in favor of ARCO is appropriate.

A. Recoupment

In Rebel I, the Ninth Circuit held:

---

<sup>5</sup> In fact, in Rebel I, this Court limited discovery solely to the issue of whether ARCO had sufficient market power to charge prices above competitive levels. Rebel I, 51 F.3d at 1232. No discovery was conducted on predatory pricing, intent and collusion. Id.

<sup>6</sup> In Rebel I, the court noted the relationship between the wholesale and retail markets in Rebel's claim. The court found that where sufficient retail outlets exist, a defendant must control output at the wholesale level to pose any real threat of monopolizing the retail market. The court stated, "In essence, Rebel must show that ARCO had monopoly power, or was dangerously close to achieving it, at the wholesale supply level." 51 F.3d at 1442. The court then went on to find that Rebel had sufficient market power to sustain its price discrimination claim. Id. at 1448.

<sup>7</sup> Below cost pricing was not an issue before the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in Rebel I, and no substantial discovery on ARCO's costs had taken place at the time of the Ninth Circuit's ruling. Upon remand, extensive discovery has occurred, and substantial new evidence concerning costs is before this Court. Therefore, even if Rebel I was law of the case as to below cost pricing, an exception to law of the case doctrine applies.

HN9 To hold a defendant liable for charging below-cost prices, a primary-line plaintiff must show that the predator stands some chance of recouping his losses. Brook Group, 509 U.S. at 224. Under the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, the standard is \*\*16 a "reasonable prospect" of recoupment. Id. This requires the plaintiff to show that the predator has market power, or that he has some reasonable prospect of obtaining it.

Id. at 1445. The Ninth Circuit, after finding that a lesser showing of market power was necessary for Rebel's price discrimination claim, found that Rebel established a disputed issue of material fact as to ARCO's market power or reasonable prospect of obtaining market power. Id. at 1447. The court noted that Rebel had produced data showing that during the recoupment period, ARCO's retail gas prices were higher in Las Vegas than in Los Angeles, when adjusted for transportation costs. Rebel further produced evidence showing that ARCO's market share increased at the time it was charging allegedly supracompetitive prices. The court found that Rebel had produced evidence of significant barriers to entry in the Las Vegas retail gasoline market. The court stated that this showing was crucial, since if entry into the market easy, high profit levels in the market would bring new competitors into the market, undercutting ARCO's ability to recoup its predatory losses. Id. at 1447.

The Ninth Circuit \*\*17 Court of Appeals concluded that Rebel had produced sufficient evidence to create a disputed issue of fact as to whether ARCO had sufficient market power to maintain oligopoly pricing. Since a claim for price discrimination under the Clayton Act requires a showing of a chance of recoupment, Rebel's showing of market power was sufficient to meet this burden. Therefore, the court upheld Rebel's cause of action for price discrimination. Id. at 1447. The court went on to note that it was expressing no opinion on the ultimate merits of Rebel's claim. Id. at 1448. While Rebel might not be able to prove at trial that ARCO had a reasonable chance of recoupment, summary judgment requires only a genuine issue of material fact, and Rebel met this burden. In evaluating ARCO's current motion for summary judgment, this Court is bound by the Ninth Circuit's determination that a genuine issue of material fact as to ARCO's ability to recoup any such losses.

B. Rebel's Damages

ARCO contends that it should be awarded summary judgment on the issue of Rebel's damages for two primary reasons: 1) Rebel has failed to prove a causal connection between ARCO's alleged wrongful acts and a loss \*\*18 of anticipated revenue, and 2) Rebel either cannot show damages at all, or it has improperly measured damages.

1. Causal Connection

HN10 A plaintiff in a price discrimination case must show a causal connection between the price discrimination and the injury suffered. Texaco Inc. v. Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. 543, 573, 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, 110 S. Ct. 2535 \(1990\). Rebel need not rule out all possible alternative sources of injury, but must show that the anticompetitive conduct was a material cause of its injury. Dolphin Tours Inc. v. Pacifico Creative Service Inc., 773 F.2d 1506, 1509 \(1985\). The evidence linking the anticompetitive conduct \*1197 must be more precise than the evidence establishing the extent to which a party is damaged. Id. Once this is established, antitrust plaintiffs are excused from an unduly rigorous standard of proving antitrust injury. Texaco Inc. v. Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. at 573.

In Rebel I, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals held that "HN11" a plaintiff alleging primary-line discrimination<sup>8</sup> must prove antitrust injury in the same manner that a Sherman Act plaintiff does -- by showing that his injury flows from those aspects or effects of the conduct that are \*\*19 harmful to consumer welfare." 51 F.3d at 1445. In

---

<sup>8</sup> HN12 A primary line price discrimination claim exists when the price differential is between geographical markets, as opposed to price discrimination between two purchasers. Rebel I, 51 F.3d at 1445.

Rebel I, the court found explicitly that "Rebel may be able to demonstrate antitrust injury on this claim." Id. at 1448. Therefore, since the court found that antitrust injury was sufficiently shown to withstand summary judgment, the court by implication found that Rebel's injury had a sufficient nexus to the alleged anticompetitive conduct. This Court is therefore bound by law of the case to sustain Rebel's claim as to the causal connection between its injury and ARCO's alleged anticompetitive conduct.

2. Measurement of Damages

[HN13] When calculating lost profits, a plaintiff must provide a sufficient evidentiary base from which damages can be calculated. See William Inglis & Sons v. Continental Baking, ("Inglis II") 942 F.2d 1332, 1340 (9th Cir. 1991). In antitrust cases, as long as the fact of damage is certain, uncertainty as to the extent of that damage is not fatal to a plaintiff's case. See Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U.S. 555, 75 L. Ed. 544, 51 S. Ct. 248 (1931). In light of this rule, it is not fatal to Rebel's claim for damages that Rebel's expert Clifford Beadle ("Beadle") uses hypothetical markets, and assumes retail margins calculated from prior sales would continue. Hypothetical markets are often the only way to prove damages in antitrust cases. In Dolphin Tours, the court approved establishing lost profits by projecting the market share the plaintiff would have had in the absence of anticompetitive conduct. 773 F.2d at 1511. There is no evidence that Rebel's estimates are so far from prior margins or that the time period from which they are derived is so different that the estimates are unduly speculative.<sup>9</sup> A question of fact as to these issues remains.

[**21] ARCO also argues that Rebel has had a steady growth in profit margins throughout the alleged predation period. Assuming this is true, it is not enough to warrant summary judgment. Even assuming Rebel had high profits during the predation period, if Rebel would have had astronomical profits in the absence of anticompetitive conduct, Rebel could recover the difference.

ARCO further contends that Rebel has improperly excluded all wholesale gas sales from its damages study. It may be that at trial Rebel will be obligated to offset any damages in its retail market sales with gains in its wholesale market sales. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals stated in Rebel I that Rebel may have received some gains during the predatory period, but if it was ultimately able to prove losses resulting from anti-competitive conduct, it should not be precluded from recovery. Rebel I 51 F.3d at 1448 n.19. Beadle's study is therefore sufficient to create a material issue as to whether retail losses were sustained.

ARCO's next contention is that Beadle's use of a 6-9 cent profit margin is inappropriate. Beadle based his estimates of retail margins on a review of Rebel's actual margins prior to 1986, [**22] upon consultation with [*1198] Rebel's experts, and upon a review of various Lundberg Price Surveys for the Los Angeles gasoline market. (Beadle Report p.2). ARCO has not shown that these are invalid methods of determining retail margins. At trial ARCO might be able to prove that this measurement is inappropriate, or that another measurement of damages is more accurate. However, based on Beadle's database, a material issue exists as to whether the 6-9 profit margin is an appropriate measure of damages.

Finally, ARCO contends that Beadle's calculations in scenarios B and C of his report are inappropriate as a matter of law. In his projections of Rebel's lost sales in scenarios B and C, Beadle includes stations that were sold by Rebel prior to the predatory period. Rebel alleges that these sales were necessitated by ARCO's threats of predatory pricing, and therefore they should be included as damages from ARCO's anticompetitive conduct.

<sup>9</sup> At trial, Rebel would bear the burden of showing that the time period from which damages are calculated is similar to the predatory pricing period but for the impact of the anticompetitive conduct. Inglis II, 942 F.2d at 1340-41. ARCO has merely alleged that Rebel has failed to show the periods were similar, but ARCO has offered no evidence that the two time periods or that the Los Angeles/Las Vegas markets are dissimilar. Since all inferences must be taken in Rebel's favor, summary judgment is inappropriate on this issue.

The inclusion of these sales in Rebel's projections is inappropriate. Rebel cannot end-run the statute of limitations on ARCO's alleged anticompetitive conduct by including these stations in its damage calculations. The statute of limitations has expired, so [\[\*\*23\]](#) there is no way to prove that ARCO acted anticompetitively, forcing Rebel to sell the stations. See 15 U.S.C. § 16. Since Rebel cannot prove ARCO's 1984 conduct was anticompetitive, it cannot include these sold stations in its damages calculations. Additionally, Rebel merely alleges threats, and offers no evidence that anticompetitive conduct actually occurred. Therefore, as a matter of law, the estimates based on the stations Rebel sold prior to 1984 have no valid factual basis, are unduly speculative and Rebel could not rely on them at trial.

C. Below Cost Pricing

HN14 [↑] In order to state a cause of action under section 2 of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, a plaintiff bears essentially the same substantive burden as a plaintiff under the Sherman Act. Rebel I, 51 F.3d at 1445.<sup>10</sup> Rebel must show that ARCO discriminated in price between purchasers of gasoline and that this price difference tended to lessen competition or create a monopoly. 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\); see Inglis II, 942 F.2d at 1337. Rebel may prove this by showing ARCO's anticompetitive intent. Id. Rebel may utilize a price/cost comparison to allege this intent, but that comparison [\[\*\*24\]](#) must meet the same standard required to establish intent for an attempted monopolization claim under the Sherman Act. Id.

In Brooke Group v. Brown & Williamson, 509 U.S. 209, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578 \(1993\), a case decided after this Court's original grant of summary judgment in favor of ARCO, the Supreme Court held that in order to establish a primary-line price discrimination claim under the Robinson-Patman Act, a plaintiff has two prerequisites to recovery. First, the plaintiff must prove that the prices complained of are below an appropriate measure of its rival's costs. Id. at 222. Second, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the competitor had a reasonable prospect or a dangerous probability of recouping [\[\*\*25\]](#) its investment in below-cost prices. Id. at 224.

In Brooke Group, the Supreme Court declined to resolve the conflict among courts regarding the appropriate measure of cost in predatory pricing and price discrimination claims. 509 U.S. at 223 n. 1. However, noting its decisions in Cargill Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 \(1986\) and Matsushita, 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\), the Court stated that the reasoning in both of those opinions "suggests that only below-cost prices should suffice, and we have rejected elsewhere the notion that above-cost prices that are below general market levels or the costs of a firm's competitors inflict injury to competition cognizable under the antitrust laws." Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 223. The Court found that the [\[\*1199\]](#) exclusionary effect of prices above a relevant measure of cost reflect either the lower cost structure of the alleged predator and competition on the merits, or is "beyond the practical ability of a judicial tribunal to control without courting intolerable risks of chilling legitimate price-cutting." Id. at 223 (citing 3 P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, [\[\*\*26\] Antitrust Law](#) PP 714.2, 714.3 (Supp 1992)).

HN15 [↑] Under Ninth Circuit authority, a failure to show price is below average variable or marginal cost<sup>11</sup> is usually fatal to a predatory pricing claim. Universal Analytics v. MacNeal-Schwendler Corp., 707 F. Supp. 1170, 1178 \(C.D. Cal. 1989\).<sup>12</sup> [\[\*\*28\]](#) Cost based methods involve determining numerous costs of the seller who is accused of predatory pricing. Taggart v. Rutledge, 657 F. Supp. 1420, 1437 (D. Mont. 1987). The Ninth Circuit articulated the relevant cost measurements for predatory and discriminatory pricing in Transamerica Computer Co. v. IBM, 698 F.2d 1377 (9th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 955, 78 L. Ed. 2d 329, 104 S. Ct. 370 (1983). The court noted that whether prices are predatory depends "not on their effectiveness in minimizing losses, but on their tendency to eliminate rivals and create a market structure enabling the seller to recoup his losses." Id. at 1386. The court found that Inglis set forth a cost-based test for allocating the burden of proof in predation cases. The court articulated the test as follows:

<sup>10</sup> In Rebel I, the court addressed only antitrust injury under the Robinson-Patman Act. The court found that Rebel must prove that ARCO had a degree of market power to threaten oligopolization, not monopolization, which is the requirement under the Sherman Act. 51 F.3d at 1447.

<sup>11</sup> HN17 [↑] Marginal cost is the cost a firm incurs in the production of one additional unit of output. Rebel I, 51 F.3d at 1431. Average variable cost measures costs which vary with output, and is a generally accepted substitute for marginal cost in antitrust cases. Average total cost ("ATC") is an average of variable costs and fixed costs.

<sup>12</sup> In Universal Analytics, the court found that the plaintiff's predatory pricing claims failed as a matter of law because there was no indication that the defendant set prices below its marginal or average variable cost. 707 F. Supp. at 1179.

HN16[] If the defendant's prices were below average total cost but above average variable [**27] cost, the plaintiff bears the burden of showing defendant's pricing was predatory. If, however, the plaintiff proves that the defendant's prices were below average variable cost, the plaintiff has established a prima facie case of predatory pricing and the burden shifts to the defendant to prove that the prices were justified without regard to any anticipated destructive effect they might have on competitors.

Id.<sup>13</sup> In Transamerica, the court held that prices above average total cost are not legal per se, and found that Inglis left open the question of how to evaluate prices that exceed average total costs ("ATC"). Id.<sup>14</sup>

The court went on to find that if the challenged [**29] prices exceed average total cost, the plaintiff must prove by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant's pricing policy was predatory. Id.<sup>15</sup> The court held that Transamerica had not met this standard. The only price increases were modest increases during the mid-1970's, which was a general inflationary period, thus the court found no evidence that IBM's prices rose once competition had left the market. Transamerica also failed to prove limit pricing, as there was merely evidence of an initial price cut, "hardly an unusual act in the [*1200] computer industry or unusual in the fact of competition." Id. at 1389.

In Taggart, the court found that the plaintiffs did not even mention the defendant's costs, but only alleged that on several occasions the defendant's wholesale prices exceeded retail prices. *657 F. Supp. I**301 at 1437*. The court noted that on at least one occasion, the Ninth Circuit has departed from its strict rule of comparing retail price and average variable cost, and remanded the case to allow the plaintiff to show by means other than a cost-price comparison that the defendant's price was predatory. Id. (citing Marsann Co. v. Brammall, Inc., 788 F.2d 611, 615 (9th Cir. 1986)). The Taggart court noted that the ruling in Marsann hinged on the difficulty of fixing the identity of the product for which to establish average variable costs. Id. The court went on to find that in a situation involving retail and wholesale gasoline competitors, that the threshold showing for predatory pricing had not been met. Id.

The Supreme Court has noted that HN18[] predatory pricing schemes are rarely tried, and even more rarely successful, since the predator must make a substantial investment with no assurance that it will pay off. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 589. Furthermore, a significant purpose of antitrust laws is to foster competition, and cutting prices to increase market share is the very essence of competition. Mistaken inferences in predatory pricing cases are therefore especially [**31] costly, since they chill the very conduct the laws are intended to protect. Id. at 594.

<sup>13</sup> All of the presumptions are rebuttable by a showing of predatory or nonpredatory purpose. In re Air Passenger Comp. Res. Sys. Antitrust Litigation, 694 F. Supp. 1443, 1464 (C.D. Cal. 1988).

<sup>14</sup> In Transamerica, the court noted situations in which prices above ATC would be illegal. First, a monopolist cannot set prices above ATC but below the short-term profit-maximizing level so as to discourage new entrants and maximize profits over the long run ("limit pricing"). 698 F.2d at 1387. While it may be difficult in many instances to assess the long-run consequences of these policies, where these difficulties can be overcome, plaintiffs should be allowed to prove these violations exist. Id. The court was hesitant to create a "free zone" in which monopolists can exploit their power without fear of legal scrutiny. "A rule based exclusively on cost forecloses consideration of other important factors, such as intent, market power, market structure, and long-run behavior in evaluating the predatory impact of a pricing decision." Id.

<sup>15</sup> The Supreme court in Cargill, 479 U.S. at 117 n. 12, declined to determine whether above-cost pricing coupled with predatory intent is ever sufficient to state a claim of predation.

Competitors are not protected from a loss in profits due to a decision by another firm to cut prices in order to increase market share. Cargill, 479 U.S. at 116. This would be a perverse result indeed, as it is in the interest of competition to permit dominant firms to engage in price competition. Id. Accordingly, an objective cost analysis is the crucial component in a prima facie case of predatory pricing. International Travel Arrangers v. NWA, Inc., 991 F.2d 1389, 1394 \(8th Cir. 1993\). This requirement may "make it extremely difficult for plaintiffs to prove predatory pricing in antitrust cases[; but t]hat difficulty, however, reflects the economic reality 'that predatory pricing schemes are rarely tried, and even more rarely successful.'" International Travel, 991 F.2d at 1396, (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 589).

While the Ninth Circuit held that cost-based inquiries serve merely as an aid in determining if predatory pricing occurred in Inglis I, this decision must be viewed in light of Brooke Group, which was decided after the Transamerica and Inglis [\[\*\*32\]](#) I cases. The Ninth Circuit has stated that when an alleged predator's prices are above ATC, predatory intent may be proved by clear and convincing evidence. However, Brooke Group makes it clear that prices above a relevant measure of cost will not suffice to infer the predatory motive necessary to support a price discrimination claim. Therefore, Rebel must either prove that ARCO's prices were below a relevant measure of ARCO's costs, (which will also allocate the burden of proof under Transamerica) or show by clear and convincing evidence other than price-cost comparisons that ARCO possessed predatory intent.

1. The Tosco Agreement

Preliminarily, this Court notes that its inquiry is limited to whether Rebel's measures of ARCO's cost are legally adequate, not whether the specific amount of costs is accurate. The precise amount of ARCO's costs are a factual determination properly decided at trial. Additionally, the weight or credibility of Rebel's economic and other experts are not proper subjects for review at this stage of the proceedings. See D & S Redi-Mix v. Sierra Redi-Mix & Contracting Co., 692 F.2d 1245, 1248 \(9th Cir. 1982\). It is true that cost [\[\*\*33\]](#) based inquiries are difficult, since economics is an inexact science, and that such inexactitude is not synonymous with legal insufficiency of the evidence. Id. Given Rebel's measurements of ARCO's costs, the Court must determine whether a jury could reasonably return a verdict for Rebel in light of the standards governing a price discrimination claim.

The first measure of ARCO's costs on which Rebel relies is the Tosco exchange agreement. Under the agreement, ARCO [\[\*1201\]](#) exchanged 50,000 barrels per day of crude oil for 30,000 to 35,000 barrels per day of gasoline refined by the Tosco Corporation.<sup>16</sup> Rebel alleges that the market value of each barrel of oil exchanged is the marginal cost to ARCO of producing a barrel of gasoline. Rebel basis its analysis on the fact that ARCO had more crude oil than refining capability, so the Tosco agreement measured the cost of producing an additional barrel of gas.

[\[\*\*34\]](#) Rebel cites ARCO's appellate Motion to Reconsider the Rebel I decision for the proposition that ARCO has conceded that a question of fact exists as to whether below cost pricing occurred. In its Motion to Reconsider, ARCO argued that whether prices are below cost was a contested issue of fact. Rebel alleges that ARCO should be bound by this statement. This Court is not bound by ARCO's arguments in its Motion to Reconsider before the Ninth Circuit. Furthermore, the Motion was submitted to the Court of Appeals at a stage in the proceedings when the only substantive discovery that had taken place involved ARCO's market share and market power. No substantial discovery concerning ARCO's costs had been undertaken at the time ARCO's Motion was submitted. ARCO also contends that it was merely attempting to prevent Rebel from arguing that the Ninth Circuit adopted the Tosco agreement as the only cost measure. For these reasons, this Court finds that ARCO's arguments in its prior Motion to Reconsider are not binding in the current proceedings.

Rebel next relies on the law of the case doctrine and the Ninth Circuit's decision in Rebel I to support its use of the Tosco agreement. Rebel [\[\*\*35\]](#) cites footnote 1 of Rebel I for the proposition that the Ninth Circuit adopted the <sup>16</sup> Courts have held that similar "swaps" are trades, not sales, and therefore not subject to attack under the Robinson-Patman Act. See Airweld, Inc., v. Airco, Inc., 576 F. Supp. 676, 679 \(D. Or. 1983\).

---

Tosco agreement as the measurement of marginal cost to be utilized in this case. This argument is incorrect. The Ninth Circuit was merely setting forth Rebel's factual allegations. This is clear from the context of the footnote, "Rebel measured ARCO's marginal cost based upon an agreement that ARCO signed with Tosco Corp. . . . Rebel claims . . . The cost of this "last barrel" of gasoline represents ARCO's marginal cost for gasoline." Rebel I, 51 F.3d at 1431. As the issue of below cost pricing was not before the court in Rebel I, any dicta addressing cost measurements is not law of the case or binding upon this Court.<sup>17</sup> This Court cannot logically conclude that the Ninth Circuit would adopt Rebel's cost measurement as adequate when little or no discovery had been conducted on costs. Therefore, this Court must independently analyze whether the Tosco agreement is a relevant measure of cost under the Brooke Group analysis.

[**36] Rebel bases its use of the Tosco agreement primarily on the testimony of Dr. Keith Leffler ("Leffler"). Leffler stated that he believed that refinery computer simulation models which measure marginal cost in the traditional economic methodology were available to all refiners and that this was an approach that ARCO would probably use. (Leffler's Statement in Response to ARCO's Mtn. for Summary Judgment). However, Leffler did not utilize this method, since he did not have the proper knowledge, or "have access to people at ARCO." (Leffler Depo. at 136). Rebel has made no showing that it ever attempted to obtain such information, [*1202] and ARCO asserts that Rebel made no such discovery requests.

While Leffler stated that joint aspects of gas production make evaluation of average variable costs "problematic at best," he also stated that the variable cost of producing crude oil is "small for anybody" and can be close to zero. (Leffler Depo. Vol III at 427). Although this would indicate that the average variable cost of producing crude oil is substantially below the market price of oil, Leffler adopted the Tosco agreement as a "direct measure" of marginal cost. Since there is no price paid by [**37] ARCO under the Tosco agreement, Leffler measured this "marginal cost" of gas to ARCO as the prevailing market price of the crude oil exchanged under the agreement, regardless of whether ARCO bought the oil, exchanged the oil, or was given the oil for free. (Leffler Depo. Vol III at 427).

The Tosco agreement merely measures the opportunity cost to ARCO of trading its crude oil for gasoline. HN19 Opportunity costs are the benefits a firm foregoes by choosing one course of action over another. The Tosco agreement measures opportunity costs because it evaluates ARCO's "cost" of gasoline by the value of what it gave up by not selling the barrel of oil at market price. The opportunity costs of a decision are not one of the costs of implementing a particular business decision. Continental Airlines, 824 F. Supp. at 701. It is improper as a matter of law to use opportunity costs to show below cost pricing. In re IBM Peripheral EDP Devices, Etc., 459 F. Supp. 626, 631 (N.D. Cal. 1978). Opportunity costs are not reflected in a profit and loss statement, and allowing opportunity costs as a method of cost measure in predatory pricing cases would impermissibly restrict the decision making power [**38] of businesses. See Id. This was not the intent of the antitrust laws, and is not what is meant by predatory pricing. Id. Leffler noted that courts have rejected the use of opportunity costs in evaluating cost measurements, and Rebel has failed to supply any authority that utilizes opportunity cost as a valid measure of marginal cost in a predatory pricing or price discrimination case.

Rebel's use of the Tosco agreement is entirely based on the market price of the oil, but Brooke Group explicitly rejected measurements of cost which are below general market levels or the costs of a firm's competitors. 509 U.S. at 223. Rebel's measurement of the marginal cost of gasoline to ARCO is improper, as it is entirely dependent of fluctuations in market price. Accepting Rebel's analysis, ARCO's price would be above or below marginal costs

<sup>17</sup> Rebel cites Areeda and Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, Vol. III (Revised Edition 1996). On pages 378-79, the authors discuss Rebel I, and state that if ARCO was unable to supply its own refineries, and purchased more gasoline from independent suppliers, this would measure marginal cost. If ARCO paid more than it charged upon resale, its price would be below marginal cost. However, the central concern regarding the Tosco agreement is that Rebel has not alleged ARCO purchased gas or incurred any direct cost in obtaining the gasoline. As Rebel's expert Dr. Leffler ("Leffler") admits, ARCO did not purchase additional barrels of gasoline, so there was no "cost" to ARCO in terms of a purchase price. Rebel evaluates ARCO's cost solely by the market price of oil. Leffler states that the marginal cost to ARCO is the market price of oil, whether ARCO purchased, exchanged, or was given the oil. Thus, Areeda and Hovenkamp's analysis, which may apply if ARCO purchased the gasoline, is inapplicable when Rebel values of the exchange solely on the prevailing market price of oil.

dependent entirely on fluctuations in the market price of crude oil, not dependent on any costs that ARCO actually incurred. This does not adequately approximate the costs to ARCO of producing gasoline. To accept Rebel's analysis, anytime ARCO priced gasoline below the market price of oil, they would violate the antitrust laws. Rebel [**39] has made no attempt to measure ARCO's actual costs of producing and transporting oil to the Tosco refinery. The Tosco agreement fails to provide such a measurement, and therefore cannot be used as a proxy for marginal cost.

2. Los Angeles / Las Vegas Price Comparisons

Rebel also alleges ARCO's prices were below cost because its wholesale prices in Las Vegas from 1986-89 were below the wholesale rack price in Los Angeles.<sup>18</sup> [**40] Rebel argues that since Los Angeles is a very competitive market, and the rack price is that charged by the most efficient seller, prices in Los Angeles are an adequate proxy for marginal cost.<sup>19</sup> Rebel's comparison of market price in two separate markets is merely a showing of the definition of price discrimination. Rebel has shown that ARCO charged different prices to different buyers in different markets. To accept this as a measure of cost would be to read the relevant [*1203] measure of cost requirement out of Robinson-Patman Act claims. Furthermore, the Los Angeles rack price is a market price, clearly impermissible as a cost measurement under the analysis of Brooke Group.

Rebel cannot avoid the requirements of Brooke Group by alleging that one of the prices ARCO charged in discriminating against Rebel was a very efficient price, and therefore approximated marginal cost. Rebel has made no showing of ARCO's actual costs of producing gasoline. The only costs Rebel even attempted to show are the transportation costs of pumping the gasoline across the Cal-Nev pipeline and terminaling costs. However, as Rebel merely adds this cost to the prices in Los Angeles, this is insufficient to approximate the real cost to ARCO of producing gasoline for sale in Las Vegas.

3. Prices Charged to Prestige Stations by ARCO

Rebel alleges that the price ARCO charged to its wholly owned subsidiary Prestige Stations Inc. ("PSI") meant that PSI incurred large losses. This theory is supported by the testimony of Rebel expert Harry Holcombe ("Holcombe").<sup>20</sup> Holcombe concludes that PSI is controlled and dominated by ARCO, with no independence of its own. (Holcombe [**41] Rep. p. 19). Holcombe analyzed profit and loss statements from 1985 to 1989 based on the dealer tankwagon ("DTW") price charged by ARCO, alleging this was the market price, and the price that ARCO charged its lessee dealers. Id. at 25. Since PSI lost substantial amounts of money during this period, ARCO was "willing to lose money" as a result of predatory pricing. Id. Holcombe supports this tautology by stating that "it is unlikely that ARCO would set a transfer price which is unrealistic." Id. at 26.

If ARCO and PSI are truly a combined unit, as Holcombe states, then the appropriate consideration is "the costs of the combined group to determine if the combined group sold below its costs." Vollrath Co. v. Sammi Corp., 9 F.3d 1455, 1460 [**42] (9th Cir. 1993). HN20[] To show below costs sales by a parent corporation and a subsidiary, the costs of both parent and subsidiary must be proved. Id. at 1461. In Vollrath, the Ninth Circuit upheld the district court's grant of JNOV due to a lack of evidence of the parent company's costs. Id. Similarly, Rebel has failed to show the costs of ARCO and PSI, rather has merely alleged that PSI lost money. This is insufficient to support a predatory pricing claim, and therefore this measure of cost is impermissible.

<sup>18</sup> Rebel alleges that ARCO's price in Los Angeles was below its Las Vegas price during the period of recoupment. This has no bearing on whether ARCO charged below cost prices during the predatory period. These are two different requirements under an antitrust claim.

<sup>19</sup> According to economic theory, in a perfectly competitive market, a firm's price is equal to its marginal cost.

<sup>20</sup> Holcombe is qualified to testify as an expert in the petroleum industry, but is not qualified to testify as an economic expert. However, for purposes of addressing the PSI method of determining ARCO's costs, this Court will assume Holcombe's testimony is admissible.

Holcombe also calculated ARCO's cost by merely comparing ARCO's profits in its Las Vegas operations with its nationwide gasoline sales. He then concluded that if ARCO had operated at these profit levels nationwide, it would have seen a large decrease in income over the relevant time period. (Holcombe Rep. p. 26). This is clearly insufficient to prove below cost pricing, and may be evidence of precisely the price competition that the antitrust laws are designed to encourage. In Phototron Corp. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 842 F.2d 95, 99 (5th Cir. 1988), the court found that HN21↑ operating at a substantially reduced profit margin was not pricing in a predatory matter, rather \*\*43 it was simply pricing in a competitive manner. In order to meet the requirements of predatory pricing, the plaintiff must present some evidence that the defendant priced below its costs. Id. at 100. Holcombe also alleged that Rebel suffered losses in trying to match ARCO's prices, so "it stands to reason" that ARCO would suffer the same losses. (Holcombe Rep. P. 26). On the contrary, this does not "stand to reason," and may indicate a the lower cost structure of ARCO, as articulated by the Supreme Court in Brooke Group.

4. Clear and Convincing Evidence of Predatory Intent

HN22↑ Under Ninth Circuit authority, a plaintiff in a price discrimination case can also state a claim by showing clear and convincing evidence of predatory intent. In [\[\*1204\] Drinkwine v. Federated Publications, Inc., 780 F.2d 735 \(9th Cir. 1985\)](#), the court held that since the plaintiff had failed to introduce any evidence on defendant's marginal, average variable or average total costs, they must prove by clear and convincing evidence that their pricing policy unreasonably restricted competition. Id. at 739. This Court is mindful of Brooke Group's admonition that measurements other than cost are extraordinarily \*\*44 difficult for a court to undertake without chilling competition. Rebel has failed to provide any evidence that would meet this standard. Rebel has failed to provide evidence of limit pricing by ARCO in terms of lowering prices in response to specific firms attempting to enter the Las Vegas market. ARCO has also alleged strategic reasons for its generally lower prices, that of initial entry into the new market of cash only self serve sales. See Transamerica, 698 F.2d 1377 at 1389.

Rebel has alleged that ARCO increased its prices from 1990 to 91, but as in Transamerica, this was during an inflationary period, the Gulf War, at a time when the price of all petroleum prices increased. Rebel has also alleged that from 1990-91 ARCO's Las Vegas prices exceeded its prices in Los Angeles. This price differential may be evidence of actual or potential recoupment, but it does not infer that prices in 1986-89 were below cost and therefore predatory. To accept later price increases as evidence of predatory intent would collapse predatory pricing cases into only a showing of recoupment. Rebel has offered no evidence that provides inferences of ARCO's predatory intent without impermissible speculation, \*\*45 and has failed to provide clear and convincing evidence of such intent.

It may be that in cases where multiple products are produced at once such as gasoline and petroleum products, and where there is no "smoking gun" of predatory intent, plaintiffs will incur difficulties in proving antitrust violations. However, these difficulties must be balanced against the real dangers to competition from inferring predatory intent from circumstantial evidence and above cost pricing. Congress and the Supreme Court have struck that balance by requiring below cost pricing in order to sustain a price discrimination claim. The risks of chilling legitimate competition are simply too great to infer predatory intent from the showing Rebel has made of ARCO's alleged anticompetitive conduct. As Rebel's showing does not meet the legal standards under the antitrust laws, ARCO is entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED THAT Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment (# 617) is GRANTED and the Clerk of Court is hereby directed to enter Judgment in favor of Defendant ARCO and against Plaintiff Rebel.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED THAT the Pretrial Conference, currently scheduled for \*\*46 March 14, 1997, and the trial date previously scheduled for March 24, 1997, are hereby vacated.

DATED: March 5, 1997

957 F. Supp. 1184, *1204Â 997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2749, **46

PHILIP M. PRO

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

Nursing Registry v. Eastern N.C. Regional Emergency Medical Servs. Consortium

United States District Court for the Eastern District of North Carolina, Eastern Division

March 7, 1997, Decided ; March 10, 1997, filed

No. 4:96-CV-69-B0(1)

Reporter

959 F. Supp. 298 *; 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3019 **

NURSING REGISTRY, INC., d/b/a BETTER HEALTH AMBULANCE SERVICE, Plaintiff, v. EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA REGIONAL EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES CONSORTIUM, INC., AMERICAN MEDICAL RESPONSE OF NORTH CAROLINA, INC., HALIFAX MEMORIAL HOSPITAL, INC., HALIFAX COUNTY, NORTHAMPTON COUNTY, WARREN COUNTY, WILLIAM A. PIERCE, III, QUINTON Q. QUALLS, KENNETH E. BRANTLEY, GEORGE C. PARRISH, JOHN D. HALL, HORACE JOHNSON, SR., HENRY MONCURE, R. JENNINGS WHITE, JR., WILLA MAJETT, WILLIAM T. BRIDGERS, JAMES C. BOONE, LUCIOUS HAWKINS, JAMES BYRD, JAMES D. HOLLOWAY, HARRY M. WILLIAMS, III, AND WILLIAM T. SKINNER, III, Defendants.

Disposition: [**1] Defendants' motions to dismiss granted in full and Plaintiff's motion for leave to file amended complaint denied. Action DISMISSED in its entirety as to all defendants. Since the Consortium and the Hospital only raised the Noerr-Pennington doctrine as an affirmative defense, and did not file motions to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), this Court, sua sponte, dismisses the action against them.

Core Terms

---

ambulance service, ambulance, franchise, franchise ordinance, Ordinance, alleges, nongovernmental, claim for relief, monopoly, proposed amended complaint, original complaint, anti trust law, Sherman Act, nonemergency, state action doctrine, competitor, anticompetitive, defendants', terms, motion to dismiss, immunity, Amend, government action, relevant market, do business, provider, reasons, argues, divide, refute

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Governments > Local Governments > Licenses

**HN1** [down arrow] Local Governments, Licenses

See N.C.G.S. § 153A-250 (North Carolina).

Governments > Local Governments > Licenses

**HN2** [down arrow] Local Governments, Licenses

See N.C.G.S. § 153A-250\(a\) (North Carolina).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

HN3 Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Right to Petition Immunity

There is a distinction between anticompetitive activity that violates the federal antitrust laws and protected political activity that happens to further an anticompetitive end. The Sherman Act does not prohibit two or more persons from associating together in an attempt to persuade the legislature or the executive to take particular action with respect to a law that would produce a restraint or monopoly. To hold that the government retains the power to act in this representative capacity and yet hold, at the same time, that the people cannot freely inform the government of their wishes would impute to the Sherman Act a purpose to regulate, not business activity, but political activity, a purpose which would have no basis in the legislative history of that Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

HN4 Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Right to Petition Immunity

Noerr shields from the Sherman Act a concerted effort to influence public officials regardless of intent or purpose. Joint efforts to influence public officials do not violate the antitrust laws even though intended to eliminate competition. Such conduct is not illegal, either standing alone or as part of a broader scheme itself violative of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

HN5 Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Right to Petition Immunity

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine protects not only the right to petition a governmental body in order to further one's own interests, but also the right to convince a governmental body to either ignore the pleas of a competitor, or not hear the competitor at all. Any lobbyist or applicant, in addition to getting himself heard, seeks by procedural and other means to get his opponent ignored. Policing the legitimate boundaries of such defensive strategies, when they are conducted in the context of a genuine attempt to influence governmental action, is not the role of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN6 Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

The "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine refers to the situation in which a company abuses a governmental process for no other purpose than to hurt a competitor. A classic example is the filing of frivolous objections to the license applications of a competitor, with no expectation of achieving denial of the license but simply in order to impose expense and delay. A "sham" situation involves a defendant whose activities are not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action at all, not one who genuinely seeks to achieve his governmental result, but does so through improper means.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

959 F. Supp. 298, *298L<sup>A</sup> 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3019, **1

**HN7** [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN8** [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

**HN9** [blue download icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Noerr-Pennington immunity extends to claims brought under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

**HN10** [blue download icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The corollary of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is the state action doctrine, which allows a state government, in the exercise of its police powers, to restrict competition in an effort to regulate a particular segment of the state's economy. When the state action defense is raised by a political subdivision of the state, such as a city council, or a county Board of Commissioners, the Supreme Court holds that the state action doctrine is applicable as long as the local government's restriction of competition is an authorized implementation of state policy. To be exempt from antitrust laws municipalities must demonstrate that their anticompetitive activities were authorized by the State pursuant to a state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

**HN11** [blue download icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

It is enough if suppression of competition is the foreseeable result of what the statute authorizes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

**HN12** [blue download icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The state action doctrine requires only that a local governmental body have state-granted authority to regulate, not state-granted authority to act in response to political pressure.

Governments > Local Governments > Licenses

**HN13** [blue download icon] Local Governments, Licenses

959 F. Supp. 298, *298L<sup>A</sup> 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3019, **1

See Halifax County, North Carolina, Ordinance Regulating Ambulance Services and Granting of Franchises to Ambulance Operators, § 3.1.

Governments > Local Governments > Licenses

HN14 [L] Local Governments, Licenses

See Halifax County, North Carolina, Ordinance Regulating Ambulance Services and Granting of Franchises to Ambulance Operators, § 4.1.

Governments > Local Governments > Licenses

HN15 [L] Local Governments, Licenses

See Halifax County, North Carolina, Ordinance Regulating Ambulance Services and Granting of Franchises to Ambulance Operators, § 5.2.

Governments > Local Governments > Licenses

HN16 [L] Local Governments, Licenses

See Halifax County, North Carolina, Ordinance Regulating Ambulance Services and Granting of Franchises to Ambulance Operators, § 5.4.

Governments > Local Governments > Licenses

HN17 [L] Local Governments, Licenses

See N.C.G.S. § 153A-250 (North Carolina).

Counsel: For NURSING REGISTRY, INC. dba Better Health Ambulance Service, plaintiff: Stephen D. Kiess, Everett, Warren, Harper & Swindell, Greenville, NC.

For EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA REGIONAL EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES CONSORTIUM, INC., defendant: Cecil W. Harrison, Jr., Poyner & Spruill, Raleigh, NC. Joseph E. Zeszotarski, Jr., Poyner & Spruill, Raleigh, NC. For AMERICAN MEDICAL MEDICAL RESPONSE, OF NORTH CAROLINA, INC., defendant: Sharon L. McConnell, Kilpatrick Stockton LLP, Raleigh, NC. David B. Hamilton, Petree Stockton, Charlotte, NC. For HALIFAX MEMORIAL HOSPITAL, INC., defendant: Cecil W. Harrison, Jr., (See above). For HALIFAX COUNTY, NORTHAMPTON COUNTY, WARREN COUNTY, WILLIAM A. PIERCE, III, QUINTON Q. QUALLS, KENNETH E. BRANTLEY, GEORGE C. PARRISH, JOHN D. HALL, HORACE JOHNSON, [**2] SR., HENRY MONCURE, R. JENNINGS WHITE, JR., WILLA MAJETT, WILLIAM T. BRIDGERS, JAMES C. BOONE, LUCIOUS HAWKINS, JAMES BYRD, JAMES D. HOLLOWAY, HARRY M. WILLIAMS, III, WILLIAM T. SKINNER, III, defendants: Elizabeth J. Hallyburton, Womble, Carlyle, Sandridge & Rice, Raleigh, NC.

Judges: TERRENCE W. BOYLE, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: TERRENCE W. BOYLE

Opinion

---

[*300] ORDER

Plaintiff brought this action on May 13, 1996, alleging that the defendants successfully conspired to monopolize the market for ambulance services in three counties in Eastern North Carolina, in alleged violation of federal antitrust laws, federal civil rights laws, state antitrust laws, the North Carolina Constitution, North Carolina common law, and North Carolina's ambulance franchise statute. The county defendants and their respective commissioners have moved to dismiss all claims against them pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. American Medical Response of North Carolina has also moved to dismiss this action in its entirety pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, arguing that they are immune from liability for all claims against them under the Noerr-Pennington [**3] doctrine. Halifax Memorial Hospital, Inc., and Eastern North Carolina Regional Emergency Medical Services Consortium, Inc., have invoked the Noerr-Pennington doctrine as an affirmative defense in their answer to the complaint.<sup>1</sup>

For the reasons discussed below, this action is dismissed in its entirety as to all defendants, and Plaintiff's motion for leave to amend the complaint is denied.

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The relevant factual allegations in the complaint, accepted as true for the sake of argument only, are [**4] as follows:

In October of 1993, Nursing Registry, Inc., d/b/a Better Health Ambulance Service (hereinafter, "Plaintiff"), "provided ambulance services to residents of Halifax County, and had established contractual relationships with various nursing homes, residential care centers and skilled nursing facilities located in Halifax, Northampton, and Warren Counties, including Guardian Care of Scotland Neck, Guardian Care of Roanoke Rapids, Our Community Hospital and Halifax Department of Social Services."

According to Plaintiff, on January 1, 1994, the nongovernmental defendants in this action -- Eastern North Carolina Regional Emergency Medical Services Consortium, Inc. ("the Consortium"), American Medical Response of North Carolina, Inc. ("AMR"), and Halifax Memorial Hospital, Inc. ("the Hospital") -- began to conspire to destroy Plaintiff's business in Halifax, Northampton, and Warren Counties ("the three Counties," "the County defendants," or simply, "the Counties"). In furtherance of this conspiracy, the nongovernmental defendants allegedly did the following:

- Agreed on prices to charge for ambulance services;
- Agreed not to provide ambulance services to nursing [**5] homes, residential care centers, or skilled nursing homes that did business with Plaintiff;
- [*301] Agreed to divide up the Counties' market for ambulance services, as follows: AMR would provide non-emergency services throughout the Counties, and 13 Rescue Squads, all of whom were members of the Consortium, would divide up the Counties' market for emergency ambulance services;
- Agreed to refer patients to the Hospital, as long as the Hospital agreed only to employ the services of AMR and the Rescue Squads;

---

<sup>1</sup> In their Memorandum in Opposition to Plaintiff's Motion for Leave to Amend Complaint, the Hospital and the Consortium note that since the Noerr-Pennington defense has been fully briefed in Defendant AMR's motion to dismiss, the Hospital and the Consortium did not feel it was necessary to file a motion to dismiss of their own. Apparently, the Hospital and the Consortium are relying on their affirmative defense as the sole basis for dismissing the action against them.

-- Agreed to engage in "an effort to have [the three Counties and their respective Commissioners] act outside their prescribed authority and . . . force nursing homes, residential care centers and skilled nursing homes not to use [Plaintiff] for their transportation needs";

-- And, finally, agreed "not to use wheelchair vans as a lower cost alternative to ambulance transportation." <sup>2</sup>

[**6] On April 3, 1995, the Counties "delegated the responsibility for choosing an exclusive ambulance provider or providers for each of their respective counties to the Consortium." <sup>3</sup>

On April 25, 1995, the Consortium chose its own members to be the exclusive providers of ambulance services in the Counties.

On May, 1995, the Counties selected the members of the Consortium as the only approved providers of ambulance services for their respective counties, agreeing that AMR would provide non-emergency services, and that the 13 Rescue Squads would provide emergency services.

On July 10, 1995, Halifax County promulgated an "Ordinance Regulating Ambulance Services and Granting of Franchises to Ambulance Operators" (the "Ordinance"). <sup>4</sup> [**7] According to Plaintiff, "the Ordinance was promulgated in derogation of [Plaintiff's] rights, including those rights prescribed by N.C.G.S. § 153A-250."<sup>5</sup>

[**8] In October of 1995, Plaintiff, for reasons not specified in the complaint, ceased providing ambulance services to residents of Halifax County, and no longer had "contractual relationships with various nursing homes, residential care centers, and skilled nursing facilities located in Halifax, Northampton, and Warren Counties. . . ."

On May 13, 1996, Plaintiff brought this action, alleging that the Consortium, AMR, the Hospital, the Counties, and the Counties' respective Commissioners had engaged in a concerted effort to destroy Better Health's [*302]

<sup>2</sup>The complaint does not explain why the alleged agreement not to use wheelchair vans as a lower cost alternative to ambulance services threatened Better Health's business.

<sup>3</sup>The members of the Consortium are AMR, the Hospital, and 13 emergency rescue squads.

<sup>4</sup>The Complaint is silent as to the other two County defendants -- Northampton County and Warren County.

<sup>5</sup>N.C.G.S. § 153A-250 provides, in relevant part, as follows:

HN1 (a) [a] county may by ordinance franchise ambulance services provided in the county to the public at large, whether the service is based inside or outside the county. The ordinance may:

- (1) Grant franchises to ambulance operators on terms set by the board of commissioners;
- (2) Make it unlawful to provide ambulance services or to operate an ambulance in the county without such a franchise;
- (3) Limit the number of ambulances that may be operated within the county;
- (4) Limit the number of ambulances that may be operated by each franchised operator;
- (5) Determine the areas of the county that may be served by each franchised operator;
- (6) Establish and from time to time revise a schedule of rates, fees, and charges that may be charged by franchised operators; . . .
- (8) Establish other necessary regulations consistent with and supplementary to any statute or any Department of Human Resources regulation relating to ambulance services. . . .

If a person, firm, or corporation is providing ambulance services in a county or any portion thereof on the effective date of an ordinance adopted pursuant to this subsection, the person, firm, or corporation is entitled to a franchise to continue to serve that part of the county in which the service is being provided. The board of commissioners shall determine whether the person, firm, or corporation so entitled to a franchise is in compliance with Chapter 130, Article 26 [now § 131E-155, et seq.]; and if that is the case, the board shall grant the franchise.

business, in alleged violation of state and federal antitrust law, state and federal constitutional law, state franchise law, and state tort law.

On June 25, 1996, Defendant AMR filed a motion to dismiss the entire action, arguing that its successful campaign to win an exclusive ambulance franchise, while admittedly motivated by a desire to suppress competition, was protected political activity and not a violation of the antitrust laws. On July 3, 1996, the County Defendants also filed a motion to dismiss the entire action, arguing that they are immune from liability under the state action doctrine.

On July 18, 1996, Plaintiff filed [**9] a motion to amend the original complaint, in order "to allege, with particularity, such facts as may be necessary to refute defendants' claims of immunity," (Motion For Leave to Amend Complaint, P9), implicitly acknowledging that the faces alleged in the original complaint were insufficient. Specifically, Plaintiff seeks to further allege the following:

* * *

In November of 1994, the Consortium informed Plaintiff that the Consortium had been granted plenary authority by the Counties to decide which ambulance companies would be granted a franchise, and that Plaintiff would have to submit a proposal to the Consortium if Plaintiff wanted to continue providing ambulance services.

Beginning in December of 1994, Plaintiff was informed by its customers that they could no longer use Plaintiff's services, "based on statements made by the Consortium." (Motion to Amend Complaint, p. 4).

In January of 1995, Plaintiff submitted a proposal to the Consortium "for permission to continue providing ambulance services in [the Counties]," but after reviewing Plaintiff's proposal, the Consortium "adopted certain specifications in an effort to disqualify [Plaintiff] from providing such services." [**10] (Id.)

Beginning in April of 1995, Plaintiff asked the Consortium for permission to attend any meetings the Consortium might have concerning the provision of ambulance services in the Counties, but the Consortium refused.

On April 15, 1995, Plaintiff submitted a second proposal to the Consortium, satisfying the specifications adopted by the Consortium for the provision of ambulance services.

On May 3, 1995, Plaintiff informed Halifax County, including the County Attorney of Halifax County, and the Consortium, that Plaintiff was currently providing ambulance services in Halifax County, and that Plaintiff was therefore entitled, according to the terms of the ambulance franchise statute of North Carolina, N.C.G.S. § 153A-250, to continue providing ambulance services if a franchise ordinance was issued.<sup>6</sup>

[**11] On May 15, 1995, Halifax County "adjudicated [Plaintiff's] claim for the right to provide ambulance services in Halifax County by denying [Plaintiff's] request, adopted and ratified the acts of the Consortium with respect to [Plaintiff's] proposal, and denied [Plaintiff] of its right to provide ambulance services in Halifax County." (Motion to Amend Complaint, p.6). The proposed amended complaint does not explain the precise manner in which Plaintiff's "claim," otherwise referred to by Plaintiff as a "request," was "adjudicated," and then "denied." Nor does the proposed amended complaint explain whether or not Plaintiff ever informed the other two county defendants that Plaintiff had a right to continue providing services in the event that an ambulance franchise ordinance was issued.

On May 15, 1995, Plaintiff was informed by the Consortium and Halifax County that Halifax County's "ruling" against Better Health included the denial of whatever franchise rights Better Health might have. (Id., at 7).

---

<sup>6</sup>  N.C.G.S. § 153A-250\(a\) provides that "if a person, firm, or corporation is providing ambulance services in a county or any portion thereof on the effective date of an [ambulance franchise] ordinance adopted pursuant to this section, the person, firm, or corporation is entitled to a franchise to continue to serve that part of the county in which the service is being provided. The board of commissioners shall determine whether the person, firm, or corporation so entitled to a franchise is in compliance with Chapter 130, Article 126 now [§ 131E-155, et seq.]; and if that is the case, the board shall grant the franchise.

[*303] On July 10, 1995, Halifax County adopted the ambulance franchise ordinance now in effect in Halifax County.

As is true of the original complaint, the proposed amended [**12] complaint does not allege that Plaintiff actually applied for a franchise in Halifax County, as is required under the ambulance franchise ordinance, and that Plaintiff's application was actually rejected. Further, the proposed amended complaint, as is true of the original complaint, makes no mention of any ambulance franchise ordinances in Northampton and Warren Counties.

* * *

In both the original and proposed amended complaints, Plaintiff seeks triple the amount of the compensatory damages, as determined by a jury, and which Plaintiff has estimated to be $ 2,100,980; injunctive relief remedying the anticompetitive consequences of the defendants' acts and preventing the Consortium and the Hospital "from maintaining, extending, or exploiting their monopoly power or attempting to do so"; injunctive relief ordering the Consortium to be dissolved; injunctive relief ordering the members of the Consortium not to impede or prohibit Plaintiff from competing for ambulance services in Halifax, Northampton, or Warren Counties; and attorneys' fees and costs.

II. DISCUSSION

There is no dispute between the parties that the relevant market is the provision of nonemergency [**13] ambulance services in Halifax, Warren, and Northampton Counties. The only issue in dispute is whether the alleged conspiracy to monopolize the relevant market rises to the level of actionable misconduct under state or federal law. The three nongovernmental defendants -- the Consortium, the Hospital, and AMR -- argue that they are immune from liability for their alleged involvement in the conspiracy under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, while the three County defendants claim absolute immunity under what is known as the state action doctrine. Since the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, and the state action doctrine, are analytically distinct, the claims against the nongovernmental defendants, and the claims against the County Defendants, will be analyzed separately.

A. Defendants' Motions to Dismiss the Original Complaint

1. Claims Against the Nongovernmental Defendants <sup>7</sup>

[**14] At the outset, it is important to emphasize the precise nature of the anticompetitive conduct in which the nongovernmental defendants allegedly engaged. In the original complaint, Plaintiff alleges what appear, at first glance, to be classic violations of the antitrust laws: price-fixing, regional market allocation, intent to boycott, monopoly, restraint of trade, and artificially inflated prices.

But when the original complaint is stripped of its conclusory allegations concerning the supposed unlawfulness of the defendants' conduct, all that is left is a concerted effort, on the part of a group of ambulance companies and one hospital, to influence three Counties in Eastern North Carolina to grant the group an exclusive franchise to provide ambulance services. This campaign on the part of the nongovernmental defendants was indisputably anticompetitive, in both its aim, and effect, for Plaintiff claims to have lost its share of the relevant market because of it. However, it is clear from the allegations in the complaint that the damages Plaintiff allegedly suffered were not caused by the defendants' price-fixing, market allocation, intent to boycott, etc., but by the passage [**15] of the ambulance franchise ordinance at issue in this case, which prevented Plaintiff from competing. And so even if it is true, as Plaintiff argues, that the nongovernmental defendants successfully conspired to monopolize the relevant market, it is clear, from the allegations in the complaint, that this monopoly was achieved not through the illegal exercise [*304] of market power, but, rather, through the lawful exercise of political power.

---

<sup>7</sup> On occasion, for the sake of simplicity, this Court will refer to the three nongovernmental defendants, collectively, as simply the Consortium, since both the Hospital and AMR are members of the Consortium, and since all three nongovernmental defendants have raised the same defense.

a. The Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Supreme Court has long recognized **HN3** a distinction between anticompetitive activity that violates the federal antitrust laws, and protected political activity that happens to further an anticompetitive end. In Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 \(1961\) ("Noerr"), the Supreme Court held that . . . the Sherman Act does not prohibit two or more persons from associating together in an attempt to persuade the legislature or the executive to take particular action with respect to a law that would produce a restraint or monopoly.

* * *

To hold that the government retains the power to act in this representative [**16] capacity and yet hold, at the same time, that the people cannot freely inform the government of their wishes would impute to the Sherman Act a purpose to regulate, not business activity, but political activity, a purpose which would have no basis in the legislative history of that Act.

Noerr, 365 U.S. at 136-7, 81 S. Ct. at 529, 5 L. Ed. 2d at 470-71.

Four years later, in United Mine Workers v. Pennington, the Supreme Court made it clear that the parties' motivation in petitioning their elected officials is irrelevant:

**HN4** Noerr shields from the Sherman Act a concerted effort to influence public officials regardless of intent or purpose. . . . Joint efforts to influence public officials do not violate the antitrust laws even though intended to eliminate competition. Such conduct is not illegal, either standing alone or as part of a broader scheme itself violative of the Sherman Act.

Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 1593, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 636 \(1965\).

The Supreme Court's decisions in Noerr and Pennington form the basis of what has long been referred to as the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the essence of which was nicely summed [**17] up by the Court in City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, 499 U.S. 365, 383, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 1355, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 383 \(1991\) -- to wit, "that the antitrust laws regulate business, not politics."

In City of Columbia, a company that had long controlled 95% of a city's billboard business was suddenly faced with the arrival of a potential competitor. But rather than subjecting itself to the perils of open competition, the company met with its friends on the city council and convinced them to pass a zoning ordinance that effectively shut the new competitor out of the market. The competitor sued, claiming that the company had improperly exploited its longstanding, intimate relationship with the members of the local governmental body. What the competitor argued, in effect, was that the market for political power had been improperly monopolized, and since the political process itself was not competitive, and therefore tainted, whatever laws that were passed as a result of it were not entitled to protection under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that **HN5** the Noerr-Pennington doctrine protects not only the right to petition [**18] a governmental body in order to further one's own interests, but also the right to convince a governmental body to either ignore the pleas of a competitor, or not hear the competitor at all:

Any lobbyist or applicant, in addition to getting himself heard, seeks by procedural and other means to get his opponent ignored. Policing the legitimate boundaries of such defensive strategies, when they are conducted in the context of a genuine attempt to influence governmental action, is not the role of the Sherman Act. In the present case, of course, any denial to [Plaintiff] of "meaningful access to the appropriate city administrative and legislative fora" was achieved by [Defendant] in the course of an attempt to influence governmental action . . . If the denial was wrongful there may be other remedies, but as for the Sherman Act, the Noerr exemption applies.

City of Columbia, supra, 499 U.S. at 382, 111 S. Ct. at 1355.

The Supreme Court's reasoning in City of Columbia is equally applicable here. According [*305] to the allegations in the complaint, the Consortium approached the Commissioners of the three Counties and requested an exclusive franchise to provide [**19] ambulance services; the Counties complied, in effect, by granting the Consortium the authority to decide which companies would be granted a franchise, the region in which each company would operate, and the prices to be charged for their services. Understandably, the Consortium wanted less competition, rather than more, and so it denied Plaintiff an opportunity to participate in the decisionmaking process, and denied Plaintiff's repeated requests for a share of the market. The Commissioners of Halifax County, in response to the Consortium's recommendations, then drafted an ambulance franchise ordinance, the terms of which would ensure that the Consortium's wishes were satisfied.

Plaintiff claims that the Commissioners of Halifax County did not have the authority, under North Carolina's ambulance franchise statute, to grant the Consortium complete discretion to divide up the market for ambulance services. Plaintiff further claims that the Consortium knew full well that it was not entitled to complete discretion to dictate the terms of the ambulance franchise statute, but that the Consortium nonetheless influenced the County Commissioners to "act outside their prescribed authority" [**20] and grant the Consortium unfettered control over the decisionmaking process. Plaintiff argues that the Consortium's successful attempt to convince a governmental body to do something that it did not have the authority to do is not protected political activity for purposes of antitrust analysis, and that the Consortium's behavior falls under what is known as the "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

Plaintiff is wrong. HN6↑ The "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, as explained by the Supreme Court in City of Columbia, refers to the situation in which a company abuses a governmental process for no other purpose than to hurt a competitor.

A classic example is the filing of frivolous objections to the license applications of a competitor, with no expectation of achieving denial of the license but simply in order impose expense and delay. . . . A "sham" situation involves a defendant whose activities are "not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action" at all, [], not one who "who 'genuinely seeks to achieve his governmental result, but does so through improper means.'" . . .

[City of Columbia, \[\*\*21\] supra, 499 U.S. at 380, 111 S. Ct. at 1354](#) (citations omitted).

Here, there is no question that the Consortium's actions were genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action -- an exclusive franchise -- and so the "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is clearly inapplicable. Even if it is true, as Plaintiff claims, that the Consortium gained a monopoly in the relevant market as a result of exercising discretion to which it was not entitled, then it is the County defendants, and not the Consortium, who are to blame.<sup>8</sup>

For the foregoing reasons, the first three claims for relief in the complaint, [**22] which name one or more of the nongovernmental defendants,<sup>9</sup> and which allege violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act<sup>10</sup>, are dismissed.

<sup>8</sup> Whether or not the Counties had the authority, under North Carolina's ambulance franchise statute, to grant the Consortium complete discretion to divide up the market for ambulance services, will only become relevant when this Court considers the Counties' claims of immunity under the state action doctrine, the applicability of which depends on the Counties having implemented state policy.

<sup>9</sup> The first claim for relief is against all defendants, including the nongovernmental defendants, for an alleged violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act; the second claim for relief is against the Consortium and AMR, for an alleged violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act; and the third claim for relief is against the Hospital, for an alleged violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act.

[**23] [*306] The Fifth Claim for Relief, which seeks recovery under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, and which adopts the same factual allegations that form the basis of the federal antitrust claims, is also dismissed. Plaintiff alleges that the Consortium and AMR, acting under color of state law, deprived Plaintiff of property without due process of law, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution. This claim is dismissible on two separate grounds. First, as will be explained more fully when this Court considers the claims for relief against the County defendants, Plaintiff had no right to participate in the process by which the County awarded ambulance franchises, nor did Plaintiff, having failed to apply for a franchise, have a protectable property interest at stake. The second basis for dismissing Plaintiff's § 1983 claim against the nongovernmental defendants is that HN9<sup>↑1</sup> Noerr-Pennington immunity extends to claims brought under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. See, e.g., Racetrac Petroleum, Inc. v. Prince George's County, 601 F. Supp. 892, 914 (D.Md. 1985), aff'd, 786 F.2d 202 (4th Cir. 1986); Boulware v. State of Nevada Department of Human Resources, 960 F.2d 793, 800 [*24] (9th Cir. 1992) ("activity protected by Noerr-Pennington cannot form the basis of § 1983 liability"); and Video Int'l Production, Inc. v. Warner-Amex Cable Communications, Inc., 858 F.2d 1075, 1084 (5th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1047, 109 S. Ct. 1955, 104 L. Ed. 2d 424 (1989)(holding "that any behavior by a private party that is protected from antitrust liability by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is also outside the scope of section 1983 liability.").

The only remaining claims for relief against the nongovernmental defendants, all of which adopt the same factual allegations that form the basis of the federal claims, allege violations of state law: the Sixth, Seventh, and Eighth Claims for Relief allege that the Consortium, AMR, and the Hospital all violated North Carolina's antitrust statutes, N.C.G.S. §§ 75-1, 75-2, and 75-5; the Tenth Claim for Relief alleges that AMR, the Consortium, and the Hospital all violated North Carolina's unfair and deceptive trade practices statute, N.C.G.S. § 75-1.1; the Eleventh Claim for Relief alleges that the Consortium, AMR, and the Hospital tortiously interfered with Plaintiff's contracts; and finally, the Fourteenth [*25] Claim for Relief alleges that all of the defendants, including the nongovernmental defendants, violated Art I, § 34 of the North Carolina Constitution, which prohibits monopolies.

In view of the dismissal of all federal claims for relief against the nongovernmental defendants, this Court, acting within its discretion, declines to hear the supplemental state law claims. Therefore, all claims in the original complaint against the nongovernmental defendants are DISMISSED.

2. Claims Against the County Defendants

There are two federal causes of action against the County defendants: the First Claim for Relief alleges that all defendants, including the County defendants, violated § 1 of the Sherman Act; the Fourth Claim for Relief, brought under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, alleges that the County Defendants deprived Plaintiff of property without due process of law, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. This Court will first consider Plaintiff's claim for relief under the Sherman Act.

a. The State Action Doctrine

HN10<sup>↑1</sup> The corollary of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is the state action doctrine, which allows a state government, in the exercise of its police [*26] powers, to restrict competition in an effort to regulate a particular segment of the state's economy. See Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943). When the state action defense is raised by a political subdivision of the state, such as a city council, or a county Board of Commissioners, the Supreme Court has held that the state action doctrine is applicable as long as the local government's "restriction of competition [is] an authorized implementation of state policy . . ." City of Columbia.

<sup>10</sup> HN7<sup>↑1</sup> § 1 of the Sherman Act provides, in relevant part, that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States . . . is hereby declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1

HN8<sup>↑1</sup> § 2 of the Sherman Act provides, in relevant part, that "every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states . . . shall be deemed guilty of a felony." 15 U.S.C. § 2

supra, 499 U.S. at 370, 111 S. Ct. at 1349. In the words of the Fourth Circuit, "to be exempt from [*307] antitrust laws municipalities must demonstrate that their anticompetitive activities were authorized by the State pursuant to a state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service." Coastal Neuro-Psychiatric Associates, P.A. v. Onslow Memorial Hospital Inc., 795 F.2d 340, 341 (4th Cir. 1986)(internal quotation omitted).

Here, there is no question that the County defendants had the authority, under state law, to restrict competition in the market for ambulance services, for the ambulance franchise statute at issue in this [**27] case, N.C.G.S. § 153A-250, clearly allows, as the County defendants argue, "wide latitude to regulate, establish, operate, or contract with ambulance services." (County Def.s' Motion to Dismiss, p. 9). While it is true that the statute does not explicitly permit the displacement of competition, the Supreme Court has held that HN11[<sup>1</sup>] "it is enough . . . if suppression of competition is the 'foreseeable result' of what the statute authorizes. . . ." City of Columbia, supra, 499 U.S. at 373, 111 S. Ct. at 1350 (citations omitted).

Plaintiff argues that the anticompetitive activity in which the County defendants allegedly engaged is not protectable under the state action doctrine, for two reasons: 1) the Counties did not have statutory authority to grant the Consortium complete discretion to divide up the market for ambulance services, and 2) the Counties did not have the statutory authority to act upon the Consortium's recommendations by "conferring upon the Consortium a monopoly in, and . . . excluding [Plaintiff] from, the market for ambulance services in Halifax, Northampton, and Warren Counties," (Complaint, P33), since a grandfather clause in North Carolina's ambulance [**28] franchise statute provides that companies who are providing ambulance services at the time a franchise ordinance is issued shall be entitled to a franchise to continue doing business. Therefore, argues Plaintiff, the County defendants engaged in anticompetitive activity that was not sanctioned by state policy, and the state action doctrine is thus inapplicable.

Each of Plaintiff's arguments will be considered in turn: First, Plaintiff argues that the Counties did not have the statutory authority to grant the Consortium complete discretion to divide up the market for ambulance services. In support of its argument, Plaintiff cites no case law, and relies only on the terms of the ambulance franchise Ordinance at issue. But while it may be true that the franchise Ordinance at issue in this case does not explicitly authorize the Counties to defer to an ambulance company's judgment in deciding how to divide up and apportion the market for nonemergency ambulance services, Plaintiff neglects to explain why such explicit authority is necessary. The responsibility of a local government to regulate a particular segment of the economy frequently requires consideration of, and deference to, the [**29] partial judgments and selfish wishes of companies that are vying for the local government's patronage. HN12[<sup>1</sup>] The state action doctrine requires only that a local governmental body have state-granted authority to regulate, not state-granted authority to act in response to political pressure. As the Supreme Court noted in City of Columbia, in response to the plaintiff's argument in that case that the city council was merely rubber-stamping the local monopolist's zoning proposal, "it is . . . inevitable . . . that public officials often agree to do what one or another group of private citizens urges upon them . . ." Id., 499 U.S. at 375, 111 S. Ct. at 1351.

The problem with Plaintiff's second argument -- that the County defendants did not have the authority to grant the Consortium's request for a monopoly -- is that the complaint fails to allege that the County defendants actually performed some governmental action that facilitated the establishment of the Consortium's alleged monopoly. Plaintiff merely alleges that Halifax County passed an ambulance franchise Ordinance, and Plaintiff expects this Court to assume that the Ordinance somehow automatically established, [**30] "in derogation of [Plaintiff's] rights," the Consortium's monopoly in the market for nonemergency ambulance services. But the very terms of the Ordinance, which is attached to the complaint, contradicts Plaintiff's theory of [*308] the case, for there is no mention of the members of the Consortium, and no mention of Plaintiff. The Ordinance is an eleven-page document that sets forth, in general terms, the requirements for providing nonemergency ambulance services in Halifax County. The Ordinance is not a self-executing document, and it requires ambulance companies to affirmatively apply for a franchise before receiving one. The Ordinance provides, in relevant part, as follows:

HN13[<sup>1</sup>] § 3.1 -- No person either as owner, agent or otherwise, shall furnish, operate, conduct, maintain, advertise or otherwise be engaged in or profess to be engaged in the business or service of nonemergency transportation of patients within Halifax County unless the person holds a valid permit for each ambulance used by the North Carolina Department of Human Resources and has been granted a franchise for the operation of such business or service by the County pursuant to this Ordinance.

***

[**31] HN14 § 4.1 -- Application for a franchise to operate ambulances in Halifax County shall be made by the ambulance provider upon such forms as may be prepared or prescribed by the County and shall contain . . . any information the County shall deem reasonably necessary for a fair determination of the capability of the applicant to provide ambulance services in Halifax County in accordance with the requirements of state laws and the provisions of this regulation.

***

HN15 § 5.2 -- An applicant may only apply for a franchise to operate nonemergency transportation services.

***

HN16 § 5.4 -- A franchise may be granted if the County finds that:

- (a) The applicant shows a reasonable effort to meet State standards and standards outlined in the franchise ordinance.
- (b) The proposed service will fit within the existing service so as not to adversely affect the level or service or operations of other franchisees to render service.
- (c) A need exists for the proposed service in order to improve the level of ambulance services available to residents of the County and that this is a reasonable and cost effective manner of meeting the need.

(Complaint, [**32] Ex. A).

Plaintiff argues that the terms of the Ordinance are irrelevant, since Plaintiff was automatically entitled to continue doing business under the grandfather clause in N.C.G.S. § 153A-250. But the problem with Plaintiff's argument is that the grandfather clause in N.C.G.S. § 153A-250, like the franchise Ordinance that was promulgated pursuant to N.C.G.S. § 153A-250, is not self-executing: HN17 "The board of commissioners shall determine whether the person, firm, or corporation . . . is in compliance with [all state statutory regulations concerning the provision of ambulance services <sup>11</sup>]; and if that is the case, the board shall grant the franchise." In order to notify the board of commissioners that one is currently providing ambulance services, and in order to give the board an opportunity to affirmatively grant a franchise to continue doing business, it is necessary that an ambulance company actually submit an application that can be granted. The complaint conspicuously fails to allege that Plaintiff actually submitted an application to the County defendants for a franchise; that Plaintiff's application was then wrongly denied; and that an application for a franchise [**33] submitted by AMR -- the member of the Consortium who was to provide nonemergency ambulance services -- was granted. Since the complaint fails to allege that the County defendants actually caused Plaintiff's alleged damages -- i.e., the loss of its business in the relevant market -- the Sherman Act claim against the County defendants [*309] is dismissed.<sup>12</sup>

<sup>11</sup> When Halifax County issued its ambulance franchise Ordinance, on July 10, 1995, the state regulations concerning the provision of ambulance services were set forth in N.C.G.S. Chapter 130, Article 26, which was repealed on November 1, 1995, and can now be found in N.C.G.S. § 131E-155 et seq.

<sup>12</sup> The complaint also conspicuously fails to allege any governmental action whatsoever on the part of Northampton and Warren Counties, both of whom are named as defendants. The only ambulance franchise Ordinance mentioned in the complaint was passed by Halifax County. Apparently, Plaintiff expects this Court to assume that after the Consortium conspired with the Commissioners of Northampton County, and with the Commissioners of Warren County, to shut Plaintiff out of the relevant market in those two counties, the Consortium's monopoly in Northampton and Warren Counties spontaneously came into existence, and with such force, that Plaintiff's business was instantly obliterated as a result. This Court will make no such assumption. Plaintiff's failure to allege any governmental action by Northampton and Warren counties is a sufficient basis in itself for dismissing the federal antitrust claim against them.

[**34] The Fourth Claim for Relief, which alleges that the County defendants deprived plaintiff of its Fourteenth Amendment due process rights, in violation of 42 U.S.C. § 1983, is also dismissed. As this Court has explained at length, Plaintiff did not have a right to participate in the process by which the Counties decided the terms of their ambulance franchise ordinances, and Plaintiff did not have a protectable property interest at stake, since it never applied for a franchise, as was required under both the ambulance franchise Ordinance, and the ambulance franchise statute pursuant to which the Ordinance was issued.

The only remaining claims against the County defendants, all of which adopt the same factual allegations that form the basis of the federal claims, allege violations of state law: the Ninth Claim for Relief alleges that the County defendants violated North Carolina's ambulance franchise statute, N.C.G.S. § 153A-250; the Twelfth, Thirteenth, and Fourteenth Claims for Relief allege that the County defendants violated various provisions of the North Carolina Constitution -- Art 1, § 19, Art 1, § 32, and Art 1, § 34.

In view of the dismissal of all federal claims for relief [**35] against the County defendants, this Court, acting within its discretion, declines to hear the supplemental state law claims. Therefore, all claims in the original complaint against the County defendants are DISMISSED.

* * *

B. Plaintiff's Motion For Leave to File Amended Complaint

In an effort "to refute defendants' claims of immunity," (Motion for Leave to Amend Complaint, p.9), Plaintiff seeks leave to supplement its complaint with additional factual allegations.

a. Plaintiff's Attempt to Refute Noerr-Pennington Defense

In its proposed amended complaint, Plaintiff seeks to allege, for the first time, that the Consortium, prior to engaging in its campaign to influence the County governments, contacted the companies with whom Plaintiff did business, and made unspecified "statements" that caused these companies to inform Plaintiff that they could no longer do business with Plaintiff.

Starting on or about December 1994, [Plaintiff] was informed by its customers that they could no longer use [Plaintiff] as a provider of ambulance services based on statements made by the Consortium. (Motion to Amend, p.4, emphasis added).

[**36] There are two reasons why this proposed allegation fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted: first, it is not a violation of the antitrust laws to make "statements" to a competitor's customers.

Second, even assuming, solely for the sake of argument, that the Consortium's alleged "statements" to Plaintiff's customers amounted to illegal threats to boycott (which the proposed amended complaint does not allege), the allegation would still not successfully refute the Consortium's Noerr-Pennington defense, for there is no question, based on the allegations in the proposed amended complaint, that Plaintiff's alleged damages were caused solely by the passage of the ambulance franchise Ordinance at issue in this case, and not by any threats to boycott Plaintiff's customers.

b. Plaintiff's Attempt to Refute State Action Defense

Plaintiff seeks to refute the County defendants' state action defense by alleging the [*310] following: Plaintiff made a formal "claim," otherwise referred to as a "request," for a franchise; Plaintiff's "request" was then, in some unspecified fashion, "adjudicated"; after being adjudicated, the "request" was then "denied"; and, finally, this [**37] denial was communicated by means of a "ruling," the precise nature of which is unclear, in which the County defendants explained to Plaintiff that it had no right to a franchise under an Ordinance that was not yet in existence.

The problem with Plaintiff's proposed amended complaint, like the problem with Plaintiff's original complaint, is that it seeks to state an antitrust claim against the County defendants without alleging that the County defendants actually performed some governmental action that facilitated the establishment of the Consortium's alleged monopoly. Specifically, the proposed amended complaint fails to allege that after the franchise Ordinance at issue in this case was passed, a) Plaintiff submitted an application for a franchise, b) Plaintiff's application was wrongly denied, and c) AMR, the member of the Consortium who was to provide nonemergency ambulance services, also submitted an application for a franchise, which was granted.

III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants' motions to dismiss are granted in full, and Plaintiff's motion for leave to file an amended complaint is denied.

Accordingly, this action is DISMISSED in its entirety [**38] as to all defendants.<sup>13</sup>

SO ORDERED.

This 7TH day of March, 1997.

TERRENCE W. BOYLE

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

End of Document

---

<sup>13</sup> Since the Consortium and the Hospital only raised the Noerr-Pennington doctrine as an affirmative defense, and did not file motions to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), this Court, sua sponte, dismisses the action against them.

Rozema v. Marshfield Clinic

United States District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin

March 10, 1997, Decided ; March 10, 1997, FILED

96-C-592-C, 96-C-916-C, 96-C-730-C

Reporter

1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8261 *; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,796

HENRY AND JOANN ROZEMA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, v. THE MARSHFIELD CLINIC and SECURITY HEALTH PLAN OF WISCONSIN, INC., Defendants. KATHLEEN V. MALEK, STATE OF WISCONSIN DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND FAMILY SERVICES, and, Plaintiffs, v. THE MARSHFIELD CLINIC, SECURITY HEALTH PLAN OF WISCONSIN, INC., NORTH CENTRAL HEALTH PROTECTION PLAN, and RHINELANDER MEDICAL CENTER, S.C., Defendants. HARRIET HALIDA, LAWRENCE HALIDA, ISLAND SPORTS CENTER, INC., a corporation, MARK MCKAY, and TOWN OF MERCER SANITARY DISTRICT # 1, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, v. THE MARSHFIELD CLINIC, SECURITY HEALTH PLAN OF WISCONSIN, INC., NORTH CENTRAL HEALTH PROTECTION PLAN, and RHINELANDER MEDICAL CENTER, S.C., Defendants.

Disposition: [*1] Motions to dismiss of defendants The Marshfield Clinic, Security Health Plan, Inc., North Central Health Protection Plan, and Rhinelander Medical Center, S.C. and motion to strike of defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. DENIED.

Core Terms

---

health plan, Clinic, antitrust, defendants', markets, allegations, plaintiffs', territories, conspiracy, contracts, complaints, purchasers, providers, physician's services, customers, collateral estoppel, motion to dismiss, anti-competitive, healthcare services, subrogation, subscribers, healthcare, geographic, prices, relevant market, products, health maintenance organization, offensive, anti trust law, Sherman Act

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > General Overview

HN1[ Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In considering a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court must accept as true the well-pleaded factual allegations in the complaint, drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. The court may dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) only if the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN2 Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

The standard for pleading is low, requiring only a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\). A plaintiff is not required to plead the particulars of his or her claim unless it deals with fraud or mistake. One pleads a claim for relief by briefly describing the events. Matching facts against legal elements comes later, such as in consideration of motions for summary judgment. On a motion to dismiss, the plaintiff receives the benefit of the imagination, so long as the hypotheses are consistent with the complaint. The pleading rule is equally applicable in antitrust cases.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN3 Pleadings, Rule Application & Interpretation

Federal courts are not to interpolate a requirement of fact pleading into the federal rules.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN4 Pleadings, Rule Application & Interpretation

Although a plaintiff need not plead facts and may plead conclusions, a plaintiff must provide the defendant with minimal notice of the claim, and include enough information to "outline or adumbrate" the basis of the claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To bring a successful claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege 1) a contract, combination or conspiracy; 2) a resultant unreasonable restraint of trade in the relevant market; and 3) an accompanying injury. There are two standards for evaluating whether an alleged restraint of trade is unreasonable: the rule of reason and the per se rule.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Wisconsin antitrust law, Wis. Stat. § 133.03, was modeled after the Sherman Act. What amounts to a conspiracy in restraint of trade under the Sherman Act amounts to a conspiracy in restraint of trade under the state act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN7 [down arrow] Private Actions, Standing

Parties who may bring an antitrust action are limited to those 1) who have suffered the type of injury that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent (antitrust injury) and 2) whose injuries are a result of defendant's unlawful conduct (antitrust standing). To establish an antitrust injury, which is sometimes considered an element of antitrust standing, a plaintiff must be able to show that the antitrust laws protect his or her interests and that the violation was the cause-in-fact of the injury. Plaintiff's loss must be attributable to the anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny. One purpose of the antitrust laws is to protect consumers from the anti-competitive conduct of suppliers. Consumer plaintiffs must show that their injury results from defendants' acts that reduce output or raise prices in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN8 [down arrow] Purchasers, Direct Purchasers

Antitrust standing examines the connection between the asserted wrongdoing and plaintiff's claimed injury. Only those who are in the best position to vindicate the alleged violation are awarded standing; plaintiffs whose injuries are indirect or secondary will be unsuccessful. Factors relevant to the standing determination include: 1) the causal connection between the violation and the injury; 2) the nature of the injury; and 3) whether plaintiff's claim for damages is speculative, potentially duplicative, or involves complex apportionment. When the plaintiff's injury is linked to the injury inflicted upon the market the compensation of the injured party promotes the designated purpose of the antitrust law-the preservation of competition. To the extent that plaintiffs are direct purchasers of services from defendants, they have antitrust standing.

Contracts Law > Third Parties > Subrogation

Insurance Law > Claim, Contract & Practice Issues > Subrogation > General Overview

HN9 [down arrow] Third Parties, Subrogation

Wis. Stat. § 49.89(2) states that if the Department of Health and Family Services provides public assistance as a result of the occurrence of an injury, sickness or death that creates a claim or cause of action, whether in tort or contract, on the part of a public assistance recipient against a third party, the Department is subrogated to the rights of the recipient. On its face, the statute appears to apply only where the occurrence of injury or sickness creates a claim.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > General Overview

Insurance Law > Claim, Contract & Practice Issues > Subrogation > General Overview

HN10 [blue icon] Parties, Joinder of Parties

Under Wis. Stat. § 803.03\(2\)\(a\), public assistance recipients asserting a claim for affirmative relief are required to join the public assistance provider that has a right of subrogation under Wis. Stat. § 49.89\(2\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

HN11 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

The McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1012\(b\), removes from antitrust scrutiny all conduct that is part of the "business of insurance" and regulated by state law. However, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1013\(b\) makes the Sherman Act applicable in any event to acts of coercion, intimidation or boycott. The three part standard for determining what constitutes "business of insurance" for purposes of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012\(b\) is: 1) whether the practice has the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk; 2) whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and 3) whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

HN12 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

An insurance company's contracts with participating pharmacies are merely arrangements for the purchase of goods and services from a third party and are not part of the business of insurance.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN13 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

The relevant market defines the scope of an antitrust claim because both the wrongful conduct and the resulting injury must occur within the same market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN14 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The ultimate determination of the relevant market is an issue of fact for the jury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN15 [+] Private Actions, Standing

Wis. Stat. § 133.14 provides for recovery by a person who has made payments under or pursuant to contracts or agreements made by any person while a member of any combination or conspiracy prohibited by Wis. Stat. § 133.03, and which contract or agreement is founded upon, is the result of, grows out of or is connected with any violation of such section, either directly or indirectly.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN16 [+] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Offensive collateral estoppel involves a plaintiff seeking to estop a defendant from relitigating the issues that the defendant previously litigated and lost against another plaintiff. Trial courts have broad discretion to determine when offensive collateral estoppel should be applied but indicated that courts should not allow it where a plaintiff easily could have joined in the earlier action or where it would be unfair to the defendant. Unfairness may result in cases in which the defendant had little incentive to defend in the prior suit, the judgment serving as the basis for collateral estoppel is inconsistent with other prior judgments in favor of the defendant, or the second action affords the defendant procedural opportunities unavailable in the first action that could result in a different outcome.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN17 [+] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

For collateral estoppel to apply, four elements must be met: 1) the issue sought to be precluded must be the same as that involved in the prior action, 2) the issue must have been actually litigated, 3) the determination of the issue must have been essential to the final judgment, and 4) the party against whom estoppel is invoked must be fully represented in the prior action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > Immaterial Matters

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > Redundant Matters

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > Scandalous Matters

HN18 [+] Motions to Strike, Immaterial Matters

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(f\), the court may order stricken from any pleading any insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter. Motions to strike are not favored and usually will be denied unless the allegations are not related to the subject matter of the litigation and are prejudicial to the objecting party. Thus, a motion to strike frequently is denied when no prejudice could result from the challenged allegations, even though the matter literally is within the categories set forth in Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(f\). Any doubts are to be resolved in favor of the objecting party.

Counsel: For ROZEMA, HENRY, ROZEMA, JOANN, HALIDA, HARRIETT, PLAINTIFFS (96-C-0730-C): JAMES A. OLSON, LAWTON & CATES, S.C., MADISON, WI.

For THE MARSHFIELD CLINIC SECURITY HEALTH PLAN OF WI., INC., MARSHFIELD CLINIC, DEFENDANTS (96-C-0730-C): STEVEN J. CAULUM, BELL, METZNER, GIERHART & MOORE, MADISON, WI.

Judges: BARBARA B. CRABB, District Judge

Opinion by: BARBARA B. CRABB

Opinion

---

OPINION AND ORDER

These are civil antitrust actions for monetary, declarative and injunctive relief brought pursuant to the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and Wis. Stat. § 133.03. The Rozema plaintiffs contend that defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan of Wisconsin, Inc. violated the federal and state statutes by entering into a continuing contract, combination or conspiracy to divide markets illegally in restraint of trade. The Halida and Malek plaintiffs contend that defendants The Marshfield Clinic, Security Health Plan of Wisconsin, Inc., [*2] Rhinelander Medical Center, S.C. and North Central Health Protection Plan violated the statutes by agreeing with a number of their competitors and co-conspirators to divide markets, territories and customers. These cases are before the court on the motions to dismiss filed pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) by 1) defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan of Wisconsin, Inc. separately against the Rozema, Malek and Halida plaintiffs; 2) defendant Rhinelander Medical Center, S.C. separately against the Malek and Halida plaintiffs; and 3) defendant North Central Health Protection Plan separately against the Malek and Halida plaintiffs. Defendant Rhinelander Medical Center, S.C. has moved to dismiss the complaints of the Malek and Halida plaintiffs under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(7\) for failure to join other alleged co-conspirators under Fed. R. Civ. P. 19. In the alternative to their motion to dismiss the Halida complaint, defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. have moved to strike certain paragraphs of the complaint as irrelevant and immaterial under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(f\).

Defendants generally contend that plaintiffs fail to set forth sufficient [*3] facts alleging an antitrust conspiracy and injury under state or federal law, fail to plead collateral estoppel and are barred from invoking it and cannot seek damages under Wis. Stat. § 133.14. Defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. assert that plaintiff Halida cannot allege that their refusal to pay for her care by a particular chiropractor is an antitrust violation. Defendants The Marshfield Clinic, Security Health Plan, Inc. and North Central Health Protection Plan contend that because plaintiff Malek and the plaintiffs whom she represents are Medicaid recipients, they do not have standing to bring an antitrust claim. Finally, defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. argue that plaintiff Wisconsin Department of Health and Family Services cannot be subrogated under Wis. Stat. § 49.89\(2\) to the Malek plaintiffs' claims.

I conclude that 1) all plaintiffs have alleged antitrust claims under federal and state law and possible relief under Wis. Stat. § 133.14; 2) plaintiff Malek and the plaintiffs whom she represents have antitrust standing and have alleged an antitrust injury; 3) plaintiff Wisconsin Department of Health and Family [*4] Services can be subrogated to the claims of the Malek plaintiffs; and 4) plaintiff Halida may allege that defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. terminated her chiropractor from its plan. Because no defendant has briefed the question whether parties must be joined under Fed. R. Civ. P. 19, defendant Rhinelander Medical Center's motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(7) will be denied. The motion to strike of defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. will be denied because the paragraphs in question are not completely unrelated to plaintiffs' claims and defendants will not suffer prejudice.

For the sole purpose of deciding this motion, I find that plaintiffs' complaints fairly allege the following.

ALLEGATIONS OF FACT

A. Factual Allegations Common to All Complaints

The three complaints make substantially similar allegations of fact. To the extent that the complaints allege additional facts, those factual allegations are set out in subsections B and C below.

Defendant The Marshfield Clinic is a Wisconsin corporation organized under Wis. Stat. Ch. 180 and the largest physician-owned clinic in the state of Wisconsin, with annual [*5] revenues of over $ 200 million. Its main office is in Marshfield, Wisconsin and it maintains 21 branch offices in 14 counties in North Central Wisconsin.

Defendant Security Health Plan, Inc. is a Wisconsin health maintenance organization organized under Wis. Stat. Ch. 613 and a wholly owned subsidiary of The Marshfield Clinic. Since 1987, The Marshfield Clinic has controlled Security Health Plan, Inc.'s policies, practices and procedures and has maintained Security Health Plan, Inc. as its exclusive health maintenance organization. (A health maintenance organization charges its subscribers a fixed annual fee for services instead of charging separately for each medical procedure and provides services through physicians who contract with it.) Security Health Plan, Inc. provides services to approximately 70,000 enrollees, who are referred to physicians and specialists at The Marshfield Clinic.

I take judicial notice of the following facts alleged in the complaints. On February 16, 1994, Blue Cross & Blue Shield United of Wisconsin and Compcare Health Services Insurance Corporation filed claims in this court against The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. alleging that defendants' [*6] principal business strategies and activities violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and Wis. Stat. § 133.03. Blue Cross & Blue Shield United of Wisconsin sought significant damages, including overcharges as a result of the antitrust violations and treble damages and recoupment of contract payments made for products and services under Wis. Stat. § 133.14. In addition, Blue Cross & Blue Shield United of Wisconsin requested that the court enjoin The Marshfield Clinic from future anti-competitive conduct. The jury found that The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. had entered into a contract, combination or conspiracy to allocate customers, territories and product or service markets in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act and Wis. Stat. § 133.03.

The Honorable Judge Shabaz denied post-trial motions relating to the § 1 violations in Blue Cross v. Marshfield Clinic, 883 F. Supp. 1247 (W.D. Wis. 1995), determining that there was evidence that defendants allocated markets and territories with Rhinelander Medical Center, S.C., North Central Health Protection Plan, Wausau Medical Center and Wausau area physicians. The court entered an injunction that included provisions [*7] voiding agreements and understandings to allocate customers, territories, and product and service markets among The Marshfield Clinic, Security Health Plan, Inc., Rhinelander Medical Center, S.C., Wausau area physicians, North Central Health Protection Plan, Ministry Corporation, Gunderson Clinic and Rice Clinic.

On April 21, 1995, The Marshfield Clinic appealed the verdict. Although the Seventh Circuit reversed the verdict on other grounds, it affirmed the liability finding relating to the § 1 conspiracy to divide markets and remanded the case for a new trial to determine damages resulting solely from the division of markets. See Blue Cross v. Marshfield Clinic, 65 F.3d 1406, 1416 (7th Cir. 1995), cert denied, 134 L. Ed. 2d 233, 116 S. Ct. 1288 (1996). The court of appeals directed the district court to rewrite the injunction but held that the provisions forbidding defendants from allocating customers, territories and product and service markets with Wausau Area Physicians, North Central Health Protection Plan, Rhinelander Medical Corporation, S.C. and Ministry Corporation must stand. See id.

B. Rozema Complaint

The Rozema complaint contains the following additional [*8] allegations of fact. Plaintiffs Henry and Joann Rozema are married and reside at 10136 Stadt Road, Marshfield, Wisconsin. The Rozemas were purchasers of physician services from defendant The Marshfield Clinic and purchasers of Health Maintenance Organization health care services from defendant Security Health Plan, Inc. during the period of the alleged antitrust violations by defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. The Rozemas are suing on behalf of themselves and other purchasers of physician services from The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. (Physician services are products and services related to primary and specialty health care, including pharmaceuticals, laboratory tests, in-patient and out-patient services and health maintenance organization health care packages, services and products.)

Beginning as early as 1987 and continuing to the present, The Marshfield Clinic allocated customers and territories with the Rhinelander Medical Center, S.C., North Central Health Protection Plan, Wausau Area physicians and the Wausau Medical Center and allocated customers, territories, products and services with the Sisters the Sorrowful Mother Ministry [*9] Corporation. As a result of these practices, the prices of physician services were raised, fixed, pegged or stabilized and plaintiffs have and continue to be damaged in an amount to be determined.

C. Malek and Halida Complaints

1. Malek Complaint

Plaintiff Kathleen V. Malek resides in Woodruff, Oneida County, Wisconsin. Malek has been and will continue to be a purchaser of health care services from defendant The Marshfield Clinic. The fees charged to Malek by The Marshfield Clinic for health care services have been paid in part by the Wisconsin Medical Assistance Plan, which is administered by the Wisconsin Department of Health and Family Services. Plaintiff Wisconsin Department of Health and Family Services is joined as a party pursuant to its subrogation interest for fees charged by defendants that were paid in part by the Wisconsin Medical Assistance Plan. Malek is suing on behalf of herself and purchasers of health care services from one or more of the defendants during the period of alleged antitrust violations, including those purchasers reimbursed in whole or in part by the Wisconsin Medical Assistance Plan.

2. Halida Complaint

Plaintiffs Harriet Halida [*10] and Lawrence Halida, residents of Loyal, Clark County, Wisconsin, are subscribers to The Marshfield Clinic's Greater Marshfield Health Plan, which is underwritten by defendant Security Health Plan, Inc. Plaintiff Island Sports Center is a corporation organized and existing under Wisconsin law that operates a sporting goods store in Minocqua, Wisconsin. Island Sports Center is the purchaser of an employer group health maintenance organization plan from Security Health Plan, Inc. Plaintiff Mark McKay resides in Hazelhurst, Oneida County, Wisconsin. McKay is an individual subscriber to The Marshfield Clinic's Greater Marshfield Health Plan, which is underwritten by Security Health Plan, Inc., under the employer group plan issued to Island Sports Center. Plaintiff Town of Mercer Sanitary District # 1 is organized under Wisconsin law with its principal place of business in Mercer, Wisconsin. The Sanitary District is a purchaser of an employer group health maintenance organization plan from Security Health Plan, Inc. The named plaintiffs are suing on behalf of themselves, individual and employer group subscribers to the Greater Marshfield Health Plan, purchasers of defendants' health care [*11] plans and employers and employees enrolled or subscribing to defendants' health care plans.

As a result of The Marshfield Clinic's anti-competitive conduct, The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. have the power to terminate health care providers and deny subscribers access to those providers. Effective January 1996, The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. required all chiropractic providers in or near Clark County, Wisconsin, to become part of Allied Health of Wisconsin, S.C. or not continue as providers for Security Health Plan, Inc. Dr. Gallen Scharer, D.C. is a chiropractor in Owen, Wisconsin, who has treated plaintiff Halida for several years and has relieved her lower back and leg pain with a special technique not used by any other chiropractor in Clark County. Because Dr. Scharer chose not to merge his practice into Allied Health of Wisconsin, S.C., he was not allowed to continue to be a provider for Security Health Plan, Inc. Halida informed Security Health Plan, Inc. that other chiropractic providers could not give her the same relief and asked The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. to pay for her care by Dr. Scharer. Security Health [*12] Plan, Inc.

refused Halida's request on or about February 20, 1996, and since then, Halida has suffered substantial pain, discomfort and injury.

3. Common allegations of fact

The complaints filed in the Malek and Halida cases are identical with respect to the following allegations. Defendant North Central Health Protection Plan is a health care maintenance organization under Wisconsin law with its principal place of business in Wausau, Wisconsin. North Central Health Protection Plan has approximately 37,000 subscribers in the Wausau area. Defendant Rhinelander Medical Center, S.C. is a not-for-profit corporation, organized and existing under Wisconsin law with its principal place of business in Rhinelander, Wisconsin.

Defendants sell a number of products and services, including total physician care, primary and specialty health care, managed health care plans, inpatient and outpatient hospital services, pharmaceuticals, laboratory tests, outpatient services and facilities packages. The Marshfield Clinic sells its physician and other services and products through Security Health Plan, Inc.

Defendants operate in a number of defined geographic markets, offering particular products [*13] and services in each market. Generally, a geographic market includes either an approximate 25-mile radius or a county. For example, defendants' non-competition agreements with their participating physicians define a market as a county or as an area approximately 25 miles in radius around the branch clinic or practice location. However, for total physician services, primary health care and hospital services, the geographic market is defined by the reasonable distance most patients will travel for those services. For specialty physician and outpatient services, the market is the county in which the specialized care is provided and those immediately adjacent counties in which specialized care is unavailable. The geographic market of a managed health care plan depends on that of the participating primary care physicians who either directly treat or refer patients to specialized physicians.

Since at least 1987 and continuing into the present, The Marshfield Clinic, Security Health Plan, Inc., North Central Health Protection Plan, Rhinelander Medical Center, S.C., unaffiliated physicians and clinics and other co-conspirators have divided markets, customers and territories for health plan [*14] and health care services. The Marshfield Clinic, Security Health Plan, Inc. and North Central Health Protection Plan agreed not to open offices in each other's territories. In 1992, although Security Health Plan, Inc. had fewer than thirty percent of the health maintenance organization subscribers in the counties of Lincoln and Marathon where North Central Health Protection Plan was active, it enrolled more than ninety percent of the subscribers in the surrounding counties of Oneida, Price, Taylor, Clark and Ward.

The actions of defendants have had a number of effects. Competition has been eliminated between The Marshfield Clinic, Security Health Plan, Inc., North Central Health Protection Plan, Rhinelander, their co-conspirators and would-be competitors. Products are defined and controlled by defendants' division of geographical markets, territories and customers and there are no viable substitutes for defendants' products. Prices of health care services, health plans, and health care insurance within the markets where the defendants have divided customers, territories and markets have been fixed, raised, maintained and stabilized at artificially high and uncompetitive levels throughout [*15] North Central Wisconsin. For example, physician fees and rates charged by The Marshfield Clinic within the geographic markets where it has a dominant number of physicians and market power are substantially higher (as much as twenty percent) than those in comparable areas. Published independent studies indicate that The Marshfield Clinic has the highest-priced physician services in Wisconsin, with prices substantially above the average. The premiums charged by Security Health Plan, Inc. are substantially higher than other health maintenance organizations and exceed Wisconsin state averages for federal and state employee plans.

Plaintiffs have been injured because they have paid more for health plan services and health care services than they would have otherwise paid in a free and open competitive market.

OPINION

I. MOTIONS TO DISMISS

Defendant Rhinelander Medical Center, S.C. has not submitted a brief but instead incorporates by reference the briefs of defendants The Marshland Clinic, Security Health Plan, Inc. and North Central Health Protection Plan. Therefore, I will address defendant Rhinelander Medical Center's motions to dismiss only to the extent that they have been addressed [*16] in the briefs of the other defendants. Because no defendant has briefed the question whether parties must be joined under Fed. R. Civ. P. 19, defendant Rhinelander Medical Center's motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(7\) will be denied.

A. Failure to State a Claim Under the Sherman Act and Wis. Stat. § 133.03

HN1[] In considering a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court must accept as true the well-pleaded factual allegations in the complaint, drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 72, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59, 104 S. Ct. 2229 (1984); Porter v. DiBlasio, 93 F.3d 301, 305 (7th Cir. 1996); Yeksigian v. Nappi, 900 F.2d 101, 102 (7th Cir. 1990). The court may dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) only if the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. Porter, 93 F.3d at 305 (citation omitted).

HN2[] The standard for pleading is low, requiring only "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\). A plaintiff is not required to plead the particulars [*17] of his or her claim unless it deals with fraud or mistake. See Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 168, 113 S. Ct. 1160, 1163, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517 (1993); Hammes v. Aamco Transmissions, Inc., 33 F.3d 774, 778 (7th Cir. 1994). "One pleads a 'claim for relief' by briefly describing the events." Sanjuan v. American Bd. of Psychiatry and Neurology, 40 F.3d 247, 251 (7th Cir. 1994). Matching facts against legal elements comes later, such as in consideration of motions for summary judgment. Id.; Palmer v. Bd. of Education Community United School District, 46 F.3d 682, 688 (7th Cir. 1995). On a motion to dismiss, "the plaintiff receives the benefit of the imagination, so long as the hypotheses are consistent with the complaint." Sanjuan, 40 F.3d at 251 (citation omitted). The pleading rule is equally applicable in antitrust cases. See MCM Partners v. Andrews-Bartlett & Associates, 62 F.3d 967, 976 (7th Cir. 1995); Sanjuan, 40 F.3d at 251; Hammes, 33 F.3d at 782.

Defendants cite several cases in arguing that an antitrust plaintiff may not assert bald legal conclusions unsupported by allegations of fact. See, e.g., Palda v. General Dynamics Corp., 47 F.3d 872, 875 (7th Cir. 1995); Schiffels v. Kemper Financial Services, 978 F.2d 344 (7th Cir. 1992); Benson v. Cady, 761 F.2d 335 (7th Cir. 1985); Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101 (7th Cir. 1984); Sutliff, Inc. v. Donovan Companies, Inc., 727 F.2d 648 (7th Cir. 1984). However, as the Seventh Circuit held in Hammes, cases that seemingly apply a heightened pleading requirement for antitrust claims cannot be considered authoritative after Leatherman, 507 U.S. 163, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517, 113 S. Ct. 1160, which was decided in 1993. Hammes, 33 F.3d at 782. In Leatherman, the Supreme Court made clear that HN3[] federal courts are not to "interpolate a requirement of fact pleading into the federal rules." Jackson v. Marion County, 66 F.3d 151, 153 (7th Cir. 1995). All but one of the cases cited by defendants were decided before Leatherman. In the more recent case of Palda, 47 F.3d 872, the plaintiff alleged extensive facts but left out the one fact critical to his claim from which the court inferred that the fact was adverse to the plaintiff. See Jackson, 66 F.3d at 154. "Palda probably went as far in the direction of [*19] requiring factual allegations as the rules could be thought to permit ..." Id.

HN4[] Although a plaintiff need not plead facts and may plead conclusions, a plaintiff must provide the defendant with minimal notice of the claim, id. at 153, and include enough information to "outline or adumbrate" the basis of the claim, Panaras v. Liquid Carbonic Industries Corp., 74 F.3d 786, 792 (7th Cir. 1996). HN5[] To bring a successful claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege "1) a contract, combination or conspiracy; 2) a resultant unreasonable restraint of trade in the relevant market; and 3) an accompanying injury." Denny's Marina, Inc. v. Renfro Productions, Inc., 8 F.3d 1217, 1220 (7th Cir. 1993). "There are two standards for evaluating whether an alleged restraint of trade is unreasonable: the rule of reason and the per se rule." Id. (citations omitted). Plaintiffs' allegations of division of markets, territories and customers constitute per se unreasonable restraints of trade. See Hammes, 33 F.3d at 782 (citing Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349, 111 S. Ct. 401 (1990) (per curiam)). HN6[] The Wisconsin antitrust law, Wis. Stat. § 133.03, was modeled after the Sherman Act. What amounts to a conspiracy in restraint of trade under the Sherman Act amounts to a conspiracy in restraint of trade under the state act. See State v. Waste Management of Wisconsin, Inc., 81 Wis. 2d 555, 574, 261 N.W.2d 147, 155 (1978); Madison v. Hyland, Hall & Co., 73 Wis. 2d 364, 375, 243 N.W.2d 422, 428 (1975).

Defendants have challenged the sufficiency of plaintiffs' complaints regarding allegations of a contract, combination or conspiracy, antitrust standing and injury and relevant markets.

1. Contract, combination or conspiracy

Plaintiffs are required to plead the "existence of an agreement in the form of a contract, combination or conspiracy that imposes an unreasonable restraint on trade." Pudlo v. Adamski, 789 F. Supp. 247, 249 (N.D. Ill. 1992) (ruling on motion to dismiss an antitrust claim). Further, the alleged conspiracy must be cognizable under the antitrust laws. See id. (agreement between officers of the same firm is not a § 1 conspiracy). Defendants The Marshfield Clinic, Security Health Plan, Inc. and North Central Health Protection Plan contend that plaintiffs do not allege facts to [*21] support their broad conclusions that defendants contracted, combined or conspired to divide markets. Specifically, defendants assert that plaintiffs must offer some description of the alleged agreement, its purpose and the details surrounding its formation.

The Rozema complaint reveals a theory of a contract, combination or conspiracy to restrain trade. Plaintiffs allege that since 1987, defendants allocated customers, territories, products or services with various competitors. In support of its theory, the Rozema plaintiffs allege that the prices of physician services were raised, fixed, pegged or stabilized and that defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. have been found liable for market division with respect to the same customers, territories, products or services. The Malek and Halida complaints are identical with respect to a theory of a contract, combination or conspiracy. These plaintiffs allege that defendants The Marshfield Clinic, Security Health Plan, Inc., North Central Health Protection Plan and Rhinelander Medical Center, S.C. divided markets, customers and territories for health plan and health care services. The Malek and Halida plaintiffs [*22] allege that prices were raised and stabilized at high and uncompetitive levels, competition was eliminated and defendants were not active within each other's territories. The division of markets and the allocation of customers, territories, products and services are practices that violate § 1 of the Sherman Act. See Palmer, 498 U.S. at 48-49; Blue Cross, 65 F.3d at 1415.

As discussed above, plaintiffs are not required to allege specific facts in support of their conclusions, providing that they sufficiently outline the contours of their claim. Plaintiffs have done more than make bald legal conclusions of a contract, combination or conspiracy; they have alleged facts relating to the approximate date, purpose and effect of defendants' agreement. It is conceivable that plaintiffs could prove a set of facts supporting their allegations, from which a contract, combination or conspiracy can be inferred. See MCM, 62 F.3d at 977. The detail sought by defendants is not required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a). It can be developed either during discovery or summary judgment. See Hammes, 33 F.3d at 782; Three Crown Ltd. Partnership v. Caxton Corp., 817 F. Supp. 1033, 1048 (S.D.N.Y. [*23] 1993).

Defendant North Central Health Protection Plan argues that the Halida and Malek plaintiffs did not allege any specific act by it, mentioning it by name only five times in their complaints. Defendant is correct that the complaints focus primarily on defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. However, defendant North Central Health Protection Plan is identified clearly as a defendant in each complaint. Both the Halida and Malek complaints specifically allege that since 1987, defendant North Central Health Protection Plan divided markets, customers and territories for health plan and health care services with others. In addition, plaintiffs allege that defendant North Central Health Protection Plan agreed not to open offices in the territories of defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. As a result, the complaints do provide at least minimal notice to defendant North Central Health Protection Plan of the claim against it.

2. Antitrust standing and injury

HN7 Parties who may bring an antitrust action are limited to those 1) who have suffered the type of injury that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent (antitrust injury) and [*24] 2) whose injuries are a result of defendant's unlawful conduct (antitrust standing). Serfecz v. Jewel Food Stores, 67 F.3d 591, 595 (7th Cir. 1995) (citing Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977); Blue Cross & Blue Shield v. Marshfield Clinic, 881 F. Supp. 1309, 1314-15 (W.D. Wis. 1994) (citations omitted). To establish an antitrust injury, which is sometimes considered an element of antitrust standing, a plaintiff must be able to show that the antitrust laws protect his or her interests and that the violation was the cause-in-fact of the injury. See Blue Cross, 881 F. Supp. at 1314-15. Plaintiff's loss must be attributable to the "anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny." Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990). One purpose of the antitrust laws is to protect consumers from the anti-competitive conduct of suppliers. See Serfecz, 67 F.3d at 597; Stamatakis Industries, Inc. v. King, 965 F.2d 469, 471 (7th Cir. 1992) (citations omitted). Consumer plaintiffs must show that their injury results from defendants' acts [*25] that reduce output or raise prices in the relevant market. See Stamatakis, 965 F.2d at 471.

HN8 [↑] Antitrust standing examines the connection between the asserted wrongdoing and plaintiff's claimed injury. Blue Cross, 881 F. Supp. at 1315 (citation omitted). Only those who are in the best position to vindicate the alleged violation are awarded standing; plaintiffs whose injuries are indirect or secondary will be unsuccessful. Id. Factors relevant to the standing determination include: 1) the causal connection between the violation and the injury; 2) the nature of the injury; and 3) whether plaintiff's claim for damages is speculative, potentially duplicative, or involves complex apportionment. See Serfecz, 67 F.3d at 595-96. "When the plaintiff's injury is linked to the injury inflicted upon the market . . . the compensation of the injured party promotes the designated purpose of the antitrust law-the preservation of competition." Id. at 597. To the extent that plaintiffs are direct purchasers of services from defendants, they have antitrust standing. See Blue Cross, 65 F.3d at 1414 (noting patients directly paying for physician services may recover costs to the [*26] extent that they are not reimbursed).

a. Antitrust standing and injury of Rozema plaintiffs

Plaintiffs allege that they are all purchasers of physician services from defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. and that as a result of defendants' anti-competitive conduct, they were injured because the prices of physician services were raised, fixed, pegged or stabilized. Plaintiffs have made sufficient allegations of an antitrust injury and antitrust standing under the standards outlined above. Because plaintiffs have alleged loss flowing from anti-competitive acts that affect consumer prices and restrict competition, they have alleged a cognizable antitrust injury. As alleged direct purchasers or consumers, plaintiffs are among those protected by the antitrust laws and have antitrust standing.

However, defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. contend that plaintiffs' allegations lack sufficient detail to state a claim. Specifically, defendants note that plaintiffs do not allege what services were received, how much was paid for the services, whether they were reimbursed for any payments or how the price was affected by the alleged market [*27] division. Plaintiffs generally describe services received as physician services, which include primary and specialty health care, and indicate that prices of these services were raised, fixed, pegged or stabilized. The degree of detail sought by defendants with respect to specific services and payments is not required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a) and can be developed as the case proceeds. See Hammes, 33 F.3d at 782. "The discovery process and other pre-trial procedures will provide 'whatever additional sharpening of the issues is necessary.'" Three Crown, 817 F. Supp. at 1048 (citations omitted).

b. Antitrust injury to Malek and Halida plaintiffs

Defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. contend that plaintiffs have not shown competitive harm resulting from the alleged conspiracies or injury resulting from that harm. However, plaintiffs allege that they have overpaid for health plan and health care services. They allege that because of defendants' anti-competitive conduct, the prices of health care services, health care plans and health care insurance have been fixed, raised, maintained and stabilized at artificially high and uncompetitive levels. Plaintiffs [*28] also allege that defendants' division of markets has eliminated competition and dictated the products available without substitute in the relevant market. Because plaintiffs have alleged overpayments flowing from anti-competitive acts that affect consumer prices and restrict competition, they have alleged the type of injury that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. As discussed above, any further detail sought by defendants can be developed during later proceedings.

c. Antitrust standing of Malek plaintiffs

Defendants The Marshfield Clinic, Security Health Plan, Inc. and North Central Health Protection Plan raise concerns related to the standing of plaintiff Malek and those whom she represents. Plaintiffs have alleged that they are purchasers of health care services from one or more of defendants and that the fees charged to them for health care services have been paid in whole or in part by the Wisconsin Medical Assistance Plan, administered by plaintiff Wisconsin Department of Health and Family Services. Defendants argue that plaintiffs have not suffered any loss because Wis. Stat. § 49.45(18) dictates that they do not pay for their services beyond a nominal co-payment [*29] of $ 3.00. Defendants contend that the remainder of the physician's fee is paid by the state, up to an amount determined by the state, and that the provider is prohibited from billing the patient for the shortfall under *Wis. Stat. § 49.49\(3m\)*.

Although defendants' argument may have merit, determining whether plaintiffs have standing is premature. The facts surrounding plaintiffs' particular involvement in the public assistance program will need to be developed. Plaintiffs do not allege that they are enrolled in any particular program or outline the payment structure for health services that they receive. Therefore, it is conceivable that plaintiffs could prove a set of facts establishing their antitrust standing. However, those plaintiffs who have been reimbursed in full from plaintiff Wisconsin Department of Health and Family Services do not have standing and will not be included in the plaintiff class if one is certified because they would not have suffered any injuries from defendants' conduct. See *Blue Cross, 65 F.3d at 1414*. The remaining plaintiffs may recover only to the extent that they paid directly for their services and were not reimbursed for those amounts. Id. [*30] (purchasers cannot recover reimbursed amounts). Further, if the cost of services received by plaintiffs is set by the Wisconsin Medical Assistance Plan, it is unlikely that plaintiffs receiving aid under the plan were injured by overcharges or high prices resulting from defendants' alleged anti-competitive conduct.

d. Subrogation interest of plaintiff Wisconsin Department of Health and Family Services

In their complaint, plaintiffs join plaintiff Wisconsin Department of Health and Family Services pursuant to its subrogation interest under *Wis. Stat. § 49.89\(2\)*. Defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. argue that the department cannot be subrogated to plaintiffs' claims because the state was named involuntarily and the subrogation right is limited to benefits paid as the result of injury, sickness or death that creates a cause of action in tort or contract.

Section 49.89\(2\) HN9 states that if the Department of Health and Family Services provides public assistance as a result of the occurrence of an injury, sickness or death that creates a claim or cause of action, whether in tort or contract, on the part of a public assistance recipient against a third party, [*31] the department is subrogated to the rights of the recipient. On its face, the statute appears to apply only where the occurrence of injury or sickness creates a claim. In addition, the majority of cases addressing *§ 49.89* or its predecessor, § 49.65, involve malpractice, personal injury or other tort actions. See, e.g., *Ritt v. Dental Care Associates, S.C., 199 Wis. 2d 48, 543 N.W.2d 852 \(Ct. App. 1995\)*.

Plaintiffs are seeking relief for excessive prices charged as a result of alleged anti-competitive conduct. Their cause of action was not created by the occurrence of an injury, sickness or death but by defendants' alleged anti-competitive practices. Plaintiffs' sickness, for which they paid and received treatment from defendants, merely gives them standing to bring suit. However, the subrogation statute may be applicable to plaintiffs' claims for relief under *Wis. Stat. 133.14*, which provides for the recovery of payments made on illegal contracts. See Subsection B of this opinion. To the extent that plaintiffs are allowed to recover under *§ 133.14*, the department could have a subrogation interest under *§ 49.89\(2\)*.

HN10 Under *Wis. Stat. 803.03\(2\)\(a\)*, public assistance recipients [*32] asserting a claim for affirmative relief are required to join the public assistance provider that has a right of subrogation under *§ 49.89\(2\)*. *Wis. Stat. § 803.03\(2\)\(a\)* (Supp. 1996); see also *Radloff General Casualty Company of Wisconsin, 147 Wis. 2d 14, 16-17, 432 N.W.2d 597, 598 \(Ct. App. 1988\)* (discussing same). The allegations of fact do not indicate that plaintiff Wisconsin Department of Health and Family Services objects to the joinder. Presumably, it is aware of the action because *Wis.*

Stat. § 49.89(3m) requires a lawyer representing a public assistance recipient to notify the department as soon as practicable after filing a claim that is subject to subrogation under § 49.89(2). If plaintiff Wisconsin Department of Health and Family Services chooses not to participate or is shown not to have a right to subrogation, it will be dismissed. See Radloff, 147 Wis. 2d at 16-17, 432 N.W.2d at 598. At this time, this aspect of defendants' motion to dismiss will be denied.

e. Termination of plaintiff Halida's chiropractor

Defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. raise specific concerns about plaintiff Halida's alleged injury from defendant Security [*33] Health Plan, Inc.'s decision not to include her chiropractor, Dr. Scharer, in its panel of providers. Defendants argue that plaintiff cannot state an antitrust claim on the basis of this alleged circumstance because it does not relate to her allegations of market division. Plaintiff alleges in her complaint that as a result of defendant The Marshfield Clinic's "elimination of competition through unlawful acts," defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. "have the power to terminate health care providers and deny subscribers access to those providers." She alleges that defendants' termination of her chiropractor "was made possible as a result" of their division of markets. Defendants certainly have the power to contract with health care providers on their own terms. However, the termination of Dr. Scharer may be related to a contract, combination or conspiracy to allocate markets, customers and territories. Plaintiff alleges that defendant Security Health Plan, Inc. required all chiropractic providers in or near Clark County, Wisconsin to become part of Allied Health of Wisconsin, S.C. or not continue as a provider for Security Health Plan, Inc. It is conceivable [*34] that plaintiff Halida could prove facts showing that defendant Security Health Plan, Inc.'s decision to terminate its chiropractic providers in Clark County is connected to defendants' alleged market division agreements and activities.

In the alternative, defendants argue that plaintiff Halida's claim with respect to her chiropractor is barred by the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1012(b) and 1013(b). Section 1012(b) HN11[<sup>15</sup>] removes from antitrust scrutiny all conduct that is part of the "business of insurance" and regulated by state law. See Group Life & Health Insurance Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205, 219, 59 L. Ed. 2d 261, 99 S. Ct. 1067 (1979). However, § 1013(b) makes the Sherman Act "applicable in any event to acts of coercion, intimidation or boycott." Id. The Supreme court has articulated a three part standard for determining what constitutes "business of insurance" for purposes of § 1012(b): "1) whether the practice has the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk; 2) whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry." [*35] American Deposit Corp. v. Schacht, 84 F.3d 834, 839 (7th Cir. 1996) (citing Union Labor Life Ins. Co. v. Pireno, 458 U.S. 119, 73 L. Ed. 2d 647, 102 S. Ct. 3002 (1982); Group Life, 440 U.S. 205, 59 L. Ed. 2d 261, 99 S. Ct. 1067).

Defendants argue that their alleged refusal to offer plaintiff a specific type of health care coverage goes to the terms of her contract with defendant Security Health Plan, Inc. and, therefore, is within the "business of insurance." In support, defendants cite Health Care Equalization Committee v. Iowa Medical Society, 851 F.2d 1020 (8th Cir. 1988), arguing that the case involved a claim similar to that of plaintiff Halida. In Health Care, plaintiff alleged that defendant had monopolized health care insurance in Iowa by taking over coverage of patients previously afforded third party coverage for chiropractic services by private insurers. Health Care, 851 F.2d at 1027. The court noted that plaintiff's allegations were aimed specifically at the contractual relationship between the insurer and its subscribers and held that these contracts were part of the business of insurance. Id.

Although the termination of Dr. Scharer may have [*36] had an indirect effect on the contract between defendants and plaintiff Halida, plaintiff Halida's allegations relate primarily to the contractual relationship between defendants and her former chiropractor. In Group Life, the Supreme Court held that HN12[<sup>16</sup>] an insurance company's contracts with participating pharmacies are "merely arrangements for the purchase of goods and services" from a third party and are not part of the business of insurance. See Health Care, 851 F.2d at 1028 (quoting Group Life, 440 U.S. at 215-16) (distinguishing contracts between insurer and subscribers from contracts between insurer and providers); Brillhart v. Mutual Medical Ins., Inc., 768 F.2d 196, 199 (7th Cir. 1985) (holding insurance company a purchaser of medical services from participating doctors). Defendants' contracts with participating physicians are similar; they are for the purchase of goods and services, see Group Life, 440 U.S. at 232 n.40; Brillhart, 768 F.2d at 199. They do not involve the transferring or spreading of a policyholder's risk, see Pireno, 458 U.S. at 130 (holding transfer of risk effected and completed by contract between insurer and insured), or an integral [*37] part of the policy relationship between the insurer and its subscribers, see Group Life, 440 U.S. at 215-217 (rejecting argument that provider agreements are exempt because they are so closely related to the insured's policies). Accordingly, defendants' motion to dismiss will be denied as to this aspect of plaintiff Halida's claim.

3. Relevant market

Defendants contend that the Rozema, Halida and Malek plaintiffs did not define the "relevant market," or the market in which the alleged anti-competitive conduct and resulting injury took place. The relevant market includes the geographic and product markets that defendants have allegedly divided. See Besser Publishing Company v. Pioneer Press, Inc., 571 F. Supp. 640, 641 (N.D. Ill. 1983). HN13[] The relevant market defines the scope of an antitrust claim because both the wrongful conduct and the resulting injury must occur within the same market. See Serfecz, 67 F.3d at 596.

The Rozema plaintiffs have alleged that they are purchasers of the products of defendant The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. and allege that defendants' sell physician services, including pharmaceuticals, laboratory tests, in-patient [*38] and out-patient services and health maintenance organization health care. The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit has indicated that physician services do constitute a cognizable product market. See Blue Cross, 65 F.3d 1406. The Rozema plaintiffs also allege that defendant The Marshfield Clinic operates in 14 counties in North Central Wisconsin and wholly owns and maintains defendant Security Health Plan, Inc. The Malek and Halida plaintiffs allege that they are purchasers of defendants' products, including total physician care, primary and specialty health care, managed health care plans, inpatient and outpatient hospital services, pharmaceuticals, laboratory tests, outpatient services and facilities packages. The Malek and Halida plaintiffs allege that defendants operate in a variety of geographic markets, which are defined generally by county or an approximate 25-mile radius from a defendant's branch clinic or practice location. The Malek and Halida plaintiffs also allege that defendant The Marshfield Clinic operates in 14 counties in North Central Wisconsin. The Rozema, Malek and Halida plaintiffs apparently are alleging that each defendant agreed to sell its products [*39] in its own territory or geographical area and refrain from selling any or at least some products in other areas, resulting in a division of product and geographic markets.

HN14[] The ultimate determination of the relevant market is an issue of fact for the jury. See Blue Cross, 881 F. Supp. at 1321. Although the specific geographic and product markets will have to be defined at trial, all plaintiffs have made allegations sufficient to outline their antitrust claims. The detail that defendants are looking for is not required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a). See, e.g., Serfecz, 67 F.3d at 596 (defining relevant market as retail grocery and retail shopping center markets); MCM, 62 F.3d at 975-76 (defining relevant market as rentals to convention and trade show business was sufficient to survive motion to dismiss). Plaintiffs could prove a set of facts linking defendants' alleged anti-competitive conduct and plaintiffs' alleged antitrust injury to the product and geographic markets alleged in the complaint.

B. Failure to State a Claim Under Wis. Stat. § 133.14

Defendants argue that plaintiffs cannot seek relief under Wis. Stat. § 133.14, which HN15[] provides for recovery by a person who [*40] has made payments under or pursuant to "contracts or agreements made by any person while a member of any combination or conspiracy prohibited by s. 133.03, and which contract or agreement is founded upon, is the result of, grows out of or is connected with any violation of such section, either directly or indirectly." Plaintiffs maintain the contracts at issue are between defendants and themselves for the provision of physician services and were made while defendants were in violation of § 133.03. Relying on Roux Laboratories, Inc. v. Beauty Franchises, Inc., 60 Wis. 2d 427, 210 N.W.2d 441, 442 (1973), and Open Pantry Food Marts v. Falcone, 92 Wis. 2d 807, 286 N.W.2d 149 (App. 1979), defendants respond that for a person to seek relief under § 133.14, the contract itself must violate § 133.03. Defendants contend that plaintiffs' contracts with them for physician services are not in violation of § 133.03. However, neither Roux nor Open Pantry support defendants' argument directly.

Roux involved a contract dispute in which the defendant counter claimed that plaintiff gave advertising rebates to competitors but did not give rebates to him, alleging anti-competitive [*41] conduct on the part of plaintiff. Roux, 60 Wis. 2d at 428. The defendant sought both to void the contract with plaintiff for the sale of goods and recover his advertising costs under the contract payment recovery statute on the grounds that plaintiff's anti-competitive conduct rendered the contract illegal under § 133.26 (redesignated § 133.14). Id. The Wisconsin Supreme Court found that the statute did not apply to the contract between plaintiff and defendant for the sale of goods because defendant did not receive an alleged illegal rebate. Id. at 429. In Open Pantry, the Wisconsin Court of Appeals held that a plaintiff could not recover payments made on matters outside the illegal contract, allowing recovery "to the extent that the pleadings request only recovery of monies paid on a contract said to be in restraint of trade." Open Pantry, 92 Wis. 2d at 812-13. In both cases, the courts refused recovery under the statute because the parties were seeking to recover general expenses paid to the alleged antitrust violator, not payments made pursuant to a contract.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court addressed the constitutionality of the contract recovery statute in [Hyland, \[\*42\] 73 Wis. 2d at 384, 243 N.W.2d at 432](#), on defendant's demurrer. In Hyland, the plaintiffs alleged that defendants colluded to fix bids on contracts with plaintiffs and sought recovery of payments made under several construction contracts with defendants. Id. In its discussion of the applicable statute of limitation, the court noted that the wrongfulness alleged with respect to the contracts was not that they were per se tortious, but that they were tortious as being the product of the conspiracy. Id. The court held the statute constitutional and permitted the contract recovery claim to go forward. Id., 73 Wis. 2d at 387, 243 N.W.2d at 434-35. Given the court's description of the contracts and subsequent allowance of a contract recovery claim, it would seem that the contract at issue does not have to be illegal in order for a plaintiff to recover payments made pursuant to it. This reading also is consistent with the plain language of the statute, which requires the contract to be founded upon, the result of, connected with or grow out of a violation of § 133.03. Permitting recoupment only when the contract at issue is itself a violation of antitrust law apparently would [*43] be reading the statute too narrowly.

All three complaints in this consolidated case allege the existence of illegal contracts between plaintiffs and defendants for physician services and their entitlement to recovery under § 133.14. Defendant North Central Health Protection Plan contends that plaintiff Malek has not alleged a contract with it and that the plaintiffs whom she represents would not have contracts with it. To the extent that there is no contract between a specific plaintiff and a specific defendant, § 133.14 will not apply. Because plaintiffs could prove a set of facts establishing that they have contracted with defendants and the contracts resulted from, grew out of or were at least connected with defendants' alleged violations of state antitrust law, I will allow plaintiffs to proceed with their claims under § 133.14.

C. Offensive Non-Mutual Collateral Estoppel

Because all three complaints refer to an earlier judgment against defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. for market division, all of the defendants assume that plaintiffs will seek to invoke offensive non-mutual collateral estoppel against them. Defendants The Marshfield Clinic, [*44] Security Health Plan, Inc. and North Central Health Protection Plan argue that plaintiffs have not alleged the essential elements for the use of offensive non-mutual collateral estoppel and that it is impossible for plaintiffs to invoke it against any of the defendants.

HN16 [↑] Offensive collateral estoppel involves a plaintiff seeking to estop a defendant from relitigating the issues that the defendant previously litigated and lost against another plaintiff. See Parklane Hosiery Co. v. Shore, 439 U.S. 322, 329, 58 L. Ed. 2d 552, 99 S. Ct. 645 \(1979\). In Parklane, the Supreme Court held that trial courts have broad discretion to determine when offensive collateral estoppel should be applied but indicated that courts should not allow it where a plaintiff easily could have joined in the earlier action or where it would be unfair to the defendant. Parklane, 439 U.S. at 331. Unfairness may result in cases in which the defendant had little incentive to defend in the prior suit, the judgment serving as the basis for collateral estoppel is inconsistent with other prior judgments in favor of the defendant, or the second action affords the defendant procedural opportunities unavailable [*45] in the first action that could result in a different outcome. Id. at 330. The Seventh Circuit has held that HN17 [↑] "for collateral estoppel to apply, four elements must be met:

- 1) the issue sought to be precluded must be the same as that involved in the prior action, 2) the issue must have been actually litigated, 3) the determination of the issue must have been essential to the final judgment, and 4) the party against whom estoppel is invoked must be fully represented in the prior action."

*La Preferida v. Cerveceria Modelo, S.A. de C.V., 914 F.2d 900, 905-906 \(7th Cir. 1990\)*.

Defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. argue that plaintiffs are the type of "wait and see plaintiffs" that Parklane sought to prohibit and that allowing the use of offensive non-mutual collateral estoppel would be unfair because the Blue Cross verdict is ambiguous. Although these issues may arise on summary judgment or at trial, they cannot be resolved from the allegations in the complaints. Additional facts are required. Plaintiffs could adduce facts sufficient to meet the four elements required for collateral estoppel to apply; nothing alleged in plaintiffs' [*46] complaints clearly prohibits its use against defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. The adjudicatory facts show that defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. were parties to the prior suit and the judgment relating to market division is final. More information is needed concerning which issues, if any, will be the basis of collateral estoppel, plaintiffs' involvement in or knowledge of the prior lawsuit and defendants' incentives in defending the prior lawsuit. Because defendants' concerns regarding the ambiguity of the Blue Cross verdict depend in part on the issues, if any, that will be the basis of offensive non-mutual collateral estoppel, I will reserve ruling on this matter until plaintiffs have identified the relevant issues. I do note that the special verdict used in the Blue Cross case delineates the jury's findings on the specific grounds for liability and is not in itself ambiguous. The court of appeals' concern with the special verdict related to the structure of the form: "we do not suggest that this form would have constituted reversible error . . . we merely offer . . . our belief that it is not the best possible form, [*47] because it does not force jurors to think before filling it out." Blue Cross, 65 F.3d at 1417. The court made clear that "the jury verdict on liability must stand insofar as the charge of a division of markets is concerned." Id.

The Malek and Halida plaintiffs will not be permitted to invoke offensive non-mutual collateral estoppel against defendants North Central Health Protection Plan or Rhinelander Medical Center, S.C. Because neither defendant was a party in the earlier lawsuit and both are competitors of defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc., plaintiffs cannot prove a set of facts showing that defendants North Central Health Protection Plan and Rhinelander Medical Center, S.C. were fully represented in Blue Cross. See La Preferida, 914 F.2d at 906. The use of offensive collateral estoppel would be unfair to defendants. See Parklane, 439 U.S. at 331. However, I am not dismissing plaintiffs' claims against defendants North Central Health Protection Plan and Rhinelander because, in lieu of invoking offensive non-mutual collateral estoppel, plaintiffs may be able to adduce sufficient facts from which a reasonable jury could find liability.

[*48] II. MOTION TO STRIKE PORTIONS OF HALIDA COMPLAINT

In the alternative to their motion to dismiss the Halida complaint, defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. have moved to strike as irrelevant and immaterial paragraphs 17-19, 23-25, 28, 30-33, 35-36, 38-39, 42-43, and 61.B-61.K of plaintiffs' complaint. Defendants argue that these paragraphs bear no connection to plaintiffs' single allegation of market division and are prejudicial because they add complexity, have a cumulative effect and may mislead the jury. Plaintiffs make the general argument that the challenged paragraphs are relevant and material to their claim of market division.

HN18 [↑] Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(f\), "the court may order stricken from any pleading any insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter." Motions to strike are not favored and usually will be denied unless the allegations are not related to the subject matter of the litigation and are prejudicial to the objecting party. Capitol Indemnity Corp. v. Tranel Developments, Inc., 144 F.R.D. 346, 347 \(N.D. Ill. 1992\); Hanna v. Lane, 610 F. Supp. 32, 34 \(D.C. Ill. 1985\) (citation omitted). "Thus, [*49] a motion to strike frequently has been denied when no prejudice could result from the challenged allegations, even though the matter literally is within the categories set forth in Rule 12\(f\)." 5A Charles Alan Wright and Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure Civil 2d § 1382, at 690-92 (1990) (citations omitted). Any doubts are to be resolved in favor of the objecting party. See Pain Prevention Lab, Inc. v. Electronic Waveform Labs, Inc., 657 F. Supp. 1486, 1491 \(N.D. Ill. 1987\).

The paragraphs in question generally relate to employment and affiliation agreements with physicians (paragraphs 17-19, 23-25, 35-36, 42-43 ) and alleged acts by defendants to maintain dominant market power (paragraphs 28, 30-33, 38-39, 61.B-61.K). Although much of this information relates directly to monopolization, it is not clear that it is completely irrelevant to plaintiffs' allegations of market division. Paragraphs 32-33 and 39 discuss market division in conjunction with either affiliated physicians or market power. Monopolies and market division are interrelated and may involve similar methods of proof. For example, information about market power and affiliated physicians could [\[\*50\]](#) be relevant in proving the alleged contract, combination or conspiracy to divide markets and in defining the market in question. After a thorough review of the complaint, I cannot say that the circumstances surrounding defendants' affiliations with physicians and overall market power are completely unrelated to plaintiffs' claims.

Defendants' main concern is the cumulative and confusing effect of the challenged paragraphs. The allegations involving the restraint of trade through aggregation of market power and exclusive affiliation with physicians may be cumulative but it is unclear how this is prejudicial to defendants. The complaint is not evidence and will not be shown to the jury. Defendants are correct that plaintiffs' complaint is lengthy, verbose, poorly organized and redundant. Although plaintiffs may not have followed the Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\) mandate for a short and plain statement of their claim, striking several paragraphs of their complaint is not appropriate in the absence of prejudice or scandalous or inflammatory allegations. Because defendants have not shown that the challenged portions of plaintiffs' complaint have no value in determining the issues of this case and [\[\*51\]](#) will prejudice them, their motion to strike will be denied. See Capitol Indemnity, 144 F.R.D. at 348.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that the motions to dismiss of defendants The Marshfield Clinic, Security Health Plan, Inc., North Central Health Protection Plan, and Rhinelander Medical Center, S.C. and the motion to strike of defendants The Marshfield Clinic and Security Health Plan, Inc. are DENIED.

Entered this 10th day of March, 1997.

BY THE COURT:

BARBARA B. CRABB

District Judge

American Professional Testing Serv. v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal & Professional Publs.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

December 10, 1996, Argued, Submitted, Pasadena, California ; March 11, 1997, Filed

Nos. 95-56513, 95-56523

Reporter

108 F.3d 1147 *; 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 4296 **; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,741; 97 Cal. Daily Op. Service 1791; 97 Daily Journal DAR 3389

AMERICAN PROFESSIONAL TESTING SERVICE, INC., Plaintiff-Appellant-Cross-Appellee, v. HARCOURT BRACE JOVANOVICH LEGAL AND PROFESSIONAL PUBLICATIONS, INC., Defendant-Appellee-Cross-Appellant.

Prior History: [**1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Central District of California. D.C. No. CV-92-03107-HLH. Harry L. Hupp, District Judge, Presiding.

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

---

courses, hiring, exclusionary, district court, disparagement, predatory, fliers, rival, monopoly power, competitor, law school, advertising, barriers, unfair competition, probability, Sherman Act, monopolization, costs, anti trust law, offers, talent, law student, Lanham Act, neutralization, prevailed, markets, buyers

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Trade Libel > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > Remedies

HN1[] Unfair Business Practices, Elements

While the disparagement of a rival or compromising a rival's employee may be unethical and even impair the opportunities of a rival, its harmful effects on competitors are ordinarily not significant enough to warrant recognition under § 2 of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. The court therefore insists on a preliminary showing of significant and more-than-temporary harmful effects on competition (and not merely upon a competitor or customer) before these practices can rise to the level of exclusionary conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 [down] Actual Monopolization, Claims

To succeed on its claim for actual monopolization under § 2, plaintiff must prove defendant: (i) possessed monopoly power in the relevant markets; (ii) willfully acquired or maintained its monopoly power through exclusionary conduct; and (iii) caused antitrust injury. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

False statements about rivals can obstruct competition on the merits and possess no off-setting redeeming virtues. But distinguishing false statements on which buyers do, or ought reasonably to, rely from customary puffing is not easy. Even at common law, this is a tort that never has been greatly favored. More importantly, the effects upon a rival would usually be very speculative, especially when disparagement is not systematic. Many buyers, moreover, recognize disparagement as non-objective and highly biased. Although hardly a justification for falsehood, buyer distrust of a seller's disparaging comments about a rival seller should caution us against attaching much weight to isolated examples of disparagement. Essential, therefore, is a serious de minimis test. The court would go further and suggest that such claims should presumptively be ignored.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Presumptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

HN4 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To prove that a false and misleading advertising constituted exclusionary conduct, the disparagement must overcome a presumption that the effect on competition was de minimis. A plaintiff may overcome de minimis presumption by cumulative proof that the representations were (1) clearly false, (2) clearly material, (3) clearly likely to induce reasonable reliance, (4) made to buyers without knowledge of the subject matter, (5) continued for prolonged periods, and (6) not readily susceptible of neutralization or other offset by rivals. A plaintiff must satisfy all six elements to overcome de minimis presumption. Otherwise, it fails to prove its claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The actual compromising of rival employees is not grounds for Sherman Act § 2 liability in the absence of a continued pattern of such behavior or of reason to believe that the actual effect was probably significant. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

108 F.3d 1147, *1147L<sup>A</sup>997 U.S. App. LEXIS 4296, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Hiring & Price Squeezes

HN6 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Unlawful predatory hiring occurs when talent is acquired not for purposes of using that talent but for purposes of denying it to a competitor. Such cases can be proved by showing the hiring was made with such predatory intent, i.e. to harm the competition without helping the monopolist, or by showing a clear nonuse in fact. Absent either of those circumstances, the hiring should not be held exclusionary.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

HN7 [down] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Acquiring talent not to use it but to deny it to possible rivals is exclusionary. Such an arrangement has the same harmful tendency and the same lack of redeeming virtue as the promise by a non-employee that he will not compete with the monopolist. But unlike the latter agreement whose existence or nonexistence is a rather clear-cut question, exclusionary employment would be hard to identify. A monopolist would probably use important talent once acquired. And the court should not try to judge whether the acquired talent was used more effectively than readily available alternative personnel. Nor should it try to do so when the defendant pursues a hard-to-match, if not unmatchable, program of recruiting, say, young researchers in his field. In the absence, therefore, of the monopolist's proved subjective intent to hire talent preclusively or of clear nonuse in fact, employment should not be held exclusionary.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 [down] Sherman Act, Claims

To establish a 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 violation for an attempt to monopolize, plaintiff must show, inter alia, that there is a dangerous probability that defendant will achieve monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN9 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Monopoly power is defined as the power to control prices or exclude competition. Mere proof of exclusionary conduct is not sufficient to prove defendant's dangerous probability of success; other proof of market power is required.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN10 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Neither monopoly power nor a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power can exist absent evidence of barriers to new entry or expansion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN11 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

A mere showing of substantial or even dominant market share alone cannot establish market power sufficient to carry out a predatory scheme. The plaintiff must show that new rivals are barred from entering the market and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to expand their output to challenge the predator's high price.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Entry barriers are additional long-run costs that were not incurred by incumbent firms but must be incurred by new entrants, or factors in the market that deter entry while permitting incumbent firms to earn monopoly returns. The main sources of entry barriers are: (1) legal license requirements; (2) control of an essential or superior resource; (3) entrenched buyer preferences for established brands; (4) capital market evaluations imposing higher capital costs on new entrants; and, in some situations, (5) economies of scale. In evaluating entry barriers, the court focuses on their ability to constrain not those already in the market, but those who would enter but are prevented from doing so.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

For purposes of proving a monopoly, reputation alone does not constitute a sufficient entry barrier.

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Costs > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Costs & Attorney Fees, Costs

District courts often order both parties to bear their own costs when both prevail in whole or in part at trial.

Counsel: John G. Roberts, Jr., Adam H. Charnes, Hogan & Hartson, Washington, D.C.; Thomas G. Jackson, Phillips Nizer Benjamin Krim & Ballon, New York, New York; Marc E. Golden, Riley & Reiner, Los Angeles, California, for the plaintiff-appellant-cross-appellee.

Richard R. Mainland, Fulbright & Jaworski, Los Angeles, California; George M. Borkowski, Mitchell, Silberberg & Knupp, Los Angeles, California; Stephen M. Axinn, Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom, New York, New York, for the defendant-appellee-cross-appellant.

Judges: Before: Harry Pregerson, Dorothy W. Nelson, and Diarmuid F. O'Scannlain, Circuit Judges. Opinion by Judge O'Scannlain.

Opinion by: O'SCANNLAIN

Opinion

---

[*1149] OPINION

O'SCANNLAIN, Circuit Judge:

We must decide whether the sponsor of BAR/BRI, the nation's dominant bar review course, violated the Sherman Act by distributing disparaging fliers about, and hiring a faculty member away from, the sponsor of Barpassers, one of its competitors.

I

Bar review companies offer courses to recent law school graduates who are preparing [**2] to sit for a state bar examination. The bar examination of most states includes a "multistate" portion consisting of a standardized 200 question multiple-choice test (identical in all states), and a state-law component that tests the law of the particular state offering the examination. A full service bar review course prepares a student for both portions of a state's bar examination: multistate and state law. A supplemental bar review course prepares a student for only one portion of a state's bar examination.

Bar review course sponsors compete for potential customers on law school campuses through distribution of advertising fliers, sponsored student events, and advertisements in student newspapers. These businesses promote their courses directly to law students throughout their three years of law school. Some law students are employed as sales representatives to market courses to their classmates, and full-time sales personnel "table sit" at law schools to promote their firm's courses.

American Professional Testing Service, Inc. ("American") provides full service bar review courses under the name Barpassers, offers supplemental bar review courses under the name APTS Multistate [**3] Maximizer, and publishes legal study aids under the name Sum & Substance. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal and Professional Publications, Inc. ("Harcourt") provides full service bar review courses under the name BAR/BRI, offers supplemental bar review courses [*1150] under the name Gilbert Multistate Workshop, and publishes legal study aids under the name Gilbert Legal Summaries.

Harcourt offers its BAR/BRI course in 46 states and enrolls far more students than its nearest competitor. Harcourt owns and operates BAR/BRI bar review courses in 26 jurisdictions and has license agreements with licensees in another 20 states.<sup>1</sup> Barpassers was first offered in California in preparation for the Winter 1986 bar examination.

---

<sup>1</sup> In 1967, the Bar Review Institute, Inc. ("BRI") bar review course was founded in Illinois by Richard Conviser and others. In the early 1970s, Bay Area Review, Inc. ("BAR") offered a bar review course in California. In 1974, Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, Inc., acquired BAR and BRI. BAR and BRI merged into Harcourt and began doing business under the trade name "BAR/BRI." By 1974, BAR and BRI were offering full service bar review courses in various jurisdictions. BRI was offering full service bar review

Barpassers has been offered continuously in California since that time, in Arizona since 1992, and in Nevada and Florida since 1993.

[**4] In September 1991, American became a wholly-owned subsidiary of College Bound, Inc. ("CBI"). Seven months later, a receiver was appointed for CBI in an action commenced by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission. CBI, under fire from federal regulators for overstating revenue and earnings by millions of dollars, filed for bankruptcy protection and was subsequently placed under the control of a Chapter 11 Trustee. In July 1992, CBI disposed of its entire interest in American.

According to American, Harcourt seized on CBI's troubles to "launch a campaign to forestall competition from American" through the distribution on law school campuses of anonymous advertising fliers that suggested that American was implicated in the SEC investigation and might not be able to continue to offer its bar review courses because of CBI's bankruptcy. However, American and its officers were never the subject of the SEC investigation or even accused of fraud or securities violations. Nonetheless, American allegedly suffered "a tremendous drop in enrollments and concomitant loss of profits." American claims Harcourt offered its courses at below-cost prices, provided gratuities to law school administrators [**5] to obtain preferential treatment, and ripped down American's advertising materials. American also maintains that Harcourt's alleged predatory hiring of American Professor Robert Jarvis, who also taught at BAR/BRI, "crippled American's effort to compete in the Florida market."

In May 1992, American filed this action alleging that Harcourt engaged in actual and attempted monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; unlawful mergers and acquisitions in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18; price discrimination in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13; false advertising in violation of Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a); unfair competition; tortious interference with contractual relations; trade libel; and violations of California's Unfair Practices Act. Harcourt filed counterclaims alleging violation of the Lanham Act and various state-law torts.

In April and May 1994, the case was tried before a jury, which returned special verdicts for American on its claims under § 2, the Lanham Act, tortious interference and unfair competition, but against American and for Harcourt on its claims that American had violated [**6] the Lanham Act and had engaged in tortious interference and unfair competition. Trial testimony lasted 11 days, during which the jury heard 29 witnesses and the court admitted over 140 exhibits into evidence. The jury was given a detailed 37-page special verdict form to guide its deliberations. After finding injury proximately caused by Harcourt's exclusionary conduct, the jury awarded American damages (before trebling) of $ 784,753 for injury in California, $ 121,000 for injury in Florida, and $ 110,000 for injury in New York.

The district court subsequently granted Harcourt's motion for judgment as a matter of law ("JMOL") on the Sherman Act claim, [*1151] concluding that there was insufficient evidence that Harcourt either (i) engaged in exclusionary conduct in violation of the Sherman Act or (ii) possessed monopoly power or a dangerous probability of obtaining monopoly power in any market. The district court also denied a motion for a new trial. American and Harcourt each filed timely notices of appeal.

After the jury verdicts, the parties settled all claims except for American's § 2 allegation and court costs which are the subject of these appeals.

II

Considering first the Sherman [**7] Act claim, we must determine whether the district court erred in overturning the jury's factual findings that: (a) Harcourt's disparagement of American constituted exclusionary conduct in California; (b) Harcourt's predatory hiring of American's faculty member constituted exclusionary conduct in Florida; and (c) Harcourt's anti-competitive conduct in the relevant markets resulted in a dangerous probability of monopolization.

---

courses in Illinois, Arizona, Colorado, Washington D.C., Georgia, New Jersey, Texas, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Maryland (as a joint venture). BAR was offering full service bar review courses in California and other Western states. BAR and BRI, as part of a joint venture, began offering a bar review course in New York in 1973 under the name BAR/BRI.

HN1[] While the disparagement of a rival or compromising a rival's employee may be unethical and even impair the opportunities of a rival, its harmful effects on competitors are ordinarily not significant enough to warrant recognition under § 2 of the Sherman Act. See, e.g., Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 225, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578 (1993) ("Even an act of pure malice by one business competitor against another does not, without more, state a claim under the federal antitrust laws; those laws do not create a federal law of unfair competition or 'purport to afford remedies for all torts committed by or against persons engaged in interstate commerce.'") (citation omitted); Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 458, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 (1993) ("The law directs [**8] itself not against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself. . . . Thus, this Court and other courts have been careful to avoid constructions of § 2 which might chill competition, rather than foster it."); Oahu Gas Service, Inc. v. Pacific Resources Inc., 838 F.2d 360, 370 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 870, 102 L. Ed. 2d 149, 109 S. Ct. 180 (1988) ("The goal of the antitrust laws, . . . unlike that of business tort or unfair competition laws, is to safeguard general competitive conditions, rather than to protect specific competitors.") We therefore insist on a "preliminary showing of significant and more-than-temporary harmful effects on competition (and not merely upon a competitor or customer)" before these practices can rise to the level of exclusionary conduct. 3 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law Par. 737b at 278 (1978).

HN2[] To succeed on its claim for actual monopolization under § 2, American must prove Harcourt: (i) possessed monopoly power in the relevant markets; (ii) willfully acquired or maintained its monopoly power through exclusionary conduct; and (iii) caused antitrust injury. Movie 1 & 2 v. United Artists, I**91 909 F.2d 1245, 1254 (9th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1230, 111 S. Ct. 2852, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1020 (1991). American urges that it has made a preliminary showing of two grounds of exclusionary conduct and a dangerous probability of monopolization.

<sup>2</sup>

A

American first argues that the district court erred [**10] in overturning the jury's factual determination that Harcourt's implementation of a campaign designed to disparage American's bar review courses in the California, Arizona, Florida, New York, and national bar review markets through the distribution [*1152] of anonymous, false, and deceptive advertising fliers on law school campuses constituted exclusionary conduct. We disagree.

While false or misleading advertising directed solely at a single competitor may not be competition on the merits, the fliers in question must have a significant and enduring adverse impact on competition itself in the relevant markets to rise to the level of an antitrust violation.

HN3[] False statements about rivals can obstruct competition on the merits and possess no off-setting redeeming virtues. But distinguishing false statements on which buyers do, or ought reasonably to, rely from customary puffing is not easy. Even at common law, this is 'a tort that never has been greatly favored.' More importantly, the effects upon a rival would usually be very speculative, especially when disparagement is not systematic. Many buyers, moreover, recognize disparagement as non-objective and highly biased. Although hardly [**11] a justification for falsehood, buyer distrust of a seller's disparaging comments about a rival seller should caution us against attaching much weight to isolated examples of disparagement. Essential, therefore, is a serious de minimis test. We would go further and suggest that such claims should presumptively be ignored."

Antitrust Law, Par. 737b at 280-81.

<sup>2</sup> American alleged that Harcourt intended to monopolize the full service bar review market of those states in which it possesses monopoly power. BAR/BRI allegedly enjoyed a complete monopoly or control, either by itself or through an affiliation, of over 70% of the full service bar review markets in Georgia, Minnesota, Alabama, Nevada, Hawaii, North Carolina, Colorado, Kentucky, Mississippi, Tennessee, South Carolina, Wyoming, Florida, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. In those states where it has substantial competition, Harcourt allegedly has pursued a policy of offering students substantial discounts from the price which they would pay for a full service bar review course if they contracted for the course at a time early in their education.

HN4 To prove that Harcourt's false and misleading advertising constituted exclusionary conduct, the disparagement must overcome a presumption that the effect on competition of the fliers was de minimis. National Ass'n of Pharmaceutical Mfrgs. v. Ayerst Labs., 850 F.2d 904, 916 (2d Cir. 1988). "[A] plaintiff may overcome de minimis presumption 'by cumulative proof that the representations were [1] clearly false, [2] clearly material, [3] clearly likely to induce reasonable reliance, [4] made to buyers without knowledge of the subject matter, [5] continued for prolonged periods, and [6] not readily susceptible of neutralization or other offset by rivals." Id. (citation omitted). American must satisfy all six elements to overcome de minimis presumption. Otherwise, American fails to prove its claim.

[**12] Assuming American's testimony and evidence at trial is correct, the entire disparagement claim hinges on five fliers: "SEC Sues BARPASSERS' Parent Company, Questions Its Enrollment, Financial Health," "CAN BARPASSERS AFFORD TO KEEP THE LIGHTS ON?," "Federal Judge Appoints Receiver To Run Parent of APTS, Barpassers," "BARPASSERS', APTS' parent files for BANKRUPTCY." These fliers were distributed on law school campuses during a two-month period. American also relied on a survey conducted by Dr. Michael Kamins to demonstrate how the fliers suggested to law students that American was in "financial trouble, might be unable to operate its bar review courses, and had been accused of fraud by the SEC." For example, 53 percent of the survey respondents had some belief in or agreed with the statement that "because of its financial circumstances, I would expect the Barpassers course in the future to be less beneficial to me." Furthermore, the district court found that the "fliers came at a bad time for [American]; they surfaced at California (also Arizona and Florida) law schools during the time third year law students had to make financial decisions and pay the tuition for bar review courses, [**13] and there is evidence that the usual increase in sign-ups for [American's] course did not occur for that year, substantially injuring profitability for that year."

However, American presented little evidence, other than the survey, that law students were "clearly likely" to rely on the fliers or that Harcourt's false advertising was not readily susceptible to neutralization or other offset by American. The argument that its neutralization efforts were not completely successful is unavailing; the test refers to "susceptible to neutralization" not "successful in neutralization."

For these reasons, we conclude that the district court did not err in its judgment as to the disparagement of rival issue.

B

American next argues that the jury properly found Harcourt guilty of predatory [*1153] conduct in Florida for hiring Professor Robert Jarvis, a well-known Florida law professor, away from American. Jarvis, who began working for American in March 1992, agreed to teach Florida constitutional law for Barpassers in August 1992. In 1991 and 1992, Jarvis also taught for BAR/BRI. After Jarvis accepted American's offer to teach the Florida Barpassers course, Harcourt countered with an offer that [**14] precluded Jarvis' continued work for American or any other bar review course. Jarvis accepted Harcourt's offer which included increased compensation and greater lecturing and administrative duties.

American does not allege that Harcourt hired any other Barpassers instructor. Absent a continued pattern of compromising American's employees, this one-time hiring of Jarvis by Harcourt is not sufficient to constitute an antitrust violation: HN5 "Nor should the actual compromising of rival employees be grounds for § 2 liability in the absence of a continued pattern of such behavior or of reason to believe that the actual effect was probably significant." Antitrust Law, Par. 737b at 281.

Most importantly, this court's decision in Universal Analytics, Inc. v. MacNeal-Schwendler Corp., 914 F.2d 1256 (9th Cir. 1990) is controlling on these facts. There, we reviewed whether there were any genuine issues of material fact with respect to Universal's claim that MacNeal's hiring of five of Universal's six key technical employees in 1986 and 1987 was predatory in violation of § 2. This was the first reported case of a claimed § 2 violation as a result of alleged employee raiding or predatory [**15] hiring. Universal Analytics held that an internal memo of the producer referring to "wounding" of a competitor by hiring key technical employees showed at most that a secondary motivation of the hirings was to disadvantage competition and was insufficient to show predatory conduct in violation of the Sherman Act. HN6 [↑] "Unlawful predatory hiring occurs when talent is acquired not for purposes of using that talent but for purposes of denying it to a competitor. Such cases can be proved by showing the hiring was made with such predatory intent, i.e. to harm the competition without helping the monopolist, or by showing a clear nonuse in fact." Id. at 1258. Absent either of those circumstances, the court agreed with Professors Areeda and Turner that the hiring should not be held exclusionary:

HN7 [↑] Acquiring talent not to use it but to deny it to possible rivals is exclusionary. Such an arrangement has the same harmful tendency and the same lack of redeeming virtue as the promise by a non-employee that he will not compete with the monopolist. But unlike the latter agreement whose existence or nonexistence is a rather clear-cut question, exclusionary employment would be hard to identify. [**16] A monopolist would probably use important talent once acquired. And the court should not try to judge whether the acquired talent was used more effectively than readily available alternative personnel. Nor should it try to do so when the defendant pursues a hard-to-match, if not unmatchable, program of recruiting, say, young researchers in his field. In the absence, therefore, of the monopolist's proved subjective intent to hire talent preclusively or of clear nonuse in fact, employment should not be held exclusionary.

Id. (quoting from *Antitrust Law*, Par. 702b at 110).

Because American failed to meet the two-prong test set forth in Universal Analytics (harm American without helping Harcourt or Harcourt did not use Jarvis' services), we conclude that the district court did not err in its judgment as to the predatory hiring issue.

C

American next argues that the district court erred in overturning the jury's factual finding that Harcourt's anti-competitive conduct resulted in a dangerous probability of monopolization. HN8 [↑] To establish a § 2 violation for an attempt to monopolize, American must show, inter alia, that there is a dangerous probability that Harcourt [**17] will achieve monopoly power. See *Spectrum Sports*, 506 U.S. at 455-460.

[*1154] HN9 [↑] Monopoly power is defined as "the power to control prices or exclude competition." *United States v. E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co.*, 351 U.S. 377, 391, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 \(1956\). Mere proof of exclusionary conduct is not sufficient to prove Harcourt's dangerous probability of success; other proof of market power is required. *Spectrum Sports*, 506 U.S. at 459 (concluding that dangerous probability of success element is "plainly not met by inquiring only whether the defendant has engaged in 'unfair' or 'predatory' tactics. . . . Demonstrating the dangerous probability of monopolization in an attempt case also requires inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market and the defendant's economic power in that market.") (emphasis added).

Even if Harcourt has a high market share, HN10 [↑] neither monopoly power nor a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power can exist absent evidence of barriers to new entry or expansion. The Ninth Circuit in *Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co.*, 51 F.3d 1421 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 133 L. Ed. 2d 424, 116 S. Ct. 515 (1995), addressed the final factors in market power analysis: barriers to [**18] entry and barriers to expansion.

HN11 [↑] A mere showing of substantial or even dominant market share alone cannot establish market power sufficient to carry out a predatory scheme. The plaintiff must show that new rivals are barred from entering the market and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to expand their output to challenge the predator's high price.

HN12 [↑] Entry barriers are "additional long-run costs that were not incurred by incumbent firms but must be incurred by new entrants," or "factors in the market that deter entry while permitting incumbent firms to earn monopoly returns." The main sources of entry barriers are: (1) legal license requirements; (2) control of an essential or superior resource; (3) entrenched buyer preferences for established brands; (4) capital market evaluations imposing higher capital costs on new entrants; and, in some situations, (5) economies of scale. In evaluating entry barriers, we focus on their ability to constrain not "those already in the market, but . . . those who would enter but are prevented from doing so."

Id. at 1439 (citations and footnote omitted).

The only entry barrier upon which American relies on appeal is Harcourt's [**19] reputation for offering high quality courses. Contrary to American's argument, HN13 [↑] reputation alone does not constitute a sufficient entry barrier in this Circuit. See *United States v. Syufy Enterprises, 903 F.2d 659, 669 \(9th Cir. 1990\)* ("We fail to see how the existence of good will achieved through effective service is an impediment to, rather than the natural result of, competition.") (citations omitted). Moreover, the existence of 29 bar review courses in California suggests that any barriers to entry may not be that significant.

In light of the persuasive precedent of this court, we conclude that there was insufficient evidence of a dangerous probability of monopoly power in the relevant markets.<sup>3</sup> The district court did not err in its judgment as to the monopoly power issue.

[**20] III

Finally, Harcourt contends that it is entitled to costs because it "prevailed in toto with respect to the part of the case that the parties did not settle." We disagree. Following the jury verdicts (not including the § 2 claims), Harcourt prevailed on all but three of American's claims against Harcourt. American prevailed on: (1) its Lanham Act claim, 15 U.S.C. 1125\(a\), where a verdict was rendered in favor of American in the amount of $ 700,000; (2) its interference with actual and prospective economic advantage claim, where a verdict was rendered in favor of American in the amount of $ 236,442; and (3) its California Business & Professions Code [*1155] claim. Harcourt prevailed on all of its counterclaims against American except for the violation of *California Business & Professions Code §§ 17040, 17043, 17045*; trade libel; violation of *Arizona Revised Statutes §§ 44-1481* (unfair competition); and violation of *Florida Statutes ch. 501.204* (unfair competition). While the parties did settle all of these remaining unfair competition claims, HN14 [↑] district courts often order both parties to bear their own costs when both prevail in whole or in part at trial. See [*Allen & O'Hara, Inc. v. \[\*\*21\] Barrett Wrecking, Inc., 898 F.2d 512, 517 \(7th Cir. 1990\)*](#); *Johnson v. Nordstrom-Larpenteur Agency, Inc., 623 F.2d 1279* (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1042, 66 L. Ed. 2d 504, 101 S. Ct. 622 (1980).

Because Harcourt offers no evidence that the district court abused its discretion, we conclude that the court did not err in ordering Harcourt and American to bear their own costs.<sup>4</sup>

IV

For the foregoing reasons, we affirm the district court's orders granting the judgment as a matter of law and providing that each party bear its own costs.<sup>4</sup>

AFFIRMED.

---

End of Document

<sup>3</sup> American argues that the district court ignored the jury's award of $ 110,000 (before trebling) of damages specifically arising from Harcourt's monopoly attempt in New York. American claims that the trial evidence established that it was forced to abandon plans to offer its Barpassers course in New York as a result of Harcourt's alleged anti-competitive conduct in California. Because Harcourt is not liable for attempted monopolization in California and American failed to prove evidence on its New York claim, American's argument is unavailing.

<sup>4</sup> Harcourt also cross-appeals various evidentiary rulings at trial. In light of our decision to affirm the JMOL, we need not rule on those contentions.

Le Baud v. Frische

United States District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma

March 13, 1997, Decided ; March 13, 1997, Filed

No. CIV-95-918-L

Reporter

1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22474 *

PIERRE LE BAUD, M.D., Plaintiff, v. ERIC E. FRISCHE, M.D., et al., Defendants.

Disposition: [*1] Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment (Docket No. 132) GRANTED.

Core Terms

---

Defendants', privileges, Credentials, healthcare, immunity, hearing panel, damages, revoked, peer review, recommendation, patients, cases, peer review process, surgical, orthopedic surgeon, antitrust, antitrust claim, by-laws, Staff, summary judgment motion, staff privileges, revocation, surgery, entitled to judgment, reasonable belief, written report, monopolization, alleges, letters, notice

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Evidence > Weight & Sufficiency

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Scintilla Rule

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > Trials > General Overview

**HN1** [down] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

Summary judgment is appropriate if the pleadings, affidavits, and depositions show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). Any doubt as to the existence of a genuine issue of material fact must be resolved against the party seeking summary judgment. In addition, the inferences drawn from the facts presented must be construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Nonetheless, a party opposing a motion for summary judgment may not simply allege that there are disputed issues of fact; rather, the party must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\). There is no issue for trial unless there is sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party. If the evidence is merely colorable, or is not significantly probative, summary judgment may be granted. In addition, the plain language of Rule 56\(c\) mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > Clayton Act

Governments > Local Governments > Employees & Officials

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

**HN2** [down] Costs & Attorney Fees, Clayton Act

The Local Government Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 34-36, provides that no damages, interest on damages, costs, or attorney fees may be recovered under § 15, § 15(a) or § 15(c) of this title from any local government, or official or employee thereof acting in an official capacity. 15 U.S.C. § 35\(a\). "Local government" is defined as including a school district, sanitary district, or any other special function governmental unit established by state law in one or more states. 15 U.S.C. § 34\(1\)\(B\).

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Defenses > General Overview

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > Enforcement

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

**HN3** [down] Antitrust Actions, Facilities

Under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act (act), participants in a peer review process are immune from damages if the review process satisfies the requirements of the act. That is, the review action must be taken: (1) in the reasonable belief that the action was in the furtherance of quality health care, (2) after a reasonable effort to obtain the facts of the matter, (3) after adequate notice and hearing procedures are afforded to the physician involved or after such other procedures as are fair to the physician under the circumstances, and (4) in the reasonable belief that the action was warranted by the facts known after such reasonable effort to obtain facts and after meeting the requirement of paragraph (3). 42 U.S.C.S. §§ 11111\(a\)\(1\), 11112\(a\). The act provides that a review action shall be presumed to have met these standards unless the presumption is rebutted by a preponderance of the evidence. 42 U.S.C.S. § 11112\(a\). Failure to fulfill any one of the four standards negates the qualified immunity defense. In assessing compliance with the act, the court applies an objective standard. Assertions of bad faith and anticompetitive motive are irrelevant to the question of whether a decision was taken in a reasonable belief that it would further quality health care.

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

HN4 Business Administration & Organization, Peer Review

The Health Care Quality Improvement Act confers immunity on any person who makes a report to the National Practitioner Data Bank without knowledge of the falsity of the information contained in the report. 42 U.S.C.S. § 11137\(c\). Thus, immunity for reporting exists as a matter of law unless there is sufficient evidence for a jury to conclude the report was false and the reporting party knew it was false.

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Public Health & Welfare Law > Healthcare > General Overview

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust Actions, Facilities

The Health Care Quality Improvement Act specifically provides that it does not apply to damages under any law of the United States or any state relating to the civil rights of any person. 42 U.S.C.S. § 11111\(a\).

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN6 Antitrust Actions, Physicians

The elements of monopolization under § 2 are the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. In addition, proof of monopoly power requires a showing of both power to control prices and power to exclude competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 [down arrow] Sherman Act, Claims

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prescribes every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint to trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. The essential elements of a § 1 claim are concerted action and restraint of trade. Unilateral action will not support a § 1 claim. Moreover, in order to recover, plaintiff must establish antitrust injury, that is injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. An antitrust plaintiff must prove that challenged conduct affected the prices, quantity or quality of goods or services, not just his own welfare. Moreover, the key question in determining the defendants' ability to cause a restraint of trade to be imposed is whether the defendants had control over the decisionmaking process, or the ability to coerce or unduly influence the decision. Where a reasonable jury could conclude from the evidence that the defendants controlled, coerced, or unduly influenced the decision that resulted in a restraint of trade, a genuine issue of material fact exists on the issue of causation.

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

HN8 [down arrow] Constitutional Law, Substantive Due Process

The due process clause of the fourteenth amendment provides that no state may deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law. U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1.

Governments > Local Governments > Charters

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Employment Contracts > Conditions & Terms > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Governments > Local Governments > Employees & Officials

HN9 [down arrow] Local Governments, Charters

A property interest is determined by whether the terms of employment created by contract, federal statute, city charter or an employee manual create a sufficient expectancy of continued employment to constitute a property interest which must be afforded constitutionally guaranteed due process.

Administrative Law > ... > Hearings > Right to Hearing > Due Process

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

HN10 [blue speech bubble icon] Right to Hearing, Due Process

The due process clause only requires that an individual be given an opportunity for a hearing before he is deprived of any significant property interest.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

HN11 [blue speech bubble icon] Procedural Due Process, Scope of Protection

The key requirement is that the employee is entitled to a pre-termination opportunity to respond; more specifically, to oral or written notice of the charges against him, an explanation of the employer's evidence, and an opportunity to present his side of the story.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Slander

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > General Overview

Torts > ... > Defenses > Privileges > General Overview

Torts > ... > Defenses > Privileges > Statutory Privileges

Torts > ... > Defamation > Defenses > Truth

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Libel

HN12 [blue speech bubble icon] Defamation, Slander

Under Oklahoma law, libel is a false or malicious unprivileged publication by writing. 12 Okla. Stat. tit. 12, § 1441. Slander is a false and unprivileged publication, other than libel. Okla. Stat. tit. 12, § 1442. Truth is a defense to either claim. In addition, if the communication is privileged, a libel or slander action will not lie. Okla. Stat. tit. 12, § 1444.1.

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN13 [blue speech bubble icon] Business Torts, Fraud & Misrepresentation

Oklahoma law provides a private right of action for persons damaged by another's deceit. One who willfully deceives another, with intent to induce him to alter his position to his injury or risk, is liable for any damage which he thereby suffers. Okla. Stat. tit. 76, § 2. "Deceit" is defined as: 1. the suggestion, as a fact, of that which is not true by one who does not believe it to be true; 2. the assertion, as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who has no reasonable ground for believing it to be true; 3. the suppression of a fact by one who is bound to disclose it, or who gives information of other facts which are likely to mislead for want of communication of that fact; or, 4. a promise, made without any intention of performing. Okla. Stat. tit. 76, § 3.

Counsel: For PIERRE LE BAUD, M.D., plaintiff: William K Osmond, Patton & Robinett, Frank Gregory, Tulsa, OK.

For ERIC E FRISCHE, M.D., JAMES E FAHEY, JR, M.D., R BRENT SMITH, M.D. defendants: George F Short, Perry T Marrs, Jr, Cynthia L Sparling, Short Wiggins Margo & Alder, Oklahoma City, OK.

For RANDY SEGLER, SR, DONALD S BENTLEY, SHON ERWIN, MARY LOUISE LAWSON, HERB STONEHOCKER, URBANE SKINNER, RANDY L CURRY, COMANCHE COUNTY HOSPITAL AUTHORITY, defendants: James W Connor, Jr, Mary B Hanan, A Scott Johnson, Michael J Heron, Kimberly S Majors, Brent L Thompson, Johnson & Hanan, Michael D Denton, Jr, Hiltgen & Brewer, Oklahoma City, OK.

Judges: TIM LEONARD, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: TIM LEONARD

Opinion

---

ORDER

Plaintiff, Pierre LeBaud, is a physician who was trained as an orthopedic surgeon. Prior to May 7, 1994, plaintiff possessed staff privileges at defendant Comanche County Memorial Hospital ("Memorial"). On May 7, 1994, plaintiff's surgical privileges at Memorial were summarily suspended, but he retained admitting privileges. Thereafter, all of plaintiff's staff privileges were revoked by Memorial. [*2] Plaintiff filed this action on June 20, 1995, seeking damages and injunctive relief for alleged violations of the antitrust laws of the United States and the State of Oklahoma. In addition, plaintiff seeks damages pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 for alleged violations of his due process rights. Finally, plaintiff asserts state law libel, slander and deceit claims against certain defendants. In addition to Memorial, plaintiff named the following individuals as defendants: two competing orthopedic surgeons, Eric E. Frische and James F. Fahey, Jr.; the chief of staff of Memorial in May 1994, Richard Brent Smith; the administrator of Memorial, Randy L. Curry; the chief operating officer of Memorial, Randy Segler; the four members of the Credential Committee at the time the recommendation was made to revoke plaintiff's staff privileges;<sup>1</sup> [*3] the three members of the Hearing Panel that reviewed the recommendation of the Credential Committee;<sup>2</sup> and the five members of the Board of Trustees of Memorial.<sup>3</sup> On March 3, 1997, a Stipulation for Dismissal was filed, dismissing with prejudice plaintiff's claims against the members of the Credentials Committee and the Hearing Panel.

This matter is before the court on defendants' motion for summary judgment. HN1[] Summary judgment is appropriate if the pleadings, affidavits, and depositions "show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). Any doubt as to the existence of a genuine issue of material fact must be resolved against the party seeking summary judgment. In addition, the inferences drawn from the facts presented must be construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Board of Education v. Pico, 457 U.S. 853, 863, 73 L. Ed. 2d 435, 102 S. Ct. 2799 \(1982\). Nonetheless, a party opposing a motion for summary judgment may not simply allege that there are disputed issues of fact; rather, the party "must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for [*4] trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\) (emphasis added). See also, Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\). "There is no issue for trial unless there is sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party. If the evidence is merely colorable, or is not significantly probative, summary judgment may be granted." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 249-50 (citations omitted). In addition, "the plain language of Rule 56\(c\) mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to

---

<sup>1</sup> The members of the Credential Committee were Donald Garrett, M.D., Allen Aycock, M.D., John Carter, M.D., and Rex Stockard, M.D.

<sup>2</sup> The members of the Hearing Panel were Robert Hillis, M.D., Ron Cagle, M.D., and Ron Woodson, M.D.

<sup>3</sup> The members of the Board of Trustees are Donald S. Bentley, Shon Erwin, Mary Louise Lawson, Herb Stonehocker and Urbane Skinner.

that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986).

Background

The undisputed facts<sup>4</sup> establish that plaintiff was recruited by Southwestern Medical Center ("Southwestern") to practice orthopedic surgery in Lawton, Oklahoma. Plaintiff moved to Lawton and began practicing at Southwestern in March 1992. Before plaintiff moved to Lawton, there were only two orthopedic [*5] surgeons practicing at the civilian hospitals in Lawton, defendants Frische and Fahey. Frische and Fahey practiced at both Southwestern and at Memorial. Likewise, plaintiff intended to practice at both hospitals. On February 16, 1993, Randy Curry informed plaintiff that the Board of Trustees had voted unanimously to approve plaintiff's appointment to the medical staff at Memorial. As a new member of the medical staff at Memorial, plaintiff was provided with a copy of the current medical staff bylaws. He agreed to abide by those bylaws, which included sections regarding peer review and hearing and appeal procedures related thereto.

[*6] The events leading up to the present lawsuit began on January 10, 1994, when Marilyn Magid, the Director of Surgical Services at Memorial, sent a memorandum to defendant Brent Smith, who was then Memorial's Chief of Medical Staff. In the memorandum, Magid expressed concern regarding two surgical incidents in which plaintiff was involved. Exhibit 30 to Defendants' Joint Motion for Summary Judgment [hereinafter cited as Defendants' Motion]. Based on this memorandum, Curry and Smith contacted plaintiff and indicated that an investigation was warranted. Plaintiff concurred, but asked that the investigation include the practice of all three orthopedic surgeons who had privileges at Memorial. Exhibit 34 to Defendants' Motion. Curry and Smith agreed that it would be fair to include Frische and Fahey in this review as well.

Thereafter, Curry and Smith contacted Memorial's insurance agent, Hospital Casualty, to find an orthopedic surgeon outside the Lawton area to examine some cases to determine if further review was warranted. Plaintiff's Answer to Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment at Volume III, pp. 17-18 [hereinafter cited as Hrg. Tr. at __]. As a result of this request, [*7] James M. Griffin, an orthopedic surgeon in Tulsa, Oklahoma was contacted. Griffin was sent data for five patients to evaluate.<sup>5</sup> On January 25, 1994, Griffin sent a written report of his findings to Curry. Exhibit 31 to Defendants' Motion. Griffin concluded that the operative procedures fell below the standard of care with respect to two of the four patients treated by plaintiff. Id. at 3-4.

Based on this report, Curry and Smith determined that further review was necessary and that a blind, independent review of the orthopedic surgery department was warranted. Hrg. Tr. at 20. Curry again contacted Hospital Casualty and was referred to Forensic Medical Advisory Service, which suggested that Memorial retain the services of two orthopedic surgeons from Baltimore, Maryland [*8] to perform a review of the orthopedic surgeons. Id. at 20-21. On May 6, 1994, the two surgeons, Robert O. Kan and Kenneth R. Lippman, came to Lawton for this review. Kan and Lippman reviewed a random selection of 175 surgical cases from the orthopedic department dating from the beginning of 1993 through March of 1994. Exhibit 32 to Defendants' Motion. The cases included an equal number of surgeries performed by all three doctors. While the cases were arranged by doctor, Kan and Lippman did not know which doctor was which while they were reviewing the cases, as the cases were labeled "Doctor A," "Doctor B," and "Doctor C." Based on that review, Kan and Lippman concluded that:

---

<sup>4</sup> In conformity with Local Rule 56.1(b), defendants began their brief with "a concise statement of material facts to which the moving party contends no genuine issue of fact exists." In his response brief, plaintiff did not specifically dispute any of the material facts presented by defendants. Local Rule 56.1(c) provides that "all material facts set forth in the statement of the movant shall be deemed admitted for the purpose of summary judgment unless specifically controverted by the statement of material facts of the opposing party." In accordance with Local Rule 56.1(c), defendants' statement of material facts is deemed admitted.

<sup>5</sup> Four of the patients had been treated by plaintiff, while the fifth had been treated by Fahey. With respect to Fahey's patient, Griffin found that "the operation was performed in a capable fashion." Exhibit 31 to Defendants' Motion at 3.

The arthroscopic technique of Dr. LeBaud was inadequate in all cases reviewed, showing a lack of proper visualization, orientation, diagnosis, joint distraction, and technique. This was harmful to the patients who suffered significant articular cartilage damage.

there was a significant problem noted in judgment (sic) of surgical indications. . . . where patients were subjected to unnecessary anesthesia and procedures.

There was a major problem in selecting and carrying out the proper surgical [*9] procedure with disastrous results for the patients. . . .

This doctor appears willing to undertake complex procedures with which he has no or little experience, and which should routinely be referred to centers specializing in such problems.

Id. at 5.

Kan and Lippman orally reported their findings to Curry and Smith on Saturday, May 7, 1994. Hrg. Tr. at 21. Based on the oral report and the fact that plaintiff was to perform surgery on a child on Monday morning, Curry and Smith decided to summarily suspend plaintiff's surgical privileges at Memorial. Id. at 22. Plaintiff's admitting privileges were not affected by this action. Exhibit 40 to Defendants' Motion. Kan and Lippman prepared a written report, which was transmitted to Memorial on March 12, 1994. Exhibit 32 to Defendants' Motion. Once the written report was received, the matter was referred to the hospital's Credentials Committee in accordance with the bylaws. Id. After reviewing the report, the Credentials Committee unanimously recommended revoking all of plaintiff's privileges at Memorial.<sup>6</sup> Exhibit 42 to Defendants' Motion. Although Frische was a member of the Credentials Committee, he recused himself [*10] from this meeting because he and plaintiff were economic competitors.

On May 18, 1994, plaintiff was notified of the Credentials Committee's action and was advised of his right to request a hearing. Exhibit 43 to Defendants' Motion. Plaintiff requested a hearing, which was ultimately held on October 31, 1994. Plaintiff received notice of the hearing date and a list of proposed witnesses and exhibits. Prior to the hearing date, plaintiff retained Patrick Evans, an orthopedic surgeon in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, to conduct a review of the cases examined by Kan and Lippman. Evans reviewed the cases on September 28, 1994 and prepared a written report on October 21, 1994. Exhibit 57 to Defendants' [*11] Motion.

At the hearing, the Credentials Committee presented the testimony of Smith, Curry, Lippman and Kan, all of whom were subjected to cross-examination by plaintiff's counsel. Plaintiff testified on his own behalf and, by agreement of the parties and the Hearing Panel, presented the testimony of Patrick Evans by video-taped deposition. Thereafter, the Hearing Panel voted unanimously to recommend to the Board of Trustees that it affirm the recommendation of the Credentials Committee and revoke all of plaintiff's staff privileges at Memorial. The Hearing Panel's written findings reflect that:

The basis for this recommendation consists of all of the information considered by the Panel which can essentially be summarized by reference to the reports of Drs. Lippman and Kan as reflected in their report from Forensic Medical Advisory Service dated May 12, 1994 and the report of Dr. Evans dated September 28, 1994 (sic). These reports and all of the other information received by the Panel reflect a clear pattern of Dr. LeBaud failing to exercise appropriate judgment in selecting those procedures which he was competent to perform and failing to recognize his lack of competence while [*12] continuing such procedures.

Based upon all of the information received, it was the unanimous opinion of the hearing panel that no action short of complete revocation of all of Dr. LeBaud's privileges could adequately assure high quality care of his patients at Comanche County Memorial Hospital.

Exhibit 46 to Defendants' Motion at 1-2. Plaintiff received the Hearing Panel's decision on December 23, 1994. Exhibit 47 to Defendants' Motion.

---

<sup>6</sup> It should be noted that while Donald Garrett was a member of the Credentials Committee, he was not present at the May 16, 1994 meeting when the recommendation was made to revoke plaintiff's privileges. Exhibit 4 to Defendants' Motion at P 3. As a result, he did not vote on the motion to revoke plaintiff's privileges. Id.

Pursuant to the bylaws, plaintiff had the right to appeal the Hearing Panel's decision. Exhibit 37 to Defendants' Motion at 52. The appeal section provides that "if such appellate review is not requested within 10 days as provided herein, both parties shall be deemed to have accepted the recommendation involved and it shall thereupon become final and immediately effective." Id. at 53. Plaintiff did not appeal the Hearing Panel's decision. Therefore, on January 17, 1995, the Board of Trustees formally voted on and endorsed the recommendation of the Credentials Committee that plaintiff's staff privileges be revoked. Exhibit 56 to Defendants' Motion.

On January 31, 1995, Memorial submitted an adverse action report to the National Practitioner [*13] Data Bank regarding the revocation of plaintiff's privileges. The report stated that:

The Board of Trustees revoked all of Dr. Pierre LeBaud's staff privileges after an internal peer review investigation and hearing which established a pattern of sub-standard care to his patients resulting from poor surgical and arthroscopic technique and a complete lack of clinical judgment as to both those procedures he was competent to perform and those procedures he was incompetent to perform.

Exhibit 48 to Defendants' Motion. At the request of plaintiff's attorney, Memorial submitted a second adverse action report on March 20, 1995. This report amended the description of the reasons taken to reflect that:

The Board of Trustees revoked all of Dr. Pierre LeBaud's privileges after an internal peer review investigation and hearing which established a clear pattern of Dr. LeBaud failing to exercise appropriate judgment in selecting those procedures which he was competent to perform and failing to recognize his lack of competence while continuing such procedures.

Exhibit 49 to Defendants' Motion. Plaintiff filed this action two months later.

Discussion

Defendants [*14] seek summary judgment in their favor on each of plaintiff's claims. After reviewing the voluminous briefs and numerous exhibits presented by the parties, the court concurs with defendants' assessment of plaintiffs case. This entire matter is "a tale . . . full of sound and fury, Signifying nothing." William Shakespeare, MacBeth, act 5, sc. 5. After pursuing this case for nearly two years, plaintiff cannot present even a scintilla of evidence in support of his myriad claims. The continued prosecution of these claims represents, at best, a serious error in judgment.

Antitrust Claims

While plaintiffs complaint alleges both state and federal antitrust violations, plaintiff appears to have abandoned his state law antitrust claim as his brief makes no mention of such a claim. In fact, plaintiff characterizes his antitrust claims as follows:

Plaintiff alleges that Defendant Frische and the Defendant Hospital have combined to help Dr. Frische retain his monopoly, and that Dr. Frische has individually monopolized the market. Plaintiff has never based his suit on the claim that the Hospital has individually monopolized the market. Plaintiff further alleges that the Hospital and [*15] Dr. Frische combined to restrain trade under § 1 of the Sherman Act, and that the combinations by which the Defendants go together in the name of "peer review" also violated § 1 of the Sherman Act."

Plaintiff's Answer to Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment at 21 [hereinafter cited as Plaintiff's Answer]. Thus, plaintiff alleges a section 2 monopolization claim against Frische and a section 1 conspiracy to restrain trade claim against Memorial and Frische.<sup>7</sup>

In response to plaintiff's antitrust claims, defendants contend that Memorial, its officials, and its employees are protected by the Local Government Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 34-36 ("LGAA"), from any antitrust damage or fee award. In addition, defendants argue that they are immune from any liability for federal or state claims pursuant to the Health Care Quality Improvement Act of 1986, 42 U.S.C. § 11101-11152 [*16] ("the Health Care Act"). Finally, defendants assert that plaintiff cannot establish the essential elements of any of his antitrust claims.

---

<sup>7</sup> Because the Complaint uses imprecise language, it is not clear whether the antitrust claims are asserted against any other defendants.

HN2[] The LGAA provides that "no damages, interest on damages, costs, or attorney fees may be recovered under § 15, § 15(a) or § 15(c) of this Title from any local government, or official or employee thereof acting in an official capacity." 15 U.S.C. § 35\(a\). "Local government" is defined as including "a school district, sanitary district, or any other special function governmental unit established by State law in one or more States." 15 U.S.C. § 34\(1\)\(B\). It is undisputed that Memorial is a public trust hospital under Oklahoma law and is entitled to the protection of Oklahoma's Governmental Tort Claims Act. 60 O.S. § 176-180; Exhibit 28 to Plaintiff's Answer; 51 O.S. §§ 152(8)(d), 152.1. Thus, the court concludes that Memorial is immune from antitrust damages pursuant to the LGAA. C.f. Tarabishi v. McAlester Reg'l Hosp., 951 F.2d 1558, 1566-67 \(10th Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 505 U.S. 1206, 112 S. Ct. 2996, 120 L. Ed. 2d 872 (1992) (finding no immunity for a public trust hospital under a prior version of Oklahoma's Governmental Tort Claims [*17] Act, but noting that amendments to the Act "might suggest a different result"). In addition, the members of the Credentials Committee, the members of the Hearing Panel, and the Board of Trustees are likewise entitled to immunity from damages under the LGAA. These defendants were all clearly acting in their official capacities when they took the actions at issue here with respect to plaintiff's peer review.

In addition to immunity under the LGAA, defendants also claim immunity under the Health Care Act.<sup>8</sup>

In 1986, Congress adopted the Health Care Quality Improvement Act in response to "the increasing occurrence of medical malpractice and the need to improve the quality of medical care." See 42 U.S.C. § 11101\(1\), \(2\) \(1994\). Recognizing "the threat of private money damage liability . . . Unreasonably discourages physicians from participating in effective professional peer review," see 42 U.S.C. § 11101\(4\), Congress deemed it essential for the legislation to provide qualified immunity from damages actions for hospitals, doctors and others who participate in professional peer review proceedings. [Imperial v. Suburban Hosp. Ass'n, Inc., 37 F.3d 1026, 1028 \(4th Cir. \[\*18\] 1994\)](#).

Brown v. Presbyterian Healthcare Services, 101 F.3d 1324, 1333 \(10th Cir. 1996\). HN3[] Under the Health Care Act, participants in a peer review process are immune from damages if the review process satisfies the requirements of the Act. That is, the review action must be taken:

- (1) in the reasonable belief that the action was in the furtherance of quality health care,
- (2) after a reasonable effort to obtain the facts of the matter,
- (3) after adequate notice and hearing procedures are afforded to the physician involved or after such other procedures as are fair to the physician under the circumstances, and
- (4) in the reasonable belief that the action was warranted by the facts known after such reasonable effort to obtain facts and after meeting the requirement of paragraph (3).

42 U.S.C. §§ 11111\(a\)\(1\), 11112\(a\). The Health Care Act provides that a review action shall be presumed to have met these standards "unless the presumption is rebutted by a preponderance of the evidence." 42 U.S.C. § 11112\(a\). Thus, plaintiff in this case has the burden of proving that the peer review action in this case did not meet the requirements of the Health [*19] Care Act. This does not mean, however, that plaintiff must establish that the process failed to satisfy all four requirements; rather, failure to fulfill any one of the four standards negates the qualified immunity defense. Brown, 101 F.3d at 1333. In assessing compliance with the Health Care Act, the court applies an objective standard. Id. See also Mathews v. Lancaster Gen'l Hosp., 87 F.3d 624, 635 \(3d Cir. 1996\). "Assertions of bad faith and anticompetitive motive are irrelevant to the question of whether a decision was taken in a reasonable belief that it would further quality health care." Mathews, 87 F.3d at 635 (quoting Mathews v. Lancaster Gen'l Hosp., 883 F. Supp. 1016, 1030 \(E.D. Pa. 1995\)).

---

<sup>8</sup> Defendants contend that the Health Care Act provides "absolute immunity from Federal and State law private civil liabilities." Defendants' Motion at 21 (emphasis in original). This statement is incorrect. The Health Care Act provides only a qualified immunity from damages. See Brown v. Presbyterian Healthcare Services, 101 F.3d 1324, 1334 n.9 \(10th Cir. 1996\).

[*20] The court finds that plaintiff has failed to rebut the Health Care Act's presumption that the peer review process met the standard for immunity. First, defendants in this case clearly undertook a reasonable effort to obtain the facts. Unlike the review process the Court found to be deficient in Brown, the review here encompassed 84 patients over a fifteen month time frame. The written report of this review, which indicated serious problems with plaintiff's practice, was before the Credentials Committee when it recommended revocation of plaintiff's privileges. In addition, the Hearing Panel received oral testimony from Kan and Lippman, as well as plaintiff and his expert witness, Dr. Evans. All of the evidence before the Credentials Committee and the Hearing Panel supports the conclusion that the peer review action in this case was taken "in a reasonable belief that the action was in furtherance of quality health care." 42 U.S.C. § 11112(a)(1). Plaintiff's conclusory allegations of conspiracy and improper motive for the peer review action are simply insufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact, much less rebut the presumption contained in the Health Care Act. Throughout [*21] his brief in opposition to defendants' motion, plaintiff asserts that there is "not insignificant direct evidence as to Dr. Frische's actual involvement in the revocation of Dr. Le Baud's privileges at Memorial . . ." Plaintiff's Answer at 33. Plaintiff, however, offers no such evidence. The record is devoid of any involvement of Frische in the peer review process. In fact, although Frische was a member of the Credentials Committee, he did not attend the meeting during which plaintiff's case was discussed, nor did Frische testify at the evidentiary hearing before the Hearing Panel. C.f. Brown, 101 F.3d at 1333 ("the record is replete with evidence tending to show Ms. Miller and Dr. Williams were the catalysts behind, or played a crucial role in, every step of the proceedings against Dr. Brown."). In addition, plaintiff's privileges were only revoked after notice to plaintiff and an extensive hearing, which was rescheduled a number of times to accommodate plaintiff and his counsel. Finally, the evidence presented to the Credentials Committee and the Hearing Panel fully supports a reasonable belief that the action taken was warranted by the facts. Even plaintiff's expert witness, [*22] J. Patrick Evans, found that plaintiff's surgical abilities were deficient and that his surgical privileges should be restricted. In his report, Evans concluded that plaintiff:

has not demonstrated satisfactory arthroscopic abilities for both visualization and treatment in either the knee or shoulder as demonstrated on these cases. . . . I would also recommend that he have restriction of his privileges as regards to arthroscopic surgery in either the knee or shoulder until such time as he satisfactorily demonstrates satisfactory abilities for this procedure. It also would be my recommendation that he not be allowed to undertake total joint revision surgery.

Exhibit 57 to Defendants' Motion at 1. In short, based on the totality of the circumstances, the court finds that defendants are entitled to immunity from damages under the Health Care Act for plaintiff's antitrust claims.

In addition, the court finds that Curry and Memorial are entitled to immunity under the Health Care Act for plaintiff's state law claim for libel and slander. This claim is based on the allegation that the first report transmitted to the National Practitioners Data Bank "was and is inaccurate [*23] and improper, false and malicious, being designed to injure Dr. Le Baud's reputation nationwide." Complaint at P 47. HN4[] The Health Care Act "confers immunity on any person who makes a report to the National Practitioner Data Bank 'without knowledge of the falsity of the information contained in the report.' 42 U.S.C. § 11137(c) (1994). Thus, immunity for reporting exists as a matter of law unless there is sufficient evidence for a jury to conclude the report was false and the reporting party knew it was false." Brown, 101 F.3d at 1334. There is no such evidence in this case. The statements contained in the first report are amply supported by the record before the Hearing Panel. There is simply no evidence from which a reasonable jury could conclude that the report was false and that Curry or Memorial knew it was false. Therefore, Curry and Memorial are entitled to immunity from libel and slander damages as a matter of law.

The Health Care Act, however, does not provide immunity with respect to plaintiff's remaining state law claims, which will be discussed below. Nor does the Health Care Act provide immunity from damages for plaintiff's due process claim, as HN5[] the Health Care Act [*24] specifically provides that it does not apply "to damages under any law of the United States or any State relating to the civil rights of any person . . ." 42 U.S.C. § 11111(a). Furthermore, finding defendants immune from damages under the LGAA and the Health Care Act does not end the inquiry with respect to plaintiff's antitrust claims as plaintiff has requested injunctive relief as well damages.<sup>9</sup> The court therefore turns to an analysis of plaintiff's antitrust claims.

The law in the Tenth Circuit is clear regarding the necessary elements [*25] that plaintiff must establish to support a section 2 monopolization claim.

HN6[] The elements of monopolization under Section 2 are "the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market" and "the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident."

Tarabishi, 951 F.2d at 1567 (citations omitted). In addition, "proof of monopoly power requires a showing of both power to control prices and power to exclude competition." Id. Plaintiff, however, has offered no evidence regarding Frische's ability to control prices, which is "a critical element of proof of monopoly power in this circuit." Id. In fact, plaintiff simply fails to mention this element in either his Complaint or his brief in response to defendants' motion.<sup>10</sup> This failure of proof is fatal to plaintiff's monopolization claim. Id.

[*26] Plaintiff also does not present evidence to support his section 1 claim. HN7[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act prescribes "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint to trade or commerce. . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 1. The essential elements of a section 1 claim are concerted action and restraint of trade. See Systemcare, Inc. v. Wang Lab. Corp., 85 F.3d 465, 469 (10th Cir. 1996). Unilateral action will not support a section 1 claim. Mathews, 87 F.3d at 639. Moreover, in order to recover, plaintiff must establish antitrust injury, that is "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977). "An antitrust plaintiff must prove that challenged conduct affected the prices, quantity or quality of goods or services," not just his own welfare." Mathews, 87 F.3d at 641 (citation omitted). Moreover,

The key question in determining the defendants' ability to "cause a restraint [of trade] to be imposed" is whether the defendants had control over the decisionmaking [*27] process, or the ability to coerce or unduly influence the decision. . . . Where a reasonable jury could conclude from the evidence that the defendants controlled, coerced, or unduly influenced the decision that resulted in a restraint of trade, a genuine issue of material fact exists on the issue of causation.

Brown, 101 F.3d at 1335.

Plaintiff offers no evidence of any concerted action by Memorial and Frische with respect to the peer review process. It is undisputed that Frische did not initiate the peer review process, did not attend the Credentials Committee meeting, and did not testify before the Hearing Panel. Nor did Frische identify the files that were reviewed by Kan and Lippman; and, in fact, Frische's files were reviewed as well. In short, there is nothing to tie him to the revocation of plaintiff's privileges at Memorial. The peer review process had a life of its own, unaided by Frische. Plaintiff attempts to link Frische to the peer review process by noting that the person who initiated the incident report that led to the review is a former employee of Frische. See Plaintiff's Answer at 12. This attempted link, however, is -- at best -- nothing more than [*28] fanciful speculation. Moreover, plaintiff has failed to allege, much less prove, any antitrust injury based on the revocation of his privileges at Memorial. It is undisputed that plaintiff continued to practice at Southwestern after his privileges were revoked at Memorial. Thus, there was no diminution in the availability of orthopedic services in Lawton based on the peer review action. Plaintiff's failure to prove that the revocation of his privileges at Memorial "affected competition, as opposed to [plaintiff] himself as a competitor, doomed plaintiffs' section one claims to failure." Tarabishi, 951 F.2d at 1571.

---

<sup>9</sup> It is not clear to the court whether plaintiff's claim for injunctive relief is still viable. In his Complaint, plaintiff sought injunctive relief because "if such actions and practices of the Defendant continue, Plaintiff may be forced to terminate his practice in the Lawton area. . . ." Complaint at P 30. It is undisputed that plaintiff did, indeed, move from the Lawton area in 1996 and now practices in Idabel, Oklahoma. Exhibit 18 to Defendants' Motion at 27-29.

<sup>10</sup> Plaintiff does refer to a "price fixing conspiracy" in his Complaint, but there are no factual allegations regarding such a conspiracy. Complaint at P 23.

Due Process Claim

Plaintiff contends that he was denied procedural due process when his hospital privileges at Memorial were revoked. In his Complaint, plaintiff offers a litany of procedural defects surrounding Memorial's action:

- a) Plaintiff's hospital privileges were initially suspended and subsequently revoked through actions of the credentials committee, without any notice to Plaintiff or opportunity for hearing.
- b) The deficiency in the initial action against Plaintiff was particularly onerous and objectionable in light of certain provisions [*29] of the Hospitals's by-laws, and the hearing procedures followed subsequently. The burden of proof was placed on Plaintiff to overturn the actions of the credentials committee; and to do so, Plaintiff was required to show that such action was arbitrary and capricious.
- c) Plaintiff sought, but was refused, meaningful discovery rights. Thus, Plaintiff was not provided adequate information as to the nature of the charges against him, and by reason thereof, was denied a fair opportunity to frame a defense.
- d) Plaintiff was denied the opportunity to adequately prepare his defense by reason of the fact that he was not accorded an opportunity to interview witnesses against him, or otherwise obtain adequate means of addressing and rebutting the testimony to be presented against him before the hearing panel in order to adequately present his case to such panel.
- e) Plaintiff was denied the opportunity for his case to be heard by a competent, unbiased and objective tribunal.
- f) Plaintiff was denied the opportunity to have his case heard by a tribunal having no economic interest in the outcome thereof.
- g) Plaintiff was denied the right of appeal because he was not given [*30] notice of the date and time of the appeal hearing before the Board of Trustees of the Hospital.

Complaint at P 35.

HN8[] The due process clause of the fourteenth amendment provides that no state may "deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law." U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1. Whether plaintiff had a protected property right in continued privileges at Memorial is a question of state law. Bishop v. Wood, 426 U.S. 341, 344, 48 L. Ed. 2d 684, 96 S. Ct. 2074 \(1976\). HNg[] "[A] property interest is determined by whether the terms of employment created by contract, federal statute, city charter or an employee manual create a sufficient expectancy of continued employment to constitute a property interest which must be afforded constitutionally guaranteed due process." Vinyard v. King, 728 F.2d 428, 432 \(10th Cir. 1984\). Plaintiff, however, has made no attempt to prove that he had a protected property interest. Based on the court's review of the hospital's by-laws, it appears that staff privileges are temporary and that renewal of such privileges is not automatic.<sup>11</sup>

[*31] Nonetheless, because the record does not indicate the length of plaintiff's appointment and whether it could only be revoked "for cause," the court will examine the merits of his procedural due process claim. Plaintiff argues that he was not afforded a predeprivation hearing before his hospital privileges were revoked. Plaintiff's argument, however, is logically flawed for two reasons. First, his argument focuses on the Credentials Committee.<sup>12</sup> [*33] It is undisputed, however, that the Credentials Committee did not have the power to revoke his hospital privileges; only the Board of Trustees could do that.<sup>13</sup> Second, plaintiff did have a predeprivation hearing before the Board of Trustees acted.<sup>14</sup> [*34] This hearing was held before a panel of three physicians, none of whom were in economic competition with plaintiff for patients or otherwise. HN10[<sup>15</sup>] The due process clause only requires "that an individual be given an opportunity for a hearing before he is deprived of any significant property interest."Cleveland Bd. of Educ. v. Loudermill, 470 U.S. 532, 542, 84 L. Ed. 2d 494, 105 S. Ct. 1487 \(1985\) (quoting Boddie v. Connecticut, 401 U.S. 371, 379, 28 L. Ed. 2d 113, 91 S. Ct. 780 [*32] (1971)) (emphasis in original). While the clause does not require a full evidentiary hearing,<sup>15</sup> that is, in fact, what plaintiff received. At the hearing before the Hearing Panel, plaintiff was represented by counsel who cross-examined the witnesses presented by the Credentials Committee. In addition, plaintiff presented his own evidence, including the testimony of an expert witness. In fact, the Hearing Panel specifically left the record open so that it could review the video-taped deposition of plaintiff's expert. Prior to the hearing, plaintiff received the written report of Kan and Lippman, which detailed the charges against him together with the evidence in support of those charges. See Exhibits 43, 51, and 55 of Defendants' Motion. In short, plaintiff received all the process he was due.<sup>16</sup>

<sup>11</sup> See Exhibit 37 to Defendants' Motion at 37 ("Appointment to the medical staff is a privilege which shall be extended only to professionally competent individuals who continuously meet the qualifications, standards and requirements set forth in this policy and in such policies as are adopted from time to time by the Board.") (emphasis added); at 39 ("Continued appointment after the [six month] provisional period shall be conditioned on an evaluation of the factors to be considered for reappointment."); and at 62 ("Reappointment, if granted by the Board, shall be for a period of not more than two years . . .").

<sup>12</sup> In his brief in response to defendants' motion, plaintiff complains that he:

Nonetheless, plaintiff argues that he did not receive notice of the meeting at which the Board of Trustees considered the decision of the Hearing Panel and therefore he could not present his [*35] case to that tribunal. In making this argument, however, plaintiff conveniently forgets that he did not appeal the decision of the Appeals was given no opportunity to present reasons before the Credential's (sic) Committee why the proposed action should not be taken.

Plaintiff had no right to call witnesses before such Committee.

Dr. Le Baud had no opportunity to know the evidence against him at that time.

Since no evidence was presented, he had no opportunity to have the Credential's (sic) Committee's decision based solely on the evidence presented.

He had no ability to question or cross-examine evidence or witnesses before such Committee.

Because the Credential's (sic) Committee took action without even a minimal hearing and with none of the safeguards normally associated with due process, there was no opportunity for any meaningful review of the Committee's decision.

Plaintiff's Answer at 36.

<sup>13</sup> Plaintiff was clearly apprised of this fact at the hearing when counsel for the Credentials Committee stressed, "We have to remember that it's the board that grants or revokes staff privileges. It's not the credentials committee. It's not this hearing panel. It is only the board that can take that action." Hrg. Tr. at 5.

<sup>14</sup> Although plaintiff's surgical privileges were summarily suspended without a hearing, no due process violation occurred as "not even an informal hearing . . . must precede a deprivation undertaken to protect the public safety." Caine v. Hardy, 943 F.2d 1406, 1412 \(5th Cir. 1991\) (en banc), cert. denied, 503 U.S. 936, 112 S. Ct. 1474, 117 L. Ed. 2d 618 \(1992\). It is undisputed that Smith and Curry suspended plaintiff's surgical privileges only after receiving the unfavorable oral report from Kan and Lippman and determining that plaintiff was scheduled to perform surgery on a child the following Monday. In this case the need for quick action was followed by an adequate post-deprivation remedy in the form of the hearing before the Hearing Panel. The court finds the analysis of the en banc Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in a strikingly similar case to be persuasive. See Caine, 943 F.2d at 1411-15. Under the balancing test enunciated in Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319, 335, 47 L. Ed. 2d 18, 96 S. Ct. 893 (1976), plaintiff received all the process he was due.

<sup>15</sup> HN11[<sup>15</sup>] "The key requirement is that the employee is entitled to a pre-termination opportunity to respond; more specifically, 'to oral or written notice of the charges against him, an explanation of the employer's evidence, and an opportunity to present his side of the story.'" Benavidez v. City of Albuquerque, 101 F.3d 620, 627 \(10th Cir. 1996\) (quoting Loudermill, 470 U.S. at 546).

<sup>16</sup> Plaintiff's argument that his due process rights were violated because the burden of proof was unfairly placed on him at the Hearing Panel is without merit. Plaintiff received extensive predeprivation process, including the ability to confront and to cross-examine witnesses, to present evidence and to state his position both orally and in writing. To the extent any burden was placed on plaintiff during the hearing, it does not rise to the level of a constitutional deprivation. See Benavidez, 101 F.3d at 626-28.

Panel. The by-laws clearly state that if appellate review "is not requested within 10 days . . . both parties shall be deemed to have accepted the recommendation involved and it shall thereupon become final and immediately effective." Exhibit 37 to Defendants' Motion at 88. Thus, under the by-laws, plaintiff was not entitled to an additional hearing before the Board, nor was such hearing required by the due process clause. Defendants are entitled to judgment in their favor on plaintiff's due process claim.

Libel and Slander Claim

Likewise, the court finds that Fahey and Curry are entitled to judgment in their favor on plaintiff's libel and slander claim. Although plaintiff's complaint alleges "a campaign of libel and slander" by Fahey, Frische, and Curry, there is no evidence of any communication by Fahey or Curry.<sup>17</sup> Rather, it appears that this claim arises out of two letters written solely by Frische in October 1994 to the Chief of Staff at Southwestern. In the absence of any credible proof of a conspiracy between Fahey, Curry and [*36] Frische, Fahey and Curry cannot be held accountable for any libelous statements made by Frische. Fahey and Curry are thus entitled to judgment as a matter of law with respect to this claim.

With respect to Frische, however, the court must examine the letters he wrote to determine if a libel or slander action lies against him. HN12[] Under Oklahoma law, libel is a "false or malicious unprivileged publication by writing." 12 O.S. § 1441. Slander is a "false and unprivileged publication, other than libel." 12 O.S. § 1442. Truth is a defense to either claim. In addition, if the communication is privileged, a libel or slander action will not lie. See 12 O.S. § 1444.1. In the first letter, Frische stated:

This letter is to alert you to quality problems at Southwestern Medical Center which I bring [*37] to you in your capacity as Chief of Staff of the hospital. I bring these problems to your attention in confidentiality and within the limits of what I believe to be legitimate peer review for such concerns. . . . It is my considered opinion that Dr. LeBaud's work is below the standard of care for this or any other community. As long as he continues to do surgery, innocent and unsuspecting patients will continue to be needlessly injured.

Exhibit 29 to Plaintiffs Answer at 1-2. In the second letter, Frische named the patients for whom he had expressed concern in his prior letter. He stressed that "I believe the nature of the problem is widespread, in that it covers a broad range of types of cases. Only a comprehensive review will suffice to handle this question. Once again, I would suggest that this be done by an outside individual who is qualified to do this type of evaluation." Id. at 3 (emphasis in original).

Frische contends that the letters to Southwestern were written in the context of peer review and thus should be privileged pursuant to Oklahoma law, which provides that:

Any person who supplies information in good faith and with reasonable belief that [*38] such information is true to a professional review body shall not be liable in any way in damages with respect to giving such information to the professional review body.

76 O.S. § 26. Plaintiff counters that the letters cannot be considered part of a peer review process because no such process was initiated by Southwestern.<sup>18</sup> Furthermore, plaintiff argues that Frische cannot establish the subjective element of his good faith. The court finds that it need not address the good faith issue, as Frische has presented sufficient evidence to establish the truth of the assertions contained in the letters. See Exhibits 1, 2, 3, 31, 32, and 57 to Defendants' Motion. In turn, plaintiff has presented no evidence to refute the accuracy of the statements contained in the letters. The court concludes that Frische is entitled to judgment as a matter of law with respect to this claim.

<sup>17</sup> Plaintiff cannot assert a libel claim against Curry based on the reports sent to the National Practitioners Data Bank because such reports are privileged pursuant to the Health Care Act. See, supra, at 13.

<sup>18</sup> In fact, it is undisputed that no adverse action was taken against plaintiff as a result of these letters. Plaintiff continued to practice at Southwestern until he moved to Idabel.

[*39] Deceit Claim

In his final claim for relief, plaintiff asserts that R. Brent Smith, the Chief of Staff of Memorial in 1994, deceived him into believing that the peer review process would not occur. Specifically, plaintiff claims that Smith told him "in substance that 'it was all a misunderstanding and forgotten,' telling Plaintiff that he had nothing to worry about." Complaint at P 53. HN13 Oklahoma law provides a private right of action for persons damaged by another's deceit.

One who willfully deceives another, with intent to induce him to alter his position to his injury or risk, is liable for any damage which he thereby suffers.

76 O.S. § 2. "Deceit" is defined as:

1. The suggestion, as a fact, of that which is not true by one who does not believe it to be true.
2. The assertion, as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who has no reasonable ground for believing it to be true.
3. The suppression of a fact by one who is bound to disclose it, or who gives information of other facts which are likely to mislead for want of communication of that fact; or,
4. A promise, made without any intention of performing.

76 O.S. § 3.

In order [*40] to recover under this claim, plaintiff must establish that Smith willfully misrepresented the status of the peer review process and that plaintiff suffered damages due to his reliance on that misstatement. Plaintiff, however, has made no attempt to establish either element of this claim. In fact, plaintiff did not even respond to defendants' motion for summary judgment with respect to this claim. The court, therefore, finds that plaintiff has abandoned this claim. In addition, the court finds that plaintiff's own words belie any assertion that he relied on the alleged statement by Smith. On January 14, 1994, plaintiff wrote that he had been advised by Smith and Curry on January 11, 1994 that "an investigation will be conducted concerning my practice." Exhibit 34 to Defendants' Motion. Thus, Smith is entitled to judgment in his favor on this claim.

Conclusion

In sum, plaintiff has failed to offer even a scintilla of evidence in support of his claims for relief. His broad, unsupported allegations of multiple conspiracies appear to be more properly viewed as a fictionalized account of imagined events, rather than as a fact-based legal cause of action that is grounded in reality. Defendants' [*41] Motion for Summary Judgment (Docket No. 132) is GRANTED. Judgment will issue accordingly.

It is so ordered this 13th day of March, 1997.

TIM LEONARD

United States District Judge

JUDGMENT

Pursuant to the Order issued this date, judgment is hereby entered in favor of defendants Eric E. Frische, M.D., James E. Fahey, Jr., M.D., R. Brent Smith, M.D., Randy Segler, Sr., Donald S. Bentley, Shon Erwin, Mary Louise Lawson, Herb Stonehocker, Urbane Skinner, Randy Curry, and Comanche County Hospital Authority, d/b/a Comanche County Memorial Hospital and against plaintiff, Pierre LeBaud, M.D. Pursuant to the Stipulation for Dismissal filed March 3, 1997, the claims against defendants Ron Woodson, M.D., Robert Hillis, M.D., Ron Cagle, M.D., Rex Stockard, M.D., John Carter, M.D., Allen Aycock, M.D., and Donald Garrett, M.D. were dismissed with prejudice.

Entered this 13th day of March, 1997.

TIM LEONARD

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

HTI Health Servs. v. Quorum Health Group

United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, Western Division

March 14, 1997, Decided ; March 17, 1997, FILED

CIVIL ACTION NO. 5:96-CV-108Br(S)

Reporter

960 F. Supp. 1104 *; 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5104 **; 1997-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,889

HTI HEALTH SERVICES, INC., PLAINTIFF VS. QUORUM HEALTH GROUP, INC., RIVER REGION MEDICAL CORPORATION (Formerly known as ParkView Medical Corporation), and VICKSBURG CLINIC, P.A., DEFENDANTS

Disposition: [**1] Columbia's request for injunctive and all other relief denied.

Core Terms

---

Clinic, merger, patients, managed care, geographic, primary care, markets, antitrust, market share, Region, submarket, primary care physician, postmerger, physician's services, hospital service, pediatric, Street, general surgery, anti trust law, recruitment, multispecialty, provider, urology, prices, consumers, medical community, concentration, plans, acute, anticompetitive

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN1[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

960 F. Supp. 1104, *1104L 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5104, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Permanent Injunctions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN3 [+] Remedies, Injunctions

Section 16 of the Clayton Act entitles private persons to sue for injunctive relief when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity. 15 U.S.C.S. § 26. Under Section 16, permanent injunctive relief may issue upon a demonstration of "threatened" injury, even though the plaintiff has not yet suffered actual injury. In other words, a plaintiff may qualify for permanent injunctive relief under the statute by demonstrating a significant threat of injury from an impending violation of the antitrust laws or from a contemporary violation that is likely to continue or recur. The remedy is flexible and may be adapted to achieve a reconciliation of the public interests that Congress sought to protect with competing private needs.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Public Interest

HN4 [+] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

When adjudicating preliminary injunction requests under the antitrust laws, the courts in this circuit require that the movant meet its burden under a well-established four-pronged test by proving that: (1.) there is a substantial likelihood of success on the merits; (2.) there is a substantial threat that the movant will suffer irreparable injury if the injunction is not issued; (3.) the threatened injury to the movant outweighs any damage the injunction might cause to the opponent; and (4.) the injunction will not disserve the public interest. The precedent in the Fifth Circuit clearly warns that a preliminary injunction is an extraordinary remedy that can be granted only if the movant has clearly shown all four prerequisites. Indeed, the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals instructs that the grant or denial of injunctive relief must be the product of a reasoned application of the foregoing four factors and cannot be based solely on an inquiry into the underlying merits of the substantive antitrust claims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

960 F. Supp. 1104, *1104L 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5104, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Justiciability > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Remedies, Injunctions

An antitrust injury is a merits issue that must be decided at trial before a preliminary injunction can issue. Establishing a substantial likelihood of suffering antitrust injury is an overarching prerequisite to obtaining injunctive relief under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 26; it is equally applicable to cases brought under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, and those under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18. The doctrine of antitrust standing demands a showing of more than the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact; a plaintiff must also demonstrate that it is the proper party to bring a private antitrust action. In suits for damages, courts may assess several factors in an antitrust standing analysis: (1) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury (i.e., whether the plaintiff can prove antitrust injury); (2) the directness of the injury; (3) the speculative measure of the harm; (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and (5) the complexity in apportioning damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN6 [down arrow] Remedies, Injunctions

The U.S. Supreme Court has distinguished the standing analysis for injunctive relief under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 26, by explaining that some of the factors (other than antitrust injury) that are appropriate to a determination of standing in an action for damages are not relevant in an action for injunctive relief. Such irrelevant factors would include the threat of multiple lawsuits or duplicative recoveries. Antitrust injury is injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The Fifth Circuit has further explained that antitrust injury is proof of an anticompetitive effect upon the plaintiff. Antitrust injury must be interpreted narrowly, and that the plaintiff's burden is a heavy one.

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN7 [down] Antitrust Actions, Facilities

Examples of anticompetitive effects that are accepted as proof of antitrust injury include increased prices and decreased output. Antitrust injury, however, does not encompass the threat of decreased competition. The fear of the loss of profits due to price competition is not antitrust injury. Similarly, the notion that a plaintiff is facing the specter of a monopoly or speculation that the plaintiff will be sold or go out of business is not enough to establish antitrust injury. In sum, speculative statements about anticompetitive effects will not satisfy the narrow standard for establishing antitrust injury.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Horizontal Mergers

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

HN8 [down] Antitrust, Horizontal Mergers

In broad terms, a horizontal merger occurs when the merging firms are in the same product and geographic market. The basic economic reason for limiting horizontal mergers is the generally accepted theory that horizontal mergers increase market concentration, which, in turn, can substantially lessen competition among rivals, particularly with respect to price.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Vertical Acquisitions

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

**HN9** [down] Antitrust, Vertical Acquisitions

A vertical merger joins companies that share a supplier-customer relationship. Unlike horizontal mergers, vertical arrangements do not inherently remove an independent competitor from the market. Vertical integration may be "upstream," when a firm produces supplies or component materials that could have been supplied by independent producers, or "downstream," when a firm processes or distributes products that could have been sold to independent producers or distributors.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Vertical Acquisitions

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

**HN10** [down] Antitrust, Vertical Acquisitions

Whereas horizontal mergers are commonly analyzed in terms of market concentration, there is no comparable theoretical basis for evaluating the anticompetitive effects of a vertical merger. This is because firms that merge vertically are engaged in different product markets; thus, a simple vertical merger neither combines market concentrations nor increases the market power of the merging entities. Courts therefore evaluate the anticompetitive effects of a vertical merger in terms of other structural consequences or economic barriers such as whether the merger "forecloses" competitors of the merging entities from a source of supply that would otherwise be open to them.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

**HN11** [down] Market Definition, Relevant Market

In assessing the merits of a claim under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, a court must appraise not merely the immediate impact of the merger upon competition, but it also must predict the merger's impact upon competitive conditions in the future. The burden is on the plaintiff to show that a probable anticompetitive impact will flow from the merger. To do so, the plaintiff must show that the merger of the two clinics will substantially lessen competition within an established area of effective competition, or relevant market. A relevant market is determined by proof of a (1) product market (the line of commerce); and (2) geographic market (the section of the country). Instead of mandating a formal or legalistic structure for defining relevant markets, Congress has adopted a pragmatic, factual approach.

960 F. Supp. 1104, *1104L 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5104, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The burden is on the plaintiff to prove the relevant product market or markets. Determining a relevant product market is generally a question of fact for the jury or factfinder, although in certain instances a legal conclusion is required. The classic test for defining the outer boundaries of a specific product market is to identify a set of goods or services that are reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purpose or use. A product market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they were produced-price, use and qualities considered. Interchangeability of products is often explained in terms of the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it. This concept considers the alternative products to which consumers might turn in the event of a price increase. A high cross-elasticity of demand between two products indicates, for antitrust purposes, that the products are in the same relevant product market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN13 [blue icon] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

Consistent with U.S. Supreme Court precedent, the factfinder in an antitrust case may determine that well-defined submarkets exist within a specific product market. Economically significant submarkets themselves can constitute relevant product markets and are often determined by examining: industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity; the product's peculiar characteristics and uses; unique production facilities; distinct customers; distinct prices; sensitivity to price changes; and specialized vendors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The Antitrust Division of the U.S. Department of Justice has recognized that general surgery services are ordinarily considered a separate product market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

HN15 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

In cases involving service industries such as banking and retailing, courts sometimes recognize a "cluster of services" as the relevant product market. For example, products and services constituting commercial banking are sufficiently inclusive to be deemed a distinct line of commerce. The reliability of using a cluster of services approach in evaluating hospital mergers has been called into question recently. In light of the evolving and increasingly complex health care services market, there is concern that the cluster approach might lead to distorted results. It is the plaintiff's burden to define its product markets.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN16 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

It is well-established that, in defining a market, one must determine whether products or services exist that are good substitutes for the product or service in question.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN17 [blue icon] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

The burden of producing evidence of geographic markets rests with the plaintiff. A properly defined geographic market reflects the commercial realities of the industry at issue and is one that is economically significant. The Fifth Circuit has explained that the geographic component of a relevant market definition encompasses the area of effective competition in which the product or its reasonably interchangeable substitutes are traded. Stated otherwise, the key question in determining a geographic market is: where does a potential buyer look for potential suppliers of the service--what is the geographical area in which the buyer has, or, in the absence of monopoly, would have, a real choice as to price and alternative services? Precedent unmistakably demonstrates that delineating geographic markets is no easy endeavor and that some "fuzziness" may be inherent in any attempt to do so.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

**HN18** [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The Elzinga-Hogarty (E-H) test is a well-known tool of economists. In a merger setting, the purpose of the E-H test is to analyze patterns of consumer origin and destination and then to use that information to. A geographic market is an area where there are (1) relatively few imports of the product (little comes in from the outside or LIFO); and (2) few exports of the product (little goes out from the inside or LOFI). The E-H test is a matter of looking at how many people leave an area to get services (outflow) and how many people come into an area to get services (inflow). Both inflow and outflow are important in determining how much prices would have to increase within that area before lost business would make the price increase unprofitable. Although often used in merger studies, the E-H test is not without its critics.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

**HN19** [blue icon] Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

In addition to coal, examples of homogeneous products would include commodities such as crude, oil, steel and cement. In contrast, differentiated products are commonly associated with service sectors such as commercial banking or health care. A merger of differentiated product markets is said to occur when the products of the merging firms are close but not perfect substitutes. Because the entire notion of market share in the economist's competition model rests on the premise that all competing firms produce identical products, product differentiation presents an added wrinkle in estimating the anticompetitive consequences of a merger.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Horizontal Mergers

**HN20** [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

Once the relevant markets are defined, the plaintiff's final hurdle in presenting its prima facie case under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, is establishing probable anticompetitive impact within the relevant markets. In a horizontal merger situation, there are two basic methods that a plaintiff can employ to meet its burden of proof: (1) demonstrate that the size of the merging entities makes them inherently suspect in light of Congress' design to prevent undue economic concentration, resulting in a significant increase in market share and an undue market concentration; and (2) in cases where size is not inherently suspect, show that other characteristics of the market make the merger more economically harmful than the bare market share and market concentration statistics would otherwise indicate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation
Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN21 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

Appellate courts have held that a district court acts within its discretion in determining that evidence of a high market share establishes a prima facie antitrust violation, which shifts the burden of rebuttal to the defendant. The law is clear, nonetheless, that evidence of high market share does not require a district court to conclude that there is an antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN22 [] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Natural monopolies have been described as occurring when, because of the high ratio of fixed costs to variable costs, a single firm has declining average costs at the level of demand in the industry, such that the single firm can supply the service more cheaply than two firms could. A shorthand definition: a natural monopoly is a market that can practically accommodate only one competitor. For example, a small town may not be able to support more than one movie house. In such a case, demand is too thin and monopoly is inevitable. Where the character of the market makes monopoly inevitable, commentators have observed that it would be futile and a waste of judicial resources to hold such a monopoly unlawful. Natural monopolies do not run afoul of the antitrust laws so long as the monopoly in question acquired and maintained its position by business acumen, superior quality or other honest means and did not exclude competitors improperly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

HN23 [] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Present consumer preferences are not dispositive in determining whether viable alternatives exist in any given market. The key inquiry must focus upon where consumers can practicably go for primary care services after the merger, not where consumers have been going, or where they would prefer to go.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

**HN24** [ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Antitrust case law exhibits a long-drawn-out battle over what percentage share of a given market is sufficient to demonstrate market power. Understandably, the U.S. Supreme Court has never defined "undue percentage share" in terms of a hard and fast numerical threshold. The emphasis in merger cases brought under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. 18, has been to analyze carefully the likely harm to consumers, instead of accepting a firm's postmerger market share as conclusive proof of its market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

**HN25** [ ] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Courts must not dwell on an individual competitor's singular problems. In accord with the broad purpose of antitrust law, the proper focus must be on proof of harm to the market as a whole. To prevent antitrust laws from becoming trivialized, the key is impact on competition as a whole within the relevant market; workplace grievances between physicians and hospitals should not be elevated to the status of an antitrust action.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Vertical Acquisitions

**HN26** [ ] Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

Although no precise formula exists for determining whether a vertical merger may lessen competition, the traditional analysis involves an examination of certain market factors, which are applied to the merger at hand. Those factors include: the nature and economic purpose of the arrangement; the likelihood and size of any market foreclosure; the extent of concentration of sellers and buyers in the industry; the capital cost required to enter the market; the market share needed by a buyer or seller to achieve a profitable level of production or "scale economy"; the existence of a trend toward vertical concentration or oligopoly in the industry; and whether the merger will eliminate potential competition by one of the merging parties. Other factors may include the degree of market power that would be possessed by the merged entity and the number and strength of competing suppliers and purchasers. By applying these factors to a given case, courts attempt to predict the probable future consequences of a vertical merger.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Specific Intent

HN27 [blue icon] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

Section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits persons from combining or conspiring to monopolize interstate commerce among the states or with foreign nations. 15 U.S.C. § 2. The terms "combine" and "conspire" are used interchangeably by the courts and refer to the same offense. The elements of a Section 2 conspiracy claim are: (1.) the existence of specific intent to monopolize; (2.) the existence of a combination or conspiracy to achieve that end; (3.) overt acts in furtherance of the combination or conspiracy; and (4.) an effect on a substantial amount of interstate commerce.

Counsel: For HTI HEALTH SERVICES, INC., plaintiff: Heber S. Simmons, III, ARMSTRONG, ALLEN, PREWITT, GENTRY, JOHNSON & HOLMES, Jackson, MS. Wendy E. Ackerman, Steven C. Sunshine, Jonathan L. Greenblatt, Matthew David Lee, Thomas Aquinas McGrath, III, Linda M. McMahon, SHEARMAN & STERLING, Washington, DC.

For QUORUM HEALTH GROUP, INC., defendant: Jon Randall Patterson, William N. Reed, BAKER, DONELSON, BEARMAN & CALDWELL, Jackson, MS. Sean M. Haynes, W. Michael Richards, BAKER, DONELSON, BEARMAN & CALDWELL, Memphis, TN. For RIVER REGION MEDICAL CORPORATION fka Parkview Medical Corporation, defendant: William N. Reed (See above). For VICKSBURG CLINIC, P.A., defendant: Todd C. Richter, WATSON & JERNIGAN, P.A., Jackson, MS. John P. Sneed, PHELPS DUNBAR, Jackson, MS.

Judges: David Bramlette, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: David Bramlette

Opinion

---

[*1107] OPINION

Plaintiff HTI Health Services, Inc., d/b/a Columbia Vicksburg Medical Center ("Columbia") brought this antitrust action to enjoin a pending merger involving the defendants Quorum Health Group, Inc. ("Quorum Health"), River Region Medical Corporation (formerly known as ParkView Medical Corporation, referred to herein as "River Region") **2 and the Vicksburg Clinic, P.A. (the "Vicksburg Clinic"). The co-defendants are referred to collectively herein as "Quorum". The merger is structured to align the two largest physician clinics in Vicksburg, Mississippi with one of the town's largest hospitals, Parkview Regional Medical Center ("ParkView"). ParkView's leading hospital rival, the Vicksburg Medical Center ("VMC"), is owned and operated by Columbia. Columbia is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Columbia/HCA HealthCare Corp., the largest for-profit hospital chain in the country. Quorum Health, the indirect majority shareholder of River Region, is also a large, for-profit health care corporation.

In its complaint filed July 29, 1996, Columbia alleged antitrust violations under the Sherman and Clayton Acts and requested preliminary and permanent injunctive relief to prohibit the merger's consummation. Following expedited discovery, the parties' opted to proceed directly to trial. The Court heard the case without a jury from September 30 through October 16, 1996. After the parties gave their closing arguments on November 6, 1996, the Court took the case under advisement. Now having thoroughly considered the record, legal arguments [**3] and case law, it is this Court's opinion, based on the findings of fact and conclusions of law to follow, that Columbia has failed to carry its burden of proof under the relevant antitrust laws. Columbia's request for injunctive and all other relief must therefore be denied.

[*1108] BACKGROUND

A long and competitive history of a divided medical community creates the setting for this contested merger. For many years, VMC and ParkView (previously named Mercy Hospital) have been considered the leading hospitals in Vicksburg and the surrounding areas of Warren County, Mississippi. Vicksburg, a city of roughly 30,000 people, is located in the southwest quadrant of the state on the Mississippi River border with Louisiana. Although in the past as many as four hospitals have operated in Vicksburg, ParkView and VMC are the only survivors, and the city has become a "two-hospital town."

The Street Clinic and the Vicksburg Clinic are the city's oldest physician clinics. Both have operated since approximately the World War I era, and both have maintained a traditional alliance with one of the two hospitals: the Street Clinic with Parkview and the Vicksburg Clinic with VMC. The Street Clinic is [**4] located on ParkView's medical campus, and physicians associated with that clinic are shareholders in River Region. The Vicksburg Clinic operates as a professional association and is officed on VMC's campus in space that it leases from Columbia. Without delving into the historic reasons for these hospital/clinic alliances, suffice it to say that the age-old schism running through Vicksburg's medical community has divided the dominant doctor and hospital groups into two, well-matched rivals.

According to the executed merger agreement dated May 31, 1996 among ParkView Medical Corporation (predecessor to River Region), Parkview Sub Inc. and the Vicksburg Clinic (the "Merger Agreement"), the merger is structured to accomplish a stock-for-stock swap between River Region and the Vicksburg Clinic. In short, once the merger is consummated, the Vicksburg Clinic physicians will join their longstanding rivals at the Street Clinic as shareholders of River Region. The merged clinics (referred to herein as the "River Region Clinic") will become the single largest physician clinic in the Vicksburg area.

Although the Street and Vicksburg Clinics are currently the largest and most diversely specialized [**5] clinics in Warren County, they are not the only ones. Mission Primary Care (the "Mission Clinic"), also located in Vicksburg, is a family medicine clinic that was established in 1995 and is managed by a Columbia-owned medical services organization, VIP, Inc. Other clinics in Vicksburg include the Better Living Clinic and two small clinics that are operated by River Region, The Family Medicine Clinic of Vicksburg and the Women's Clinic of Vicksburg. In addition to these smaller clinics, a number of independent physicians practice in and around Vicksburg. Columbia's VIP manages, in whole or in part, many of the independent physicians' practices.

The revolutionary reorganization of the health care industry, which has swept much of the country since the early 1990s, has been slow to arrive in Vicksburg. Innovations that are prevalent elsewhere, such as integrated health care delivery systems, intrastate and regional networking among hospitals and other providers, and managed care options in health insurance coverage, are new to the Vicksburg community. Essentially, managed care plans such as health maintenance organizations ("HMOs") and preferred provider organizations ("PPOs") negotiate [**6] with doctors, hospitals and other health service providers to establish a health care network that will serve the plan's enrollees. Because managed care plans purchase services in quantity, they negotiate for discounted rates from the health care providers, which, in principle, are passed along to customers in the form of lower health care coverage costs. With or without the pending merger, the expectation is that managed care will grow over time in Vicksburg and Warren County, thereby stimulating price competition as plan providers scramble for new customers. Managed care may make additional inroads into Warren County through a Medicaid managed care pilot program, which is slated to begin in eleven Mississippi counties but which was inactive at the time of trial.

Also new to Vicksburg is the growth of casino gambling. Along with the development of the casino industry, Vicksburg and Warren County are experiencing significant economic growth, a decline in unemployment [*1109] and the entry of new, nongaming businesses. Documents in evidence indicate that, between 1980 and 1994, Warren County's median family income increased 404% and its per capita income rose 126%.

Against this backdrop of [**7] changing times, a group of Vicksburg's independent physicians and clinic doctors formally met in the summer of 1993 to discuss ideas about reorganizing the area's hospital and medical services. One idea was to eliminate the duplication of services and procedures performed at the two hospitals by assigning a specific set of services to each hospital. For example, ParkView might be designated as the pediatric and ob/gyn center, while VMC would develop as the surgical care center. The hope was that, eventually, a new hospital could be constructed on a separate, neutral site and the old hospitals could be used for psychiatric units, nursing home facilities or other purposes. Another concern voiced by the physicians was Vicksburg's need for technologically advanced medical equipment including, but not limited to, a cardiac catheterization laboratory, open heart surgery facilities and a permanent magnetic resonance imaging ("MRI") device. Because of intense competition between the two hospitals, neither had been successful in receiving the required approval from the state authorities for procuring such equipment. As a general rule, Mississippi requires that hospitals receive state regulatory [**8] approval in the form of a "certificate of need" or "CON" before capital expenditures for certain equipment or new technology may be incurred. In an attempt to end the regulatory gridlock, the Vicksburg doctors discussed approaching the CEOs of the two hospitals to encourage them to join forces and procure the cardiac catheterization laboratory and MRI in a profit-sharing arrangement. The doctors hoped that, by forming a joint venture, the state regulators would no longer be forced to choose between the two hospitals and could award certificates of need to the unified project. Following the 1993 meeting, letters were sent to the executives of the owners of both hospitals, but the physicians' efforts failed. Vicksburg's need for technologically advanced equipment remained unresolved at the time of trial.

Dissatisfaction with the medical delivery system continued to grow among the community's physicians in general, and the Vicksburg Clinic physicians in particular. In December 1994, the nineteen physician shareholders at the Vicksburg Clinic wrote to the CEO of HealthTrust, owner and operator of VMC at that time, to complain about the hospital's failure to execute a several-year-old plan [**9] to expand the clinic's physical facilities and improve services. The physician group expressly requested a definite commitment from HealthTrust for expansion, recruitment and strategic planning and also requested a meeting with senior management to formulate such plans. In the spring of 1995, Columbia acquired HealthTrust and assumed the management and operation of VMC. Thereafter, the Vicksburg Clinic's executive committee met with Columbia management to discuss the clinic's continuing need for expanded office space, strategic planning concerns and the doctors' perception that Columbia's management service organization, VIP, Inc., was competing directly with the Vicksburg Clinic's physician recruitment efforts. Despite verbal assurances from Columbia, tension increased between the Vicksburg Clinic physicians and Columbia management. By November 1995, the Vicksburg Clinic members had initiated discussions with both River Region and Columbia regarding proposals for reorganizing the clinic through an asset purchase or otherwise. Several months later, after considering proposals from both sides, the Vicksburg Clinic's board of directors and shareholders held a special meeting and voted [**10] to pursue River Region's stock acquisition proposal. By February 1996, the physicians and River Region had signed a letter of intent. Negotiations continued, and the parties entered into the Merger Agreement in May 1996.

Also in the spring of 1996, the merger participants received notice that the Department of Justice ("DOJ") had opened an antitrust investigation of the proposed acquisition. To date, DOJ has not filed suit or taken any action against the Vicksburg Clinic merger. In the absence of agency intervention, [*1110] Columbia filed this private Civil action for injunctive and other relief.

FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

I. Antitrust Claims

Columbia's offensive against the merger is two-fold. First, under Section 7 of the Clayton Act,<sup>1</sup> Columbia claims that the proposed merger is likely to substantially lessen competition in Vicksburg's physician, hospital and managed care markets. (Count I, Complaint.) The result, according to Columbia, will be higher prices for health care services and medical insurance coverage, which will harm the citizens of Vicksburg as well as employers such as Columbia. Second, Columbia alleges that Quorum violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act [\*\*11]<sup>2</sup> by combining or conspiring to monopolize Vicksburg's physician and hospital services with the specific intent of making Vicksburg a "one hospital town." (Complaint, Count II.)

[**12] A. Injunctive Relief Standard

Columbia has asked for both preliminary and permanent injunctive relief pursuant to Section 16 of the Clayton Act. HN3↑ Section 16 entitles private persons to sue for injunctive relief "when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity . . ." 15 U.S.C.A. § 26 \(West Supp. 1996\) [hereinafter "Section 16"]. Under Section 16, permanent injunctive relief may issue upon a demonstration of "threatened" injury, even though the plaintiff has not yet suffered actual injury. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 130, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 \(1969\). In other words, a plaintiff may qualify for permanent injunctive relief under the statute by demonstrating a significant threat of injury from an impending violation of the antitrust laws or from a contemporary violation that is likely to continue or recur. Id. The remedy is flexible and may be adapted to achieve a reconciliation of the public interests that Congress sought to protect with competing private needs. Id. at 131.

HN4↑ When adjudicating preliminary injunction requests under the antitrust [\*\*13] laws, the courts in this circuit require that the movant meet its burden under a well-established four-pronged test by proving that:

1. there is a substantial likelihood of success on the merits;
2. there is a substantial threat that the movant will suffer irreparable injury if the injunction is not issued;
3. the threatened injury to the movant outweighs any damage the injunction might cause to the opponent; and

<sup>1</sup> HN1↑ Section 7 of the Clayton Act provides in pertinent part:

No person engaged in commerce or in any activity affecting commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no person subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another person engaged also in commerce or in any activity affecting commerce, where in any line of commerce or in any activity affecting commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly. . . .

15 U.S.C.A. § 18 \(West Supp. 1996\).

<sup>2</sup> HN2↑ Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides:

Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $ 10,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $ 350,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

15 U.S.C.A. § 2 \(West Supp. 1996\).

4. the injunction will not disserve the public interest.

H & W Indus., Inc. v. Formosa Plastics Corp., U.S.A., 860 F.2d 172, 179 (5th Cir. 1988); Pearl Brewing Co. v. Miller Brewing Co., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16841, 1993 WL 424236 (W.D.Tex., Mar. 31, 1993), aff'd, 52 F.3d 1066 (5th Cir. 1995).

The precedent in our circuit clearly warns that a preliminary injunction is an extraordinary remedy that can be granted only if the movant has clearly shown all four prerequisites. Mississippi Power & Light v. United States Gas Pipe Line, 760 F.2d 618, 621 (5th Cir. 1985). [*1111] Indeed, the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals instructs that the grant or denial of injunctive relief must be the product of a reasoned application of the foregoing four factors and cannot be based [**14] solely on an inquiry into the underlying merits of the substantive antitrust claims. H & W Indus., 860 F.2d at 179 (reversing the district court's denial of a preliminary injunction where the court's ruling was based solely on the underlying merits of the plaintiff's antitrust and breach of contract claims). With these principles in mind, the Court turns first to evaluate the likelihood of Columbia's success on the merits.

B. Antitrust Injury

An initial merits issue that this Court must decide is whether Columbia has shown the threat of an "antitrust injury." Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort, 479 U.S. 104, 108, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986); Phototron Corp. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 842 F.2d 95, 98 (5th Cir. 1988) (HN5↑) antitrust injury is a merits issue that must be decided at trial before a preliminary injunction can issue), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1023, 100 L. Ed. 2d 228, 108 S. Ct. 1996 (1988). Establishing a substantial likelihood of suffering antitrust injury is an overarching prerequisite to obtaining injunctive relief under Section 16; it is equally applicable to cases brought under Section 2 of the Sherman Act and those under Section 7 of the Clayton Act. T.O. Bell v. Dow Chemical, Co., 847 F.2d 1179, 1182 & n.4 (5th Cir. [**15] 1988). Unless Columbia can establish its antitrust injury in this case, it will lack standing<sup>3</sup> to sue. Phototron, 842 F.2d at 98 (construing Cargill, 479 U.S. 104 at 113); see also T.O. Bell, 847 F.2d at 1182.

[**16] The United States Supreme Court has defined antitrust injury as "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Cargill, 479 U.S. at 109 (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977)); see also Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 538-39. In the wake of this Supreme Court precedent, the Fifth Circuit has further explained that antitrust injury is proof of an anticompetitive effect upon the plaintiff. T.O. Bell, 847 F.2d at 1182 n.4. It is clear from this circuit's precedent that antitrust injury must be interpreted narrowly, e.g., Anago Inc. v. Tecnol Med. Products, Inc., 976 F.2d 248, 249 (5th Cir. 1992), and that the plaintiff's burden is a heavy one. Phototron, 842 F.2d at 98. HN7↑ Examples of anticompetitive effects that are accepted as proof of antitrust injury include increased prices and decreased output. Antitrust injury, however, does not encompass the threat of decreased competition. Anago, 976 F.2d at 249; see also Pearl Brewing Co. v. Miller Brewing Co., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16841, 1993 WL 424236 (W.D.Tex. 1993), aff'd, 52 F.3d 1066 (5th Cir. 1995) (the [**17] fear of the loss of profits due to price competition is not antitrust injury). Similarly, the notion that a plaintiff is facing the specter of a monopoly or speculation that the plaintiff will be sold or go out of business is not enough to establish antitrust injury. Phototron, 842 F.2d at 100. In sum, it is clear from the case law that speculative statements about anticompetitive effects will not satisfy the narrow standard for establishing antitrust injury. E.g., *Anago, 976 F.2d at 249; Doctor's Hospital of Jefferson, Inc. v. [*1112] Southeast Medical Alliance, Inc., 897 F. Supp. 290, 293 (E.D.La. 1995)* (expert's speculative statements about increased health care costs and an environment conducive to increased prices for inpatient and outpatient hospital care fell short of the strict Fifth Circuit standard for antitrust injury), appeal pending, No. 96-30220 (5th Cir. argued Oct. 3, 1996).

<sup>3</sup>The Supreme Court has explained that the doctrine of antitrust standing demands a showing of more than the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact; a plaintiff must also demonstrate that it is the proper party to bring a private antitrust action. Associated General Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535 n.31, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983). In suits for damages, courts may assess several factors in an antitrust standing analysis: (1) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury (i.e., whether the plaintiff can prove antitrust injury); (2) the directness of the injury; (3) the speculative measure of the harm; (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and (5) the complexity in apportioning damages. T.O. Bell, 847 F.2d at 1183 (construing Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. 519). HN6↑ The Supreme Court, however, has distinguished the standing analysis for injunctive relief under Section 16 by explaining that some of the factors (other than antitrust injury) that are appropriate to a determination of standing in an action for damages are not relevant in an action for injunctive relief. Such irrelevant factors would include the threat of multiple lawsuits or duplicative recoveries. Cargill, 479 U.S. at 111 n.6.

In essence, Columbia asserts that it will suffer two separate types of antitrust injury from the merger: one being an anticompetitive horizontal injury in certain physician services and managed care purchasing markets and the other being a vertical injury in the acute inpatient hospital [**18] services market.<sup>4</sup> Columbia's theory of horizontal injury focuses on its assertion that the merger will empower Quorum to raise prices for a number of physician services in Vicksburg. In its capacity as an employer of over 400 employees in the Vicksburg community and as a purchaser of physician services for these employees, Columbia contends that it is a proper plaintiff under the antitrust laws to challenge the alleged harm. See Blue Shield of Va. v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 481-84, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982) (consumer of mental health services had standing to challenge anticompetitive conduct in psychotherapy market). In addition, Columbia claims that it will suffer horizontal injury in the managed care purchasing markets because, as a self-insured employer, it is in the process of "seeking to contract" for managed care physician services for its employees. Columbia argues that, after the merger, "it will no longer be able to play the two multispecialty physician groups in Vicksburg against each other" in price negotiations. Letter from Columbia to the Honorable David C. Bramlette (11/13/96) at 5 [hereinafter "Columbia Posttrial Letter"].

[**19] Columbia also asserts that it will suffer a separate injury from the likely vertical effects of the merger. Columbia argues that by virtue of the postmerger economic integration of the Vicksburg Clinic and ParkView, Quorum will have the power and economic incentive to foreclose Columbia from the acute care hospital services market. This anticompetitive vertical effect will result, according to Columbia, from the Vicksburg Clinic physicians' financial incentive and ability to shift their patient admissions to ParkView (instead of VMC) and from Quorum's postmerger power to exclude Columbia from competition for managed care contracts.

In response, Quorum urges that Columbia's entire standing argument rests entirely on speculation of what might happen postmerger and is therefore insufficient to demonstrate antitrust injury under the Fifth Circuit's narrow standard. Quorum further argues that Columbia has no standing to complain of injury in at least one of the alleged <sup>4</sup> HN8 [↑] In broad terms, a horizontal merger occurs when the merging firms are in the same product and geographic market. 1984 DOJ Merger Guidelines § 3.0, reprinted in ANTITRUST LAWS AND TRADE REGULATION PRIMARY SOURCE PAMPHLET (Matthew Bender 1996) [hereinafter PRIMARY SOURCE]. The basic economic reason for limiting horizontal mergers is the generally accepted theory that horizontal mergers increase market concentration, which, in turn, can substantially lessen competition among rivals, particularly with respect to price. 4 PHILLIP AREEDA & DONALD R. TURNER, ANTITRUST LAW P 1000a (1980).

In contrast, HN9 [↑] a vertical merger joins companies that share a supplier-customer relationship. Brown Shoe v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 323, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962). Unlike horizontal mergers, vertical arrangements do not inherently remove an independent competitor from the market. 2A PHILLIP AREEDA, HERBERT HOVENKAMP & JOHN L. SOLOW, ANTITRUST LAW P 570a (1995). Vertical integration may be "upstream" (when a firm produces supplies or component materials that could have been supplied by independent producers) or "downstream" (when a firm processes or distributes products that could have been sold to independent producers or distributors). 3 AREEDA & TURNER, supra, at P 723.

HN10 [↑] Whereas horizontal mergers are commonly analyzed in terms of market concentration, there is no comparable theoretical basis for evaluating the anticompetitive effects of a vertical merger. This is because firms that merge vertically are engaged in different product markets; thus, a simple vertical merger neither combines market concentrations nor increases the market power of the merging entities. 4 id. at P 1000(a). Courts therefore evaluate the anticompetitive effects of a vertical merger in terms of other structural consequences or economic barriers such as whether the merger "forecloses" competitors of the merging entities from a source of supply that would otherwise be open to them. Id.; see also Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 324.

product markets -- physician services [*1113] purchased by managed care -- because, as a factual matter, Columbia is neither a managed care company nor an employer that purchases managed care products.

Recognizing the fundamental [**20] importance of the antitrust injury prerequisite to the viability of Columbia's lawsuit, the Court requested and received supplemental briefing from the parties on the issue of standing. Having thoroughly reviewed and considered the supplemental briefing, counsel's oral arguments at trial on this issue and the many other written briefs, documents and case law submitted to the Court by the parties, it is this Court's conclusion that Columbia has established the requisite threat of antitrust injury and, accordingly, has standing to sue for injunctive relief under Section 16.

Because of the arguably speculative nature of Columbia's complained injury, the Court acknowledges, particularly in the light of this circuit's narrow standard, that some might regard this as a close call. However, the precise antitrust laws at issue in this case expressly require courts to deal in uncertainties and make reasoned assessments of the probable future effects of a proposed business transaction. See United States v. Rockford Memorial Corp., 898 F.2d 1278, 1286 \(7th Cir. 1990\) ("It is regrettable that antitrust cases are decided on the basis of theoretical guesses as to what particular market-structure [**21] characteristics portend for competition . . ."). Based on Columbia's thorough pleading and briefing, which cannot be criticized as "bare bones," it is this Court's view that Columbia's allegations of antitrust injury must not be lightly dismissed as speculative and are sufficient to persuade this Court that a serious analysis of the full merits of this case is warranted. The Court's conclusion at this early stage of its consideration is supported by the following evidence.

Mr. William Patterson, chief executive officer of VMC, testified credibly that Columbia is a purchaser of hospital and physician services for its employees in the Vicksburg market. (Trial Tr. at 1653.) The fact that Columbia purchases health care services in the Vicksburg market was not contested by Quorum's expert witness, Mr. Lloyd E. Oliver. (Id. at 2632.) The parties do not dispute that, following the merger, the surviving clinic will be the largest physician clinic in the Vicksburg area and the only multispecialty physician clinic<sup>5</sup> in Vicksburg. It will possess, as a statistical matter, high percentages of market share in the alleged physician services markets. According to Dr. David Eisenstadt, Columbia's [**22] expert witness, these market share percentages demonstrate a substantial likelihood of monopoly power in the alleged physician services markets. It appears to this Court that Columbia's allegations of postmerger market concentration raise, at the very least, a classic antitrust issue: whether the effect of the merger may be to substantially lessen competition in the alleged product markets and hurt consumers by empowering the postmerger survivors to raise prices. Rockford, 898 F.2d at 1282-83. This is precisely the type of injury that the antitrust laws are designed to prevent. Cargill, 479 U.S. at 109; see also Community Publishers, Inc. v. Donrey Corp., 892 F. Supp. 1146, 1167 \(W.D.Ark. 1995\) (protecting consumers from monopoly prices is the central concern of antitrust law).

[**23] The Court's analysis of Columbia's showing of antitrust injury does not rest on the evidence of market share data alone. See Community Publishers, 892 F. Supp. at 1167 (interpreting Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 \(1990\), as rejecting the proposition that antitrust injury may be presumed on the basis of market share data). Among other things, the Court has considered the abundant testimony regarding the historic competition and rivalry between the Street Clinic and the Vicksburg Clinic. The testimony indicated that the two clinics have been direct and significant competitors not [*1114] just in terms of price, but also on the basis of quality and services offered. Even without the assistance of market share data, the fact that the merger will eliminate this tradition of multifaceted competition between the city's two leading, rival clinics is enough to raise concerns about the threat of postmerger anticompetitive effects.

---

<sup>5</sup> Multispecialty physician clinics have been described as an alternative to the traditional, single specialty practices offered by members of a medical staff. In general, multispecialty clinics are designed to provide "one-stop shopping" for various medical specialties and are intended to be a cost-effective means of health care delivery. They may also provide extended hours, house calls and other patient benefits. See Remarks of Mary Lou Steptoe, Acting Director FTC Bureau of Competition, delivered 4/5/95 to ABA Antitrust Section, reprinted in 1995 WL 150724 (F.T.C.).

Considering the high postmerger market concentrations in the physician markets that Columbia has alleged and demonstrated, coupled with evidence regarding the consequences of the merger, the Court is satisfied that Columbia has shown the [**24] requisite threat of antitrust injury and has presented something more than "the notion that [it is] facing the specter of a monopoly." Phototron, 842 F.2d at 100.

Arguably more speculative is Columbia's theory of vertical injury in the acute care inpatient hospital services market. The linchpin of this theory is Columbia's contention that, because the Vicksburg Clinic physicians will become postmerger equity shareholders in River Region Medical Corporation, these physicians will have a financial incentive, directly caused by the merger, to send their patients to ParkView for hospital services. Conceding that these physicians will have no postmerger contractual obligation to refer their patients to ParkView, Columbia maintains that the merger nonetheless creates the threat that Columbia will lose its primary source (or upstream supply) of hospital patient referrals and thereby become foreclosed from competing in the downstream market of acute care inpatient hospital services. In this regard, the Court noted the testimony of Dewey Greene, President of Columbia's Delta Division, who stated that the Vicksburg Clinic physicians account for 80% or more of VMC's total patient activity. [**25] (Trial Tr. at 533.) It is well-established that the primary vice of a vertical merger is foreclosing a competitor from a key source of supply that, absent the merger, would otherwise be open to it. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. 294, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502. Setting aside the ultimate merits of this contention (which are addressed in Part I.C. below), the Court cannot ignore the allegation that the merger creates a questionable financial incentive for the Vicksburg Clinic physicians to steer their hospital patients to ParkView rather than VMC. But for the merger, this unique financial incentive would not exist. Finding that the alleged incentive is not beyond the realm of possibility, the Court concludes that Columbia has demonstrated the requisite threat of antitrust injury. See Community Publishers, 892 F. Supp. at 1167 (holding that a plaintiff/newspaper-owner had established the requisite threat of antitrust injury and therefore had standing to challenge a local newspaper acquisition because the transaction would create an incentive for the target newspaper to terminate its advertising sharing agreement with the plaintiff). Satisfied with Columbia's demonstration of threatened antitrust injury from [**26] both the horizontal and vertical effects of the proposed merger, the Court will proceed to evaluate Columbia's likelihood of success on the merits of these antitrust claims.

C. Merits of Section 7 Clayton Act Claim

HN11 [↑] In assessing the merits of Columbia's Section 7 claim, this Court must appraise not merely the immediate impact of the merger upon competition, but it also must predict the merger's impact upon competitive conditions in the future. United States v. Philadelphia Nat'l Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 362, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715 \(1963\). The burden is on Columbia to show that a probable anticompetitive impact will flow from the merger. Domed Stadium Hotel, Inc., v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 732 F.2d 480, 492 \(5th Cir. 1984\). To do so, Columbia must show that the merger of the two clinics will substantially lessen competition within an established "area of effective competition," or relevant market. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 324. A relevant market is determined by proof of a (1) product market (the line of commerce); and (2) geographic market (the section of the country). Id.; see also Domed Stadium, 732 F.2d at 491 (first step in analyzing a Section 7 claim is defining the relevant product and [**27] geographic markets). Instead of mandating a formal or legalistic structure for defining relevant markets, Congress has adopted a pragmatic, factual [*1115] approach. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 336.

1. The Alleged Product Markets

HN12 [↑] The burden is on the plaintiff to prove the relevant product market or markets. Coastal Fuels of Puerto Rico, Inc. v. Caribbean Petroleum Corp., 79 F.3d 182 \(1st Cir.\), cert. denied, 136 L. Ed. 2d 214, 117 S. Ct. 294 \(1996\); C.E. Services, Inc. v. Control Data Corp., 759 F.2d 1241 \(5th Cir.\), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1037, 88 L. Ed. 2d 583, 106 S. Ct. 604 \(1985\). Determining a relevant product market is generally a question of fact for the jury or factfinder, although in certain instances a legal conclusion is required. Seidenstein v. Nat'l Medical Enter., Inc., 769 F.2d 1100, 1106 \(5th Cir. 1985\); Domed Stadium, 732 F.2d at 487. The classic test for defining the outer boundaries of a specific product market is to identify a set of goods or services that are reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purpose or use. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325; United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956); Dougherty v. Continental Oil Co., 579 F.2d 954, <sup>1**28]</sup> 963, n.4 (5th Cir. 1979) (a product market is "composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they were produced-price, use and qualities considered"). Interchangeability of products is often explained in terms of the "cross-elasticity of demand" between the product itself and substitutes for it. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325. This concept considers the alternative products to which consumers might turn in the event of a price increase. HERBERT HOVENKAMP, ECONOMICS AND FEDERAL ANTITRUST LAW § 3.3 (1985). A high cross-elasticity of demand between two products indicates, for antitrust purposes, that the products are in the same relevant product market. Id.

960 F. Supp. 1104, *1115-997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5104, **27

HN13↑ Consistent with Supreme Court precedent, the factfinder may also determine that well-defined submarkets exist within a specific product market. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325. Economically significant submarkets themselves can constitute relevant product markets and are often determined by examining: industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity; the product's peculiar characteristics and uses; unique production facilities; distinct customers; distinct <sup>1**29]</sup> prices; sensitivity to price changes; and specialized vendors. Id; Domed Stadium, 732 F.2d at 487-88.

Columbia has focused on two broad categories of product markets: physician services and hospital services. Within the physician services category, Columbia has sought to prove four distinct product markets: (1) primary care; (2) general surgery; (3) urology; and (4) otolaryngology (ear-nose-throat or "ENT"). In addition, Columbia argues that two submarkets exist in the physician services category, which are pediatrics (a submarket of primary care) and physician services purchased by managed care (also referred to during the course of this litigation as the "multispecialty clinic submarket"). The Court concludes that, except for physician services purchased by managed care, Columbia has alleged proper product markets. The Court will address each product market and submarket.

a. Primary Care

According to Columbia, the primary care market in Vicksburg consists of general practitioners, family practitioners, internists and, as a distinct submarket, pediatricians. Columbia deliberately excludes obstetricians and gynecologists ("ob/gyn") from its definition of the primary care <sup>1**30]</sup> market on the grounds that (i) ob/gyns do not typically provide routine primary care services to their female patients in the Vicksburg area; (ii) managed care plans could not use an ob/gyn to substitute for a primary care physician in forming a physician panel; and (iii) only adult women seek out ob/gyns for services.

Although Quorum does not dispute the recognition of primary care as a relevant product market, it does dispute Columbia's proposed market make-up. Quorum contends that the primary care market includes family practitioners, pediatricians, internists and ob/gyns. Quorum also denies that pediatrics is a separate submarket. In support of <sup>1**1116]</sup> its position, Quorum points to Drs. Sessums and Giffin, family practitioners at the Mission Clinic. Each of these doctors dedicates 20% or more of his practice to providing pediatric care to children. On the other hand, Quorum names no specific Vicksburg area physician who provides both ob/gyn and routine primary care services to patients.

Having considered the evidence and the interchangeability of the services at issue, the Court accepts Columbia's definition of primary care for the purposes of this antitrust lawsuit. On this issue, <sup>1**31]</sup> the Court found informative the testimony of Columbia's expert, Dr. Eisenstadt, who stated his belief that general practitioners, family practitioners and internists in the Vicksburg area are considered "in some sense substitutable for one another and therefore they could be called primary care physicians." (Trial Tr. at 2116.) Dr. Eisenstadt further testified that, while pediatricians provide primary care to children, they cannot substitute for internists or general practitioners in the formation of a managed care panel. (Id. at 2117.) From an antitrust market-definition perspective, Dr. Eisenstadt concluded that pediatricians would be a relevant submarket under primary care physicians. However, Dr. Eisenstadt neither included ob/gyns in the primary care market nor considered them as a submarket of primary care based on his belief that women in the Vicksburg area would not routinely use an ob/gyn for primary care purposes.

Dr. Eisenstadt's opinion was partially corroborated by Ms. Sharon Petty, vice-president and CFO of the Ameristar Casino in Vicksburg. As a health benefits provider to over 1,000 employees, Ms. Petty stated that she could not offer her employees an ob/gyn or [**32] a pediatrician as a substitute for an internist. (Id. at 1180-81.)

The record does not identify any specific ob/gyn in the Vicksburg area who is generally capable of providing primary care services to the population as a whole and who would therefore be an acceptable substitute for general practitioners, family practitioners or internists. The testimony regarding the extent to which Vicksburg area ob/gyns provide primary care services to women patients was vague and unsubstantiated. See, e.g., id. at 1122 (testimony of Dr. Fagan citing unnamed surveys to support the notion that one-third of all women see only a gynecologist as a physician); id. at 2662 (Quorum's expert incorrectly citing Dr. Fagan for the proposition that 70% of all women see only an ob/gyn). Recognizing that Columbia's proposed definition of the primary care market may not be perfect,<sup>6</sup> it is nonetheless adequately defined and inadequately refuted for the purposes of obtaining Clayton Act relief. Rockford, 898 F.2d at 1285 (forced to choose between two imperfect market definitions, court of appeals chose the less imperfect one).

[**33] b. Other Physician Markets

The additional physician markets proposed by Columbia (general surgery, urology and ENT) are unopposed by Quorum in its final briefing to this Court. At trial, Quorum's expert, Mr. Oliver, accepted general surgery and urology as appropriate markets.<sup>7</sup> Mr. Oliver expressed some reservation about the proposed ENT market because there was testimony at trial suggesting that Dr. Bradfield, an ENT at the Vicksburg Clinic, might have intentions of leaving the Vicksburg area. In the event that Dr. Bradfield left Vicksburg, Mr. Oliver suggested that the postmerger monopoly in ENT could disappear. With respect to the task at hand -- defining relevant product markets that are supported by the record evidence -- the Court finds that speculation about what Dr. Bradfield might or might not do lacks probative value. In the light of little to no opposition from Quorum, the Court accepts Columbia's definition of the physician product markets for general surgery, urology and ENT.

[**34] [*1117] c. Submarket of Physician Services purchased by Managed Care (or the "multispecialty clinic submarket")

Columbia's proposed submarket for physician services purchased by managed care,<sup>8</sup> also referred to as the "multispecialty clinic submarket," is not so easily demarcated as the preceding practice specialties. Indeed, Columbia itself has exhibited some difficulty throughout this litigation in naming and presenting a consistent, well-defined statement of the market that it now asks this Court to recognize. Initially, Columbia sketched a separate product market (not submarket) of "managed care contracting for physician and hospital services." (Complaint P 44, emphasis added). This description has evolved into Columbia's latest articulation on the subject, which depicts a leaner submarket without the added weight of hospital services:

Plaintiff also alleged ... and proved a submarket [of the physician services product market] consisting of physician services purchased by managed care plans. This submarket can also be referred to as a multispecialty clinic submarket in Vicksburg because of the configuration of doctors in Vicksburg -- two multispecialty clinics and [**35] only a few independent physicians. Given this configuration, a managed care plan must purchase physician services from one of the two multispecialty clinics to have a marketable panel.

<sup>6</sup> For example, it is not entirely clear (logically speaking) why pediatricians should be considered a submarket of primary care but ob/gyns are not. Neither party has proposed this seemingly plausible, parallel submarket structure nor introduced evidence to support it.

<sup>7</sup>  DOJ's Antitrust Division has recognized that general surgery services are ordinarily considered a separate product market. See DOJ Business Review Letter, 1996 WL 285712 (D.O.J.), at n.1 (March 19, 1996).

<sup>8</sup> A managed care executive testified at trial that he defines managed care as the "application of any number of methodologies to health care delivery" with the purpose of achieving two goals: (1) increasing efficiency; and (2) increasing the quality of a health care delivery system. (Trial Tr. at 260.)

Whether this market is called a "multispecialty clinic submarket" or "physician services purchased by managed care submarket," it does not change the fact that without the merger there are only two significant sellers of physician services in Vicksburg -- the Vicksburg Clinic and the Street Clinic -- and after the merger there would be only one -- River Region.

Columbia Posttrial Letter at 3.

Having studied Columbia's most recent effort to nail down a definition of this seemingly slippery submarket, the Court refers to [**36] the testimony of Columbia's own expert witness, Dr. Eisenstadt. Contrary to Columbia's written and oral arguments to this Court, Dr. Eisenstadt specifically asserted on cross-examination that managed care purchases of multispecialty clinic services are not a submarket, but rather a separate product market. (Trial Tr. at 2292.) Dr. Eisenstadt also described multispecialty clinic services as a "cluster of services" market.<sup>9</sup> Columbia, however, has not pursued this theory in its final briefs or arguments to this Court. (Id. at 2125.)

[**37] It is the plaintiff's burden to define its product markets, C.E. Services, 759 F.2d at 1244, and the Court now has before it a cafeteria of differing definitions from which to chose. On the basis of these inconsistencies alone, some might find that Columbia has failed to define its product market sufficiently. The Court, however, will disregard Columbia's earlier variations on the theme of managed care and multispecialty clinics and will focus its attention on the final interpretation, cited in pertinent part above. See Columbia Posttrial Letter at 3-4.

Quorum vigorously argues against the proposed multispecialty clinic submarket on the ground that Columbia is attempting to allege an invalid cluster of services market. According to Quorum, multispecialty clinics do not gather complex, interrelated and interdependent services under one roof like commercial banks (see supra note 9); rather, they offer separate and sometimes competing [*1118] services that are available independently elsewhere. Relying on Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Wisc. v. Marshfield Clinic, 65 F.3d 1406 (7th Cir. 1995), Quorum further argues that purchases by managed care are nothing more than discounted [**38] pricing methods and, like an HMO (which is a form of managed care), do not constitute a separate product market. Id. at 1409, 1411 (reversing jury finding that HMO was a separate product market; "HMO is basically a method of pricing services").

This Court is aware of no precedent that has recognized either physician services purchased by managed care or multispecialty physician clinics as a relevant product market (and/or submarket) under the antitrust laws. In the absence of precedent bearing directly on point, the Court will depend on conventional antitrust tools to parse an arguably unconventional market. See, e.g., Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325; see also supra discussion at Part I.C.1.

A review of the facts regarding the current state of managed care in Vicksburg is essential to determining whether the market segment identified by Columbia qualifies as an economically significant submarket under the Brown Shoe doctrine. On this issue, the Court found credible the testimony of Charles Pitts, CEO of United HealthCare of Mississippi, Inc. ("United Health"), a subsidiary of a nationwide managed health care services company. Mr. Pitts also serves as board chair of Mississippi's [**39] HMO trade association and testified that he is familiar with the development of managed care nationwide and, most importantly, in Mississippi. (See generally Trial Tr. at 258-379.) Pitts stated that, compared with the rest of the country, managed care is in its infancy in Mississippi. He estimated that only 1% to 2% of Mississippi's population is enrolled in an HMO product (compared with 20% to 25% for the nation as a whole). Within Mississippi, the HMO industry is better-established in the southeast corner of the state as compared to Vicksburg, which is one of the industry's newer locations. Pitts further testified that United Health has marketed its managed care products in Vicksburg only since March 1996, although United Health

<sup>9</sup> HN15↑ In cases involving service industries such as banking and retailing, courts sometimes recognize a "cluster of services" as the relevant product market. E.g., Philadelphia Nat'l Bank, 374 U.S. at 357 (products and services constituting commercial banking were sufficiently inclusive to be deemed a distinct line of commerce).

The reliability of using a cluster of services approach in evaluating hospital mergers has been called into question recently by the court in F.T.C. v. Butterworth Health Corp., 946 F. Supp. 1285, 1996 WL 570479 (W.D. Mich. 1996). In light of the evolving and increasingly complex health care services market, the Butterworth court expressed a concern that the cluster approach might lead to distorted results. Id. at *19 n.5.

recently acquired a company that has been offering "a product" in Vicksburg for several years. Pitts did not offer any specifics about the product or its performance record.

Pitts's testimony regarding the infancy of managed care in Mississippi was confirmed by the testimony of Dr. Eisenstadt (id. at 2399), by the testimony of Rissa Richardson, a provider relation manager for American Medical Plans of Mississippi (id. at 388), and by Columbia's [**40] own documents. (Exhibit DQ-121, p. HCA9685 (VMC's Strategic Review FY '96 noting "relatively immature status" of managed care)). Ms. Richardson explained that her company markets both commercial and Medicaid HMO/managed care products in Mississippi. At the time of trial, American Medical had no Vicksburg enrollees for its commercial product, and the anticipated Warren County Medicaid pilot program (in which Richardson hopes to participate as an HMO provider) had not begun operations. Richardson testified that there are only fourteen HMOs in Mississippi, all in varying stages of development including those with membership, those that are poised to begin services, and those "that are just in the loose stages of forming and developing." (Trial Tr. at 385.) With respect to managed care companies, Richardson further stated, "... almost everyone in Mississippi is a new kid on the block." (Id. at 388.)

The Court found informative Mr. Pitts's testimony about his company's efforts to construct its Vicksburg network of physician providers.<sup>10</sup> At the time of trial, United Health had contracted with primary care physicians and specialists who practice independently in the Vicksburg area [**41] and at the [*1119] Vicksburg Clinic. According to Pitts, the "rule of thumb" in developing a network of physician providers is to attempt to contract with representatives of every service available in the market (primary care physicians, cardiologists, etc.) and to secure as large a representation as possible. Pitts stressed that, particularly in a fledgling managed care market like Mississippi, a managed care product designer needs to attract new customers by offering the broadest physician choice possible in its provider network. Ideally, the network would include from 40% up to 100% of the primary care physicians available in the local market; in Vicksburg, it also would include physicians located in towns within close proximity to Vicksburg and Jackson specialists, if none are available in Vicksburg. By way of example, Pitts testified that it would not be desirable, from a marketability standpoint, to contract solely with the Mission Clinic in establishing his network of physician providers because this would result in a very limited representation. He conceded, nonetheless, that the five or six primary care physicians associated with the Mission Clinic would be sufficient to service the [**42] adult primary care needs of his company's entire customer population in Vicksburg and Warren County.

Similarly, Ms. Richardson testified that health care consumers prefer a broad choice of physicians on HMO provider panels. In terms of marketability, Richardson stated that she would want to have at least one of the two largest clinics in Vicksburg on her panel. Although she already has a contract with the primary care physicians at the Vicksburg [**43] Clinic, she nonetheless has contracted with other physicians, including those at the Mission Clinic and the Better Living Clinic. Richardson testified that her company is continuing to meet and negotiate with physicians in order to broaden its Vicksburg provider panel.

Based on the evidence, including the aforementioned trial testimony, the Court finds as a fact that the managed care industry is still in its early stages of development in the Vicksburg area. Indeed, managed care providers are just beginning to enter the Vicksburg health care market. They are in the process of simultaneously building the broadest possible provider panels and establishing first-time client relationships with area employers. At this juncture, managed care purchases of physician services in Vicksburg can hardly be described as a well-defined, economic entity within the meaning of Brown Shoe.<sup>11</sup> In sum, it is this Court's view that Columbia is, at best, precipitous in seeking submarket status for a very limited and economically immature segment of the Vicksburg

---

<sup>10</sup> As used in the managed care industry, Pitts defined "provider" to mean anyone who delivers health care services such as physicians, hospitals, home health agencies and emergency service companies. Perhaps most frequently, the term is used in reference to physicians. A "network of providers" refers to the total health care delivery system constructed by the managed care company and offered to its customers. The network is comprised of all health care providers who have contracted with the managed care company to provide health care services. (Trial Tr. at 270-71.)

<sup>11</sup> The Court notes that the record is silent as to the total dollar amount of multispecialty physician services purchased by managed care in Vicksburg or anywhere else.

physician services market. See Butterworth Health Corp., 946 F. Supp. 1285, 1996 WL 570479, at *15 & n.5 (criticizing the FTC for its artificial and misleading [**44] focus on recipients of hospital services purchased by managed care at discounted rates -- a very limited segment of hospital care consumers).

The premise of Columbia's proposed multispecialty clinic submarket is that, postmerger, a managed care plan must purchase physician services from the River Region multispecialty clinic in order to have a marketable provider panel. At the heart of this premise is Dr. Eisenstadt's opinion that, in communities where multispecialty clinic services are available, managed care plans prefer to "one-stop shop" at the multispecialty clinic, rather than build a provider panel of smaller clinics and independent physicians. (Trial Tr. at 2044.) In essence, Columbia claims that the River Region Clinic will be the only place to one-stop shop in Vicksburg after the merger and that no substitute for this multispecialty [**45] clinic will be available to managed care plans. The Court concludes that Columbia's fundamental premise in this regard is unfounded.

HN16 It is well-established that, in defining a market, one must determine whether products or services exist that are good substitutes for the product or service in question. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325; see generally ANTITRUST ADVISER § 1.23 (Irving Scher ed. 1995). Based on the testimony of Charles Pitts, the Court finds as a fact that physicians not associated with the Vicksburg and Street Clinics are currently [*1120] being used by, and are available for use by, managed care plans. Nothing in the record suggests that independent physicians in the Vicksburg area or physicians associated with the smaller Vicksburg clinics (e.g., the Mission Clinic) are incapable of providing acceptable physician services to managed care plans. To the contrary, the testimonial and documentary evidence indicates that a number of physicians such as Drs. Sessums (Mission Clinic), Daniel Dare (Southern Orthopedics), Yoshinobu Namihira (Better Living Clinic), Roy Kellum, Joel Payne, Earl Stubblefield and James Tucker serve on managed care panels. (Trial Tr. at 146, 148-49, [**46] 283; Exhibits DVC-373; DQ-532, -533, -534, -535, -536, -541, -545, -546, -547 and -551; PX-454.) Pitts voiced no dissatisfaction with the independent physicians currently serving on his company's panel and expressed a clear desire to sign up as many of these doctors as possible. It therefore appears to this Court that there is an inconsistency between Dr. Eisenstadt's opinion and the testimony of Mr. Pitts. Although Dr. Eisenstadt's opinion regarding one-stop shopping may hold true in other parts of the country, the Court finds that it is not the rule in Vicksburg's yet-to-be-developed managed care market. As Mr. Pitts credibly testified, the best standard in Vicksburg is an offering of the broadest physician choice possible at this stage of managed care development. The Court further notes that, even if one-stop shopping were the preference of managed care companies in Vicksburg, there is nothing in the antitrust laws or in our precedent that protects a consumer's shopping preference where viable substitutes are available in the market. Simply put, the antitrust laws protect consumer access to free and competitive markets; they do not protect the personal likes and dislikes of every [**47] consumer in that market.

Thus, in the total absence of evidence to prove the incompetence of any Vicksburg area physician who is not associated with the Vicksburg or Street Clinics, this Court finds as a fact that, from an antitrust perspective, valid substitutes for the physician services offered by the two dominant clinics not only exist in Vicksburg but they are being solicited by managed care providers.

Before leaving this issue the Court notes that, to the extent Columbia is claiming submarket status based on the distinct discount pricing that is associated with managed care purchases (see Columbia Posttrial Letter at 4), the Court rejects this argument as myopic. Although distinct pricing is one of the indicia to be considered under the Brown Shoe submarket test, the seven factors listed in Brown Shoe are neither comprehensive nor definitive and must be applied in accord with the peculiar attributes of any given market and the specific facts of a given case. Considering the totality of the record evidence in this case, Columbia's proposed submarket of managed care purchases of physician services does not pass muster under Brown Shoe. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at [**48] 325; see also Marshfield Clinic, 65 F.3d at 1409, 1411 (HMO, a method of discount pricing, was not a separate product market in the light of record evidence).

d. The Hospital Market

Columbia defines the relevant hospital services market as "acute inpatient hospital services provided in common by Parkview and VMC." (Plaintiff's Proposed Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law at P 116; emphasis in original.)

Quorum offers no opposition to this market. In fact, Quorum's expert, Mr. Oliver, affirmatively testified that acute inpatient hospital services constitute a relevant product market in this case. (Trial Tr. at 2805.) The Court therefore finds that Columbia has identified an appropriate hospital services product market.

2. The Geographic Markets

The next hurdle that Columbia must overcome in presenting its prima facie case is to define the proper geographic market for each identified product market.<sup>12</sup> See United States v. Connecticut Nat'l Bank, 418 U.S. 656, 669, 41 L. Ed. 2d 1016, 94 S. Ct. 2788 [*1121] (1974) (HN17↑) burden of producing evidence of geographic markets rests with the plaintiff). A properly defined geographic market reflects the commercial realities of the industry at issue and is one [**49] that is economically significant. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 336-37. The Fifth Circuit has explained that the geographic component of a relevant market definition encompasses the area of effective competition in which the product or its reasonably interchangeable substitutes are traded. Hornsby Oil Co. Inc. v. Champion Spark Plug Co., Inc., 714 F.2d 1384, 1393 (5th Cir. 1983). Stated otherwise, the key question in determining a geographic market is "where does a potential buyer look for potential suppliers of the service--what is the geographical area in which the buyer has, or, in the absence of monopoly, would have, a real choice as to price and alternative services?" United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 588-89, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966). Our precedent unmistakably demonstrates that delineating geographic markets is no easy endeavor and that some "fuzziness" may be inherent in any attempt to do so. Philadelphia Nat'l Bank, 374 U.S. at 360 n.37. This case is no exception.

[**50] a. Primary Care

At its broadest, Columbia delineates the geographic market for primary care physician services as Warren County and five surrounding zip codes: 71282 (Tallulah, Louisiana); 39150 (Port Gibson, Mississippi); 39086 (Hermanville, Mississippi); 39144 (Pattison, Mississippi); and 39156 (Redwood, Mississippi) (Exhibit PX-419.) Columbia's expert, Dr. Eisenstadt, testified that 87% of the visits to the primary care physicians at the Vicksburg, Street and Mission Clinics (the "representative clinics") were made by patients living in this geographic area. (Trial Tr. at 2132.) Dr. Eisenstadt based this opinion on physician visit data produced by the representative clinics to which he applied a modified Elzinga-Hogarty analysis.<sup>13</sup> Because [*1122] of a lack of certain patient destination data, Dr. Eisenstadt

---

<sup>12</sup> Having already disposed of Columbia's proposed multispecialty clinic submarket, the Court has no need to address the evidence of geographic market for that product and no need to address any remaining issues related to that proposed submarket.

<sup>13</sup> HN18↑ The Elzinga-Hogarty ("E-H") test is a well-known tool of economists that was devised by Professor Kenneth B. Elzinga of the University of Virginia and Thomas F. Hogarty, formerly professor of economics at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University. Kenneth G. Elzinga & Thomas F. Hogarty, The Problem of Geographic Market Delineation in Antimerger Suits, 18 ANTITRUST BULL. 45 (1973) [hereinafter Elzinga & Hogarty, Market Delineation]; Kenneth G. Elzinga & Thomas F. Hogarty, The Problem of Geographic Market Delineation Revisited: the Case of Coal, 23 ANTITRUST BULL. 1 (1978) [hereinafter Elzinga & Hogarty, Market Delineation Revisited]. In a merger setting, the purpose of the E-H test is to analyze patterns of consumer origin and destination and then to use that information to identify geographically the relevant competitors of the merging firms. F.T.C. v. Freeman Hosp., 69 F.3d 260, 264-65 (8th Cir. 1995); United States v. Rockford Memorial Corp., 717 F. Supp. 1251, 1266 (N.D.Ill. 1989), aff'd 898 F.2d 1278 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 920, 112 L. Ed. 2d 249, 111 S. Ct. 295 (1990). As explained by Professor Elzinga, a geographic market is an area where there are (1) relatively few imports of the product (little comes in from the outside or LIFO); and (2) few exports of the product (little goes out from the inside or "LOFI"). Kenneth G. Elzinga, Defining Geographic Market Boundaries, 26 ANTITRUST BULL. 739, 742 (1981) [hereinafter Elzinga, Market Boundaries]. At trial, Dr. Eisenstadt explained in basic terms that the E-H test is a matter of looking at how many people leave an area to get services (outflow) and how many people come into an area to get services (inflow). (Trial Tr. at 2064-66.) Both inflow and outflow are important in determining how much prices would have to increase within that area before lost business would make the price increase unprofitable. (Id.)

The methodology used in performing a traditional E-H analysis entails a minimum of four steps and employs two key calculations: LIFO and LOFI (defined above). Elzinga & Hogarty, Market Delineation I at 73-76 (outlining four-step process for was unable to perform a complete E-H analysis of patient inflows and outflows in the primary care and other physician markets. Specifically, Dr. Eisenstadt had data showing the area from which the representative clinics draw their patients, which permitted him to perform a LOFI measurement (defined supra at note 13). He could not, however, perform a LIFO measurement (defined [**51] id.) because none of the clinics, the State of Mississippi or any other public source keeps records that show where the residents of a specific area go for physician services. Notwithstanding the lack of patient destination data, Dr. Eisenstadt was able to express an unqualified opinion regarding the geographic market for primary care due, in part, to his experience in drawing inferences from hospital markets (for which there was complete patient flow data). (Trial Tr. at 2132-33.)

[**52] In its challenge to the proposed geographic market, Quorum's expert, Mr. Oliver, stated to the Court that the defendants were not trying to define their own version of the geographic markets for physician services; instead, they were trying to show where it was likely that patients "come from and where they travel . . ." (Id. at 2706.) In this spirit, Mr. Oliver suggested that Columbia's proposed geographic market for primary care physician services was illogical because it extended thirty-six miles west but only seventeen miles east. Mr. Oliver postulated that, if people were willing to drive thirty-six miles in one direction, they would be willing to drive the same distance in all directions. To illustrate his point, Mr. Oliver presented the Court with a collection of diagrams, which are no doubt similar to what another Judge has described as "a dizzying series of concentric circles." Cf. Marshfield Clinic, 65 F.3d at 1411 (Posner, J.) (equating the plaintiff's proposed market derived from concentric circles drawn around clinic offices with a hunt for the snark of delusive exactness); Exhibits DQ-612-13. In Mr. Oliver's diagram of the primary care geographic market, each [**53] circle represents an area thirty-six miles in radius that surrounds a community outside of Dr. Eisenstadt's proposed geographic market where, nonetheless, a family practitioner or internist practices.

estimating market size in terms of area and volume). The analysis begins by locating the larger of the merging firms and drawing a hypothetical market area around the firm. Professors Elzinga and Hogarty initially suggested that the analysis should begin by drawing the minimum geographic area necessary to account for 75% of product shipments from the merging firm. This hypothetical area would be redrawn or adjusted throughout the analysis to reflect the results of the LIFO and LOFI calculations. Id. at 73-74. They subsequently ratcheted upward the initial 75% benchmark. Elzinga & Hogarty, Market Delineation Revisited, supra, at 2; see discussion infra at note 15.

To better illustrate the mechanics of the analysis, an economist studying a hospital merger would begin by drawing a hypothetical or provisional "service area" around the larger of the merging hospitals. The provisional service area would represent the economist's initial estimate of the basic area from which the merging hospital attracts its patients. Freeman Hosp., 69 F.3d at 264. In order to pinpoint where patients reside, the economist would compile a record of patient zip codes from the hospitals' patient discharge data. Using patient zip codes, the economist could then study the patients who reside within the provisional service area to determine where those patients go for hospital services. If it is discovered that the patients who live within an area use hospitals outside of that area, the economist has a basis for concluding that the outlying hospitals will act as a check on the exercise of market power by the merging hospitals. Id. at 264-65 & n.9; Rockford, 717 F. Supp. at 1266.

Once satisfied with the hypothetical LIFO market, the economist would use zip code data to perform a LOFI measurement of the percentage of hospital patients who reside within the service area. This calculation assists the economist in determining whether a significant number of "immigrating patients" (i.e., patients who reside outside of the service area) travel into the service area for hospital care. If a large number of immigrating patients use hospitals located within the service area, the economist may conclude that outlying hospitals located nearer to the immigrating patients' residences could act as a check on the exercise of market power by the service area hospitals. Rockford, 717 F. Supp. at 1266.

In essence, LOFI measures patient immigration into the service area (or "inflow" in Dr. Eisenstadt's terminology), and LIFO measures patient outmigration (or "outflow"). Rockford, 717 F. Supp. at 1266-67.

Although often used in merger studies, the E-H test is not without its critics. E.g., Elzinga & Hogarty, Market Delineation Revisited, supra, at 1-17; Elzinga, Market Boundaries, supra, at 739-52 (responding to Gregor y J. Werden's criticism of E-H test for, among other things, its focus on shipments data as the proper variable for estimating geographic market areas); see also Rockford, 717 F. Supp. at 1267 (court acknowledged general efficacy of the E-H test but criticized defendants' result-oriented application of the test).

Because it is not supported by record evidence, the Court rejects Mr. Oliver's theory that patients are just as likely to drive a certain distance in one direction as in any other direction<sup>14</sup> [**55] and therefore finds that Quorum's concentric circle illustrations lack [**1123] probative value in determining the geographic market for primary care services. More probative was Mr. Oliver's calculation and illustration of the area from which 90%<sup>15</sup> of the internal medicine and family practice visits to the Vicksburg and Street Clinics originate. (Exhibit DQ-612.) The Court notes that Mr. Oliver did not analyze data from the Mission Clinic. This analysis nonetheless resulted in a slightly larger geographic area than the one proposed by Dr. Eisenstadt and included certain communities that Dr. Eisenstadt had excluded such as Utica and Edwards, Mississippi. (Trial Tr. 2697.) Inexplicably, Quorum did not counter Dr. Eisenstadt's provisional service area with evidence of 90% of all primary care visits to [**54] the representative clinics but instead focused on just two components of primary care and two of the representative clinics. Conceivably, the geographic market based on 90% of all primary care visits (not just internal medicine and family practice) would be even larger than the market presented by Quorum. However, no party has introduced evidence that supports such a configuration, and the Court is left to choose between a proposed geographic market that corresponds to the relevant product market (i.e., primary care physician services) and one that, for no reason apparent on this record, does not. Having thoroughly reviewed the record before reaching a decision on this issue, the Court has weighed, among other things, Dr. Eisenstadt's detailed testimony regarding the rationale behind his methodology with the troublesome gaps that pepper the expert testimony offered by Quorum. On this record, the Court must choose Columbia's proposed geographic market of Warren County and the five surrounding zip codes as set forth on Exhibit PX-419.

[**56] b. Pediatrics Submarket

Columbia proposes a pediatrics geographic market consisting of the area where patients reside and who account for 88% of the pediatric visits to the Vicksburg and Street Clinics. (Exhibit PX-430.) Roughly, this geographic area encompasses Vicksburg and the immediately surrounding zip codes. (Trial Tr. at 2141-42.) Dr. Eisenstadt testified that Columbia's proposed geographic area for the pediatrics market was very close in size and zip code identity to that of the hospital market, which he consistently used as a reference point in drawing the provisional geographic markets. Quorum offered no alternative geographic market for pediatrics and no specific challenge to Columbia's proposal. In the absence of opposition (setting aside Quorum's general opposition to the recognition of pediatrics as a submarket), the Court accepts Columbia's proposed geographic market for pediatrics.

c. General Surgery

Columbia proposes a general surgery geographic market consisting of the area where patients reside and who account for 82% of the general surgery visits to the Vicksburg and Street Clinics, the only clinics that offer general surgery services. (Exhibit [**57] PX-429.) Like the geographic market for pediatrics, Columbia's proposed area for general surgery encompasses Warren County and the immediately surrounding zip codes.

Quorum offers an alternative geographic market that consists of an area representing patients who comprise 90% of the general surgery visits to the Vicksburg and Street Clinics. (Exhibit DQ-614.) This area includes Warren

---

<sup>14</sup> Not only is there no record evidence to prove that patients willingly drive thirty-six mile distances irrespective of the direction traveled, but the theory itself defies logic. It seems much more logical to this Court that simple reasons such as highway conditions and the quality of the services available at the end of the road will effect a person's decision to drive or not to drive.

<sup>15</sup> The proper inclusion percentage or "cutoff point" is hotly debated among experts and generally falls, depending on the product involved, in the range of 75% (the benchmark initially endorsed by Professors Elzinga and Hogarty) to 90% (now accepted as indicating a "strong market"). See discussion supra at note 13; Freeman Hosp., 69 F.3d at 264. In a physician services market, for example, this percentage is nothing more than the economist's determination of what portion of the patient population should be included in the service area in order to paint an accurate picture of the physicians' main patient base. It therefore defines "the degree of inclusiveness of the service area, or the degree to which the area accounts for the physicians' business." Freeman Hosp., 69 F.3d at 264 n.8. An inverse relationship thus develops: the lower the cutoff point, the higher the amount of patient business that is not included in the analysis. Despite this dichotomy, experts may favor a low cutoff point, if, for example, immigrating patients are not representative of the main patient base because they overwhelmingly seek specialized services. Id.

County and approximately ten [*1124] surrounding zip codes. (Id.) Mr. Oliver suggested that the geographic market could be even larger than this 90% area if one took into consideration the overlap among concentric circles of thirty-six and fifty-one mile radii drawn around nearby cities with general surgeons. (Id.; Trial Tr. at 2699-2700.)

The Court declines to adopt Mr. Oliver's concentric circle theory for the reasons explained above. See supra discussion at Part I.C.2.a. The Court would be inclined to accept Quorum's proposed 90% area, but the record evidence suggests that there are no general surgeons who practice in Quorum's additional outlying area (i.e., the area that exceeds Columbia's proposed 82% geographic market area). (Trial Tr. at 2141.) Ultimately, this means that, whether the Court [*58] accepts Columbia's 82% area or Quorum's 90% area, the geographic market selected will have no impact on calculating market concentration -- the final element in the plaintiff's prima facie case and the last step in this analytical exercise. See market share discussion at Part I.C.3. below. Because the testimony indicates that reasonable economists differ in their choice and use of inclusion percentages, and because the Court's determination of this geographic market will have little or no effect on the calculation of postmerger market share in general surgery, the Court accords Columbia the benefit of the doubt and accepts its proposed geographic area for the general surgery market.

d. Urology

Based on the same methodology used for the preceding geographic markets, Columbia proposes a market for urology services that includes the area where patients reside and who account for 86% of the urology visits to the Vicksburg and Street Clinics, the only clinics in Vicksburg that offer urology services. (Exhibit PX-442.) Quorum proposes an area that represents the residences of patients who account for 90% of the urology visits to the two clinics. The record indicates that no independent [*59] urologists practice in the Vicksburg area. (Exhibit DVC-395.)

Finding little material difference in the size of the 86% and 90% areas and no difference whatsoever in the ultimate market share calculations for these two proposed areas, the Court accepts Columbia's geographic market for urology services.

e. ENT

According to the testimony and other evidence, Columbia's proposed geographic market for ENT services represents the area where patients reside and who account for 90% of the ENT patients at the Vicksburg and Street Clinics (Trial Tr. at 2141; Exhibit PX-446), while that of Quorum represents 90% of the ENT visits to only one physician, Dr. Windham of the Street Clinic. (Trial Tr. at 2701; Exhibit DQ-611.) Finding little material difference in the size of the two proposed markets, the Court accepts Columbia's geographic market for ENT services.

f. Acute Inpatient Hospital Services

Columbia claims that the proposed geographic market for acute inpatient hospital services is Warren County, a portion of Madison Parish in Louisiana, and a portion of Claiborne County in Mississippi. (Trial Tr. at 2059; Exhibit PX-428; see Exhibit PX-411 for zip codes comprising the [*60] provisional geographic market.) In addition to the VMC and ParkView hospital complexes, Columbia's proposed area contains two smaller hospitals: Claiborne County Hospital and Madison Parish Hospital. Dr. Eisenstadt testified that the four hospitals located within this provisional area exhibited a 17% inflow rate and an 18% outflow rate. The expert further explained that these inflow/outflow rates indicated that 17% of the patient discharges from the provisional area hospitals were comprised of patients living outside of the provisional area (i.e., the inflow rate) and 18% of patients living within the provisional area were discharged from hospitals other than the four hospitals located within the provisional area (i.e., the outflow rate). (Trial Tr. at 2077.) According to Dr. Eisenstadt, under a traditional E-H analysis of homogeneous products such as coal,<sup>16</sup> inflow and outflow rates [*1125] of 10% or less would be considered to indicate a strong

<sup>16</sup>  HN19 In addition to coal, examples of homogeneous products would include commodities such as crude, oil, steel and cement. Callaway Mills Co. v. F.T.C., 362 F.2d 435, 444 (5th Cir. 1966). In contrast, differentiated products are commonly associated with service sectors such as commercial banking or health care. A merger of differentiated product markets is said to market. (Id. at 2074.) He added, however, that with differentiated products such as hospital services, inflow and outflow rates in excess of 10% were, in his experience, routine. (Id. at 2074-75.)

[**61] Quorum proposes an initial hospital services geographic market comprised of the area where 90% of VMC's and ParkView's patients live. (Id. at 2765-66; Exhibit DQ-616.) Mr. Oliver testified that his proposed area was based on an analysis of patient inflow to the two hospitals, but he had not taken into consideration patient outflow. (Trial Tr. at 2766.) In drawing the proposed area, Mr. Oliver did not consider patient inflow or outflow with respect to any outlying hospitals such as those in Claiborne County or Madison Parish. (Id. at 2765-66.) Mr. Oliver did suggest, generally, that a number of hospitals, clinics and health centers within seventy-five miles of Vicksburg exert competitive influences on Parkview, which would argue in favor of a more expansive geographic market.

Mr. Oliver also analyzed patient origination data for the Jackson hospitals and placed particular emphasis in his testimony on the results of his review of patient data from the Methodist Medical Center ("Methodist") in Jackson. (Trial Tr. at 2716-20; Exhibits DQ-617-18.) Significantly, the record indicates that Methodist is located approximately twenty-nine miles from downtown Vicksburg and about fifteen [**62] miles from the Warren County line. (Trial Tr. at 932-33.) In order to extract the effect of patient outmigration to Jackson for tertiary services that are not offered in Vicksburg (and which are not included in the acute inpatient hospital services market as defined in this case), Mr. Oliver isolated and studied only the hospital procedures that are performed by both the Vicksburg and Jackson hospitals. He concluded that Methodist was drawing patients from Vicksburg for procedures that were available at the Vicksburg hospitals.<sup>17</sup> (Id. at 2719.) Comparing the area from which the Vicksburg hospitals draw 90% of their patients with the area from which the six major Jackson hospitals draw 90% of their patients, Mr. Oliver noted a "significant overlap" and concluded that Jackson is in the same geographic hospital market as Vicksburg. (Id. at 2720.)

[**63] Having listened to and reread the testimony and cross-examination of the two experts, and having reviewed the exhibits in evidence that they prepared, the Court is persuaded that the methodology employed by Columbia's expert is thorough and, as between the two alternatives, the more reliable on this issue. See F.T.C. v. Freeman Hosp., 69 F.3d 260, 269 n.13 (8th Cir. 1995) ("District court has the discretion to evaluate the credibility of expert witnesses and accept the testimony it finds most plausible."). This is not to say that Columbia's provisional market for this product is free from flaws. One defect that Quorum notes is Columbia's failure to include in its geographic market the sites where consumers of acute care inpatient hospital services could practicably turn for alternative sources of the product should the merger be consummated. Id. at 268.<sup>18</sup> Sensitive to the fact of Methodist's [*1126] close proximity to the Warren County line and the range of services offered at that hospital, the Court has carefully weighed the validity of including Methodist (as well as the other Jackson area hospitals) within the hospital services geographic market in this case. It is fair to [**64] say that the evidence falls on both sides of the fence and pits a wealth of testimony regarding patient preferences for local hospitalization against the testimony of several Vicksburg physicians who claim that they are competing with and losing patients to the Jackson hospitals. Although one could easily conclude from this record that Jackson hospitals should be included in defining a geographic market for tertiary hospital services that are not offered in Vicksburg (such as cardiovascular surgery, neonatal occur when the products of the merging firms are close but not perfect substitutes. ANTITRUST ADVISER § 3.23 (Irving Scher ed. 1995). Because the entire notion of market share in the economist's competition model rests on the premise that all competing firms produce identical products, product differentiation presents an added wrinkle in estimating the anticompetitive consequences of a merger. HERBERT HOVENKAMP, ECONOMICS AND FEDERAL ANTITRUST LAW § 11.6 (1985).

---

<sup>17</sup> However, only three of the zip codes included in Mr. Oliver's 90% provisional hospital market for the Vicksburg area overlap with the relevant Methodist zip codes. (Exhibits DQ-616-17.) According to Mr. Oliver's analysis, the overlap (zip codes 39066, 39180 and 39194) accounts for just 3.33% of Methodist's patients who receive the shared procedures.

<sup>18</sup> The Eighth Circuit in Freeman Hospital found that the FTC's prima facie case contained a fatal flaw because the agency failed "to present evidence addressing the critical issue of where consumers of acute care inpatient hospital services could practicably turn for alternative sources of the product should the ... merger be consummated and ... prices become anticompetitive." Freeman Hosp., 69 F.3d at 268. The Court notes that, unlike the plaintiff in Freeman Hospital, Columbia addressed the issue of alternative sources at various times throughout this trial. (E.g., Trial Tr. at 103-04, 903, 1145-48; Exhibits PX-448-49.) The issue of alternative sources is further discussed at Part I.C.3.b.4. below.

intensive care and pediatric oncology), the same conclusion is not so apparent for primary and secondary services that are currently available at the Vicksburg hospitals. Considering the totality of the evidence (including the E-H analyses and other expert testimony and the testimony of market participants with respect to consumer habits, preferences, travel impairments, employment demands and managed care considerations), it is this Court's opinion that Vicksburg and the surrounding areas as identified by Columbia represent a viable, stand-alone geographic market for acute inpatient hospital services that is economically distinct from the Jackson market.

[**65] 3. Probable Anticompetitive Impact

HN20 [↑] Once the relevant markets are defined, the plaintiff's final hurdle in presenting its Section 7 prima facie case is establishing probable anticompetitive impact within the relevant markets. Domed Stadium, 732 F.2d at 491. In a horizontal merger situation, there are two basic methods that a plaintiff can employ to meet its burden of proof: (1) demonstrate that the size of the merging entities "makes them inherently suspect in light of Congress' design to prevent undue [economic] concentration," resulting in a significant increase in market share and an undue market concentration; and (2) in cases where size is not inherently suspect, show that other characteristics of the market make the merger more economically harmful than the bare market share and market concentration statistics would otherwise indicate. Id. With respect to the physician services markets, Columbia relies on the first method and offers postmerger market share calculations to prove its case. However, because Columbia has alleged vertical injury in the acute inpatient care hospital services market, market share calculations are inapplicable to that claim. See supra [**66] discussion at note 4. Columbia's proof of probable anticompetitive effect in that market must therefore be considered in the light of other structural consequences. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 324.

a. Market Concentration in the Physician Markets

Regarding the physician markets, Columbia's expert testified that, based on office visit data, the River Region Clinic would have the following postmerger market shares in the geographic markets heretofore accepted by the Court:

- (i) 70% for primary care physician services;<sup>19</sup>
- [**67] (ii) 100% for pediatric services;
- (iii) 100% for general surgery services;
- [*1127] (iv) 100% for urology services; and
- (v) 67% (based on physician headcount) for ENT services.

(Trial Tr. at 2149-53; Exhibits PX-420-23.)

Quorum offers little or no direct attack on Columbia's calculation of these market shares. Like the defendants in Butterworth, Quorum apparently concedes that the merger will result in high market concentrations. Butterworth Health Corp., 946 F. Supp. 1285, 1996 WL 570479, at *7-8 (defendants offered no contest to expert testimony regarding market concentrations of 47% to 65% in general acute care inpatient hospital services market; court concluded that the FTC established its Section 7 prima facie case).

<sup>19</sup> The 70% figure represents market share calculated by office visits in the primary care geographic market that the Court accepted in Part I.C.2.a. above. That geographic market roughly consists of Warren County, Tallulah, Port Gibson, Hermanville, Pattison and Redwood. (Exhibit PX-419.) If the market were comprised solely of Warren County, Columbia claims that the market share based on office visits would rise to 92%. (Plaintiff's Proposed Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law at P 95.)

Columbia concedes in its briefs that, if postmerger market share for primary care physician services is calculated by total primary care physician headcount rather than by patient office visits, the market share drops to 55% in the geographic market that the Court has accepted. (Id. at n.10.)

Based on this record, the Court accepts Columbia's calculation of the market share percentages, except for the pediatric services submarket and, as discussed in Part I.C.3.b.4. below, the primary care market. The record clearly indicates that less than 100% of the physicians practicing pediatric medicine within the geographic market accepted by the Court will be affiliated with the River Region Clinic. For example, Dr. Sessums of the Mission Clinic testified on cross-examination [**68] that he personally devotes approximately 20% of his practice to pediatric care and that one of his partners, Dr. Giffin, devotes an even larger amount of time to pediatric patients. (Trial Tr. at 131-34.) Dr. Sessums further testified under cross-examination that other physicians at the Mission Clinic provide pediatric care, that his partners are qualified to take care of infants and children and, correcting a statement made in his direct testimony, that the River Region Clinic would not possess a 100% market share in pediatrics. (Id. at 132-34.) The evidence shows that of the five physicians currently associated with the Mission Clinic, four of these doctors are engaged in full-time practices. (Exhibits DVC-395, PX-454-55; Trial Tr. at 92-93.) However, with the possible exception of Dr. Sessums, there is no evidence in the record that would permit this Court to calculate the practice time that each of these physicians devotes to pediatric services.

In addition, the record contains solid evidence that Columbia has recruited and signed an employment contract with an internal medicine/pediatrician, Dr. Steven W. Venters, who is committed to begin work at the Mission Clinic in August [**69] 1997. (Trial Tr. at 177, 1709, 1865-67, Exhibit DQ-153.) On this record, Dr. Venters's contractual commitment and imminent arrival in Vicksburg (conceivably before the resolution of this litigation) can neither be dismissed nor discounted by this Court in its assessment of the postmerger pediatrics market. Marshfield Clinic, 65 F.3d at 1411 (physicians may be part of a market even if not presently active in it); see also 1992 DOJ and FTC Horizontal Merger Guidelines § 3.2 n.27, reprinted in PRIMARY SOURCE, supra note 4 ("Firms which have committed to entering the market prior to the merger generally will be included in the measurement of the market."). However, there is no evidence that indicates how much time Dr. Venters will devote to pediatric services, and the Court is therefore at a loss in assessing his impact on the postmerger market.

In presenting its market share evidence, Columbia has failed to take into account, in any manner whatsoever, the Mission Clinic physicians or any independent physicians who provide pediatric services in the Vicksburg area or who are qualified to do so. On this record, an accurate calculation of the River Region Clinic's postmerger [**70] pediatrics market share is impossible. Weighing the evidence that four, and soon to be five, Mission Clinic physicians practice some unknown quantum of pediatric medicine against the evidence of five practicing pediatricians at the River Region Clinic, the Court is left with nothing more than an uncertain, but undeniably overstated, presentation of market concentration. The Court therefore holds that Columbia has failed, on this record, to bear its burden of proving probable anticompetitive effects in the pediatrics submarket.<sup>20</sup>

[**71] [*1128] b. Other Relevant Factors in the Physician Markets

HN21 [+] Appellate courts have held that a district court acts within its discretion in determining that evidence of a high market share establishes a prima facie antitrust violation, which shifts the burden of rebuttal to the defendant. United States v. Syufy Enter., 903 F.2d 659, 664 n.6 (9th Cir. 1990); see also Rockford, 898 F.2d at 1285 (defendants' immense shares in a reasonably defined market create a presumption of illegality); F.T.C. v. University Health, Inc., 938 F.2d 1206, 1218-19 & n.25 (11th Cir. 1991) (if government makes its showing, presumption of illegality arises). The law is clear, nonetheless, that evidence of high market share does not require a district court to conclude that there is an antitrust violation. Syufy, 903 F.2d at 664 n.6; United States v. Mercy Health Servs., 902 F. Supp. 968, 976 (N.D.Iowa 1995) (market share statistics are not conclusive indicators of anticompetitive effects).

---

<sup>20</sup> The Court observes that, even if Columbia had been able to prove undue market concentration in the pediatrics submarket, its recent and successful recruitment of Dr. Venters, a pediatrician and internist, would seriously undercut any claim that significant barriers to entry exist in the pediatrics market. United States v. Syufy Enter., 903 F.2d 659, 664 (9th Cir. 1990) (a high market share will not raise an inference of monopoly power in a market with low entry barriers or other evidence of a defendant's inability to control prices or exclude competitors).

At first blush, the market share percentages in this case, which range from 67% to 100%, are staggering. However, lest the Court's vision of the forest should become obstructed by some very tall statistical [**72] trees, a closer look at the human component behind each relevant market appears appropriate.

1. Urology

Starting with urology, which displays a 100% postmerger market share, the evidence shows that the entire market is comprised of only two urologists, Drs. Fagan and Humble. (Exhibit PX-454.) After the merger, both urologists plan to practice together at the River Region Clinic. Although Columbia urges this Court to find the merger presumptively unlawful on the basis of this 100% postmerger market share in urology, the evidence contains practical, common-sense reasons that justify a combined practice between these two doctors. According to the testimony of physician witnesses, the key issue for doctors is back-up or physician coverage. Dr. Fagan testified that coverage is a serious concern for physicians who want to take a vacation or a weekend off. (Trial Tr. at 986.) Dr. Fagan's testimony was echoed by Drs. Hopson ("Everyone likes call coverage.") and Sessums ("Generally physicians now that come out of residency desire to be with a group to provide coverage where you can have some off time."). (Id. at 126, 2574.) Considering the specific character of this two-person market [**73] that exists within a relatively small medical community, this Court finds it inconceivable that Congress intended the Clayton Act to prohibit two urologists in Vicksburg, Mississippi from practicing together under the same roof. The practical effect of such an impractical statutory interpretation could be to deprive two physicians from taking alternate weekends off or an occasional family vacation. With the real-life implications of this alleged antitrust violation in mind, it appears to this Court that, if there is any arguable monopoly here at all, it is a "natural monopoly." Marshfield Clinic, 65 F.3d at 1412 (clinic employing all twelve physicians in a county might be considered a "natural monopolist" -- a firm that has no competitors simply because the market is too small to support more than a single firm).<sup>21</sup>

[**74] [*1129] The Court cannot overemphasize the fact that the urology services market now under consideration is the relevant market exactly as it was proposed, defined and presented by Columbia. The Court further observes that Columbia's market study for VMC (entitled "Strategic Review FY '96") contains data showing that only 2.77 urologists are needed in a community of 90,000. (Exhibit DQ-121, p. HCA9679.) This same market study provides an estimated 1993 population of 29,100 for Vicksburg and 50,871 for Warren County. (Id. at p. HCA9620.) William Patterson of Columbia testified that he knew the current population of Vicksburg to be around 30,000 and that of Warren County to be in the range of 49,000 to 50,000. (Trial Tr. at 1992.) Dr. Sessums testified similarly that the approximate population of Vicksburg is 28,000 within the corporate city limits and 48,000 for Warren County. (Id. at 85.) It simply defies logic to imagine that federal law requires this Court to enjoin two urologists from working together in a market so small that it might only support two full-time urologists. As Judge Posner explained in Marshfield Clinic when analyzing a medical community too small to support [**75] more than a handful of physicians":

<sup>21</sup> HN22 [Footnote] Natural monopolies have been described as occurring when, "because of the high ratio of fixed costs to variable costs, a single firm has declining average costs at the level of demand in the industry, such that the single firm can supply the service more cheaply than two firms could." United Distribution Cos. v. F.E.R.C., 319 U.S. App. D.C. 42, 88 F.3d 1105, 1122 n. 4 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (citing RICHARD A. POSNER, ECONOMIC ANALYSIS OF LAW § 12.1, at 343-45 (4th ed. 1992). One court has offered a shorthand definition: "a natural monopoly is a market that can practically accommodate only one competitor." Nat'l Reporting Co. v. Alderson Reporting Co., Inc., 763 F.2d 1020, 1023-24 (8th Cir. 1985).

For example, a small town may not be able to support more than one movie house. 3 PHILLIP AREEDA & DONALD R. TURNER, ANTITRUST LAW P 621 (1978). In such a case, demand is too thin and monopoly is inevitable. Id. Where the character of the market makes monopoly inevitable, commentators have observed that it would be futile and a waste of judicial resources to hold such a monopoly unlawful. Id.

Natural monopolies do not run afoul of the antitrust laws so long as the monopoly in question acquired and maintained its position by business acumen, superior quality or other honest means and did not exclude competitors improperly. Nat'l Reporting, 763 F.2d at 1023-24; see also Marshfield Clinic, 65 F.3d at 1412-13.

If an entire county has only 12 physicians, one can hardly expect or want them to set up in competition with each other. We live in the age of technology and specialization in medical services. Physicians practice in groups, in alliances, in networks, utilizing expensive equipment and support. Twelve physicians competing in a county would be competing to provide horse-and-buggy medicine.

Marshfield Clinic, 65 F.3d at 1412 (emphasis added)

Having listened to fourteen days of trial testimony and arguments of counsel, having thoroughly reviewed the trial transcript and the evidence produced at trial, and finding no evidence on this record of improper exclusion of competitors from the urology services market or any other sign of unlawful monopoly power, the Court concludes that Columbia has failed to prove a Section 7 violation in the urology market.

2. General Surgery

As with urology, Columbia has demonstrated a 100% market share in general surgery. The evidence shows that only five general surgeons practice in Vicksburg. After the merger, these five surgeons plan to practice as a group at the River Region Clinic. Columbia's [**76] "Strategic Review FY '96" (Exhibit DQ-121) contains data indicating that a total of 8.79 general surgeons are needed for a population of 90,000. (Id. at p. HCA9679.) There is no record evidence whatsoever to suggest that anyone has attempted to exclude competitors from entering the general surgery market as defined in this case.

Just as the court in Marshfield Clinic found no reason under the antitrust laws to force the twelve physicians in that market to compete with each other, this Court must reach the same result in this small market of only five general surgeons. Once again, the Court is reminded that the narrow general surgery market now under consideration is precisely the market that Columbia proposed and presented to this Court.

Even if the general surgery market in this case were not viewed as a natural monopoly, the evidence proves that substantial competitive forces from Jackson and encroaching surgical centers will restrain any potential that these five Vicksburg surgeons might have to exercise postmerger market power. The Court was impressed by the trial testimony of two general surgeons, Dr. W. Briggs Hopson of ParkView and Dr. Hendrik Kuiper of the Vicksburg [**77] Clinic, who are part of the relevant market. Both surgeons testified emphatically that, in the field of surgery, the Jackson surgical community presents very serious competition for the Vicksburg surgeons.<sup>22</sup> Dr. Hopson explained in detail how [*1130] he has lost vascular surgery patients to competition from the Jackson medical community. (Trial Tr. at 2501-02.) Dr. Hopson attributed much of his lost surgical business to the fact that he must refer patients to Jackson for procedures such as arteriograms that are not available in Vicksburg. Once in Jackson, many of these patients stay in the state capital for vascular surgery. (Id.) Dr. Hopson testified unequivocally that referrals to Jackson for services that are not available in Vicksburg have a significant adverse effect on his practice area. (Id.)

[**78] The evidence further demonstrates that Jackson hospitals are becoming more and more visible to the Vicksburg community through alliances such as the West Mississippi Heart Network, an affiliation between Methodist and VMC. (Id. at 2400.) In addition, Jackson hospitals and surgeons are exerting their presence in the Vicksburg surgical market by proposing the development of satellite clinics in Vicksburg. See Exhibit DQ-528 (letter from Director of Business Development, Methodist Medical Center, discussing development of satellite clinic in Vicksburg by Methodist neurosurgeons).

---

<sup>22</sup> For example, excerpted from Dr. Kuiper's cross-examination testimony is the following:

... That's the whole point I'm trying to make. And as a clinician I've understood for years we are in competition with Jackson, absolutely.

(Trial Tr. at 3074-75.)

Based on the testimony of the Vicksburg surgeons and on other record evidence, the Court finds as a fact that the Jackson medical community is a restraining competitive force on the general surgery market as defined in this case. This is exactly the type of competitive check, which operates outside of the defined geographic market area (and, in this case, is encroaching into the geographic market area via outreach programs and satellite clinics), that economists and courts recognize as a restraint on the merging firms' exercise of market power. E.g., Freeman Hosp., 69 F.3d at 264 n.9; see Trial [**79] Tr. at 2724-25 (expert testimony of Mr. Oliver explaining significance of outlying competitive forces); see also discussion supra at note 13. On the record before this Court, there is no credible evidence to prove that the five Vicksburg surgeons in this market could exclude, in any realistic manner, the ever-increasing competition from Jackson's sophisticated surgical market. The ability of the Vicksburg surgeons to achieve such a feat is highly unlikely. Therefore, finding no evidence of power to exclude the Jackson competition, the Court concludes that Columbia has failed to prove a Section 7 violation in the general surgery market. See Syufy, 903 F.2d at 671 & n.21.

3. ENT

By physician headcount, the ENT market in this case exceeds the urology market by only one physician. Of the three ENTs who practice in Vicksburg, one is a well-respected, established independent physician, Dr. Chester W. Masterson. (Trial Tr. at 1008.) Dr. Masterson was often referred to during this litigation as "Dr. Masterson Sr." because his son practices medicine with the Mission Clinic. It is assumed that the remaining two ENT specialists, Drs. Windham and Bradfield, will practice together [**80] at the River Region Clinic, thereby creating a 67% market share for River Region in this three-physician market. The evidence indicates that Columbia recently assisted in the recruitment of Dr. Bradfield to The Vicksburg Clinic. (Id. at 1588-89.) The record fails to establish whether Dr. Bradfield is successfully integrated into the Vicksburg medical community or whether he has any longterm commitment to remaining in Vicksburg after the expiration of his one-year contract with Columbia. (E.g., id. at 2658-59.)

Columbia's own market study materials indicate that a population of 90,000 needs 2.75 ENTs. (Exhibit DQ-121, p. HCA9679.) Once again, the Court is faced with an extremely small physician market. However, unlike the urology and general surgery markets, the handful of ENTs comprising this market do not all practice at the same "firm" and therefore cannot be characterized structurally as a natural monopoly. Arguably, Columbia has made its prima facie showing in the ENT market based on the 67% postmerger market share. Nonetheless, the Court finds that a competitive balance exists [*1131] in this market by virtue of the fact that the independent ENT, Dr. Masterson, Sr., is a well-established [**81] Vicksburg physician and represents by himself 33% of the entire ENT market. Weighing the competitive force of Dr. Masterson, Sr., against the combination of Dr. Bradfield's immature practice and that of Dr. Windham, this Court cannot conclude that, after the merger, Drs. Bradfield and Windham will be capable of wielding the market power necessary to set prices or exclude or lessen competition in any substantial manner. Syufy, 903 F.2d at 671 & n.21; University Health, 938 F.2d at 1220-21 (acquired firm's weakness is one of many factors that a defendant may introduce to undermine predictive value of market share statistics); Mercy Health, 902 F. Supp. at 976 (in analyzing the accuracy of market share statistics to predict postmerger anticompetitive effects, one of the factors that courts consider is the continuation of active price competition). Accordingly, Columbia has failed to carry its ultimate burden of persuasion in the ENT market.

4. Primary Care

By Vicksburg standards, the primary care market exhibits a critical mass that is not present in the other physician markets. Throughout this litigation, the parties have debated the actual physician headcount within [**82] this market. To clarify the now blurred borders between who's in and who's out, the Court finds that the River Region Clinic can be expected to have a total of twenty-one primary care physicians, which are broken down as follows:

eight family practitioners, eight internists and five pediatricians. (Accord Plaintiff's Response to Defs.' Proposed Findings of Fact at 7-8).<sup>23</sup>

Quorum has introduced rebuttal evidence of fifteen primary [**83] care physicians who practice within the geographic area accepted by the Court. According to Quorum, these physicians are available as substitutes for the River Region doctors (or will be available imminently in the case of Dr. Venters). Quorum's list of substitute primary care physicians is comprised of five practitioners at the Mission Clinic, one at VMC, four in Port Gibson, Mississippi, and five in Tallulah, Louisiana.<sup>24</sup> Based on a post-merger physician headcount of 21 primary care physicians at the River Region Clinic and 15 physicians who will practice elsewhere within the geographic area, the Court calculates a primary care market share of 58.33% at the River Region Clinic and 41.67% practicing independently or with other clinics.

[**84] Arguing that the primary care physicians in Port Gibson and Tallulah are not acceptable substitutes for the River Region doctors, Columbia urges this Court to discount the presence of these nine physicians who currently practice within the relevant geographic market and to refrain from including them in any market share calculations. To support its position, Columbia relies on the expert testimony of Dr. Eisenstadt (Trial Tr. at 2134-39) and on consumer testimony regarding a general preference, based largely on proximity, for Vicksburg physicians. (E.g., id. at 1148.) At trial, Dr. Eisenstadt offered the only qualitative criticism of the Tallulah and Port Gibson primary care physicians. Columbia's expert opined that "the practice capabilities of some of the outlying primary care physicians in Tallulah and Port Gibson may be limited." (Id. at 2137, emphasis [*1132] added.)<sup>25</sup> Although Dr. Eisenstadt conceded that residents from Tallulah and Port Gibson could possibly use primary care physicians in Vicksburg, he maintained that the reverse was not true. (Id. at 2139; Eisenstadt testifying that People who live in Vicksburg would not want to be directed to a primary care [**85] doctor in Tallulah or Port Gibson." (emphasis added)). Dr. Eisenstadt further testified that he had uncovered no evidence to indicate that Vicksburg residents travel to outlying areas for primary care.

[**86] The Court finds that Columbia has missed the point. HN23↑ Present consumer preferences are not dispositive in determining whether viable alternatives exist in any given market. *Freeman Hosp., 69 F.3d at 271.* The key inquiry must focus upon where consumers can practicably go for primary care services after the merger, not where consumers have been going, or where they would prefer to go. *Id. at 268-71.* With this principle in mind,

<sup>23</sup> By name, the primary care physicians included in this tally are: family practitioners Abraham, Barnes, Butler, Easterling, Ford, Johnston, McMillan and Stanley; internists Bouldin, Edney, Habeeb, Low, Pierce, Ross, Tribble and Williams; and pediatricians Roy, Sluis, Smith, Weiland and Weller. (Plaintiff's Response to Defs.' Proposed Findings of Fact at 7-8; Exhibit P-455.) Although the Court has found that Columbia failed to carry its burden of proof in the pediatrics submarket, the Court will nonetheless include pediatricians in its headcount of primary care physicians.

<sup>24</sup> The physician headcount at the Mission Clinic includes Drs. Chiarito, Giffin, Masterson, Sessums and, for the reasons given in Part I.C.3.a. above, Venters. Because the evidence indicated that Dr. Burford's partners have no expectation that she will return to practice, the Court has not included her in the physician headcount. (Trial Tr. at 93.)

The remaining nine substitute primary care physicians according to Quorum are: in Port Gibson, Drs. Headley, Barnes, Marshall and Amork; and, in Tallulah, Drs. Newman, Newman, Shenier, Polquitt and Perry. (Exhibit DVC-395.)

<sup>25</sup> Dr. Eisenstadt's supposition about Tallulah's and Port Gibson's limited primary care services is not corroborated by any specific record evidence, and the Court therefore views it as conjecture. See *Freeman Hosp., 69 F.3d at 270-71* (district court did not err in refusing to credit plaintiff's testimony regarding limited quality and range of services in outlying hospitals where record lacked sufficient data and contained no formal analysis in support of such assertions). The Court found more creditworthy the testimony of Charles Pitts, CEO of United Health, who indicated that his company would have no qualitative problem with including physicians in outlying towns on its managed care panel; his only concern was proximity to Vicksburg. (Trial Tr. at 282.) Similarly, Rissa Richardson, another managed care witness, voiced no qualitative opposition to the primary care physicians in Port Gibson and Tallulah. Richardson noted that, if the Warren County Medicaid pilot project begins operations, participating Medicaid patients would be required to visit primary care physicians located within thirty minutes average travel time from the patient's residence. There is no reliable data in the record to prove that any potential Medicaid patient would be foreclosed from visiting a Port Gibson or Tallulah physician because of distance or travel time.

it appears to this Court that the market share percentage espoused by Columbia, which is based on last year's office visits to only three Vicksburg clinics, falls into the fallacy of overemphasizing where consumers have gone in the past. Columbia's calculation of a 70% market share (which results in a number that far exceeds a market share calculation based on physician headcount) neglects the presence of qualified primary care physicians who are located within the geographic market area and are available to provide services to consumers. The Court therefore finds that a market share calculation based on the primary care physician headcount (i.e., 58.33%) is the more useful tool in this case for analyzing the probability of postmerger anticompetitive effects. [**87] This conclusion is buttressed by the fact that the record contains no formal evidence of qualitatively inferior or unacceptable services being offered by primary care physicians in Port Gibson and Tallulah.

The Court is unaware of any prior case law that has addressed the issue of what market share percentage, in the context of a clinic merger, is necessary to create a presumption of illegality.<sup>26</sup> Columbia argues that, by [*1133] analogy to hospital merger cases, the excessively high postmerger market shares in this case make the merger presumptively unlawful on the basis of any single market. See University Health, 938 F.2d at 1219 (in hospital merger, 43% market share of inpatient acute care hospital services market established FTC's prima facie case; this conclusion was appropriate in light of Georgia's certificate of need law that regulated hospital expansions and raised substantial entry barriers for new competitors); Rockford, 898 F.2d at 1283-85 (64-72% share of inpatient acute care hospital services market created presumption of illegality in hospital merger). The Court finds, however, that the hospital merger cases are not wholly applicable to the primary care market now [**88] under consideration because of the very point emphasized by the court in University Health, i.e., barriers to entry. Unlike hospitals, primary care physicians who seek to establish a new practice are not required to demonstrate, to the satisfaction of state regulators, that there exists a public need for their services. University Health, 938 F.2d at 1219-20. As discussed in detail below, the Court finds that the totality of the evidence in this case demonstrates low entry barriers to the primary care market.

[**89] Courts and commentators have defined barriers to entry as "either 'additional long-run costs that were not incurred by incumbent firms but must be incurred by new entrants,' or 'factors in the market that deter entry while permitting incumbent firms to earn monopoly returns.'" Los Angeles Land Co. v. Brunswick Corp., 6 F.3d 1422, 1427-28 (9th Cir. 1993) (quoting AREEDA & HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW P 409 (1992 Supp.)), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1197, 127 L. Ed. 2d 658, 114 S. Ct. 1307 (1994). This record contains no evidence whatsoever of new primary care physicians incurring longterm costs that were not incurred by already-established physicians. Cf. Morgan, Strand, Wheeler & Biggs v. Radiology Ltd., 924 F.2d 1484, 1490 (9th Cir. 1991) (cost of equipping a physician's office was not significant entry barrier where evidence did not permit comparison of that cost to potential competitors' resources or expected returns). Moreover, the Court is not persuaded by Columbia's attempts to prove that factors indigenous to the Vicksburg market act as a deterrent to new primary care entrants. Among other things, Dr. Eisenstadt expressed his opinion that a timely, likely and sufficient<sup>27</sup> entry of new physicians into the [**90] Vicksburg market would be unlikely because physician demand in the area is "relatively flat" and there is no need for additional primary care physicians in Vicksburg. (Trial Tr. at 2171, 2486.) The Court finds that this opinion is contrary to the greater weight of the testimonial and documentary evidence, which points to a need for additional physicians in this field.

<sup>26</sup> HN24 [↑] Antitrust case law exhibits a long-drawn-out battle over what percentage share of a given market is sufficient to demonstrate market power. E.g., Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 201-02 (3d Cir. 1992) (a plaintiff must show a "significantly larger" market share than 55% to establish a prima facie case of market power), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 921, 122 L. Ed. 2d 677, 113 S. Ct. 1285 (1993); White Bag Co. v. Internat'l Paper Co., 579 F.2d 1384, 1387 (4th Cir. 1974) (defendant must control at least 70% of the relevant market to be subject to a monopolization charge); United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 424 (2d Cir. 1945) ("[Over 90%] is enough to constitute a monopoly; it is doubtful whether sixty or sixty-four percent [60 or 64%] would be enough; and certainly thirty-three percent [33%] is not."). Understandably, the Supreme Court has never defined "undue percentage share" in terms of a hard and fast numerical threshold. Philadelphia Nat'l Bank, 374 U.S. at 363 (merger that produces a firm controlling an "undue percentage share of the relevant market, and results in a significant increase in the concentration of firms in that market, is inherently likely to lessen competition substantially); see ANTITRUST ADVISER § 3.21 (Irving Scher ed. 1995). Notably, since the Supreme Court rendered its decision in United States v. General Dynamics Corp., 415 U.S. 486, 39 L. Ed. 2d 530, 94 S. Ct. 1186 (1974), the emphasis in Section 7 merger cases has been to analyze carefully the likely harm to consumers, instead of accepting a firm's postmerger market share as conclusive proof of its market power. United States v. Baker Hughes Inc., 285 U.S. App. D.C. 222, 908 F.2d 981, 990-91 & n.12 (D.C.Cir. 1990).

[**91] The margin for growth in the primary care market is apparent in Columbia's "Strategic Review FY '96." (Exhibit DQ-121.) This [*1134] report contains data demonstrating that a population of 90,000 needs 21.71 general and family practitioners, 20.94 internists and 9.79 pediatricians. (Id. at p. HCA9679.) Taking into consideration the current physician headcount discussed above, Columbia's own market analysis suggests that the primary care market has not reached saturation. This conclusion was confirmed by Quorum's expert, Mr. Oliver, who testified that the Vicksburg area is underserved in the field of primary care and that the market has not reached the point of saturation. (Trial Tr. at 2680-81.) Dr. Fagan of the Vicksburg Clinic testified that the clinic needs more primary care physicians. (Id. at 1041.) In addition, the Court found credible on this point the trial testimony of Columbia executive William Patterson, who stated that "primary care is in strong demand." (Id. at 1657.)

The high demand for primary care and the opportunity for growth in Vicksburg is further evidenced by the abundant testimonial and documentary proof of Columbia's own pursuit of physician recruitment, [**92] including Columbia's investment in the recruitment of primary care physicians through its medical service organization, VIP, Inc. (E.g., Exhibit DQ-121, p. HCA9602; Trial Tr. at 1582, 1586-90.) On this score, the Court was impressed by William Patterson's testimony regarding general opportunities for new physicians in the Vicksburg market. (Trial Tr. at 1589-90.) Although this testimony was given in response to a question about the recruitment of specialists (which is arguably a more difficult task than primary care recruitment because of a smaller patient base and the need to generate that base through referrals from primary care physicians), Patterson's general observations about entry into the Vicksburg market and the advantages to practicing in Vicksburg are relevant to the primary care market:

I saw no barriers that would preclude us from being successful in recruiting physicians to the clinic. My experience in working in very competitive areas in Florida were that physicians were quick to look to opportunities like Vicksburg to practice, that those communities were not as competitive, the managed care had not entered the area as aggressively as it had in other areas, [**93] and there were good opportunities to develop your practice and make a nice living and have a nice life-style . . . .

(Id. at 1589-1590.)

---

<sup>27</sup> The "timely-likely-sufficient" standard has its origins in the Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission Horizontal Merger Guidelines (the "Guidelines"). 1992 DOJ and FTC Horizontal Merger Guidelines § 3, reprinted in PRIMARY SOURCE, supra note 4. It is important to note that the Guidelines are not binding on the courts or the agencies. Olin Corp. v. F.T.C., 986 F.2d 1295, 1300 (9th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1110, 127 L. Ed. 2d 373, 114 S. Ct. 1051 (1994).

At the heart of this standard is the theory that a "merger is not likely to create or enhance market power or to facilitate its exercise, if entry into the market is so easy that market participants, after the merger, either collectively or unilaterally could not profitably maintain a price increase above premerger levels." Guidelines § 3.0 (emphasis added). "Easy" entry is evaluated under the Guidelines by applying the timely-likely sufficient standard. Id. Essentially, to be "timely," the new entrant must be able to enter the market and achieve a significant market impact within two years of the merger. Id. at § 3.2. To be "likely," the entry must be profitable at premerger prices, and the new entrant must be able to obtain those prices. Id. at § 3.3. The final and strikingly circular step in the analysis states that an entry or multiple entries will be "sufficient" to deter or counteract anticompetitive postmerger effects whenever such entry passes muster under the "likely" test in section 3.3 of the Guidelines. Id. at § 3.4.

Although both expert witnesses acknowledged the propriety of using the timely-likely-sufficient standard to evaluate market entry, they reached polar opposite conclusions regarding the existence of significant barriers to entry. Not surprisingly, Dr. Eisenstadt concluded that entry barriers were significant, but Mr. Oliver concluded that they were not. (Compare Trial Tr. at 2168, 2171 with id. at 2626-27, 2849.)

Indeed, this Court would be hard-pressed to conclude that significant barriers to entry into the primary care market exist in the light of Columbia's recent and successful recruitment of three new primary care physicians to Vicksburg: Drs. Chiarito, Wooten and Venters. (Exhibit DQ-153.) Notably, Patterson testified that it took only two to three months to recruit Drs. Wooten and Venters. (Trial Tr. at 1708-09.) Also of note is the fact that Columbia succeeded in recruiting these three primary care physicians while merger discussions were pending between the Vicksburg Clinic and ParkView, and then succeeded in signing multiyear contracts with each of the new doctors after ParkView and the Vicksburg Clinic had executed their final Merger Agreement. This fact alone gives the Court serious pause when it weighs the credibility of Dr. Eisenstadt's opinion that a timely, likely and sufficient entry of new physicians after the merger is not feasible. (Id. at 2171.) Coupled with Dr. Sessums's estimate that a primary care physician can build [**94] a successful practice in two to three years, and the fact that it is not uncommon for hospitals, such as Columbia, to guarantee a new physician's income for two years (the period of time generally considered necessary to establish a practice), this Court cannot conclude that a "timely" entry -- even one in strict compliance with the Guidelines -- is unlikely on this record. (Id. at 124, 126; see also Exhibit DQ-153 which summarizes employment contract terms and base salaries that Columbia offered to Drs. Chiarito, Wooten and Venters.) The Court therefore finds that it cannot accept Dr. Eisenstadt's opinion regarding the existence of significant entry barriers to this market.

In reaching this conclusion, the Court has not ignored the testimony of Columbia's physician recruiter, John McAfee of Hunt Company International. Mr. McAfee described problems that he has encountered with recruiting physicians to Vicksburg, in particular, and Mississippi, in general. He testified [*1135] that negative perceptions and stereotypes about Mississippi exist, which make recruitment to Vicksburg difficult. (Trial Tr. at 210, 213, 230.) However, in the light of the greater body of evidence that indicates [**95] strong entry opportunities into the Vicksburg primary care market, the Court finds that one witness's impressions about regional perceptions falls short of proving an entry barrier of any seriousness. See Benjamin v. Aroostook Medical Center, 937 F. Supp. 957, 966 \(D.Me. 1996\) (barriers to entry are technical concepts which require detailed supporting evidence).

Also considered was Columbia's evidence regarding its own peculiar problems in attracting and keeping new primary care physicians among its ranks in Vicksburg. However, after listening to two weeks of testimony from a host of witnesses, many of whom were Vicksburg doctors and hospital professionals, and after reviewing a wealth of documents, this Court is overwhelmingly persuaded that the root cause of Columbia's particular problems has not been antitrust-type entry barriers. Instead, a history of strained relations and personality conflicts has permeated the Vicksburg Clinic's association with VMC and Columbia management, which has culminated in this lawsuit and has had a direct, and perhaps continuing, influence on Columbia's recruitment efforts in primary care and elsewhere. (E.g., Trial Tr. at 231, 459-460, 648, [**96] 1672; Exhibit DQ-65, p. HCA4561 ("Strategic Review 1994-1995" stating that "because of the personalities of the physicians it is very difficult to recruit to this group. We cannot allow their lack of expertise to hinder the build up of the medical staff, and we will be very political in our efforts concerning this group.").<sup>28</sup>

Once again, the Court was struck by William Patterson's testimony, of which the following is exemplary:

COUNSEL: You said that there had been problems in the past with respect to recruiting primary care physicians to the clinic. Would you describe to us what you mean by that.

PATTERSON: Well, there had been physicians who had been recruited and after a year or two had left due to personality differences in classes ... personality differences that had led individuals, specifically Dr. [**97] Loper, who I had subsequent conversations with, to leave the clinic.

(Trial Tr. at 1600-01.)

In any event, precedent instructs that HN25<sup>29</sup> courts must not dwell on an individual competitor's singular problems. In accord with the broad purpose of antitrust law, the proper focus must be on proof of harm to the market as a whole. Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assocs., Inc., 996 F.2d 537, 543 (2d

---

<sup>28</sup> Another nonantitrust concern that has dampened Columbia's recruitment prospects is the lack of additional physical space for any new physicians at the Mission Clinic. (Trial Tr. at 1659.)

Cir.) (interpreting Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 342-22), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 947, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337, 114 S. Ct. 388 (1993)); Oskanen v. Page Memorial Hosp., 945 F.2d 696, 708 (4th Cir. 1991) (to prevent antitrust laws from becoming trivialized, the key is impact on competition as a whole within the relevant market; workplace grievances between physicians and hospitals should not be elevated to the status of an antitrust action), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1074, 117 L. Ed. 2d 137, 112 S. Ct. 973 (1992).

Considering the significant weight of evidence that proves an absence of entry barriers into the primary care market, the Court concludes that the River Region Clinic's postmerger market share, whether calculated at 58.33% as the Court has done or at the higher levels endorsed by Columbia, does not establish market [**98] power on the part of the merging primary care physicians. Syufy, 903 F.2d at 664 & n.6. On the facts of this case and in the absence of proof of market power, Columbia has failed to establish a Section 7 violation in the primary care market. Id. at 671.

c. Acute Inpatient Hospital Services

As previously noted, Columbia's claim in the hospital market is a vertical one, which is premised on the theory that a postmerger [*1136] economic alignment between the Vicksburg Clinic and ParkView will cause physicians at the Vicksburg Clinic to steer their patients to ParkView rather than VMC. As explained by Columbia, "to prevail on this claim, Plaintiff must prove that Defendants will have market power in the physician markets and that the hospital market is sufficiently concentrated such that it is capable of sustaining competitive injury." (Posttrial Letter at 10.) The Court accepts Columbia's statement of the preconditions to its success on this claim. Accordingly, because the Court has found that Columbia failed to prove market power in the physician markets as discussed in detail above, an essential precondition to the hospital claim is not satisfied. Columbia's vertical claim under [**99] Section 7 of the Clayton Act falls with its horizontal ones.

In addition to failing to satisfy the stated preconditions, Columbia has failed to prove any vertical illegality under the standard analytical framework. HN26 [↑] Although no precise formula exists for determining whether a vertical merger may lessen competition, the traditional analysis involves an examination of certain market factors, which are applied to the merger at hand. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 328-33; Fruehauf Corp. v. F.T.C., 603 F.2d 345, 353 (2d Cir. 1979). Those factors include: the nature and economic purpose of the arrangement; the likelihood and size of any market foreclosure; the extent of concentration of sellers and buyers in the industry; the capital cost required to enter the market; the market share needed by a buyer or seller to achieve a profitable level of production or "scale economy"; the existence of a trend toward vertical concentration or oligopoly in the industry; and whether the merger will eliminate potential competition by one of the merging parties. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 328-33. Some courts have added factors to the foregoing list such as the degree of market power that would be possessed [**100] by the merged entity and the number and strength of competing suppliers and purchasers. Fruehauf Corp., 603 F.2d at 353. By applying these factors to a given case, courts attempt to predict the probable future consequences of a vertical merger. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 329-33.

Columbia's presentation at trial focused largely on the first two factors in the Brown Shoe litany: the nature and economic purpose of the arrangement and the likelihood and size of a vertical market foreclosure. At trial, Columbia sought to prove that the purpose of the merger is to align the financial incentives of the Vicksburg Clinic physicians with those of ParkView, thereby foreclosing Columbia from the primary source of its patient admissions. Testimony suggested that 80% or more of VMC's total patient activity is attributable to Vicksburg Clinic physicians. (Trial Tr. at 533.)

Having considered the totality of the evidence, the Court finds that there is no credible evidence that postmerger financial incentives will cause the Vicksburg Clinic physicians to shift their hospital patient admissions to ParkView. It is this Court's view that the testimony and expert opinion regarding a potential [**101] shift in patient admissions to ParkView is conjecture that is based on an assumption lacking in evidentiary support. See Fruehauf, 603 F.2d at 354 (FTC's theory that vertical merger would provide incentive for supplier to divert sales to defendant in the event of a product shortage lacked substantial evidentiary support).<sup>29</sup> Much like the FTC's diversion [*1137] theory in Fruehauf, Columbia's patient shift theory does not appear, on its face, to be beyond the realm of possibility. Id. at 355. The theory nonetheless runs counter to the overwhelming weight of the record evidence. See id.

[**102] The physician witnesses repeatedly testified at trial that the choice of hospital rests with the patient, not the doctor. In response to a question from the bench, Dr. Sessums testified that, since he began his practice in Vicksburg in 1983, he always leaves hospital choice to the patient. (Trial Tr. at 180.) Drs. Fagan, Habeeb, Hopson and Kuiper confirmed that the number one factor in admitting a patient to a certain hospital is the patient's preference. (Id. at 1098, 1537, 2517, 3011-12.) Dr. Hopson explained that, because of the historic Catholic affiliation with Parkview, religious reasons sometime underlie a patient's preference for one hospital over the other. (Id. at 2518-19.) The testimony of these physicians paralleled that of Columbia executive Patterson. According to Patterson, it's the patient's prerogative" in deciding where to be hospitalized. (Id. at 1692-93.)

While crediting patient preference as the primary determinant in hospital admissions, both Drs. Habeeb and Hopson testified that proximity to the hospital can play a role in hospital selection. Consistent with this observation, Dr. Habeeb, who is currently associated with the Vicksburg Clinic and [**103] maintains his office on the VMC campus, testified that approximately 300 of his patients were admitted to VMC last year and only three of his patients went to Parkview. (Id. at 1537-1538.) Dr. Habeeb noted that, when a patient comes to the Vicksburg Clinic and needs to be hospitalized, the patient is likely to find VMC the most convenient because of its proximity to the clinic. (Id.) Similarly, Dr. Hopson, whose practice is located across the street from ParkView, testified that he will perform surgery at whichever hospital the patient prefers but that it is easier for him, because of proximity, to operate at ParkView. (Id. at 2519-20.) Dr. Hopson further testified that he earns the same surgery fee, which is based on a percentage of collections, whether the procedure is performed at VMC or ParkView. However, because of proximity, he can see more patients if they are admitted to ParkView. (Id.) Even William Patterson conceded that there would be a "clear preference" amongst doctors with patients in intensive care to be officed as closely as possible to the hospitalized patient in order to be responsive to their patients' needs. (Id. at 1703.)

In addition, the Court [**104] finds as a fact that the Vicksburg Clinic's current office lease with VMC, which expires in the year 2006, creates a countervailing economic incentive for the physicians to maintain a cooperative association with VMC. The trial testimony indicated that Quorum intends for the Vicksburg Clinic to remain at its present location on the VMC campus and that the Vicksburg Clinic physicians have made no plans to move. (Id. at 1014-15, 1438.) No physical space is available at the Street Clinic to house the Vicksburg Clinic physicians, and there is no land available on the ParkView campus for construction of a new office building. (Id. at 2603.) Thus, in the light of the Vicksburg Clinic's pressing need for office space, the physicians' concerns that VMC, as lessor, might exercise its eviction powers under the lease (Id. at 2980), and the issues of patient choice, religious affiliation and proximity discussed above, the Court finds that any financial incentive or alleged ability on the part of the <sup>29</sup> Illustrative of the overly speculative nature of Columbia's theory is the following excerpt from Dr. Sessums's testimony on cross-examination:

COUNSEL: You're not suggesting to us, are you, that Dr. Kuiper and his partners at the Vicksburg Clinic would make a decision based on their equity ownership in this hospital following the merger ... to hospitalize and overrule their patients' preference because of this equity ownership?

DR. SESSUMS: I don't know. I don't know. That requires a lot of speculation and things that I don't have any knowledge thereof.

(Trial Tr. at 181.)

Even more illuminating is the cross-examination testimony of William Patterson, Columbia's chief executive officer at VMC:

COUNSEL: And so you would agree, would you not, that doctors then will bring patients to Vicksburg Medical Center even though they may have a financial interest in ParkView.

PATTERSON: I think that that's -- that that's possible.

(Id. at 1692.)

960 F. Supp. 1104, *1137L<sup>1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5104, **104</sup>

Vicksburg Clinic physicians to shift patients to ParkView is negated by the foregoing countervailing forces. Columbia's Section 7 claim in the hospital services market is therefore denied. [**105]<sup>30</sup>

[**106] [*1138] D. Merits of Section 2 Sherman Act Claim

Among other things, HN27 <sup>1</sup> Section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits persons from combining or conspiring to monopolize interstate commerce among the states or with foreign nations. 15 U.S.C.A. § 2 (West Supp. 1996) [hereinafter "Section 2"].<sup>31</sup> The terms "combine" and "conspire" are used interchangeably by the courts and refer to the same offense. Richter Concrete Corp. v. Hilltop Basic Resources, Inc., 547 F. Supp. 893, 914 (S.D. Ohio 1981) (see cases cited therein), aff'd, 691 F.2d 818 (1982). The parties agree that the elements of a Section 2 conspiracy claim are:

1. the existence of specific intent to monopolize;
2. the existence of a combination or conspiracy to achieve that end;
3. overt acts in furtherance of the combination or conspiracy; and
4. an effect on a substantial amount of interstate commerce.

North Ms. Communications, Inc. v. Jones, 792 F.2d 1330, 1335 (5th Cir. 1986). One court has summarized the key requirements of a Section 2 conspiracy offense as specific intent, an agreement and at least one overt act. Servicetrends, Inc. v. Siemens Medical Systems, Inc., 870 F. Supp. 1042 [**107] (N.D.Ga. 1994), amended on other grounds, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15997, 1994 WL 776878 (N.D.Ga. June 24, 1994). On the facts of this case, the sole Section 2 element in controversy is whether Quorum specifically intended to monopolize the relevant physician and hospital markets.

<sup>30</sup> The Court is compelled to make a final observation regarding Columbia's financial incentive theory, which is prompted by William Patterson's response to a query from the bench:

COURT: ... Have you talked to any of the [Vicksburg Clinic doctors] about their willingness to continue to use your facility post-merger if the merger is allowed?

PATTERSON: Well, I don't know that I've posed that question to them directly in that sort of way. No, sir, I really haven't asked that question. I always hoped that they would but never really made that direct inquiry as to what their plans would be in that regard.

(Trial Tr. at 1721.)

The Court is perplexed by this testimony. If Columbia's executive officer at VMC, who has a professional and, in some cases, social relationship with the Vicksburg Clinic physicians, has sought no direct knowledge of the physicians' postmerger plans (notwithstanding his apparent ability to do so), how can this Court accept, instead, mere assumptions about the physicians' possible actions?

<sup>31</sup> Columbia's Section 2 conspiracy claim is not to be confused with a monopolization or attempted monopolization claim under that same statute. See statute reproduced supra note 2. Indeed, the claims of monopolization, attempt and conspiracy to monopolize under the Sherman Act are separate offenses that require distinct proofs. E.g., Joe Westbrook, Inc. v. Chrysler Corp., 419 F. Supp. 824, 844-45 (N.D.Ga. 1976) (see case citations therein). If the Section 2 allegation in this case were based on monopolization or attempted monopolization rather than conspiracy to monopolize, there could be no Sherman Act violation by virtue of the Court's prior findings with respect to the Clayton Act claims. Syufy, 903 F.2d at 671 & n.21 (by finding that defendant lacked power to set prices or to exclude competition under the Clayton Act, district court also disposed of plaintiff's monopolization and attempted monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act). However, in a Section 2 conspiracy case, there is no need to consider monopoly power or market power in a relevant market. United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 225-26, 91 L. Ed. 2010, 67 S. Ct. 1560 (1947), overruled on other grounds by Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984); Joe Westbrook, 419 F. Supp. at 845.

[**108] Columbia argues that the evidence in this case overwhelmingly proves that Quorum acted with specific intent to monopolize because Quorum representatives and the Vicksburg Clinic doctors consistently expressed their desire to unify the Vicksburg medical community. Unification of the Vicksburg medical community, in Columbia's view, will lead to the creation of a one-hospital town. Columbia concedes, as it must, that it also has pursued the goal of "consolidating" the Vicksburg medical community and becoming the only hospital in town (e.g., Exhibits PX-103, DVC-182, DVC-186). Columbia asserts nonetheless that it has sought these goals through legitimate, competitive means such as physician recruitment, technology enhancement and improving patient care. (Trial Tr. at 1582.) In contrast, Columbia argues, Quorum seeks to achieve consolidation through an illegal and monopolistic merger that must be enjoined. Columbia's trek up the high road is somewhat tarnished by the fact that Columbia also proposed and discussed a merger deal with the Vicksburg Clinic physicians, which the physicians rejected in favor of the Quorum proposal. In addition, Columbia entertained the possibility of luring [**109] the Street Clinic away from Parkview.<sup>32</sup> Columbia attempts to distinguish its [*1139] proposed merger or joint venture with the Vicksburg Clinic from that of Quorum in temporal and structural terms. According to William Patterson, he had no short-term plans or intent to use the Columbia merger proposal as a vehicle for consolidating the Vicksburg medical community. (Id. at 1618-20.) By its very structure, the Columbia offer would not result in an immediate unification of the Vicksburg and Street Clinics. Instead, consolidation under the Columbia proposal would occur at some point in the future and would be achieved by building market share through a variety of competitive initiatives. (Id.) The Quorum merger, on the other hand, will immediately consolidate the Vicksburg and Street Clinics and, according to Columbia, bring about a one-hospital town.

[**110] Quorum maintains that there is no evidence that it acted with specific intent to monopolize the physician and hospital markets. Marsha Powers, Quorum's regional vice-president, testified on cross-examination that, although she believes that Vicksburg should be a one-hospital town, achieving one-hospital status was not a goal of the merger transaction.<sup>33</sup> (Id. at 1308.) Powers explained that the reason for the transaction was not to create a regional medical center in the short term; however, the overall goal is "to develop an integrated delivery system that ... can compete on a long-term basis with the Jackson facilities." (Id. at 1473.) Quorum also argues that "loose talk" among the merger participants about consolidating the Vicksburg medical community and creating a one-hospital town is not sufficient to prove specific intent to monopolize. (Defs.' Post-Trial Brief at 3.)

<sup>32</sup> In response to a question from the bench, Columbia executive Patterson testified:

COURT: ... What would the result be, as a practical matter, if you had been successful in your bid for the Vicksburg Clinic, which you were trying to acquire -- ... -- and if you had also been successful in getting the Street Clinic in 1996, how would your situation then be different from the situation that the defendants in this suit are now trying to accomplish, insofar as Vicksburg and the patients are concerned?

PATTERSON: I think our situation would be similar in nature, that we would be able to attract more patients, we would be able to attract more managed care contracts, we would have the competitive advantages that my competitor now sees by purchasing the Vicksburg Clinic.

(Trial Tr. at 1602.)

<sup>33</sup> Parkview Medical Corp.'s Private Placement Memorandum dated June 7, 1996 gives the following reasons for the merger:

ParkView Corp.'s Reasons for the Merger

The ultimate goal of the merger is to expand the current ParkView Corp. integrated delivery system to continue to provide health care services to central and western Mississippi and eastern Louisiana as well as to enhance recruiting abilities for additional subspecialties. ... Integrated delivery systems have the potential to deliver patient care more efficiently. ...

Vicksburg Clinic's Reasons for the Merger

... The main reasons were the force of competition from the Jackson-Metropolitan area market penetrating the Vicksburg market, the allowance of recruitment of specialty services to supplement various physicians' practices, the ability to utilize the highest quality of personnel which would be available for delivery of each medical service and the ability to reduce the cost of duplication of services. ...

(Exhibit PX-96 at 16.)

[**111] Several physician witnesses (Drs. Fagan, Hopson and Kuiper) consistently expressed at trial that the main reason for the merger is to create a unified medical staff. (Trial Tr. at 965, 2585, 3054.) Among the physician witnesses, Dr. Hopson explained that a unified medical community is needed: "to, one, be able to compete with Jackson, and two, to control costs." (Id. at 2585.) Dr. Kuiper stated that a united medical staff is needed to improve patient care in the Vicksburg Clinic and the surrounding areas. (Id. at 3054.) Dr. Kuiper also expressed his belief that a unified medical community will result in improved technologies and will attract needed specialists such as neurosurgeons and neonatologists to Vicksburg. (Id. at 2959-63.) Dr. Kuiper's hope is that such improvements will result in decreased morbidity and mortality. (Id. at 2960.)

Having weighed the evidence, the Court is not persuaded that Quorum entered into the merger with the specific intent of monopolizing the relevant physician and hospital markets in order to create a one-hospital town. As Drs. Fagan and Hobson testified, the idea of making Vicksburg a one-hospital town is nothing new but started when [**112] the Sisters of Mercy took over the hospital that Parkview now operates. (Id. at 961, 2518.) This familiar [*1140] but elusive pursuit continues to be a strategic and competitive goal of both VMC and ParkView. (Compare Exhibit DVC-182, Columbia's Market Consolidation Summary with Exhibit PX-198, ParkView Medical Corp. outline.) Based on the documentary evidence and trial testimony, the Court finds that the evidence regarding an expressed desire to become, in William Patterson's words, the "preeminent institution" with 100% market share (Trial Tr. at 1571-72) is insufficient proof of a specific intent to monopolize. See Reazin v. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Kansas, Inc., 663 F. Supp. 1360, 1488 (D.Kansas 1987) (alleged remark that HCA intended to put a large hospital in Wichita out of business did not prove the use of anticompetitive means to achieve that result), aff'd and remanded, 899 F.2d 951 (10th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 497 U.S. 1005, 111 L. Ed. 2d 752, 110 S. Ct. 3241 (1990). Instead, such expressions are (1) reminders of the historic rivalry in the Vicksburg hospital market that began with the Sisters of Mercy and continues to thrive today; and (2) the freely expressed opinions and ideas of [**113] physicians and other market participants, which have resulted from their discussions and brainstorming sessions about the ways to build an integrated health care delivery system. The simple truth is that this merger transaction is neither structured nor intended to create a one-hospital town. This is not a hospital merger. Two hospitals existed in Vicksburg before the merger, and two hospitals will exist after the merger is consummated. The dire consequences that Columbia predicts are far too remote and ephemeral to require judicial intervention at this point in time.

Even if each party to this merger ultimately wants Vicksburg to become a one-hospital town, such background hopes and desires do not abrogate the parties' credible testimony about their legitimate professional and personal intentions with respect to this transaction. The Court was most impressed by the highly credible testimony of the physician witnesses who expressed a sincere intent that this merger provide a means for improving medical services and saving patients' lives. Exemplary of the physicians' intent and motivation for entering into the merger is the following excerpt from Dr. Kuiper's testimony:

... [**114] I had a patient who had what's called an acute extradural hematoma. That is where, due to an injury, blood gathers between the skull and the brain itself and causes pressure on the brain. It is a potentially lethal situation, but it's also a situation that is fraught with morbid outcomes and long-term outcomes. That patient I was finally able to transfer to Jackson, but in that delay, the patient ended up with permanent neurological damage. I vowed at that time that I would never get myself--allow that sort of situation to happen again. ...

(Trial Tr. at 2961.)

Because the Court finds as a fact that Quorum did not enter into the merger with the specific intent to monopolize, but with the intent to provide better health care to the Vicksburg community, Columbia's Sherman Act claim is denied.

II. Remaining Injunctive Relief Considerations

In accord with the foregoing discussion, the Court concludes that Columbia fails to qualify for permanent injunctive relief under Section 16 because it has not demonstrated, on this record, that the merger poses a significant threat of injury from an impending violation of the antitrust laws. Zenith Radio, 395 U.S. at 130. With [**115] respect to Columbia's request for preliminary injunctive relief, the foregoing discussion disposes of the first step in this circuit's four-part preliminary injunction test (i.e., a substantial likelihood of success on the merits). As fully explained above, the Court concludes that Columbia has not demonstrated a substantial likelihood of success on the merits with respect to any of the Clayton or Sherman Act claims. Because the grant or denial of preliminary injunctive relief must be based on a reasoned application of all four factors in the Fifth Circuit's test, H & W Indus., 860 F.2d at 179, the Court now analyzes the three remaining factors: the threat of irreparable injury to the plaintiff, the threat of [*1141] injury to the defendant and the public interest.

A. Plaintiff's Irreparable Injury

Columbia has the burden of proving a substantial threat that it will suffer irreparable injury if the injunction is not issued. Id. At the Court's request, the parties submitted supplemental briefing regarding the consequences of a grant or denial of injunctive relief in this action. (Plaintiff's Response to Court's Questions [hereinafter "Plaintiff's Response"]; Responses of the [*116] Defs. to Questions Posed by the Court on Oct. 8, 1996 [hereinafter "Defs.' Response".]) In its listing of the harm that it will suffer if an injunction does not issue, Columbia sets forth five points. First, Columbia repeats its argument that the Vicksburg Clinic doctors will have the ability and financial incentive to steer patients away from VMC and admit them to ParkView. (Plaintiff's Response at 5.) For the reasons discussed in Part I.C.3.c. above, the Court rejects this argument.

Columbia's second point is similar to its first. Columbia argues that the Vicksburg Clinic doctors will chose to perform high profit-margin procedures (e.g., surgical and outpatient procedures <sup>34</sup>) at Parkview rather than VMC, which will have an adverse effect on VMC's profits. However, as discussed at length above, this Court cannot credit unsubstantiated conjecture about what actions the doctors might take after the merger. In addition, the trial testimony demonstrates that Columbia does not lack options for competing with ParkView in these areas. Dr. Eisenstadt testified that Columbia's plans to add an ambulatory surgery center at VMC, for which $ 8,000,000 in capital expenditure funds were included [*117] in its FY'96 budget, could provide a competitive response to the merger. (Trial Tr. at 2284, 2287, 2406-07.)

Third, Columbia states that the combined market power of the doctors will permit them to exclude VMC from competing effectively for managed care contracts. The Court disposed of this assertion in its discussion of the merits of Columbia's Clayton Act claims by finding that Columbia failed to prove postmerger market power in the physician markets. The Court also notes that Columbia failed to define a proper managed care submarket as discussed in Part I.C.1.c. above. Finally, the testimony of Charles Pitts clearly demonstrates that, with or without the merger, Columbia will continue to have significant leverage in competing for managed care contracts because of its [*118] far-reaching and well-established regional and national health care systems. As Pitts testified on cross-examination, his managed care company is interested in contracting with the Columbias and Quorums of the industry on a regional or national basis, as opposed to contracting with them for a single local market. (Id. at 349-54.)

The fourth harm that Columbia cites involves a prediction that VMC's revenues will decrease and that VMC's certificate of need applications will not be granted. Decreased revenues at VMC, according to Dewey Greene, will make it "extremely difficult to invest further capital in a situation where our facility is not a performer ... ." (Id. at 555.) A potential financial decision to shift vast sums of available investment capital from one property to another is speciously far from stating the type of severe financial harm that might merit injunctive relief. E.g., Atwood Turnkey Drilling, Inc. v. Petroleo Brasileiro, S.A., 875 F.2d 1174 (5th Cir. 1989) (general rule is that preliminary injunctive relief is inappropriate where the potential harm to the movant is strictly financial; exception exists in extreme cases such as bankruptcy), cert. denied, [*119] 493 U.S. 1075, 107 L. Ed. 2d 1030, 110 S. Ct. 1124 (1990). Likewise, a presupposed denial of pending or future certificate of need applications demonstrates no immediate injury to Columbia.

---

<sup>34</sup> The Court notes that Columbia expressly excluded outpatient services from its definition of the relevant hospital services market in its Clayton and Sherman Act claims. (Plaintiff's Proposed Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law P 119.)

The final injury alleged is a vague and overly broad assertion that the viability of VMC will be compromised. The only specific reason given for this assertion is, once again, that hospital patient activity generated by the Vicksburg Clinic physicians will shift to ParkView. Columbia claims that the [*1142] presumed patient shift will reduce VMC's patient volume, which will reduce VMC's viability, which will lead to a one-hospital town. For all of the reasons given in Part I.C.3.c. above, the Court finds that this assertion is unsupported by the record and fails to demonstrate irreparable injury. The Court concludes that none of the harms cited by Columbia constitute immediate, irreparable injury. See Pearl Brewing, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16841, 1993 WL 424236 at *5. In each instance cited, the harm is either conjectural or one that, on this record, does not rise to the level of judicial intervention. After reviewing two weeks of trial testimony and a large volume of documentary evidence, the Court is convinced that this merger will not hinder Columbia from remaining [**120] in Vicksburg and competing in the medical service markets, if it so chooses. The choice is Columbia's, which the documentary evidence in this case clearly proves. See, e.g., documentary evidence regarding Columbia's postmerger options and plans for remaining in the Vicksburg market at Exhibits DQ-116 ("Business Plan" for postmerger competitive strategies and market expansion); DQ-140, DVC-188, DVC-214 (copies of 2/29/96 memorandum from William Patterson to Dewey Greene regarding ten-point plan to offset the Vicksburg Clinic's move to Quorum; DQ-190 (Columbia/VMC "Action Plan" including time table for executing merger responsive strategies such as new practice acquisition, marketing and product development, expansion toward Tallulah, Louisiana and other areas, political efforts, press campaigns and legal initiatives (e.g., "Block the deal/antitrust" and "Sue Quorum"); DVC-212 (William Patterson's handwritten outline of competitive steps to take if the Vicksburg Clinic moves to Quorum; includes discussion points that state: "Regardless of outcome we ... are not leaving.).

While it may turn out that Columbia is not perceived as the number one health care facility in Vicksburg after [**121] the merger, the antitrust laws do not guarantee perpetual number one ranking to any single competitor. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 320 (antitrust laws protect competition, not competitors). If anything is clear to this Court after presiding over the trial, it is that Columbia has the necessary financial and human resources, as well as the business experience and acumen, to remain in Vicksburg after the merger and continue competing with ParkView. An added advantage is that Columbia is already well-established in what appears to be, on this record, a growth market with emerging opportunities in managed care contracting and elsewhere. Should Columbia slip to "number two" in the local rankings, this would not constitute irreparable injury under our precedent but would present, instead, a business opportunity to just try harder. See Ball Memorial Hosp., Inc. v. Mutual Hosp. Ins., Inc., 784 F.2d 1325, 1338 \(7th Cir. 1986\) ("injuries to rivals are byproducts of vigorous competition, and the antitrust laws are not balm for rivals' wounds").

B. Defendants' Injury

In assessing whether the threatened injury to Columbia outweighs the threatened harm to Quorum, the Court has considered, [**122] among other things, Quorum's list of likely consequences if the injunction should issue (Defs.' Response at 1-2) and the credible trial testimony of several physician witnesses. (E.g., Trial Tr. at 980, 2517, 2527, 2569.) Having already found as a fact that a strained relationship exists between the Vicksburg Clinic physicians and Columbia (e.g., id. at 1044), the Court believes that enjoining the merger would only deepen this rift and create even greater turmoil and animosity within the Vicksburg medical community. This would not only damage Quorum, but could potentially place all health care recipients in the Vicksburg area at risk.

The Court also notes that the physician testimony consistently indicates a belief that, without the merger, the doctors will be unable to carry out their plans to recruit needed specialists to Vicksburg such as a pulmonologist, rheumatologist, neurologist and others. The Court therefore concludes that, if the merger were enjoined, the harmful impact on Quorum, and particularly on the Vicksburg Clinic physicians who would be deprived of practicing their profession in a supportive and constructive work environment, [*1143] outweighs the conjectural or [**123] transitional injury to Columbia discussed above.

C. Public Interest

The final step in a preliminary injunction analysis is to determine whether the plaintiff has shown that the injunction will not disserve the public interest. The Court views the public interest analysis in this case as a two-part inquiry: first, whether permitting the merger to go forward will result in better medical services for the Vicksburg community and outlying areas; and second, whether health care costs to consumers will rise if the merger is not enjoined.

With respect to the first inquiry, the evidence is convincing that medical services in Vicksburg should improve after the merger because of (i) an increase in the recruitment of needed specialists and subspecialists; and (ii) collaborative efforts by the physicians to procure technologically advanced medical equipment. The Court is persuaded that the combined and, most importantly, cooperative recruitment initiatives of the two clinics will attract new specialists to Vicksburg. Every physician witness who testified at trial, including Dr. Sessums of the Mission Clinic, acknowledged that the merger could attract new specialists to Vicksburg. (*Id. f**124] at 127*, Dr. Sessums' testimony that the merger "could attract other specialties if there was a large enough group of patients to support a specialist"; see, e.g., id. at 968, Dr. Fagan's testimony that the merger will permit recruitment of a pulmonologist, neurosurgeon, neonatologist and others.) Currently, a Vicksburg area resident who is in need of such specialists must travel to Jackson or some other sophisticated medical center for specialized care. There can be no doubt that having these specialists in Vicksburg will benefit the public.<sup>35</sup>

The Court is also convinced by the testimony of Drs. Kuiper (id. at 2982) and Hopson (id. at 2517) that merging the clinics can result in the physicians working [**125] together to procure much-needed, technologically advanced medical equipment that will benefit the Vicksburg community. A number of witnesses testified about the "certificate of need wars" within the Vicksburg medical community and the longstanding battles between the clinics and the hospitals in their individual efforts to secure state approval for a cardiac catheterization laboratory and other medical equipment. (E.g., id. at 995-96; 1097; 2517.) The twelve to fifteen year political gridlock in obtaining a cardiac catheterization unit for the Vicksburg community was aptly described by Dr. Hopson: "It's been fight, fight, fight, fight." (Id. at 2517.) This Court finds it regrettable that years of bickering within the medical community has played a role in depriving Vicksburg area residents of muchneeded life saving equipment. On this record, there can be no question that the current situation creates an untenable disservice to the community at large. Considering the public harm that will be caused by maintaining the status quo, the Court finds that the merger offers a reasonable business solution for mending the fault line that has divided the Vicksburg and Street Clinics. It is [**126] this Court's view, based largely on the credible testimony of the physician witnesses, that the fusion of these clinics will foster cooperative, rather than divisive, efforts among the doctors to work together in obtaining advanced medical equipment for the community.

In evaluating the injunction's potential impact on the public interest, the Court also has given careful consideration to the evidence regarding an alleged price increase in medical services that may result from the merger. Columbia has argued throughout the course of this litigation that the merger will eliminate competition between the Vicksburg and Street Clinic doctors, lead to a one-hospital town, and thereby raise physician and hospital service prices for Vicksburg area residents. In support of this allegation, Columbia's expert, Dr. Eisenstadt, opined that the likely competitive effect of the transaction is higher prices. (Id. at 2154.) Dr. Eisenstadt's opinion was not, however, supported [*1144] by any empirical evidence such as price studies of comparable markets where hospitals and/or clinics previously have merged. (Id. at 2341-42.)

The Court finds more compelling the evidence that other market forces (such [**127] as the growth in managed care contracting, nonnegotiable or standardized pricing in certain government programs and Blue Cross Blue Shield contracts, and the perception amongst Vicksburg physicians that the Jackson medical community poses a competitive threat) will keep postmerger price increases at bay. (Id. at 189, 438, 1504-05, 2584, 2604, 3075.) For example, Charles Pitts testified that, if reasonable prices for specialists' services were unavailable in Vicksburg, his

---

<sup>35</sup> As Dr. Hopson explained:

I think the citizens will have more services in Vicksburg than they have ever had before if [the merger is] allowed to go through. I think they will have to travel less miles. I think they will actually have better medical care.

(Trial Tr. at 2599.)

managed care company would contract instead with Jackson specialists. (Id. at 361.) Pitts further testified that the interest in negotiating managed care contracts on a regional basis could make it illogical for a hospital services provider to raise prices in one market at the risk of losing managed care contracts in other regions. (Id. at 353-54.) Marsha Powers of Quorum testified that, realistically, Quorum has little to no ability to raise prices for 85% of its hospital revenue sources (i.e., Medicare, Medicaid, Blue Cross Blue Shield, other existing managed care contracts and workers' compensation). With respect to the remaining 15% of revenues (i.e., self-pay and commercially insured patients), Powers [**128] testified that Quorum would have little incentive to raise the prices charged to those patients because doing so would create a risk of losing Quorum's best paying clients. (Id. at 1441-46.) The Court further notes that Dr. Sessums of the Mission Clinic testified that he had no plans to raise his prices by a hypothetical 10% after the merger. (Id. at 135.) Dr. Hopson expressed his expectation that the citizens of Vicksburg may enjoy lower medical service costs following the merger. According to Dr. Hopson, lower prices are a possibility because a number of cost savings will result from merging the clinics and eliminating the duplication of services that currently exists between them. Such cost savings conceivably could be passed on to the patients. (Id. at 2525, 2600, 2605.)

In the light of the foregoing, Columbia has failed to convince this Court that the merger is likely to cause price increases in medical services. Considering the totality of the record evidence, this Court has no doubt that granting the injunction would perform a disservice to the Vicksburg area public. Columbia's request for preliminary injunctive relief is therefore denied.

III. Conclusion

[**129] Having seriously studied and considered the record as a whole, it is this Court's firm conviction that the challenged merger is neither the product of a concerted effort to monopolize nor likely to stifle competition to any substantial degree in the relevant markets. This record clearly demonstrates that the proposed merger is not an aberrant transaction that violates the spirit or letter of the antitrust laws. Instead, it is the natural byproduct of a rapidly evolving medical services market in which the key players are jockeying for position in a highly competitive race to provide quality services at reasonable prices. Rather than eliminate or lessen competition, the evidence indicates that the merger is likely to stimulate market competition, particularly in the light of Columbia's documented, multifaceted strategies for actively competing in Vicksburg after the merger. Importantly, the evidence also demonstrates that granting the requested injunction is likely to cause a genuine disservice to the public.

It is therefore the decision of this Court that Columbia's requests for (i) preliminary and permanent injunctive relief; (ii) an adjudication that the merger violates Section [**130] 7 of the Clayton Act and Section 2 of the Sherman Act; (iii) an award of costs and attorneys' fees; and (iv) other relief, including rescission of any part of the transaction that already may have occurred, are denied in their entirety. Because the Quorum defendants are the prevailing parties in this matter, the Court finds that costs should be assessed against Columbia.

The Court also has before it the plaintiff's Emergency Motion for an Injunction Pending Appeal. An Order and Final Judgment will be entered herein as soon as the Court [*1145] has had an opportunity to consider the motion.

This the 14th day of March, 1997.

David Bramlette

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Saratoga Harness Racing v. Veneglia

United States District Court for the Northern District of New York

March 15, 1997, Decided ; March 18, 1997, FILED

94-CV-1400

Reporter

1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3566 *; 1997 WL 135946

SARATOGA HARNESS RACING INC., Plaintiffs, -v- PETER VENEGLIA, Individually and as Chairman of UNITED STANDBRED HORSEMEN OF NEW YORK; NORTHEASTERN HARNESS HORSEMEN'S ASSOC. Inc.; JOSEPH A. FARALDO; STANDBRED OWNERS ASSOC. OF NEW YORK; LEONARD D. POWELL; STANDBRED BREEDERS AND OWNERS ASSOC. OF NEW JERSEY, INC.; DOMINIC FRINZI; HARNESS HORSEMEN INTERNATIONAL, Defendants.

Disposition: [*1] Plaintiff's motion to strike affirmative defenses granted in part and denied in part.

Core Terms

---

affirmative defense, pleadings, defenses, horsemen, defendants', negotiations, motion to strike, anti trust law, antitrust, answers, implied repeal, immunity, lack of personal jurisdiction, motion to dismiss, summary judgment, associations, injunction, asserting, estoppel, stricken, parties

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Waiver & Preservation of Defenses

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

HN1 [↓] Pretrial Judgments, Judgment on Pleadings

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 provides in part that after the pleadings are closed but within such time as not to delay the trial, any party may move for judgment on the pleadings. An objection of failure to state a legal defense to a claim may be made in any pleading permitted or ordered under Fed. R. Civ. P. 7(a), or by motion for judgment on the pleadings, or at the trial on the merits. A party is entitled to judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Rule 12(c) if it has established that no material issue of fact remains to be resolved and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Where material fact issues remain, however, judgment on the pleadings is inappropriate.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN2 Pleading & Practice, Pleadings

A material issue of fact that will prevent a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c) from being successful may be framed by an express conflict on a particular point between the parties' respective pleadings. It also may result from defendant pleading new matter and affirmative defenses in his answer.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Initiative & Referendum

HN3 Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Motions to Strike

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f) provides that a motion to strike portions of a pleading to which no responsive pleading is required must be brought within 20 days after service of the pleading. The rule also provides, however, that a court may order an insufficient defense stricken from a pleading at any time, on its own initiative. Numerous courts have held that the court's power to strike a defense on its own initiative at any time allows it to consider untimely motions to strike.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

HN4 Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Motions to Strike

Well-pleaded facts are accepted as true for purposes of a motion to strike, and matters outside the pleadings will not be considered in support of the motion. A motion to strike an affirmative defense under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f) for legal insufficiency is not favored and will not be granted unless it appears to a certainty that plaintiffs would succeed despite any state of the facts which could be proved in support of the defense. In order to succeed on a motion to strike affirmative defenses, a plaintiff must establish three elements: (1) that there is no question of fact which would allow the defense to succeed; (2) that there is no question of law which would allow the defense to succeed; and (3) that the plaintiff would suffer prejudice from inclusion of the defense.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Law of the Case

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

HN5 Preclusion of Judgments, Law of the Case

The law of the case doctrine provides that when a court decides upon a rule of law, that decision should continue to govern the same issues in subsequent stages in the same case. Application of the doctrine is discretionary, however, and it does not constitute a limitation on the court's power and need not be applied where no prejudice results from its omission.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Legislative Controls > Implicit Delegation of Authority

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Legislative Controls > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

HN6 [down arrow] Legislative Controls, Implicit Delegation of Authority

Repeals by implication, or implied antitrust immunity are not casually inferred. Only where there is a plain repugnancy between the antitrust and regulatory provisions will repeal be implied. The touchstone of the implied immunity analysis is Congressional intent since the principle is founded on the notion that, in some circumstances, a Congressional delegation of regulatory authority carries with it the implication that the antitrust laws shall not apply to the conduct thus regulated.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN7 [down arrow] Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

Affirmative defenses are subject to the general pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\), 8\(e\) and 9\(b\), generally requiring only a short and plain statement of the facts but demanding particularity as to the circumstances constituting fraud and mistake.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN8 [down arrow] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The language of Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) can be used on a motion to dismiss or as an affirmative defense, at the pleader's option. Furthermore, it is well settled that the failure-to-state-a-claim defense is a perfectly appropriate affirmative defense to include in the answer. While the defense may be redundant in that it is akin to a general denial, there is no prejudicial harm to plaintiff and the defense need not be stricken.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HNG[] Responses, Defenses, Demurters & Objections

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(h)(1) provides that the defense of lack of personal jurisdiction is waived if neither asserted by a Rule 12 motion nor included in the answer. Even if a litigant preserves this defense by including it in his answer, however, undue delay in challenging personal jurisdiction by a motion to dismiss may constitute waiver.

Counsel: Appearances:

For Plaintiffs: E. Guy Roemer Esq., ROEMER AND ASSOCIATES, Albany, NY.

For Peter J. Veneglia, United Standardbred Horsemen of NY, NorthEast Harness Horseman's Assoc., Inc., Joseph A Faraldo, Standardbred Owners Assoc. of NY, Inc., Leonard D. Powell, Defendants: Neil L. Levine, Esq., Jonathan P. Nye, Esq., WHITEMAN, OSTERMAN LAW FIRM, Albany, NY. For Dominic Frinzi and Harness Horsemen International, Defendants: Kenneth Ritzenberg, Esq., Kristin Carter Rowe, Esq., YOUNG & ROWE, Albany, New York.

Judges: Thomas J. McAvoy, Chief U.S. District Judge

Opinion by: Thomas J. McAvoy

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM DECISION & ORDER

Plaintiff in this antitrust lawsuit moves for an order, pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(c), 12(f), and 12(h)(2), striking each and all of the affirmative defenses pleaded in the defendants' answers.

I. BACKGROUND

A. Facts:

This lawsuit stems from failed contract negotiations between plaintiff Saratoga Harness Racing, Inc., which operates a harness race track at Saratoga, New York, and the horse owners who race at Saratoga. Defendant Northeastern [**2] Harness Horsemen's Association, Inc. ("NHHA") is the trade organization of horsemen with which Saratoga previously had a contract relating to the terms and conditions of racing at Saratoga. That contract expired on November 30, 1993. Defendant Powell is a vice-president of NHHA. Defendants Faraldo and Veneglia are styled as members, agents and negotiators for defendant NHHA. Defendant Taraldo is also president of defendant Standardbred Owners Association of New York, Inc. ("SBOA-NY"), which represents horsemen at Yonkers racetrack. Defendant Veneglia is also an officer and member of defendant United Standardbred Horsemen of New York ("USH") an unincorporated group of horsemen's associations.<sup>1</sup> Defendant Frinzi is the president of defendant Harness Horsemen International ("HHI"), an association that includes various horsemen's associations, including NHHA and SOA-NY. Negotiations for a new contract between plaintiff and NHHA took place during the fall of 1993 and the Spring of 1994: those negotiations ultimately failed.

---

<sup>1</sup> Defendants Veneglia, USH, NHHA, SBOA-NY and Powell are hereinafter referred to as "the New York defendants."

[*3] Plaintiff essentially states two separate antitrust claims against these defendants <sup>2</sup> based on their conduct during and since the time that negotiations broke down between plaintiff and the NHHA: 1) that defendant NHHA, through defendants Faraldo, Powell, and Veneglia both individually and through defendant USH, and with the assistance of Frinzi and HHI, have organized a boycott of Saratoga by their membership and other horsemen, in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act; and, 2) that these defendants and local horsemen's associations at other tracks have engaged in an illegal "tying" operation, whereby these local associations, in combination with other defendants, threatened to withhold their consent to simulcasting of those other tracks' races if those other tracks simulcasted races to Saratoga.<sup>3</sup>

[*4] B. Procedural History:

Plaintiff commenced this lawsuit on October 28, 1994 against all defendants except Frinzi and HHI. On December 15, 1994, plaintiff moved for a preliminary injunction. SBOA-NJ moved to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction on January 3, 1995; the remaining defendants moved to dismiss for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction on January 4, 1995.

The Court heard oral argument on all motions on January 27, 1995. In a bench decision, the Court denied all motions. (Transcript of Proceedings of January 27, 1995 ["Tr."] at 19). SBOA-NJ moved for reconsideration on May 22, 1995, which was denied by Memorandum, Decision and Order dated August 2, 1995.

On January 2, 1996, plaintiff moved to amend the Complaint to add Frinzi and HHI as defendants; the motion was granted. All defendants answered the Amended Complaint, asserting various affirmative defenses.

II. DISCUSSION.

A. Plaintiff's Present Motion

Plaintiff filed the present motion on October 10, 1996. Plaintiff moves, ostensibly pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12\(c\), 12\(f\), and/or 12\(h\)\(2\), to strike all affirmative defenses pleaded in the defendants' answers. Since the propriety and [*5] posture of the motion are as much in dispute as is its substance, the procedural aspects merit some discussion.

We turn first to the rules themselves. HN1 [↑] Fed.R.Civ.P. 12 provides, in pertinent part:

(c) Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings. After the pleadings are closed but within such time as not to delay the trial, any party may move for judgment on the pleadings.

* * *

(h) Waiver or Preservation of Certain Defenses

<sup>2</sup> By stipulation and order dated July 22, 1996, defendant Standardbred Breeders and Owners Horsemen Association of New Jersey, Inc., ("SBOA-NJ), was dismissed from the action.

<sup>3</sup> Plaintiff also asserts violations of New York State antitrust law, N.Y. G. B. L. § 340, (the "Donnelly Act"), and a common law claim for tortious interference with contract.

* * *

An objection of failure to state a legal defense to a claim may be made in any pleading permitted or ordered under Rule 7\(a\), or by motion for judgment on the pleadings, or at the trial on the merits.

Fed.R.Civ.P. 12. A party is entitled to judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Rule 12\(c\) if it has established "that no material issue of fact remains to be resolved and that [it] is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Juster Associates v. City of Rutland, Vermont, 901 F.2d 266, 269 \(2d Cir. 1990\) (quoting 5 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1368, at 690 (1969)). Where material fact issues remain, however, judgment on the pleadings is inappropriate. George C. Frey Ready-Mixed Concrete, Inc. v. I\*61 Pine Hill Concrete Mix Corp., 554 F.2d 551, 553 \(2d Cir. 1977\); Shah v. New York State Dept. of Civil Service, 1996 WL 694340, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. 1996).

Plaintiff's motion is curious in at least two respects. First, plaintiff asserts that "the present motion does not seek summary judgment," (Roemer Aff. P 12), and yet in support of its motion, plaintiff makes reference to a number of "matters outside the pleadings," (see, e.g., Pl. Mem. of Law at 5, 7 n.7) and further goes so far as to submit copies of defendants' answers to plaintiff's interrogatories. (Roemer Reply Aff. Ex. B). These materials, if not excluded by the Court, would in fact convert the motion to one for summary judgment. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(c) ("If, on a motion for judgment on the pleadings, matters outside the pleadings are presented to and not excluded by the Court, the motion shall be treated as one for summary judgment . . ."). If plaintiff indeed does not seek summary judgment, the Court is hard pressed to discern plaintiff's rationale in submitting such materials, although a disregard for Rule 12's prerequisites comes to mind.<sup>4</sup>

[*7] Second, plaintiff asserts that a number of "facts" are undisputed, e.g., that the boycott occurred, and that defendants supported it (See Roemer Aff. P 21), despite the fact that such assertions explicitly are denied to a large extent in defendants' answers. (See, e.g., NY Def. Answer PP 20-22; Frinzi/HHI Answer PP 19-23).<sup>5</sup>

For the reasons stated above, and despite plaintiff's reliance on Rule 12\(c\), the Court will treat plaintiff's motion as one to strike defendants' affirmative [*8] defenses pursuant to Rule 12\(f\). See, e.g., Bazazi v. Michaud, 856 F. Supp. 33, 34 (D.N.H. 1994) (construing plaintiff's motion for judgment on the pleadings as motion to strike affirmative defenses pursuant to Rule 12\(f\)); Ciminelli v. Cablevision, 583 F. Supp. 158, 161 \(E.D.N.Y. 1984\) (treating plaintiff's motion for summary judgment dismissing affirmative defenses, which relied on federal rule for judgment on the pleadings, as motion to strike insufficient defense pursuant to Rule 12\(f\)).

Insofar as plaintiff's motion is brought pursuant to Rule 12\(f\) however, defendants object that it is untimely. HN3 [↑] Rule 12\(f\) provides that a motion to strike portions of a pleading to which no responsive pleading is required must be brought within twenty days after service of the pleading. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12\(f\). The rule also provides, however, that a court may order an insufficient defense stricken from a pleading at any time, on its own initiative. Id. "Numerous courts have held that the court's power to strike a defense on its 'own initiative at any time' allows it to consider untimely motions to strike." Dixie Yarns, Inc. v. Forman, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8441, 1993 WL 227661 at <sup>4</sup> Plaintiff further asserts that "the limited factual record described in P 11 of plaintiff's moving affirmation may be referenced on this motion pursuant to the terms of Rule 12\(c\) . . ." (Roemer Reply Aff. P 4). Absent converting the motion to one for summary judgment, however, plaintiff offers no support for consideration of this "abbreviated evidentiary record." (Roemer Aff. P 11).

<sup>5</sup> Defendants' inclusion of denials and affirmative defenses in their answers themselves militate against the propriety of judgment on the pleadings.

HN2 [↑] A material issue of fact that will prevent a motion under Rule 12\(c\) from being successful may be framed by an express conflict on a particular point between the parties' respective pleadings. It also may result from defendant pleading new matter and affirmative defenses in his answer.

*3 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (citing [*9] *National Union Fire Ins. v. Alexander*, 728 F. Supp. 192, 203 \(S.D.N.Y. 1989\); 2A J. Moore, Moore's Federal Practice, P 12.21 at 2420 (2d ed. 1983)); see also *Ciminelli*, 583 F. Supp. at 161; *Uniroyal, Inc. v. Heller*, 65 F.R.D. 83, 86 \(S.D.N.Y. 1974\)). Thus, the Court will consider plaintiff's motion to strike.

B. Standard for a Motion Pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12\(f\).

"Generally, **HN4** well-pleaded facts are accepted as true for purposes of a motion to strike, and matters outside the pleadings will not be considered in support of the motion." *United States v. \$ 79,000 in Account Number 2168050/6749900 at the Bank of New York*, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16536, 1996 WL 648934, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (quoting 2A James W. Moore, Moore's Federal Practice, P 12.21[3], at 12-214-15 (2d ed. 1996)). "A motion to strike an affirmative defense under Rule 12\(f\) . . . for legal insufficiency is not favored and will not be granted 'unless it appears to a certainty that plaintiffs would succeed despite any state of the facts which could be proved in support of the defense.'" *William Z. Salcer, Panfeld, Edelman v. Envicon Equities Corp.*, 744 F.2d 935, 939 \(2d Cir. 1984\) (quoting [*Durham Industries, Inc. v. North* \[\*10\] \[\*River Insurance Co.\*, 482 F. Supp. 910, 913 \\(S.D.N.Y. 1979\\)\]\(#\), vacated on other grounds, 478 U.S. 1015 \(1986\).](#)

In order to succeed on a motion to strike affirmative defenses, a plaintiff must establish three elements: (1) that there is no question of fact which would allow the defense to succeed; (2) that there is no question of law which would allow the defense to succeed; and (3) that the plaintiff would suffer prejudice from inclusion of the defense. *SEC v. Thrasher*, 1995 WL 456402, at \*5 \(S.D.N.Y. 1995\); *SEC v. Toomey*, 866 F. Supp. 719, 722 \(S.D.N.Y. 1992\); see also *Salcer*, 744 F.2d at 939; *Morse/Diesel v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md.*, 763 F. Supp. 28, 34 \(S.D.N.Y. 1991\).

It is with this standard in mind that the Court turns to plaintiff's motion.

C. The Affirmative Defenses

The defendants plead the following affirmative defenses: (1) failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted; (2) implied antitrust immunity; (3) laches; (4) lack of standing; (5) voluntary consent to collective negotiations; (6) estoppel; (7) waiver; (8) implied repeal of antitrust laws; (9) no injury to business or property; (10) no antitrust injury; (11) lack of [*11] personal jurisdiction; (12) insufficiency of process; (13) that any injury was caused by parties over whom defendants have no control. Defenses 11, 12 and 13 are pleaded by Frinzi and HHI only.

The Court will address these defenses as addressed by the parties.

(a) Implied Antitrust Immunity/Implied Repeal of Antitrust Laws

Plaintiff first argues that the defenses based upon the Interstate Horseracing Act of 1978, *15 U.S.C. § 3001 et seq.* ("IHA") should be stricken because Congress did not intend the Act to effect an implied antitrust repeal or immunity.

Much of the parties' arguments in this regard center on the Court's previous bench ruling on defendants's motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction. Thus, as an initial matter, we discuss what the Court did and did not hold.

First, in denying defendant's motion to dismiss, the Court did not rule on whether the IHA effects an implied repeal of antitrust laws with respect to the challenged conduct. Rather, the Court ruled that, assuming . . . that the combination of the New York's regulatory scheme and the Interstate Horseracing Act gives rise [*12] to any application of the doctrine [of implied repeal], review of the relevant caselaw reveals no such preclusive operation of the doctrine so that its invocation would completely divest this Court of subject matter jurisdiction over plaintiff's complaint. Rather, the proper approach in such a case is an analysis which reconciles the operation of both statutory schemes with one another, rather than holding one completely ousted.

(Tr. at 3-4). Thus, the Court's ruling was limited to whether the doctrine of implied repeal, if it applied at all, would serve to deprive the Court of subject matter jurisdiction. In ruling that it would not, the Court addressed, at least in part, the sufficiency of defendants' affirmative defense that

This Court lacks jurisdiction over the subject matter of this action, in whole or in part, by virtue of implied repeal of the antitrust laws with respect to the conduct challenged herein.

(NY Def. Ans. P 66; HHI Def. Ans. P 68). "However, even if the Court has previously decided [this] issue[], the doctrine of the law of the case does not prevent the Court from reconsidering [it]." Oppel v. Empire Mut. Ins. Co., 92 F.R.D. 494, 496 [*13] (S.D.N.Y. 1981). HN5 The law of the case doctrine provides that "when a court decides upon a rule of law, that decision should continue to govern the same issues in subsequent stages in the same case." Liona Corp. v. PCH Assocs., 949 F.2d 585, 592 (2d Cir. 1991) (quoting Christianson v. Colt Indus. Operating Corp., 486 U.S. 800, 816, 100 L. Ed. 2d 811, 108 S. Ct. 2166 (1988)). Application of the doctrine is discretionary, however, see Virgin Atl. Airways v. National Mediation Bd., 956 F.2d 1245, 1255 (2d Cir. 1992), and it "does not constitute a limitation on the Court's power and need not be applied where no prejudice results from its omission." Oppel, 92 F.R.D. at 496; see Slotkin v. Citizens Cas. Co. of N.Y., 614 F.2d 301, 312 (2d Cir. 1979).

Furthermore, in denying defendants' motion to dismiss, the Court clearly left open the question of the precise interaction between the IHA and antitrust laws. (See Tr. at pp. 1-5). Similarly, in denying plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction, the Court once again expressed the need for caution at such a preliminary stage. As then stated, the difficulty arises because "what boycott participants do is not necessarily [*14] different from what they would do in the absence of an impermissible boycott." Alabama Sportservice Inc. v. National Horsemen's Ass'n, 767 F. Supp. 1573, 1579 (M.D.Fla. 1991). Of course, in denying the plaintiff's motion for injunctive relief, the Court in no way foreclosed an examination of the merits of either plaintiff's or defendants' positions. See, e.g., DiLaura v. Power Authority of the State of New York, 982 F.2d 73, 76 (2d Cir. 1992) ("the decision of both the trial and appellate court on whether to grant or deny a temporary injunction does not preclude the parties in any way from litigating the merits of the case.") (quoting 11 Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice & Procedure § 2962, at 630-31 (1973)). The Court thus turns to defendants' affirmative defenses of implied repeal and implied antitrust immunity.

HN6 Repeals by implication, or implied antitrust immunity are not casually inferred. Viacom Intern. Inc. v. Time Inc., 785 F. Supp. 371, 383 (S.D.N.Y. 1992). "Only where there is a 'plain repugnancy between the antitrust and regulatory provisions' will repeal be implied." *Gordon v. New York State Stock Exchange, Inc., 422 U.S. 659, 682, [*15] 45 L. Ed. 2d 463, 95 S. Ct. 2598* (1975) (quoting United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 351, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715 (1963)). "The touchstone of [the implied immunity] analysis is Congressional intent . . . since the principle is founded on the notion that, in some circumstances, a Congressional delegation of regulatory authority carries with it the implication that the antitrust laws shall not apply to the conduct thus regulated." Viacom, 382 F. Supp. at 382 (quoting Northeastern Telephone Co. v. American Telephone and Telegraph Co., 651 F.2d 76, 82 (2d Cir. 1981)).

The legislative history of the IHA gives some indication of its intended impact on antitrust law.

This legislation in no way modifies or affects the scope or application of the antitrust laws of the United States, nor does it confer upon any person or persons the right to enter into any agreement in restraint of trade which would be prohibited under the antitrust laws.<sup>6</sup> [*17]

H.R. Rep. No. 1733, 95 Cong., 2d Sess., at 4 (1978), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.A.N. 4132; see also Hialeah, Inc. v. FHBPA, 899 F. Supp. 616, 621 (S.D. Fla. 1995) ("the Court recognizes [*16] that the IHA provides no immunity to any party from federal antitrust law, nor does the legislative history indicate that this was Congress' intent").

---

<sup>6</sup> There may be less to this passage than meets the eye. The quoted passage is from a House Report on H.R. 14089. See H.R. Rep. No. 1733, 95 Cong., 2d Sess., at 4, reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.A.N. at 4132. However, the bill that eventually became the IHA was S. 1185; neither the Senate Judiciary Committee Report nor the Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee Report on S. 1185 make any mention of antitrust concerns. See 1978 U.S.C.A.N. at 4144.

Nonetheless, as the Court previously acknowledged, the "statutory framework bespeaks a certain amount of collective activity by horsemen through horsemen's associations." (Tr. at 12). Furthermore, Congress must have recognized that withholding consent under the IHA would inevitably result in diminished competition; the question under the Sherman Act, however, is "whether it is diminished sufficiently to be deemed illegal." Alabama Sportservice, 767 F. Supp. at 1580. Similarly, while the literal language of § 1 of the Sherman Act sweeps broadly<sup>7</sup>, it is now well-settled that antitrust law prohibits only those contracts or combinations that are "unreasonably restrictive of competitive conditions." Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 58, 55 L. Ed. 619, 31 S. Ct. 502 \(1911\).

It is neither factually nor legally clear at this point whether the IHA envisions the horsemen's veto being so wielded; consent is to be "withdrawn or varied only within the regular contractual process of negotiating an agreement as to terms and conditions between the horsemen's group and the host racing association." Alabama Sportservice, 767 F. Supp. at 1579 (emphasis added). In the proper context then, "the freedom to negotiate contemplated by the IHA does not necessarily result in antitrust injury . . . when consent is withheld. Id.

Unsurprisingly, the Court is in no better position now to rule on the proper reconciliation of the two statutes than it was on the prior motion; [*18] questions of fact and law pervade the analysis to such an extent that the Court is unprepared to rule at this stage whether the IHA provides a defense to conduct forbidden by the Sherman Act. The pleadings and memoranda of the parties are scarcely more developed than on the prior motion. Moreover, a motion to strike affirmative defenses "was never intended to furnish an opportunity for the determination of disputed and substantial questions of law." William Z. Salcer, etc., 744 F.2d at 939 (quoting Carter-Wallace, Inc. v. Riverton Laboratories, Inc., 47 F.R.D. 366, 367-68 \(S.D.N.Y. 1969\)). Thus, plaintiff's motion to strike these affirmative defenses is denied.

(b) The Equitable Defenses

Defendants also plead the affirmative defenses of waiver, estoppel, laches, and that plaintiff's action is barred by its voluntary consent to collective negotiations with horsemen.

As to the voluntary consent defense, defendants offer no factual or legal support for the proposition that such consent and participation in collective negotiations, in and of themselves, would bar any of plaintiff's causes of action. Furthermore, plaintiff may in fact suffer sufficient prejudice from [*19] the increased time and money spent on discovery regarding an affirmative defense for which defendants provide no support, particularly since plaintiff does not contest its history of negotiation with the horsemen. See PHH FleetAmerica Corp. v. Crawford & Co., Inc., 1995 WL 424986 at *4 (S.D.N.Y. 1995). Thus, plaintiff's motion is granted as to this defense.

The remaining equitable defenses will be stricken without prejudice. First, plaintiff's citations to New York caselaw regarding the strict pleading requirements for these defenses are inapplicable in this federal action. HN7 [↑] "Affirmative defenses are . . . subject to the general pleading requirements of Rules 8\(a\), 8\(e\) and 9\(b\), generally requiring only a short and plain statement of the facts but demanding particularity as to the circumstances constituting fraud and mistake." Instituto Nacional De Comercializacion Agricola \(Indeca\) v. Continental Illinois Nat. Bank & Trust Co., 576 F. Supp. 985, 988 \(N.D.Ill.1983\); see also Fed.R.Civ.P. 8\(b\) ("A party shall state in short and plain terms the party's defenses to each claim asserted . . ."). Defendants' answers merely state, in conclusory terms, that plaintiff's claims are [*20] barred by the doctrines of waiver, estoppel and laches; mere recitation of the legal buzzwords, however, will not suffice. See, e.g., Paine Webber, Inc. v. International Mobile Machines Corp., 1992 WL 75068 at *2 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) ("while an answer need not include a detailed statement of the applicable defenses, a defendant must do more than make conclusory allegations") (citing Heller Financial, Inc. v. Midwhey Powder Co., Inc., 883 F.2d 1286, 1294-95 \(7th Cir.1989\)); Telecommunications Proprietary, Ltd. v. Medtronic, Inc., 687 F.

---

<sup>7</sup> See, e.g., Nat. Society of Professional Engineers v. U.S., 435 U.S. 679, 688, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637, 98 S. Ct. 1355 \(1978\) ("read literally, § 1 would outlaw the entire body of private contract law"); United States v. Topco Assoc., 405 U.S. 596, 606, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515, 92 S. Ct. 1126 \(1972\) ("Were § 1 to be read in the narrowest possible way, any commercial contract could be deemed to violate it.").

Supp. 832, 841 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) ("the word 'estoppel' without more is not a sufficient statement of a defense"). Defendants are granted leave to replead these three defenses within twenty days of the date of this Order.

(c) The Remaining Defenses

Failure to State a Claim/General Denials

HN8 [↑] The language of Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) can be used on a motion to dismiss or as an affirmative defense, at the pleader's option. SEC v. Toomey, 866 F. Supp. 719, 723 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) (citing 5A C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice & Procedure § 1349, at 190 (1990)). "Furthermore, it is well settled that the failure-to-state-a-claim defense is [*21] a perfectly appropriate affirmative defense to include in the answer." Toomey, 866 F. Supp. at 723. While the defense may be redundant in that it is akin to a general denial, "there is no prejudicial harm to plaintiff and the defense need not be stricken." Oppel, 92 F.R.D. at 498; see Simon v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 849 F. Supp. 880, 882 (S.D.N.Y. 1994).

Similarly, defendants' "general denials" will not be stricken. These defenses are (1) that plaintiff has suffered no injury or damage; (2) that plaintiff has suffered no antitrust injury; (3) that defendants had no control over the injury-causing parties.; and (3) that plaintiff lacks standing. Although asserted as affirmative defenses, these are essentially general denials; nonetheless, plaintiff will suffer no prejudice from allowing them to stand. Oliner v. McBride's Indus., Inc., 106 F.R.D. 14, 19 (S.D.N.Y. 1985). Thus, plaintiff's motion is denied as to these defenses.

Lack of Personal Jurisdiction/Insufficient Service of Process

The HHI defendants plead, as affirmative defenses, that this Court lacks personal jurisdiction over them, and that service of process on them was insufficient. In [*22] support of these defenses, defendants argue that because they deny plaintiff's allegations regarding the HHI defendants' contacts with New York in their Answer, the material facts regarding personal jurisdiction are in dispute.

HN9 [↑] Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(h)(1) provides that the defense of lack of personal jurisdiction is waived if neither asserted by a Rule 12 motion nor included in the answer. The HHI defendants chose to do the latter. "Even if a litigant preserves this defense by including it in his answer, [however,] undue delay in challenging personal jurisdiction by a motion to dismiss may . . . constitute waiver." Krank v. Express Funding Corp., 133 F.R.D. 14, 16 (S.D.N.Y. 1990); see Burton v. Northern Dutchess Hospital, 106 F.R.D. 477, 481 (S.D.N.Y. 1985). Judge Edelstein in Burton articulated well a defendant's obligations:

Defendants have literally complied with Rule 12(h)(1) by asserting the defense of lack of jurisdiction in their answers. These responsive pleadings, however, do not preserve the defense in perpetuity. Defendants are required at some point to raise the issue by motion for the Court's determination. After preserving the jurisdictional defense in [*23] their answers, defendants should have sought discovery immediately to ascertain whether service was proper. If they discovered that service was not proper, defendants should have moved at the earliest possible opportunity to dismiss the complaint.

Burton, 106 F.R.D. at 481.

In the present case, plaintiff filed its Amended Complaint on January 10, 1996. The HHI defendants answered on February 26, 1996 and filed an acknowledgment of service on March 8, 1996. Thus, the HHI defendants have had over one full year to contest either the sufficiency of process or this Court's personal jurisdiction over them. During that period, the HHI defendants have participated in status conferences and engaged in discovery. Furthermore, these defendants offer no arguments on this motion in support of their contentions regarding lack of personal jurisdiction or insufficient process. These circumstances militate in favor of a finding of waiver. See Datskow v. Teledyne, Inc., Continental Products Div., 899 F.2d 1298, 1303 (2d Cir. 1990); Caribe Carriers, Ltd. v. C.E. Heath & Co., 784 F. Supp. 1119, 1125 (S.D.N.Y. 1992); Krank, 133 F.R.D. at 17; Benveniste v. Eiseman, 119 F.R.D. 628, 629 [*24] (S.D.N.Y. 1988). Therefore, the HHI defendants having waived these defenses, the Court grants plaintiff's motion to strike in this respect.

III. Conclusion

For all of the foregoing reasons, plaintiff's motion to strike the affirmative defenses is granted in part and denied in part. The motion is granted, without prejudice, as to the defenses of estoppel, waiver, and laches, as to all defendants. Defendants are granted leave to amend the Answers as to these defenses within twenty days of the date of this Order. The motion is further granted, with prejudice, as to the HHI defendants' affirmative defenses of lack of personal jurisdiction and insufficient service of process. The motion is also granted, with prejudice, as to the affirmative defense of voluntary consent to collective negotiations, as to all defendants. The motion is denied as to all other defenses.

IT IS SO ORDERED

March 15, 1997

Binghamton, New York

Thomas J. McAvoy

Chief U.S. District Judge

---

End of Document

United States v. Nippon Paper Indus. Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

March 17, 1997, Decided

No. 96-2001

Reporter

109 F.3d 1 *; 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 4939 **; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,750

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellant, v. NIPPON PAPER INDUSTRIES CO., LTD., ET AL., Defendants, Appellees.

Prior History: [**1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS. Hon. Joseph L. Tauro, U.S. District Judge.

Disposition: Reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

Sherman Act, extraterritoriality, regulation, antitrust, indictment, international law, anti trust law, courts, Restatement, territory, principles, cases, conspiracy, statutory construction, criminal case, commerce, lenity, substantial effect, ambiguity, appears, comity, district court, interpreting, effects, canon, civil action, anticompetitive, construing, provisions, sovereign

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > De Novo Review > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Sherman Act

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Because it is a question of statutory construction, the appellate court reviews de novo the holding that the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 \(1994\), does not cover wholly extraterritorial conduct in the criminal context.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN2[] Legislation, Interpretation

109 F.3d 1, *11997 U.S. App. LEXIS 4939, **1

Legislation of congress, unless a contrary intent appears, is meant to apply only within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States. In this context, inquiring courts must determine whether congress has clearly expressed an affirmative desire to apply particular laws to conduct that occurs beyond the borders of the United States.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 International Aspects, International Application of US Law

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 \(1994\), applies to foreign conduct that is meant to produce and does in fact produce some substantial effect in the United States.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

HN4 International Aspects, Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act

Civil antitrust actions predicated on wholly foreign conduct which has an intended and substantial effect in the United States come within the jurisdictional reach of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 \(1994\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 \(1994\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Courts shall interpret the same language in the same section of the same statute uniformly, regardless of whether the impetus for interpretation is criminal or civil.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN7 Legislation, Interpretation

Identical words or terms used in different parts of the same act are intended to have the same meaning. The principle, which is called "the basic canon of statutory construction," operates not only when particular phrases appear in different sections of the same act, but also when they appear in different paragraphs or sentences of a single section.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN8 Legislation, Interpretation

The same phrase, appearing in the same portion of the same statute, cannot bear divergent interpretations in different litigation contexts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Acts that are done outside a jurisdiction, but are intended to produce and producing detrimental effects within it, justify a state in punishing the cause of the harm as if he has been present at the effect, if the state succeeds in getting him within its power. It is not much of a stretch to apply this same principle internationally, especially in a shrinking world.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > General Intent

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Intent

HN10 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Criminal intent generally is required to convict under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 \(1994\). However, intent need not be shown to prosecute criminally conduct regarded as per se illegal because of its unquestionably anticompetitive effects. Defendants can be convicted of participation in price-fixing conspiracies without any demonstration of a specific criminal intent to violate the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Intent

HN11 [blue download icon] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

In the case of regulatory statutes that may give rise to both civil and criminal liability, such as the United States antitrust and securities laws, the presence of substantial foreign elements will ordinarily weigh against application of criminal law. In such cases, legislative intent to subject conduct outside the state's territory to its criminal law shall be found only on the basis of express statement or clear implication.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN12 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Any agreement in restraint of United States trade that is made outside of the United States is subject to the jurisdiction to prescribe of the United States, if a principal purpose of the conduct or agreement is to interfere with the commerce of the United States, and the agreement or conduct has some effect on that commerce. A country's decision to prosecute wholly foreign conduct is discretionary.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation > Rule of Lenity

HN13 [blue download icon] Legislation, Interpretation

The rule of lenity is venerable; it provides that, in the course of interpreting statutes in criminal cases, a reviewing court shall resolve ambiguities affecting a statute's scope in the defendant's favor. However, the rule of lenity is inapposite unless a statutory ambiguity looms, and a statute is not ambiguous for this purpose simply because some courts or commentators have questioned its proper interpretation. Rather, the rule of lenity applies only if, after seizing everything from which aid can be derived, a court can make no more than a guess as to what congress has intended. The rule of lenity is a background principle that properly comes into play when, at the end of a thorough inquiry, the meaning of a criminal statute remains obscure. The rule of lenity cannot be used to create ambiguity when the meaning of a law, even if not readily apparent, is, upon inquiry, reasonably clear.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Relations With Governments

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Comity Doctrine > General Overview

HN14 [blue download icon] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

International comity is a doctrine that counsels voluntary forbearance when a sovereign, which has a legitimate claim to jurisdiction, concludes that a second sovereign also has a legitimate claim to jurisdiction under principles of international law. Comity is more an aspiration than a fixed rule, more a matter of grace than a matter of obligation. Comity concerns will operate to defeat the exercise of jurisdiction only in those few cases in which the law of the foreign sovereign requires a defendant to act in a manner incompatible with the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 \(1994\), or in which full compliance with both statutory schemes is impossible.

Counsel: Mark S. Popofsky, Attorney, Antitrust Division, U.S. Dep't of Justice, with whom Anne K. Bingaman, Assistant Attorney General, Joel I. Klein, Deputy Assistant Attorney General, John J. Powers, III, Robert B. Nicholson, David A. Blotner, Lisa M. Phelan, and Reginald K. Tom, Attorneys, Antitrust Division, were on brief, for the United States.

Richard G. Parker, with whom Geoffrey D. Oliver, Alan M. Cohen, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, William H. Kettlewell, and Dwyer & Collora were on brief, for Nippon Paper Industries Co., Ltd.

John G. Roberts, Jr., David G. Leitch, H. Christopher Bartolomucci, and Hogan & Hartson L.L.P. on brief for Government of Japan, amicus curiae.

Judges: Before Selya, Circuit Judge, Coffin, Senior Circuit Judge, and Lynch, Circuit Judge. LYNCH, Circuit Judge (concurring).

Opinion by: SELYA

Opinion

---

[*2] SELYA, Circuit Judge. This case raises an important, hitherto unanswered question. In it, the United States attempts to convict a foreign corporation under the Sherman Act, a federal antitrust statute, alleging [*2] that price-fixing activities which took place entirely in Japan are prosecutable because they were intended to have, and did in fact have, substantial effects in this country. The district court, declaring that a criminal antitrust prosecution could not be based on wholly extraterritorial conduct, dismissed the indictment. See United States v. Nippon Paper Indus. Co., 944 F. Supp. 55 \(D. Mass. 1996\). We reverse.

I. JUST THE FAX

Since the district court granted the defendant's motion to dismiss for failure to state a prosecutable offense, we draw our account of the pertinent events from the well-pleaded facts in the indictment itself. See United States v. National Dairy Prods. Corp., 372 U.S. 29, 33 n.2, 9 L. Ed. 2d 561, 83 S. Ct. 594 \(1963\).

In 1995, a federal grand jury handed up an indictment naming as a defendant Nippon Paper Industries Co., Ltd. (NPI), a Japanese manufacturer of facsimile paper.<sup>1</sup> The indictment alleges that in 1990 NPI and certain unnamed coconspirators held a number of meetings in Japan which culminated in an agreement to fix the price of thermal fax paper throughout North America. NPI and other manufacturers who were privy to the scheme purportedly accomplished [*3] their objective by selling the paper in Japan to unaffiliated trading houses on condition that the latter charge specified (inflated) prices for the paper when they resold it in North America. The trading houses then shipped and sold the paper to their subsidiaries in the United States who in turn sold it to American consumers at swollen prices. The indictment further relates that, in 1990 alone, NPI sold thermal fax paper worth approximately $ 6,100,000 for eventual import into the United States; and that in order to ensure the success of the venture, NPI monitored the paper trail and confirmed that the prices charged to end users were those that it had arranged. These activities, the indictment posits, had a substantial adverse effect on commerce in the United States and unreasonably restrained trade in violation of Section One of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1994\).

[**4] NPI moved to dismiss because, inter alia, if the conduct attributed to NPI occurred at all, it took place entirely in Japan, and, thus, the indictment failed to limn an offense under Section One of the Sherman Act. The government opposed this initiative on two grounds. First, it claimed that the law deserved a less grudging reading and that, properly read, Section One of the Sherman Act applied criminally to wholly foreign conduct as long as that conduct produced substantial and intended effects within the United States. Second, it claimed that the indictment, too, deserved a less grudging reading and that, properly read, the bill alleged a vertical conspiracy in restraint of trade that involved overt acts by certain coconspirators within the United States. Accepting a restrictive reading of both the [*3] statute and the indictment, the district court dismissed the case. See United States v. NPI, 944 F. Supp. 55 at 64-66. This appeal followed.

---

<sup>1</sup> The grand jury also named another Japanese manufacturer, Jujo Paper Co., Ltd. (Jujo), as a codefendant. Two years earlier, however, NPI had been formed and, the government alleges, had assumed Jujo's assets and liabilities. Because the issue of successor liability is not before us, we treat NPI as if it were the sole defendant and as if it, rather than Jujo, were alleged to have committed the acts described in the indictment.

II. ANALYSIS

We begin -- and end -- with the overriding legal question.<sup>2</sup> HN1 Because this question is one of statutory construction, we review de novo the holding that Section One of the Sherman Act does not cover wholly extraterritorial [**5] conduct in the criminal context. See United States v. Gifford, 17 F.3d 462, 471-72 \(1st Cir. 1994\).

Our analysis proceeds in moieties. We first present the historical context in which this important question arises. We move next to the specifics of the case.

A. An Historical Perspective.

Our law has long presumed that HN2 "legislation of Congress, unless a contrary intent appears, is meant to apply only within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States." EEOC v. Arabian American Oil Co., 499 U.S. 244, 248, 113 L. Ed. 2d 274, 111 S. Ct. 1227 \(1991\) (citation omitted). In this context, the Supreme Court has charged inquiring [**6] courts with determining whether Congress has clearly expressed an affirmative desire to apply particular laws to conduct that occurs beyond the borders of the United States. See id.

The earliest Supreme Court case which undertook a comparable task in respect to Section One of the Sherman Act determined that the presumption against extraterritoriality had not been overcome. In American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 213 U.S. 347, 53 L. Ed. 826, 29 S. Ct. 511 \(1909\), the Court considered the application of the Sherman Act in a civil action concerning conduct which occurred entirely in Central America and which had no discernible effect on imports to the United States. Starting with what Justice Holmes termed "the general and almost universal rule" holding "that the character of an act as lawful or unlawful must be determined wholly by the law of the country where the act is done," id. at 356, and the ancillary proposition that, in cases of doubt, a statute should be "confined in its operation and effect to the territorial limits over which the lawmaker has general and legitimate power," id. at 357, the Court held that the defendant's actions abroad were not proscribed by the Sherman Act. [**7]

Our jurisprudence is precedent-based, but it is not static. By 1945, a different court saw a very similar problem in a somewhat softer light. In United States v. Aluminum Co. of Am., 148 F.2d 416 \(2d Cir. 1945\) (Alcoa), the Second Circuit, sitting as a court of last resort, see 15 U.S.C. § 29 (authorizing designation of a court of appeals as a court of last resort for certain antitrust cases), mulled a civil action brought under Section One against a Canadian corporation for acts committed entirely abroad which, the government averred, had produced substantial anticompetitive effects within the United States. The Alcoa court read American Banana narrowly; that case, Judge Learned Hand wrote, stood only for the principle that "we should not impute to Congress an intent to punish all whom its courts can catch, for conduct which has no consequences within the United States." 148 F.2d at 443. But a sovereign ordinarily can impose liability for conduct outside its borders that produces consequences within them,

---

<sup>2</sup> Inasmuch as we hold that activities committed abroad which have a substantial and intended effect within the United States may form the basis for a criminal prosecution under Section One of the Sherman Act, we need not address the government's alternative argument that the indictment in this case alleges that some overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy were perpetrated in the United States.

109 F.3d 1, *3L<sup>A</sup> 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 4939, **7

and while considerations of comity argue against applying Section One to situations in which no effect within the United States has been shown -- the [\[\*\*8\]](#) American Banana scenario -- the statute, properly interpreted, does proscribe extraterritorial acts which were "intended to affect imports [to the United States] and did affect them." Id. at 444. On the facts of Alcoa, therefore, the presumption against extraterritoriality had been overcome, and the Sherman Act had been violated. See id. at 444-45.

[\[\*4\]](#) Any perceived tension between American Banana and Alcoa was eased by the Supreme Court's most recent exploration of the Sherman Act's extraterritorial reach. In Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, 509 U.S. 764, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612, 113 S. Ct. 2891 (1993), the Justices endorsed Alcoa's core holding, permitting civil antitrust claims under Section One to go forward despite the fact that the actions which allegedly violated Section One occurred entirely on British soil. While noting American Banana's initial disagreement with this proposition, the Hartford Fire Court deemed it "well established by now that HN3↑ the Sherman Act applies to foreign conduct that was meant to produce and did in fact produce some substantial effect in the United States." 509 U.S. 764 at 796, 113 S. Ct. 2891, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612. The conduct alleged, a London-based conspiracy to alter the American insurance [\[\*\*9\]](#) market, met that benchmark.<sup>3</sup> See id.

[\[\*10\]](#) To sum up, the case law now conclusively establishes that HN4↑ civil antitrust actions predicated on wholly foreign conduct which has an intended and substantial effect in the United States come within Section One's jurisdictional reach. In arriving at this conclusion, we take no view of the government's asseveration that the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1982 (FTAIA), 15 U.S.C. § 6a \(1994\), makes manifest Congress' intent to apply the Sherman Act extraterritorially. The FTAIA is inelegantly phrased and the court in Hartford Fire declined to place any weight on it. See Hartford Fire, 509 U.S. at 796 n.23. We emulate this example and do not rest our ultimate conclusion about Section One's scope upon the FTAIA.

B. The Merits.

Were this a civil case, our journey would be complete. But here the United States essays a criminal prosecution for solely extraterritorial conduct rather than a civil action. This is largely uncharted terrain; we are aware of no authority directly on point, and the parties have cited none.

Be that as it may, one datum sticks out like a sore thumb: in both criminal and civil cases, the claim that Section One applies extraterritorially [\[\*\*11\]](#) is based on the same language in the same section of the same statute: HN5↑ "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Words may sometimes be chameleons, possessing different shades of meaning in different contexts, see, e.g., Hanover Ins. Co. v. United States, 880 F.2d 1503, 1504 (1st Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1023, 107 L. Ed. 2d 745, 110 S. Ct. 726 (1990), but common sense suggests that HN6↑ courts should interpret the same language in the same section of the same statute uniformly, regardless of whether the impetus for interpretation is criminal or civil.

Common sense is usually a good barometer of statutory meaning. Here, however, we need not rely on common sense alone; accepted canons of statutory construction point in the same direction. It is a fundamental interpretive principle that HN7↑ identical words or terms used in different parts of the same act are intended to have the same <sup>3</sup> As NPI reminds us, four Justices dissented in Hartford Fire. This is cold comfort, however, for the dissenters expressed complete agreement with the majority's view on extraterritoriality. See Hartford Fire, 509 U.S. at 814 (Scalia, J., dissenting). By the same token, NPI's attempt to distinguish Hartford Fire on the ground that the defendants there conceded the United States' jurisdiction over their conduct fails for two reasons.

In the first place, the assertion is no more than a play on words. The majority opinion in Hartford Fire stated that the district court "undoubtedly" had jurisdiction over the civil claims, "as the London reinsurers apparently concede." Id. at 795. It is obvious, therefore, that jurisdiction did not depend on the concession; to the contrary, jurisdiction would "undoubtedly" have existed in any event. In the second place, one of the London defendants did not join in this apparent concession, but the Court nonetheless held that defendant's foreign conduct to be within the Sherman Act's proscriptive ambit because it was part of a scheme which "was intended to and did in fact produce a substantial effect on the American insurance market." Id. at 795 n.21.

meaning. See Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Lundy, 133 L. Ed. 2d 611, 116 S. Ct. 647, 655 (1996); [\[\*5\] Gustafson v. Alloyd Co.](#), 513 U.S. 561, 115 S. Ct. 1061, 1067, 131 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1995). [\[\*\*12\]](#) This principle -- which the Court recently called "the basic canon of statutory construction," Estate of Cowart v. Nicklos Drilling Co., 505 U.S. 469, 479, 120 L. Ed. 2d 379, 112 S. Ct. 2589 (1992) -- operates not only when particular phrases appear in different sections of the same act, but also when they appear in different paragraphs or sentences of a single section. See Russo v. Texaco, Inc., 808 F.2d 221, 227 (2d Cir. 1986) ("It is a settled principle of statutory construction that when the same word or phrase is used in the same section of an act more than once, and the meaning is clear as used in one place, it will be construed to have the same meaning in the next place.") (citations and internal quotation marks omitted); United States v. Gertz, 249 F.2d 662, 665 (9th Cir. 1957) (similar). It follows, therefore, that if the language upon which the indictment rests were the same as the language upon which civil liability rests but appeared in a different section of the Sherman Act, or in a different part of the same section, we would be under great pressure to follow the lead of the Hartford Fire Court and construe the two iterations of the language identically. Where, as here, the tie [\[\*\*13\]](#) binds more tightly -- that is, the text under consideration is not merely a duplicate appearing somewhere else in the statute, but is the original phrase in the original setting -- the pressure escalates and the case for reading the language in a manner consonant with a prior Supreme Court interpretation is irresistible. See United States v. Thompson/Center Arms Co., 504 U.S. 505, 518 n.10, 119 L. Ed. 2d 308, 112 S. Ct. 2102 (1992) (plurality op.) (flatly rejecting the idea, while construing language from a statute with both civil and criminal implications, that a court should "refrain in criminal cases from applying statutory language that would have been held to apply if challenged in civil litigation").

The Supreme Court confronted an analogous situation in Ratzlaf v. United States, 510 U.S. 135, 126 L. Ed. 2d 615, 114 S. Ct. 655 (1994). There, the court dealt with a single criminal penalty clause, contained in 31 U.S.C. § 5322\(a\) (1994), which authorized punishment for individuals "willfully violating" a number of separate statutory provisions. The defendant was charged under one of these provisions. After noting that identical terms appearing at multiple places within a single statute customarily have a consistent meaning, the Court [\[\*\*14\]](#) said: "We have even stronger cause to construe a single formulation, here § 5322\(a\), the same way each time it is called into play." Id. at 143. The Ratzlaf Court proceeded to interpret the phrase "willfully violating" to incorporate the same mens rea requirement that had been read into the phrase when section 5322\(a\) was applied in other contexts. 510 U.S. 135 at 136-37, 141, 114 S. Ct. 655, 126 L. Ed. 2d 615. In so doing the Court quoted with approval our statement in United States v. Aversa, 984 F.2d 493, 498 (1st Cir. 1993) (en banc): "Ascribing various meanings to a single iteration . . . -- reading the word differently for each code section to which it applies -- would open Pandora's jar. If courts can render meaning so malleable, the usefulness of a single penalty provision for a group of related code sections will be eviscerated."

Ratzlaf is not our only teaching aid. This court recently confronted a situation that, putting together its successive stages, throws light upon the problem at hand. Having found an ambiguity in the phrase "cost of producing self-employment income," 7 U.S.C. § 2014\(d\)\(9\) (1994), we deferred to a reasonable administrative regulation interpreting it. See Strickland [\[\*15\]](#) v. Commissioner, Me. Dep't of Human Servs., 48 F.3d 12, 21 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 133 L. Ed. 2d 91, 116 S. Ct. 145 (1995). In a subsequent suit involving the same parties, we debunked the plaintiffs' contention, advanced in a somewhat different context and in connection with a neoteric legal theory, that the phrase in question had a plain meaning. We explained: "Statutory ambiguity does not flash on and off like a bank of strobe lights at a discotheque, shining brightly at the time of one lawsuit and then vanishing mysteriously in the interlude before the next suit appears." Strickland v. Commissioner, Me. Dep't of Human Servs., 96 F.3d 542, 547 (1st Cir. 1996). Read in the ensemble, the Strickland opinions stand for the proposition that HN8 the same phrase, appearing in the same portion [\[\*6\]](#) of the same statute, cannot bear divergent interpretations in different litigation contexts.

The shared rationale of the Ratzlaf and Strickland cases reinforces the basic canon of construction and gives us confidence that we should follow the canon here. The words of Section One have not changed since the Hartford Fire Court found that they clearly evince Congress' intent to apply the [\[\*\*16\]](#) Sherman Act extraterritorially in civil actions, and it would be disingenuous for us to pretend that the words had lost their clarity simply because this is a criminal proceeding. Thus, unless some special circumstance obtains in this case, there is no principled way in which we can uphold the order of dismissal.

NPI and its amicus, the Government of Japan, urge that special reasons exist for measuring Section One's reach differently in a criminal context. We have reviewed their exhortations and found them hollow. We discuss the five most promising theses below. The rest do not require comment.

1. Lack of Precedent. NPI and its amicus make much of the fact that this appears to be the first criminal case in which the United States endeavors to extend Section One to wholly foreign conduct. We are not impressed. There is a first time for everything, and the absence of earlier criminal actions is probably more a demonstration of the increasingly global nature of our economy than proof that Section One cannot cover wholly foreign conduct in the criminal milieu.

Moreover, this argument overstates the lack of precedent. There is, for example, solid authority for applying a state's [\[\*\*17\]](#) criminal statute to conduct occurring entirely outside the state's borders. See Strassheim v. Daily, 221 U.S. 280, 285, 55 L. Ed. 735, 31 S. Ct. 558 \(1911\) (Holmes, J.) HN9 ("Acts done outside a jurisdiction, but intended to produce and producing detrimental effects within it, justify a State in punishing the cause of the harm as if he had been present at the effect, if the State should succeed in getting him within its power."). It is not much of a stretch to apply this same principle internationally, especially in a shrinking world. See, e.g., Chua Han Mow v. United States, 730 F.2d 1308, 1311-12 \(9th Cir. 1984\) (applying Strassheim principle to conduct in Malaysia involving drugs intended for distribution in the United States), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1031, 84 L. Ed. 2d 790, 105 S. Ct. 1403 (1985); United States v. Hayes, 653 F.2d 8, 11 \(1st Cir. 1981\) (similar); cf. John Donne, Devotions Upon Emergent Occasions, no. 17 (1624) (warning that "no man is an island, entire of itself; every man is a piece of the continent, a part of the main").

2. Difference in Strength of Presumption. The lower court and NPI both cite United States v. Bowman, 260 U.S. 94, 67 L. Ed. 149, 43 S. Ct. 39 \(1922\), for the proposition that [\[\*\*18\]](#) the presumption against extraterritoriality operates with greater force in the criminal arena than in civil litigation. This misreads the opinion. To be sure, the Bowman Court, dealing with a charged conspiracy to defraud, warned that if the criminal law "is to be extended to include those [crimes] committed outside of the strict territorial jurisdiction, it is natural for Congress to say so in the statute, and failure to do so will negative the purpose of Congress in this regard." Id. at 98. But this pronouncement merely restated the presumption against extraterritoriality previously established in civil cases like American Banana, 213 U.S. at 357. The Bowman Court nowhere suggested that a different, more resilient presumption arises in criminal cases.<sup>4</sup>

[\[\*\*19\]](#) Nor does United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 \(1978\), offer aid and succor to NPI. Recognizing that "the behavior proscribed by the [Sherman] Act is often difficult to distinguish from the gray zone of socially acceptable and economically justifiable business conduct," id. at 440-41, the Gypsum Court held that [\[\*7\] HN10](#) criminal intent generally is required to convict under the Act. See id. at 443. Although this distinguishes some civil antitrust cases (in which intent need not be proven) from their criminal counterparts, the Gypsum Court made it plain that intent need not be shown to prosecute criminally "conduct regarded as per se illegal because of its unquestionably anticompetitive effects." Id. at 440. This means, of course, that defendants can be convicted of participation in price-fixing conspiracies without any demonstration of a specific criminal intent to violate the antitrust laws. See, e.g., United States v. Brown, 936 F.2d 1042, 1046 \(9th Cir. 1991\); United States v. Society of Indep. Gas. Marketers, 624 F.2d 461, 465 \(4th Cir. 1980\), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1078, 101 S. Ct. 859, 66 L. Ed. 2d 801 (1981); [United States v. Gillen, \[\*20\] 599 F.2d 541, 544-45](#) (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 866, 100 S. Ct. 137, 62 L. Ed. 2d 89 (1979). Because the instant case falls within that rubric, Gypsum does not help NPI.

We add that even if Gypsum had differentiated between civil and criminal price-fixing cases, NPI's reliance on it would still be problematic. Reduced to bare essence, Gypsum focuses on mens rea, noting that centuries of Anglo-

---

<sup>4</sup> Indeed, the Bowman Court stated that it regarded American Banana as an appropriate analogy because the antitrust statute "is criminal as well as civil." 260 U.S. at 98. This seems to support the notion that the presumption is the same in both instances and leaves little room to argue that the Bowman Court was attempting to craft a special, more rigorous rule for criminal proceedings.

American legal tradition instruct that criminal liability ordinarily should be premised on malevolent intent, see *id. at 436-37*, whereas civil liability, to which less stigma and milder consequences commonly attach, often requires a lesser showing of intent. There is simply no comparable tradition or rationale for drawing a criminal/civil distinction with regard to extraterritoriality, and neither NPI nor its amicus have alluded to any case which does so.

3. The Restatement. NPI and the district court, *944 F. Supp. at 65*, both sing the praises of the Restatement (Third) of Foreign Relations Law (1987), claiming that it supports a distinction between civil and criminal cases on the issue of extraterritoriality. The passage to which they pin their hopes states:

HN11 [↑] In the case of regulatory [**21] statutes that may give rise to both civil and criminal liability, such as the United States antitrust and securities laws, the presence of substantial foreign elements will ordinarily weigh against application of criminal law. In such cases, legislative intent to subject conduct outside the state's territory to its criminal law should be found only on the basis of express statement or clear implication.

Id. at § 403 cmt. f. We believe that this statement merely reaffirms the classic presumption against extraterritoriality -- no more, no less. After all, nothing in the text of the Restatement proper contradicts the government's interpretation of Section One. See, e.g., id. at § 402(1)(c) (explaining that, subject only to a general requirement of reasonableness, a state has jurisdiction to proscribe "conduct outside its territory that has or is intended to have substantial effect within its territory");<sup>5</sup> id. at § 415(2) HN12 [↑] ("Any agreement in restraint of United States trade that is made outside of the United States . . . [is] subject to the jurisdiction to prescribe of the United States, if a principal purpose of the conduct or agreement is to interfere [**22] with the commerce of the United States, and the agreement or conduct has some effect on that commerce."). What is more, other comments indicate that a country's decision to prosecute wholly foreign conduct is discretionary. See, e.g., id. at § 403 rep. n.8.

4. The Rule of Lenity. The next arrow which NPI yanks from its quiver is the rule of lenity. HN13 [↑] The rule itself is venerable; it provides that, in the course of interpreting statutes in criminal cases, a reviewing court should resolve ambiguities affecting a statute's scope in the defendant's favor. See, e.g., *Hughey v. United States, 495 U.S. 411, 422, 109 L. Ed. 2d 408, 110 S. Ct. 1979 \(1990\)*; *Crandon v. United States, 494 U.S. 152, 158, 108 L. Ed. 2d 132, 110 S. Ct. 997 \(1990\)*; [*United States v. Gibbens, 25 F.3d 28, 35 \(1st Cir. \[\*\*23\] 1994\)*](#); *United States v. Ferryman, 897 F.2d 584, 591 \(1st Cir.\), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 830, 112 L. Ed. 2d 62, 111 S. Ct. 90 \(1990\)*. But the rule of lenity is inapposite [*8] unless a statutory ambiguity looms, and a statute is not ambiguous for this purpose simply because some courts or commentators have questioned its proper interpretation.<sup>6</sup> See *Reno v. Koray, 515 U.S. 50, 132 L. Ed. 2d 46, 115 S. Ct. 2021, 2029 \(1995\)*; *Moskal v. United States, 498 U.S. 103, 108, 112 L. Ed. 2d 449, 111 S. Ct. 461 \(1990\)*. Rather, "the rule of lenity applies only if, after seizing everything from which aid can be derived, [a court] can make no more than a guess as to what Congress intended." *Reno, 115 S. Ct. at 2029* (citations, internal quotation marks, and certain brackets omitted); accord *United States v. O'Neil, 11 F.3d 292, 301 n.10 \(1st Cir. 1993\)* (describing the rule of lenity as "a background principle that properly comes into play when, at the end of a thorough inquiry, the meaning of a criminal statute remains obscure"). Put bluntly, the rule of lenity cannot be used to create ambiguity when the meaning of a law, even if not readily apparent, is, upon inquiry, reasonably clear.

[**24] That ends the matter of lenity. In view of the fact that the Supreme Court deems it "well established" that Section One of the Sherman Act applies to wholly foreign conduct, *Hartford Fire, 509 U.S. at 796*, we effectively are foreclosed from trying to tease an ambiguity out of Section One relative to its extraterritorial application. Accordingly, the rule of lenity plays no part in the instant case.

<sup>5</sup> We note in passing that, by their use of the disjunctive in this section, the drafters of the Restatement seem to suggest a more permissive standard than we, and other American courts, see, e.g., Alcoa, 148 F.2d at 444, would deem meet.

<sup>6</sup> Leaving aside the lower court's decision in this case, no reported opinion has questioned the applicability of Hartford Fire's exercise in statutory construction to the precincts patrolled by the criminal law. Nevertheless, Hartford Fire's rendition of the statute has drawn criticism from the academy. See, e.g., Kenneth W. Dam, Extraterritoriality in an Age of Globalization: The Hartford Fire Case, 1993 Sup. Ct. Rev. 289, 307-13 (1993).

5. Comity. HN14[] International comity is a doctrine that counsels voluntary forbearance when a sovereign which has a legitimate claim to jurisdiction concludes that a second sovereign also has a legitimate claim to jurisdiction under principles of international law. See Harold G. Maier, Extraterritorial Jurisdiction at a Crossroads: An Intersection Between Public and Private International Law, 76 A. J. Int'l L. 280, 281 n.1 (1982). Comity is more an aspiration than a fixed rule, more a matter of grace than a matter of obligation. In all events, its growth in the antitrust sphere has been stunted by Hartford Fire, in which the Court suggested that comity concerns would operate to defeat the exercise of jurisdiction only in those few cases in which the law of the foreign [**25] sovereign required a defendant to act in a manner incompatible with the Sherman Act or in which full compliance with both statutory schemes was impossible. See *Hartford Fire*, 509 U.S. at 798-99; see also Kenneth W. Dam, Extraterritoriality in an Age of Globalization: The Hartford Fire Case, 1993 Sup. Ct. Rev. 289, 306-07 (1993). Accordingly, the Hartford Fire Court gave short shrift to the defendants' entreaty that the conduct leading to antitrust liability was perfectly legal in the United Kingdom. See *Hartford Fire*, 509 U.S. at 798-99.

In this case the defendant's comity-based argument is even more attenuated. The conduct with which NPI is charged is illegal under both Japanese and American laws, thereby alleviating any founded concern about NPI being whipsawed between separate sovereigns. And, moreover, to the extent that comity is informed by general principles of reasonableness, see *Restatement \(Third\) of Foreign Relations Law* § 403, the indictment lodged against NPI is well within the pale. In it, the government charges that the defendant orchestrated a conspiracy with the object of rigging prices in the United States. If the government can prove these [**26] charges, we see no tenable reason why principles of comity should shield NPI from prosecution. We live in an age of international commerce, where decisions reached in one corner of the world can reverberate around the globe in less time than it takes to tell the tale. Thus, a ruling in NPI's favor would create perverse incentives for those who would use nefarious means to influence markets in the United States, rewarding them for erecting as many territorial firewalls as possible between cause and effect.

[*9] We need go no further. Hartford Fire definitively establishes that Section One of the Sherman Act applies to wholly foreign conduct which has an intended and substantial effect in the United States. We are bound to accept that holding. Under settled principles of statutory construction, we also are bound to apply it by interpreting Section One the same way in a criminal case. The combined force of these commitments requires that we accept the government's cardinal argument, reverse the order of the district court, reinstate the indictment, and remand for further proceedings.

Reversed and remanded.

Concur by: LYNCH

Concur

---

LYNCH, Circuit Judge (concurring). The [**27] question presented in this case is whether Section One of the Sherman Act authorizes criminal prosecutions of defendants for their actions committed entirely outside the United States. Judicial precedents, culminating with the Supreme Court's decision in *Hartford Fire Insurance Co. v. California*, 509 U.S. 764, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612, 113 S. Ct. 2891 \(1993\), conclusively establish that Section One's jurisdictional reach extends, in civil actions, to foreign conduct that is meant to produce, and does in fact produce, substantial effects in the United States. The next question to be asked is whether there is any persuasive reason to believe that, with regard to wholly foreign conduct, Section One in the criminal context is not co-extensive with Section One in the civil context.

In answering this second question, courts must be careful to determine whether this construction of Section One's criminal reach conforms with principles of international law. "It has been a maxim of statutory construction since the decision in *Murray v. The Charming Betsy*, 6 U.S. 64, 2 Cranch 64, 118, 2 L. Ed. 208 \(1804\), that 'an act of congress ought never to be construed to violate the law of nations, if any other possible construction remains.'" [**28] *Weinberger v. Rossi*, 456 U.S. 25, 32, 71 L. Ed. 2d 715, 102 S. Ct. 1510 \(1982\). In the Alcoa case, Judge

Learned Hand found this canon of construction relevant to determining the substantive reach of the Sherman Act, observing that "we are not to read general words [i.e., Section One] . . . without regard to the limitations customarily observed by nations upon the exercise of their powers." United States v. Aluminum Co. of Am., 148 F.2d 416, 443 \(2d Cir. 1945\); see also Hartford Fire, 509 U.S. at 814-15 (Scalia, J., dissenting).

The task of construing Section One in this context is not the usual one of determining congressional intent by parsing the language or legislative history of the statute. The broad, general language of the federal antitrust laws and their unilluminating legislative history place a special interpretive responsibility upon the judiciary. The Supreme Court has called the Sherman Act a "charter of freedom" for the courts, with "a generality and adaptability comparable to that found . . . in constitutional provisions." Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U.S. 344, 359-60, 77 L. Ed. 825, 53 S. Ct. 471 \(1933\). As Professors Areeda and Turner have said, the federal courts have been [**29] invested "with a jurisdiction to create and develop an antitrust law in the manner of the common law courts." I Areeda & Turner, Antitrust Law P 106, at 15 (1978).<sup>7</sup> The courts are aided in this task by canons of statutory construction, such as the presumption against violating international law, which serve as both guides and limits in the absence of more explicit indicia of congressional intent.

Here, we are asked to determine the substantive content of Section One's inexact jurisdictional provision, "commerce . . . with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Because of the "compunctions against the creation of crimes by judges rather than by legislators," II Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 311b, at 33 (1995 rev. ed.), the constitution-like aspects of the antitrust laws must be handled particularly carefully in criminal prosecutions.

[**30] As the antitrust laws give the federal enforcement agencies a relatively blank check, the development of antitrust law has been [*10] largely shaped by the cases that the executive branch chooses - or does not choose - to bring. Accordingly it has been said that:

novel interpretations or great departures have seldom, if ever, occurred in criminal cases, which prosecutors have usually reserved for defendants whose knowing behavior would be generally recognized as appropriate for criminal sanctions.

Id. at 34. This case does present a new interpretation. We are told this is the first instance in which the executive branch has chosen to interpret the criminal provisions of the Sherman Act as reaching conduct wholly committed outside of this country's borders.

Changing economic conditions, as well as different political agendas, mean that antitrust policies may change from administration to administration. The present administration has promulgated new Antitrust Enforcement Guidelines for International Operations which "focus primarily on situations in which the Sherman Act will grant jurisdiction and when the United States will exercise that jurisdiction" internationally. [**31] Brockbank, The 1995 International Antitrust Guidelines: The Reach of U.S. Antitrust Law Continues to Expand, 2 J. Int'l Legal Stud. 1, \*22 (1996). The new Guidelines reflect a stronger enforcement stance than earlier versions of the Guidelines, and have been described as a "warning to foreign governments and enterprises that the [antitrust enforcement] Agencies intend to actively pursue restraints on trade occurring abroad that adversely affect American markets or damage American exporting opportunities." Id. at *21. The instant case is likely a result of this policy.

It is with this context in mind that we must determine if the exercise of jurisdiction occasioned by the decision of the executive branch of the United States is proper in this case. While courts, including this one, speak of determining congressional intent when interpreting statutes, the meaning of the antitrust laws has emerged through the relationship among all three branches of government. In this criminal case, it is our responsibility to ensure that the executive's interpretation of the Sherman Act does not conflict with other legal principles, including principles of international law.

---

<sup>7</sup> Professors Areeda and Turner also note that "judges sometimes talk as if Congress has already decided the question before them. This is usually a misconception." Id.

That question [**32] requires examination beyond the language of Section One of the Sherman Act. It is, of course, generally true that, as a principle of statutory interpretation, the same language should be read the same way in all contexts to which the language applies. But this is not invariably true. New content is sometimes ascribed to statutory terms depending upon context. Cf. Robinson v. Shell Oil Co., 117 S. Ct. 843, 847, 136 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1997) (depending on context, statutory term may have different meanings in different sections of single statute); 3 Sutherland, Statutory Construction § 60.04 (5th ed. 1995) (statutes with both remedial and penal provisions may be construed liberally in remedial context and strictly in penal context). As NPI and the Government of Japan point out, the Supreme Court has held that Section One of the Sherman Act, which defines both criminal and civil violations with one general phrase,<sup>8</sup> "should be construed as including intent as an element" of a criminal violation. United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 443, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 (1978). Where Congress intends that our laws conform with international law, and where international law suggests that criminal enforcement [**33] and civil enforcement be viewed differently, it is at least conceivable that different content could be ascribed to the same language depending on whether the context is civil or criminal. It is then worth asking about the effect of the international law which Congress presumably also meant to respect.

The content of international law is determined "by reference 'to the customs and usages of civilized nations, and, as evidence of these, to the works of jurists and commentators.'" Hilao v. Marcos, 103 F.3d 789, 794 (9th Cir. 1996) (quoting The Paquete Habana, 175 U.S. 677, 700, 44 L. Ed. 320, 20 S. Ct. 290 (1900)); see also Kadic v. Karadzic, 70 F.3d 232 (2d Cir. 1995). The Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations [*11] Law of the United States restates international law, as derived from customary international law and from international agreements to [**34] which the United States is a party, as it applies to the United States. See Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States §§ 1, 101 (1987) [hereinafter Restatement]. The United States courts have treated the Restatement as an illuminating outline of central principles of international law. See Hartford Fire, 509 U.S. at 799 (citing Restatement); Hartford Fire, 509 U.S. at 818 (Scalia, J., dissenting) ("I shall rely on the Restatement (Third) of Foreign Relations Law for the relevant principles of international law. Its standards appear fairly supported in the decisions of this Court construing international choice-of-law principles . . . and in the decisions of other federal courts . . . ."); In re Maxwell Communications Corp., 93 F.3d 1036, 1047-48 (2d Cir. 1996).

The Restatement articulates principles, derived from international law, for determining when the United States may properly exercise regulatory (or prescriptive) jurisdiction over activities or persons connected with another state. It serves as a useful guide to evaluating the international interests at stake. Sections 402 and 403 articulate general principles. See Restatement [**35] §§ 402, 403. Section 415 applies these principles to "Jurisdiction to Regulate Anti-Competitive Activities." Id. § 415.

Restatement Section 402(1)(c) states that "Subject to § 403," a state has jurisdiction to prescribe law to "conduct outside its territory that has or is intended to have substantial effect within its territory." Id. § 402(1)(c). Section 403(1) states that, even when Section 402 has been satisfied, jurisdiction may not be exercised if it is "unreasonable." Id. § 403(1). Section 403(2) lists factors to be evaluated in determining if jurisdiction is reasonable:

- (a) the link of the activity to the territory of the regulating state, i.e., the extent to which the activity takes place within the territory, or has substantial, direct, and foreseeable effect upon or in the territory;
- (b) the connections, such as nationality, residence, or economic activity, between the regulating state and the person principally responsible for the activity to be regulated, or between that state and those whom the regulation is designed to protect;
- (c) the character of the activity to be regulated, the importance of regulation to the regulating state, [**36] the extent to which other states regulate such activities, and the degree to which the desirability of such regulation is generally accepted;
- (d) the existence of justified expectations that might be protected or hurt by the regulation;

---

<sup>8</sup> "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce . . . is declared to be illegal . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 1.

- (e) the importance of the regulation to the international political, legal, or economic system;
- (f) the extent to which the regulation is consistent with the traditions of the international system;
- (g) the extent to which another state may have an interest in regulating the activity; and
- (h) the likelihood of conflict with regulation by another state.

Id. § 403(2).<sup>9</sup>

Comment f to Section 403 states that the principles of Sections 402 and 403 "apply to criminal as well as to civil regulation." Id. § 403 cmt. f. But, specifically naming the United States antitrust laws, the comment also says that for statutes that give rise to both types of liability, "the presence [**37] of substantial foreign elements will ordinarily weigh against application of criminal law." Id. The comment argues that legislative intent to apply these laws criminally should only be found on the basis of "express statement or clear implication." Id.

While the majority opinion accurately states that this comment is an expression of the clear statement rule, the comment also implies that there are special concerns associated with the imposition of criminal sanctions on foreign conduct. See also id. § 403 [*12] n.8 ("In applying the principle of reasonableness, the exercise of criminal (as distinguished from civil) jurisdiction in relation to acts committed in another state may be perceived as particularly intrusive."). Indeed, most people recognize a distinction between civil and criminal liability; that the law of nations should do so as well is not surprising.<sup>10</sup> And while Hartford Fire and earlier judicial decisions have found that the antitrust laws do apply, in the civil context, to foreign conduct, this antitrust common law is not the express statement of legislative intent that the Restatement suggests may be appropriate in the criminal context.

[**38] Also relevant to the present inquiry is section 415 (2), which states that:

Any agreement in restraint of United States trade that is made outside of the United States, and any conduct or agreement in restraint of such trade that is carried out predominantly outside of the United States, are subject to the jurisdiction to prescribe of the United States, if a principal purpose of the conduct or agreement is to interfere with the commerce of the United States and the agreement or conduct has some effect on that commerce.

Restatement § 415(2). Comment a to Section 415 states that the reasonableness principles articulated in Section 403 must still be satisfied. See id cmt. a.

Application of these principles to the indictment at issue here leads to the conclusion that the exercise of jurisdiction is reasonable in this case. Here, raising prices in the United States and Canada was not only a purpose of the alleged conspiracy, it was the purpose, thus satisfying Section 415's "principal purpose" requirement. Moreover, Section 415's requirement of "some effect" on United States markets is amply met here. The indictment alleges that NPI sold $ 6.1 million [**39] of fax paper into the United States during 1990, approximately the period covered by the charged conspiracy. In 1990, total sales of fax paper in North America were approximately $ 100 million. NPI's price increases thus affected a not insignificant share of the United States market.

These same factors weigh heavily in the Section 403 reasonableness analysis. Because only North American markets were targeted, the United States' interest in combatting this activity appears to be greater than the Japanese interest, which may only be the general interest of a state in having its industries comport with foreign legal norms. Japan has no interest in protecting Japanese consumers in this case as they were unaffected by the alleged conspiracy. The United States, in contrast, has a strong interest in protecting United States consumers, who were affected by the increase in prices. In this situation, it may be that only the United States has sufficient incentive to pursue the alleged wrongdoers, thereby providing the necessary deterrent to similar anticompetitive behavior. In another case, where the consumers of the situs nation were injured as well, that state's interest in regulating anticompetitive [**40] conduct might be stronger than it is here.

<sup>9</sup> Section 403(3) is not applicable here. See id. § 403(3) cmt. e.

<sup>10</sup> Enforcement of criminal laws against foreign nationals for conduct on foreign soil may affect this country's relationship with the foreign country in somewhat different ways than would a civil action. Congress could choose to provide more explicit guidance to the executive and the courts in this area if it is concerned about such impacts on foreign relations.

Other Section 403 factors also counsel in favor of the exercise of jurisdiction here. The effects on United States markets were foreseeable and direct. The Government of Japan acknowledges that antitrust regulation is part of the international legal system, and NPI does not really assert that it has justified expectations that were hurt by the regulation.<sup>11</sup> The only factor counseling against finding that the United States' antitrust laws apply to this conduct is the fact that the situs of the conduct was Japan and that the principals were Japanese corporations. This consideration is inherent in the nature of jurisdiction based on effects of conduct, where the situs of the conduct is, by definition, always a [*13] foreign country. This alone does not tip the balance against jurisdiction.

[**41] For these reasons, I agree with the majority that the district court erred in dismissing the indictment.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>11</sup> While criminal prosecution may come as a surprise, NPI should have known that civil antitrust liability could include treble damages. A corporation found guilty of a criminal violation of Section One is subject to a fine not exceeding $ 10 million. See 15 U.S.C. § 2. Treble damages obviously do not include a similar cap.

Natural Gas Clearinghouse v. FERC

United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit

January 24, 1997, Argued ; March 18, 1997, Decided

No. 96-1140

Reporter

108 F.3d 397 *; 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 4977 **; 323 U.S. App. D.C. 343; 136 Oil & Gas Rep. 660

NATURAL GAS CLEARINGHOUSE, PETITIONER v. FEDERAL ENERGY REGULATORY COMMISSION, RESPONDENT; UNITED MUNICIPAL DISTRIBUTORS GROUP, ET AL., INTERVENORS

Prior History: [**1] On Petition for Review of Orders of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Disposition: Denied.

Core Terms

---

transportation, natural gas, pipeline, fuel, fuel-gas, costs, regulated, shipper, transit service, customers, charges

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Pipelines > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Distribution & Sale

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Marketing & Transportation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Marketing & Transportation > Marketability

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Natural Gas Transportation

HN1 [P] Pipelines & Transportation, Pipelines

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission has sought to assure that competition at the wellhead is carried downstream to customers, undistorted by regulation of the pipelines' natural monopolies in gas transportation. A series of rules and policies requires, among other things, that pipelines carry the gas of competing natural gas vendors on a non-discriminatory basis, separate their own gas marketing from their transportation functions, and, indeed, quit the business of making "bundled" sales of gas, that is, sales by the entity that provides the transportation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > Monopolization

Real Property Law > Encumbrances > Adjoining Landowners > Oil & Gas

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN2 Regulated Industries, Energy & Utilities

A price-regulated monopoly's business activity upstream or downstream from the area it monopolizes carries a risk both of defeating the regulatory scheme by enabling the monopolist to inflate the costs that under cost-of-service principles are recoverable from captive customers, and of impairing competition in the adjacent activity by enabling the monopolist to use inflated cost recoveries in the regulated market to subsidize its competition in the adjacent competitive one.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Standards of Review > Rule Interpretation

Energy & Utilities Law > Administrative Proceedings > Judicial Review > General Overview

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Standards of Review > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > ... > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Hearings & Orders > Judicial Review

HN3 Standards of Review, Rule Interpretation

A reviewing court must sustain the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's interpretation of its order if it is reasonable.

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Distribution & Sale

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Pipelines > General Overview

HN4 Natural Gas Industry, Distribution & Sale

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) defines "transportation" to include storage, exchange, backhaul, displacement, or other methods of transportation. 18 C.F.R. § 284.1\(a\) \(1996\). Nothing in the FERC definition suggests that energy used for transportation is not an aspect of transportation service.

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Distribution & Sale

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Pipelines > General Overview

**HN5** Natural Gas Industry, Distribution & Sale

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's regulations generally require for pipeline transportation service. 18 C.F.R. § 284.7\(c\)\(4\) \(1996\).

Counsel: Peter G. Esposito argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the brief was Kenneth E. Randolph.

Katherine Waldbauer, Attorney, Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, argued the cause for respondent. With her on the brief were Jerome M. Feit, Solicitor, and Joseph S. Davies, Deputy Solicitor.

Michael E. McMahon argued the cause and filed the brief for intervenor Koch Gateway Pipeline Company. James H. Byrd and Pamela M. Silberstein entered appearances.

Judges: Before: WILLIAMS, HENDERSON and RANDOLPH, Circuit Judges. Opinion for the Court filed by Circuit Judge WILLIAMS

Opinion by: WILLIAMS

Opinion

---

[*398] WILLIAMS, Circuit Judge: Moving natural gas through a pipeline requires energy, which is commonly, perhaps invariably, supplied by natural gas itself. Koch Gateway Pipeline Company has customarily used its shippers' own gas for these purposes, simply providing a little less gas (about two percent less) at the point of delivery than the shipper supplied at the point of receipt. In 1995 Koch filed tariff sheets under which it would give shippers an additional option--that of paying Koch in cash for [*2] the requisite fuel, at a price that Koch would post on its electronic bulletin board. The Commission approved the tariff change, see Koch Gateway Pipeline Co., 73 FERC P 61,375 \(1995\) ("Koch I"), made some adjustments in response to a petition for rehearing, Koch Gateway Pipeline Co., 74 P FERC 61,212 \(1996\) ("Koch II"), and denied a final petition for rehearing, Koch Gateway Pipeline Co., 75 FERC P 61,096 \(1996\).

Petitioner Natural Gas Clearinghouse is an independent marketer buying and selling natural gas, unaffiliated with any pipeline. It views the orders as representing a Thermidor in the natural gas revolution that began in 1985, turning "the competitive clock back in the direction of a far darker age ... [when] vigorous competition among many different [natural gas] suppliers was a mere academic concept." Petitioner's Brief at 9. Even assuming we had authority to check such counter-revolutionary impulses in the Commission, which of course we don't, this case presents no such issue. Finding no violation of statutes, of the Commission's regulations, or of any precept of administrative law, we deny the petition for review.

***

In its reshaping of [*3] the regulatory environment **HN1** the Commission has sought to assure [*399] that competition at the wellhead is carried downstream to customers, undistorted by regulation of the pipelines' natural monopolies in gas transportation. A series of rules and policies requires, among other things, that pipelines carry the gas of competing natural gas vendors on a non-discriminatory basis, separate their own gas marketing from their transportation functions, and, indeed, quit the business of making "bundled" sales of gas (i.e., sales by the entity that provides the transportation). See Order No. 636, Pipeline Service Obligations and Revisions to Regulations Governing Self-Implementing Transportation; and Regulation of Natural Gas Pipelines After Partial Wellhead Decontrol, 57 Fed. Reg. 13267, 13268-77 (1992), III FERC Stats. & Regs. P 30,939, aff'd but remanded for consideration of certain issues, United Distribution Cos. v. FERC, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 17436, 88 F.3d 1105 (D.C. Cir. 1996); see id. at 1122-25 for an overall background review and summary.

A major concern behind this unbundling was that otherwise the pipelines could use their transportation monopolies to secure illegitimate advantages in gas sales. For example, [**4] they might undercharge for carrying their own gas, or provide better service for that gas, and, by burying the costs of such favoritism in higher charges to competing sellers of gas (or their vendees), could gain an artificial advantage in the gas market.<sup>1</sup> The Commission's actions have thus been based on the familiar proposition that HN2↑ a price-regulated monopoly's business activity upstream or downstream from the area it monopolizes carries a risk both of defeating the regulatory scheme (by enabling the monopolist to inflate the costs that under cost-of-service principles are recoverable from captive customers), and of impairing competition in the adjacent activity (by enabling the monopolist to use inflated cost recoveries in the regulated market to subsidize its competition in the adjacent competitive one). See, e.g., 3 Phillip Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law § 726e (1978).

[**5] Natural Gas Clearinghouse's essential argument is that Koch's offer of a fuel-gas option is an attempted sale of natural gas and therefore, under Order No. 636, an offer that Koch could make only through its separate, merchant affiliate. Natural Gas Clearinghouse cites no specific language in Order No. 636 that the Commission's approval of the fuel-gas option might violate; its claim is that the approval contradicts the fundamental purposes of that Order. HN3↑ We must sustain the Commission's interpretation of the Order if it is reasonable. See Udall v. Tallman, 380 U.S. 1, 16, 13 L. Ed. 2d 616, 85 S. Ct. 792 (1965). But see John F. Manning, "Constitutional Structure and Judicial Deference to Agency Interpretations of Agency Rules," 96 Colum. L. Rev. 612, 682 (1996) (arguing for non-deferential review). The Commission concluded that Koch's proposed option was "not a marketing service, but is an extension of its transportation service." Koch I, 73 FERC at P 62,166.

As a matter of ordinary language FERC's approach seems unassailable. HN4↑ FERC defines "transportation" to include "storage, exchange, backhaul, displacement, or other methods of transportation." 18 CFR § 284.1(a) (1996). Here the gas is used, by Koch itself, [**6] to provide transportation service to Koch's transportation customers, and nothing in the FERC definition suggests that energy used for transportation is not an aspect of transportation service. We inquired at oral argument whether the Commission could not allow a pipeline simply to offer a transportation rate with the fuel cost embedded in the rate, just as a railroad charges for transportation without any separate "sale" of diesel fuel to the shippers. Counsel for Natural Gas Clearinghouse acknowledged (as we think was necessary) that there would be no legal impediment to such an arrangement, and could identify no way in which Koch's fuel-gas option could impose a more severe impact on gas marketers such as Natural Gas Clearinghouse.

[*400] The reasonableness of classifying compensation for fuel gas with the provision of transportation service seems confirmed by an examination of whether Koch's proposal will in fact enable Koch to engage in the sort of manipulation that is traditionally feared from vertical integration by a price-regulated monopolist. Clearinghouse argues that Koch's staff, nominally dedicated to provision of pipeline transportation, is devoting some time and resources [**7] to the various tasks associated with buying gas for "sale" into the fuel-gas submarket. Thus Koch might be seen as "inflating" the costs passed on to its captive transportation customers, and making a "sale" of gas subsidized by those customers.

---

<sup>1</sup> Because regulation will presumably have been holding the firm's rates below the profit-maximizing level, the rate increases resulting from this artificial cost inflation will not reduce the firm's profit. Such rate increases presumably would reduce profit for an unregulated monopolist, which would have selected the profit-maximizing price and quantity on the basis of its real marginal revenue and real marginal cost, and any rate increase would lower its profit.

But in this context it seems impossible to speak meaningfully of "shifting" costs or of cross-subsidization. Koch offers the option on a non-discriminatory basis. If it slipped fuel-gas costs into its non-fuel transportation charges, the parties that lost by the inflated non-fuel charges would gain by reduced fuel costs. As Koch's competitors would be the beneficiaries of any "cross-subsidization" of fuel gas, the supposed cost-shifting would give Koch no net advantage in the natural gas market generally. Thus the incongruity of calling fuel gas something other than part of the transportation service is underscored by the complete mismatch with the standard depiction of the menaces posed by a regulated monopoly's integration into adjacent activities.

Even if the above were completely wrong, the opportunity for distortion seems rather trivial. Clearinghouse has not laid out a scenario that suggests much opportunity for Koch to manipulate [**8] gas costs in any harmful way. The commodity is fungible and appears to be sold in rather "thick" markets in the producing areas, so that outsiders should not have great difficulty spotting any serious cost-shifting (assuming it were meaningful to talk of "shifting" costs from fuel gas to transportation service). Cf. Koch I, 73 FERC at P 62,167 (noting that the posting on Koch's electronic bulletin board will show not only the price but its basis, which, we were informed at oral argument, has been a three-day average of the price of natural gas futures in New York). Thus, any very material undercharge for Koch's fuel gas would be immediately noticeable. Finally, fuel-gas use seems rather steadily to account for only about 3.3 percent of total natural gas consumption, so that even if Koch acquired some unfair advantage in the "market" for fuel gas for Koch, it is hard to see much likelihood of impact on the gas market as a whole. See Energy Information Administration, Monthly Energy Review, Table 4-4 (January 1997) (giving figures from which one may calculate the fraction as 3.31% in 1994, 3.24% in 1995, and 3.25% in 1996).

Thus FERC appears to have been entirely reasonable in concluding [**9] that Clearinghouse's concerns that Koch's offer of its fuel-gas option might lead to cross-subsidization are "unfounded." See Koch II, 74 FERC at 61,693.

As a fall-back position, Clearinghouse argues that even if the sale of fuel gas is a transportation function, FERC erred in not requiring that the price be set on the basis of cost, as HN5↑ FERC's regulations generally require for pipeline transportation service. See 18 CFR § 284.7\(c\)\(4\) \(1996\). Here the true concern seems the opposite of petitioner's cross-subsidization claim: Koch is pictured as possibly overcharging for fuel gas, whereas in the prior section the concern was that it might underprice its fuel-gas "sales." In any event, as FERC noted, Koch's tariff merely gives the shipper an additional choice, beyond the always available (and concededly legitimate) one of having Koch retain a specified percentage of the shipper's gas. See Koch II, 74 FERC at 61,693. Thus no fuel-gas "sale" will ever occur unless its price is below the shipper's opportunity cost for its gas, which for purposes of this issue seems a convenient, self-administering concept of "cost." The Commission seems to have been entirely reasonable [**10] in rejecting Clearinghouse's demand for the imposition of stringent accounting requirements on Koch. Id. & n.5.

Accordingly, the petition for review is Denied.

United States v. GE

United States District Court for the District of Montana, Missoula Division

March 18, 1997, Decided ; March 18, 1997, FILED

CV 96-121-M-CCL

Reporter

1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5089 *; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,765

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiffs, vs. GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, Defendant.

Disposition: [*1] GE's motion to dismiss Count I of the complaint DENIED, and its motion to dismiss Count II GRANTED, and that Count II DISMISSED.

Core Terms

---

conspiracy, monopolize, licensing, detrimental effect, anticompetitive, pleaded, rule of reason, argues, motion to dismiss, relevant market, imaging, markets

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN1 [down arrow] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

In considering this motion to dismiss, the court must accept the facts pleaded as true and is required to construe them in the light most favorable to Plaintiff. A complaint should be dismissed only if it appears "beyond doubt" that Plaintiff can prove no set of facts to support its claim which will entitle it to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Sherman Act, Scope

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN3 [down arrow] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

Most 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 allegations are examined under the "rule of reason" analysis, which is a case-by-case examination of market factors to determine whether conduct unreasonably restrains trade. Central to the analysis is the "relevant market" -- the product market and the geographic market in which the alleged effect on competition is judged. However, certain naked restraints on trade can be judged under a per se rule of illegality. Under the more limited per se analysis, injury to competition is presumed from the nature of the restraint without first inquiring into the particular relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN4 Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

The per se analysis of a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 anti-trust violation is used sparingly, and only where experience has shown that anti-competitive consequences flow regularly from the challenged practice. Examples of those practices which are per se illegal include certain price-fixing, division or allocation of markets and certain tying arrangements.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN5 Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

Restraints which are ancillary to a legitimate transaction are exempt from the per se rule.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN6 Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Ordinarily under the rule of reason analysis, a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 claimant must adequately describe the relevant product and geographic markets where competition is restrained. However, a violation may be found without a definition of market if the government shows "actual detrimental effects on competition."

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN7 Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

Since the purpose of the inquiries into market definition and market power is to determine whether an arrangement has the potential for genuine adverse effects on competition, proof of actual detrimental effect, such as a reduction of output can obviate the need for an inquiry into market power, which is but a "surrogate for detrimental effects."

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

A Complaint need only allege sufficient facts from which the Court can discern the elements of an injury resulting from an act forbidden by the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN9[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN10[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Acquiescence in conduct with knowledge that it is anticompetitive is sufficient to establish a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 conspiracy. But the court knows of no authority that a § 2 conspiracy may be established without some showing that more than one of the alleged co-conspirators had at least some awareness that the underlying conduct is anticompetitive or monopolistic.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN11[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

It is generally thought that the essence of conspiracy is the mutual understanding of the coconspirators to try to accomplish a common and unlawful plan.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN12[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

Absent direct or circumstantial evidence of a meeting of the minds and a conscious commitment to a common scheme, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 conspiracy claims fail.

Counsel: For UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, plaintiffs: Eugene Crew, Kenneth M. Dintzer, Alexander Verveer, Joan H. Hogan, U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE - ANTITRUST DIVISION, Washington, DC.

For GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, defendant: Randy J. Cox, BOONE, KARLBERG & HADDON, Missoula, MT. W. Gordon Dobie, David S. Eggert, Jonathan I. Gleklen, Richard L. Rosen, ARNOLD & PORTER, Washington, DC. Dan K. Webb, WINSTON & STRAWN, Chicago, IL.

Judges: CHARLES C. LOVELL, United States District Judge

Opinion by: CHARLES C. LOVELL

Opinion

---

ORDER

****

Before the court is Defendant's motion to dismiss both counts of the government's complaint. Attorneys John R. Read and Kenneth M. Dintzer represented the government at oral argument on the motion and attorneys Randy J. Cox and Dan K. Webb represented General Electric (GE). After considering the briefs and oral arguments of the parties, the court is prepared to rule.

Background

The government filed an antitrust complaint alleging that GE has violated the Sherman Act by using illegal, restrictive licensing agreements to prevent [*2] hospitals from competing to service high-tech medical equipment. The complaint for equitable relief contains two counts -- one alleging violation of Section 1 (restraint of trade) of the Sherman Act and the other alleging a violation of Section 2 (conspiracy to monopolize) of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C. § 1, 2.

The government claims that GE has entered into anti-competitive agreements with more than 500 hospitals that are among GE's most significant actual or potential competitors in the servicing of medical imaging equipment. The government alleges that these agreements are contained in licenses which authorize the hospitals to use advanced GE software to service their own GE medical imaging equipment. In exchange for the license, it is alleged that GE has required each hospital to agree not to compete with GE in servicing any other facilities' medical imaging equipment. The complaint states that the hospitals, including St. Patrick's Hospital in Missoula and Deaconess Hospital in Billings, have in-house service departments that would like to service other facilities' imaging equipment, but they cannot do so due to their licensing agreement with GE.

The complaint alleges that when [*3] told that the government was going to file this action, GE amended its licensing agreements to limit competition only in the servicing of the same type (modality<sup>1</sup>) of GE equipment for which GE's advanced diagnostics are licensed.

DISCUSSION

HN1[] In considering this motion to dismiss, the court must accept the facts pleaded as true and is required to construe them in the light most favorable to Plaintiff. Smilecare Dental Group v. Delta Dental Plan, 88 F.3d 780, 782-83 \(9th Cir. 1996\). A complaint should be dismissed only if it appears "beyond doubt" that Plaintiff can prove no set of facts to support its claim which will entitle it to relief. Id. citing Everest & Jennings v. American Motorists Ins. Co., 23 F.3d 226, 228 \(9th Cir. 1994\).

Count I

Count I of the complaint alleges a violation of HN2[] Section 1, which states that [*4] "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade is illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Ordinarily, HN3[] most Section 1 allegations are examined under the "rule of reason" analysis, which is a case-by-case examination of market factors to determine whether conduct unreasonably restrains trade. Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\). Central to the analysis is the "relevant market" -- the product market and the geographic market in which the alleged effect on competition is judged. Thurman Indus., Inc. v. Pay 'N Pak Stores, Inc., 875 F.2d 1369, 1373 (9th Cir. 1989). However, certain naked restraints on trade can be judged under a per se rule of illegality. American Ad Management, Inc. v. GTE Corp., 92 F.3d 781, 784 (9th Cir. 1996). Under the more limited per se analysis, injury to competition is presumed from the nature of the restraint without first inquiring into the particular relevant market. Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984). After some initial confusion between the parties, the government notified the [*5] court at oral argument that it intended to plead a per se theory of liability as well as a "rule of reason" theory in Count I of the complaint.

---

<sup>1</sup> Medical imaging equipment includes different types, or modalities, of equipment such as x-rays, computed tomography, magnetic resonance, ultrasound, and others.

"Per Se" Theory

HN4 [↑] The per se analysis is used sparingly, and only where experience has shown that anti-competitive consequences flow regularly from the challenged practice. See R.C. Dick Geothermal Corp. v. Thermogenics, Inc., 890 F.2d 139, 151 (9th Cir. 1989). Examples of those practices which are per se illegal include certain price-fixing, division or allocation of markets and certain tying arrangements. Hahn v. Oregon Physicians' Serv., 868 F.2d 1022, 1026 (9th Cir. 1988). The government argues that the agreements between GE and the licensee hospitals not to compete in the servicing of other facilities' medical equipment are agreements to allocate customers. In the complaint, the government has adequately pleaded that the hospitals and GE are competitors or are potential competitors in the servicing of other medical facilities' medical imaging equipment and the agreements are agreements to allocate customers, which have been held to be per se illegal. See Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. [*6] 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). In that regard, the government pleaded that GE required the hospitals to agree not to compete with it when they bought the software. Complaint, Par. 5. Further, the government pleaded that the licensing agreements between the hospitals and GE are "horizontal" restraints. Complaint, Par. 3. While it is true that HN5 [↑] restraints which are ancillary to a legitimate transaction are exempt from the per se rule, the government has alleged in the complaint that the agreements not to compete are not ancillary restraints. Complaint, Par. 8 ("the agreements GE has exacted from its licensees not to service other facilities' medical equipment are unrelated to any of GE's legitimate interests in licensing its software and manuals.") Of course, GE may offer evidence to refute the allegation later in this litigation, but for now the allegation is sufficient to withstand the motion to dismiss. Further, contrary to GE's argument, the existence of a vertical aspect to the relationship between the two companies does not foreclose per se treatment of agreements to eliminate competition between them. See Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 112 [*7] L. Ed. 2d 349, 111 S. Ct. 401 (1990). The "dual distribution" cases GE relies upon are not applicable to this issue at hand.

Considering the presumptions afforded the non-moving party on a motion to dismiss, the court finds that the government has sufficiently alleged a per se theory of liability under its Section 1 claim.

Rule of Reason

The government has also pleaded an alternate rule of reason theory of liability in Count I. GE argues that the rule of reason theory should be dismissed without prejudice because the government has failed to properly allege the relevant market. The government argues that it need not define relevant market because it has alleged that GE's agreement with the hospitals has had detrimental effects on competition. Alternatively, the government argues that it has indeed pleaded sufficient facts to satisfy the relevant market analysis.

HN6 [↑] Ordinarily under the rule of reason analysis, a Section 1 claimant must adequately describe the relevant product and geographic markets where competition is restrained. However, a violation may be found without a definition of market if the government shows "actual detrimental effects on competition." *FTC v. [*8] Indiana Federation of Dentists*, 476 U.S. 447, 460, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445, 106 S. Ct. 2009 (1986). There, the court held:

HN7 [↑] since the purpose of the inquiries into market definition and market power is to determine whether an arrangement has the potential for genuine adverse effects on competition, proof of actual detrimental effect, such as a reduction of output can obviate the need for an inquiry into market power, which is but a "surrogate for detrimental effects." 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law, 1511, p. 429 (1986).

Id. at 461. In Oltz v. St. Peter's Community Hosp., 861 F.2d 1440, 1448 (9th Cir. 1988), a Ninth Circuit panel relied on the holding of Indiana Federation in upholding the district court's finding of a Section 1 violation without conducting an extended market analysis. Id. See also Bhan v. NME Hosp., Inc., 929 F.2d 1404 (9th Cir. 1991) ("If the plaintiff can make a showing of anticompetitive effects, a formal market analysis becomes unnecessary"); Les Shockley Racing, Inc. v. National Hot Rod Ass'n., 884 F.2d 504, 508 (9th Cir. 1989) (requiring proof of "injury to competition within a framework of market analysis," where the plaintiffs [*9] did not allege actual detrimental competitive effects.) Here, the government has alleged that GE's agreements with the hospitals have caused actual detrimental effects to competition by causing health care providers to pay higher prices, purchase less service, and have fewer options in various service and equipment markets. Complaint Pars. 40-45. Thus, if the government provides proof of the alleged detrimental effects, the court will not have to engage in a full-blown market analysis, and the allegation of these effects is sufficient at this time. In any event, the court finds that the allegation of the detrimental effects along with the markets the government has identified in the complaint have adequately put GE on notice of its claims. While the government's complaint is not a model of clarity in light of the complexity of this case, it adequately describes the markets where competition is restrained, and GE may begin to defend itself. HN8 [↑] "The Complaint need only allege sufficient facts from which the Court can discern the elements of an injury resulting from an act forbidden by the antitrust laws." Home Box Office, Inc. v. Z. Channel Ltd. Partnership, 502 U.S. 1033, 116 L. Ed. [*10] 2d 780, 112 S. Ct. 875 (1992).

Consequently, accepting the facts as stated in the complaint and drawing all inferences in the government's favor, the court finds that the government has adequately pleaded its alternate theories of liability under Section 1.

Count II

HN9 [↑] Section 2 makes it unlawful to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states...." 15 U.S.C. § 2. The complaint states that "GE has combined with those hospitals with the specific intent of excluding competition...." Complaint, Par. 47. GE argues that the complaint fails to make the required allegation that at least two of the alleged co-conspirators GE and one of its customers possessed specific intent to monopolize. The government argues that Ninth Circuit case law supports its contention that to show a conspiracy to monopolize it need only show that the hospitals agreed to cooperate with GE with some awareness of the anti-competitive effect. Syufy Enterprises v. American Multicinema, Inc., 793 F.2d 990, 1000 (9th Cir. 1986). In Syufy, the panel explained [*11] the difference between the requirements of Section 1 and Section 2 claims:

In United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 68 S. Ct. 915, 92 L. Ed. 1260 (1948), the Supreme Court held that HN10 [↑] acquiescence in conduct with knowledge that it was anticompetitive was sufficient to establish a Section 1 conspiracy. But we know of no authority that a Section 2 conspiracy may be established without some showing that more than one of the alleged co-conspirators had at least some awareness that the underlying conduct was anticompetitive or monopolistic.

Id.

The government seizes upon the second sentence to support its claim that the hospitals' mere knowledge of the anticompetitive result will support a Section 2 conspiracy. However, the court does not read Syufy as expansively as does the government. Although the "awareness" and "understanding" are a prerequisites to meet the specific intent element, the panel in Syufy also found that the Plaintiff in that case failed to demonstrate a "common purpose in monopolizing" among those accused of a Section 2 conspiracy. Syufy at 1000. This is supported by Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 [*12] F.3d 1421, 1437 n.8. (9th Cir. 1995) (to establish a conspiracy to monopolize, "it is not enough to show that the [co-conspirators] merely agreed to go along with [the defendant]"); Belfiore v. New York Times Co., 826 F.2d 177, 183 (2d Cir. 1987) ("even if the Times did possess the requisite intent to achieve a monopoly ... this claim would fail for lack of evidence that the intent was shared by agreement with another party"); SuperTurf, Inc. v. Monsanto Co., 660 F.2d 1275, 1283 (8th Cir. 1981) (affirming JNOV because the plaintiff had failed as a matter of law to establish that "the defendant's alleged coconspirators--i.e. its customers ... shared its specific intent to create a monopoly ...."). Similarly, the court is unpersuaded by the government's argument that its claim is supported by Flintkote Co. v. Lysfjord, 246 F.2d 368 \(9th Cir. 1957\), a case the government discussed at oral argument but not in the briefing of the motion. HN11 It is generally thought that the essence of conspiracy is the mutual understanding of the coconspirators to try to accomplish a common and unlawful plan. The government's argument simply does not square with the bulk of the authorities, \*13 which agree that HN12 "absent direct or circumstantial evidence of a meeting of the minds and a conscious commitment to a common scheme, Section 2 conspiracy claims fail." William C. Holmes, Antitrust Law Handbook, § 205[3] at 430 (1996 ed.) (and cases cited therein). The court concludes from the allegations of the complaint that the government has not met this requisite showing. The court, therefore, finds that the government's Section 2 claim must be dismissed. Accordingly,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that GE's motion to dismiss Count I of the complaint is DENIED, and its motion to dismiss Count II is GRANTED, and that Count II is DISMISSED.

While it seems unlikely that the government can in good faith make such requisite allegation as to the victim-coconspirators, it should not be foreclosed from the attempt at this early stage. Accordingly, it shall have 20 days from date to file an amended complaint should it care to do so.

The clerk is directed forthwith to notify the parties of entry of this order.

Done and dated this 18th day of March, 1997.

CHARLES C. LOVELL

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

Holmes Prods. Corp. v. Dana Lighting

United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts

March 19, 1997, Decided

Civil Action No. 94-40109-NMG

Reporter

958 F. Supp. 27 *; 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3317 **; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,827

Holmes Products Corp., Plaintiff v. Dana Lighting, Inc. and Nathan Katz, Defendants

Disposition: [**1] Defendants' motion to strike testimony of Danny Lavy DENIED as moot; defendants' motion for summary judgment with respect to count for tortious interference with contractual relations DENIED and defendants' motion for summary judgment with respect to counts for violation of federal antitrust law, violation of Civil RICO statute, violation of M.G.L. c. 93A and for unjust enrichment ALLOWED.

Core Terms

---

lamps, defendants', manufacture, competitors, products, tortious interference, contractual relationship, suppliers, summary judgment motion, summary judgment, antitrust, motive, allegations, racketeering activity, unjust enrichment, extortion, foreclosed, Lighting, contends, profits, genuine issue of material fact, market power, vertical, orders, prices, unfair, buyer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Need for Trial

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

The role of summary judgement is to pierce the pleadings and to assess the proof in order to see whether there is a genuine need for trial. The burden is upon the moving party to show, based upon the pleadings, discovery, and affidavits, that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The court must view the entire record in the light most hospitable to the non-moving parties and indulge all reasonable inferences in their favor. If the moving party demonstrates that there is an absence of evidence to support the non-moving party's case, the burden shifts to the non-moving party to establish the existence of a genuine issue of material fact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

To state a valid RICO claim under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\), a plaintiff must allege with respect to each defendant the four elements required by the statute, namely: (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Banking Law > Federal Acts > General Overview

HN3 [down arrow] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

To avert dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), a civil RICO complaint must, at a bare minimum, state facts sufficient to portray (i) specific instances of racketeering activity within the reach of the RICO statute and (ii) a causal nexus between that activity and the harm alleged.

Banking Law > ... > Criminal Offenses > Money Laundering > Bank Secrecy Act

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > Penalties

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Gaming & Lotteries

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Public Officials > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Securities Fraud > Penalties

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Miscellaneous Offenses > Gambling > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Money Laundering, Bank Secrecy Act

Racketeering activities are defined in the RICO statute as: (A) any act or threat involving murder, kidnapping, gambling, arson, robbery, bribery, extortion, dealing in obscene matter, or dealing in narcotic or other dangerous drugs, which is chargeable under State law and punishable by imprisonment for more than one year; (B) any act which is indictable under various specific provisions of title 18 of the U.S. Code, (C) any act which is indictable under either of two sections of title 29, U.S. Code relating to labor unions, (D) any offense involving fraud connected with a case under title 11 bankruptcy, fraud in the sales of securities, or certain listed narcotics law violations, or (E) any act which is indictable under the Currency and Foreign Transactions Reporting Act. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961\(1\).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Extortion > General Overview

HN5 Racketeering, Extortion

The four elements of extortion are: (1) a malicious threat (2) made to a named person (3) of personal injury to some one (4) with intent to extort money.

Counsel: For HOLMES PRODUCTS CORP, Holmes Products Corporation, Plaintiff: Dustin F. Hecker, Posternak, Blankstein & Lund, Boston, MA. Sibley P. Reppert, Samuels, Gauthier, Stevens & Reppert, Boston, MA.

For DANA LIGHTING, INC., Defendant: Bruce R. Parker, Michael B. Keating, Foley, Hoag & Eliot, Boston, MA. Janet P. Ailstock, Catalina Lighting, Miami, FL. For NATHAN KATZ, Defendant: Bruce R. Parker, (See above), Michael B. Keating, (See above).

Judges: Nathaniel M. Gorton, United States District Judge

Opinion by: Nathaniel M. Gorton

Opinion

---

[*29] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

Gorton, J.

The above entitled action was filed on July 21, 1994, by the plaintiff, Holmes Products Corp. ("Holmes") against defendants Dana Lighting, Inc. ("Dana") and Nathan Katz ("Katz") (collectively, "the defendants"). The Complaint [\[\*2\]](#) alleges tortious interference by the defendants with the contractual relationship between plaintiff and Go-Gro Industries, Ltd. ("Go-Gro"), a Hong Kong company which, prior to the alleged tortious interference of defendants, agreed to manufacture four models of lamps for Holmes. The plaintiff seeks restitution damages (Count VI) resulting from the alleged tortious interference of the defendants (Counts I and II) which conduct plaintiff further contends constitutes:

1. an unfair and deceptive act or practice in violation of M.G.L. c. 93A (Count III);
2. a violation of the Civil RICO statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq (Count IV); and
3. a violation of the federal **antitrust law**, 15 U.S.C. § 1 "the Sherman Act" (Count V).

Plaintiff invokes this Court's jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331.

Pending before this court are a) defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings or, in the alternative, for partial summary judgment filed August 29, 1995, and b) defendants' motion to strike the testimony of Danny Lavy filed August 2, 1996.

I. Background

A. The Parties

Holmes is a Massachusetts corporation with a principal place of business in Milford, [**3] Massachusetts which designs, manufactures and sells a wide variety of consumer items, such as air purifiers and lamps, predominantly to large retail outlets. Dana, a division of Catalina Lighting, Inc., is a Delaware corporation with a principal place of business in West Bridgewater, Massachusetts. Dana is a major supplier of lighting products and a direct competitor of Holmes in the lighting [*30] business. Nathan Katz is the President of Dana.

Holmes established its "Lighting by Holmes" Division in 1992 for the purpose of developing and selling a full line of lamps. From July, 1992, until February, 1993, Holmes contracted with Go-Gro for the delivery of a number of specially designed lamps. Go-Gro also manufactured lighting products for Dana.<sup>1</sup>

B. The Products at Issue

The Dana and Holmes products at issue in this case are referred to in the industry as "functional", "commodity" or "low [**4] end" lamps. They are competitively priced and relatively inexpensive. In 1993, Go-Gro sold such lamps to distributors, including Dana, at prices ranging from $ 3 to $ 10 per lamp for resale to large mass merchants and discount retailers which in turn sold them to consumers for prices ranging from $ 10 to $ 30.

C. Dana's Alleged Interference With the Holmes-Go-Gro Relationship

Holmes' claim for tortious interference depends heavily upon a letter dated February 12, 1993, from Richard Lau, president of Go-Gro, to Holmes. Go-Gro was the principal supplier of critical components of the new "low end" line of lamps that Holmes was then introducing to customers. Lau's letter stated, in relevant part:

We have just finished all the positive films yesterday so that printer now could proceed to make the printing mechanicals for your color boxes.

Unfortunately, I received a phone call from the President of Dana - Mr. Nathan Katz who warned me that if Go-Gro dared to ship one piece of lamp to Holmes, Dana would then cancel all the orders placed with Go-Gro.

Dana is our biggest customer and we do rely on their orders. We are extremely sorry that we cannot accept any of your planned orders.

[**5] As a result of that letter, Holmes secured an alternative source to manufacture its new line of "low end" lamps, but asserts that the new manufacturer was no substitute for Go-Gro. Holmes contends that Go-Gro's cancellation, which it attributes to Dana's threat to withdraw its business, caused a measurable delay in the marketing of its new line of lamps and a substantial reduction in the quality of product that it eventually received from the manufacturer.

D. Dana's Alleged Attempts to Interfere With Orders of Other Competitors

In 1990, Dynasty Classics, Ltd. ("Dynasty") was also a competitor of Dana and bought lamps and other products from manufacturers in the Far East, including Go-Gro. David Lo worked for Dynasty and his contact at Go-Gro was Richard Lau. He negotiated with Mr. Lau about the manufacture of a particular lamp model which was never produced. After Mr. Lo left Dynasty in 1991, he went to work for another competitor, Spartus, and again met with Mr. Lau on behalf of Spartus. Lo contends in his affidavit that Lau apologized to him about Go-Gro's prior refusal to fill Dynasty's order and told him the reason was Dana's insistence that Go-Gro not do business with Dynasty.

[**6] Dana and its parent, Catalina, have been pursuing separate legal action against a Mr. Danny Lavy and his employer, Elite Classics, Inc. ("Elite"), which also competes with Dana. Until the end of 1993, Lavy had been the President of a Dana affiliate in Canada. In early 1994, Lavy spoke, met and corresponded with Mr. Lau about the possible purchases by Elite of products to be produced by Go-Gro. According to the deposition testimony of Lavy, despite Lavy's persistent efforts, Go-Gro never produced the lamps that it agreed to produce and Lau made it clear to him that the source of the problem was Dana and Dana's parent, Catalina. Moreover, Lavy asserts, his negotiations with another Far East manufacturer, Handing Co. Ltd. ("Handing") were stalled when he was told by Handing that Catalina and/or [*31] Dana had put pressure on it not to do business with Lavy or Elite. Lavy's deposition testimony is the subject of defendant's motion to strike discussed infra.

II. Discussion

---

<sup>1</sup> In 1993 Go-Gro's annual sales throughout the world were $ 37,200,000 of which Dana accounted for $ 8,300,000 or 22.3%.

A. Motion For Summary Judgment

1. Standard of Review

HN1[] The role of summary judgement is "to pierce the pleadings and to assess the proof in order to see whether there is a genuine need for trial." [**7] Mesnick v. General Elec. Co., 950 F.2d 816, 822 \(1st Cir.1991\), cert. denied, 504 U.S. 985, 119 L. Ed. 2d 586, 112 S. Ct. 2965 (1992) (quoting Garside v. Osco Drug, Inc., 895 F.2d 46, 50 \(1st Cir.1990\)). The burden is upon the moving party to show, based upon the pleadings, discovery, and affidavits, "that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed.R.Civ.P. 56\(c\). The Court must view the entire record in the light most hospitable to the non-moving parties and indulge all reasonable inferences in their favor. O'Connor v. Steeves, 994 F.2d 905, 907 \(1st Cir.1993\).

If the moving party demonstrates that there is "an absence of evidence to support the non-moving party's case," the burden shifts to the non-moving party to establish the existence of a genuine issue of material fact. FDIC v. Municipality of Ponce, 904 F.2d 740, 742 \(1st Cir.1990\) (quoting Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 325, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 \(1986\)).

2. Contractual Interference Claims

To prevail on a claim for tortious interference with contractual relations, Holmes [**8] must prove that it had a contract with Go-Gro, that Dana and/or Katz knowingly induced Go-Gro to breach that contract, that defendants' interference, in addition to being intentional, was improper in motive or means, and that Holmes was harmed by defendants' action. United Truck Leasing Corp. v. Geltman, 406 Mass. 811, 812, 551 N.E.2d 20 \(1990\).

Defendants assert that even if the alleged interference did take place, their motive and means were entirely proper. They argue that their letter threat of withdrawing business from Go-Gro was entirely proper and was not made to keep Holmes out of the lamp market for as long as possible. They contend that such a motive makes no economic sense because preventing Holmes (a subsidiary of a multinational giant) from dealing with Go-Gro would have had no significant impact on its entry into the highly competitive "commodity" lamp market. Holmes could have engaged any number of other suppliers or could have built its own factory (which apparently it has subsequently done).

Defendants argue that if Katz said what Lau says he said, Katz' only possible motivation would have been to keep Holmes from dealing with one of Dana's principal suppliers, [**9] a supplier with access to Dana's plans, tooling, color boxes etc. Such motivation, defendants conclude, is perfectly permissible and commonplace.

Holmes responds that 1) defendants knew of the existence of its contract with Go-Gro 2) Dana's letter to Go-Gro is sufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact on the interference issue and 3) a jury could reasonably infer from the letter alone that Katz and Dana knew enough of Holmes' relationship with Go-Gro to satisfy the elements of a claim for interference.<sup>2</sup> With respect to defendants' protection of economic self interest claim, Holmes argues that advancing one's economic self-interest, while broadly permitted, clearly is not unlimited by the law. It contends that the defendants were motivated to harm Holmes and for no other legitimate purpose. It cites United Truck Leasing Corp. v. Geltman, 406 Mass. 811, 817, 551 N.E.2d 20 \(1990\) and Schwanbeck v. Federal-Mogul Corp., 31 Mass. App. Ct. 390, 413, 578 N.E.2d 789 \(1991\), for the proposition that a motive to harm or a desire to hurt qualifies as an improper motive.

[**10] [*32] To succeed on its claim, Holmes needs only to show an improper motive or improper means. Draghetti v. Chmielewski, 416 Mass. 808, 816 n. 11, 626 N.E.2d 862. While "competing for the prize" is within the realm of permissible interference, the use of "leverage" to create a breach is not. Schwanbeck, 31 Mass. App. Ct. at 413. Relying on Schwanbeck therefore, plaintiff alleges that Dana used its leverage as the single largest customer of Go-Gro to interfere with the Holmes/Go-Gro contract.

<sup>2</sup> Defendants' do not dispute, at least for the purposes of this motion, that a contract existed between Holmes and Go-Gro to supply lamps.

Holmes has also made a claim against defendants for interference with prospective economic relations. The same knowledge and improper means that are required to prove a claim for interference with an existing contract are also required to prove a claim for interference with a prospective or advantageous business relationship. Dulgarian v. Stone, 420 Mass. 843, 851 n.8, 652 N.E.2d 603 \(1995\); Draghetti v. Chmielewski, 416 Mass. at 819 n.14, 626 N.E.2d 862 \(1994\); United Truck Leasing Corp. v. Geltman, 406 Mass. 811, 816, 551 N.E.2d 20 \(1990\); American Private Line Services, Inc. v. Eastern Microwave, Inc., 980 F.2d 33, 36 \(1st Cir. 1992\).

This Court concludes [**11] that there is enough evidence of 1) both defendants' knowledge of a contractual relationship and an advantageous business relationship between Holmes and Go-Gro and 2) improper means and motive of defendants' alleged interference to raise a genuine issue of material fact. Defendants' summary judgement motion with respect to plaintiff's claim of tortious interference with contractual relations and interference with prospective economic relations will, therefore, be denied.

3. Antitrust Claim

Dana and Katz argue that plaintiff's allegations, even if true, do not constitute a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act as a matter of law. To constitute such a violation, defendants assert, plaintiff must demonstrate both that Dana had market power and that Dana's actions to secure exclusive dealing arrangements, in effect, foreclosed available supply or outlet capacity such that existing competitors or new entrants were excluded. U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Healthsource, Inc., 986 F.2d 589, 596 \(1st Cir. 1993\).

At the outset, this Court works from the premise that antitrust law protects "competition, not competitors," [Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, \[\*\*12\] 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\)](#) and that "it is only when the market is being distorted by anticompetitive conduct that the antitrust laws should be invoked." Seagood Trading Corp. v. Jerrico, Inc., 924 F.2d 1555, 1573 \(11th Cir. 1991\). Defendants contend that Holmes has not alleged, and cannot allege, given the nature of the products and markets at issue, facts that would suggest that their actions had any impact upon competition. Moreover, they assert, Holmes has not offered, and cannot offer, any evidence that their conduct caused it to be foreclosed from the market or resulted in higher prices to consumers.

Holmes claims that defendants procured agreements, or sought to procure agreements, from certain suppliers of lamps not to supply lamps to defendants' competitors. Even assuming such is the case, as is appropriate in consideration of this summary judgment motion, such a vertical restraint would, absent market power on defendant's part, be perfectly legal. [Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 54-55, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\); Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 333-34, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580, \[\*\*13\] 81 S. Ct. 623 \(1961\).](#) Courts have consistently held that vertical, non-price restraints are not per se illegal, but instead are subject to the rule of reason. Continental T.V., 433 U.S. at 57-59; Seagood Trading Corp. v. Jerrico, Inc., 924 F.2d 1555, 1569 \(11th Cir. 1991\).

To survive summary judgment in an exclusive dealing arrangement, Holmes must, therefore, present facts from which a jury could find sufficient market power to effect foreclosure of available supply or outlet capacity such that existing competitors or new entrants may be excluded. U.S. Healthcare, Inc., 986 F.2d at 595-97. Defendants argue that in order for plaintiff to prevail, it must [**33] make "a compelling showing of [market] foreclosure of substantial dimensions" Id. at 596. They then explain that neither Dana nor any other player in the "low-end" lamp market has the market power necessary to have an impact on the market by virtue of an exclusive dealing agreement or any other vertical restraint.

The products at issue in this case are inexpensive lamps that generally retail for between $ 10 and $ 30 and are sold at high volume retailers like Walmart. This is a market, defendants contend, [**14] with low brand recognition, simple technology, hundreds of existing manufacturers, no dominant players and low capital requirements. The products are extremely price-sensitive and there are no competitive barriers to entry. Dana asserts that if it (controlling, as it does, less than 10% of the particular market) attempted to raise prices by restricting output, the buyers of such lamps, who already purchase from Dana's competitors, would simply buy more lamps from other distributors or, like K-mart, would buy directly from one of the numerous Asian suppliers.

The Court agrees that Holmes has not set forth facts which support a claim that Dana either had market power or that Holmes was foreclosed from entering the market for "commodity" lamps at issue. Moreover, The plaintiff has not presented a theory as to how Dana's alleged "pressure" on suppliers has had an adverse impact on the competition in the lamp market and with respect to allegations of illegal vertical restraints, theorizing is not enough. Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 29, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\) (upholding an exclusive dealing contract because the plaintiff had neither [**15] properly defined the relevant product market nor proven that the contract actually restrained competition.)

Holmes urges this Court to adopt the "quick look" rule of reason analysis which applies to cases where "per se condemnation is inappropriate, but where 'no elaborate industry analysis is required to demonstrate [the] anti-competitive character' of an inherently suspect restraint." U.S. v. Brown University, 5 F.3d 658, 669 \(3rd Cir. 1993\) quoting NCAA v. Board of Regents of the U. of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 109, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 \(1984\). By imploring the application of the "quick look" doctrine, the plaintiff asks this Court to presume competitive harm and to place the burden on the defendants to come forward with a competitive justification for the restraint. The Court declines to do so because plaintiff has failed to allege any impact on competition (as opposed to an individual competitor) and the "quick look" rule of reason analysis is therefore inappropriate.

The Court concludes that there is no violation of the Sherman Act as a matter of law because an exclusive dealing contract (the nature of the alleged violation here) does not constitute an antitrust violation unless the [**16] competition which is foreclosed constitutes a substantial share of the relevant market. Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. at 327. Confronted with defendants' summary judgment motion, Holmes must present credible evidence from which a logical fact finder could conclude that Dana's acts had an anticompetitive impact. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249-50, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\). The plaintiff has not met its burden and summary judgment will, therefore, be entered for defendants on Holmes' antitrust claim.

4. RICO Claim

HN2 To state a valid RICO claim under 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\), a plaintiff must allege with respect to each defendant the four elements required by the statute, namely: (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity. Feinstein v. Resolution Trust Corp., 942 F.2d 34, 41 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 483 U.S. 1021 (1987), quoting Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 \(1985\). The defendants assert that Holmes has failed to allege sufficiently any of the required elements. Because a failure to allege any one of [**17] the four elements of a RICO claim renders it defective, this Court focuses on what is, in its opinion, the strongest of defendants' arguments made in its motion for summary judgment.

[*34] Defendants assert that Holmes has not identified two or more predicate acts as is required of a RICO plaintiff. Only "racketeering activities" as enumerated by statute constitute predicate acts under RICO. Miranda v. Ponce Federal Bank, 948 F.2d 41, 44 \(1st Cir. 1991\) ("to HN3 avert dismissal under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), a civil RICO complaint must, at a bare minimum, state facts sufficient to portray (i) specific instances of racketeering activity within the reach of the RICO statute and (ii) a causal nexus between that activity and the harm alleged.") HN4 Racketeering activities are defined in the RICO statute as:

(A) any act or threat involving murder, kidnapping, gambling, arson, robbery, bribery, extortion, dealing in obscene matter, or dealing in narcotic or other dangerous drugs, which is chargeable under State law and punishable by imprisonment for more than one year;

(B) any act which is indictable under [various specific provisions] of title 18, U.S. Code, [none of which has been alleged [**18] nor could apply here],

(C) any act which is indictable under [either of two sections of] title 29, U.S. Code [relating to labor unions],

(D) any offense involving fraud connected with a case under title 11 [bankruptcy], fraud in the sales of securities, or [certain listed narcotics law violations], or

(E) any act which is indictable under the Currency and Foreign Transactions Reporting Act.

18 U.S.C. § 1961(1).

Defendants contend that Holmes has failed to identify any such "racketeering activity" in its Amended Complaint.

In their Interrogatory No. 3, defendants requested that plaintiff:

Describe in full detail the 'racketeering activity" referred to in paragraph 45 of the Amended Complaint and identify the criminal acts referred to in 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1) that Dana and/or Katz allegedly committed.

After objecting to the interrogatory as "overbroad and unduly burdensome", Holmes responded that the allegations include acts or threats involving extortion chargeable under state law and punishable by imprisonment for more than one year pursuant to M.G.L. c. 271 § 39.

The defendants argue that the acts alleged by Holmes [**19] could not, as a matter of law, constitute a violation of M.G.L. c. 271, § 39. They point out that subsection (a) of that statute criminalizes commercial bribery, which clearly has no application in this case, and subsection (b) is cited in only one case in the context of threats of economic injury. Commonwealth v. Schafer, 32 Mass. App. Ct. 682, 594 N.E.2d 875 (1992). In Schafer, the defendant (an attorney) and two banks held mortgages on property that Schafer had sold. The Buyer informed Schafer that, because of financial difficulties (i.e. money owed to the IRS), the buyer needed to refinance the loans. Schafer offered to help get a bank loan but shortly thereafter informed the buyer that a loan could be arranged for an additional $ 9,000 in "points" to be paid to "somebody" outside the bank.

In upholding a conviction under M.G.L. c. 39, the Massachusetts Appeals Court described the HN5 four elements of extortion: "(1) a malicious threat (2) made to a named person (3) of personal injury to some one (4) with intent to extort money." The court further stated that:

the significant difference between [the traditional extortion statute, § 25 of Chapter 265, and subsection [**20] 39(b) of Chapter 271] is the object of the threatened harm, § 25 aimed at personal injury and § 39(b) directed to economic injury, which may or may not include property in which the victim has an ownership or possessory interest.

Id. at 689.

Defendants distinguish Schafer and the case at bar with the relevant argument that in contrast to the buyer in Schafer, who had a legal right to obtain a loan without paying bribes to third parties, the vendors who manufacture lamps (such as Go-Gro) have no legal right to Dana's business. At most, Holmes has alleged that Dana threatened to refuse to buy goods from a vendor who offered to sell goods to a competitor. As discussed above, agreements by suppliers [**35] not to sell to a purchaser's competitors which do not foreclose competition in a substantial portion of the relevant market, are legal vertical restraints.

Holmes responds to defendants' arguments by contending that it has alleged facts sufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact on the RICO claim, but, in the process, relies upon a vague assertion that defendants' alleged warnings to manufacturers, such as Go-Gro, constitute extortion. The only allegation [**21] remotely within the realm of extortion is the warning by Katz "that if Go-Gro dared to ship one piece of lamp to Holmes, Dana would then cancel all the orders placed with Go-Gro," but that statement is actionable, if at all, under the claim for tortious interference with contractual relations. Such conduct is not the kind of activity proscribed by Congress in the RICO statute and Holmes has not, therefore, alleged the required predicate acts.

Defendants have also argued persuasively that Holmes has failed to demonstrate any of the other three elements required under the RICO statute, but analysis of those arguments is unnecessary because summary judgment for defendants is appropriate on the aforementioned ground, i.e. failure to allege required predicate acts of "racketeering activity". This Court concludes that there is no genuine issue of material fact with respect to plaintiff's RICO claim, and summary judgment on that claim will, therefore, be entered for the defendants.

5. Consumer Protection Act (M.G.L. c. 93A) Claim

Defendants argue that Holmes' 93A claim should be dismissed because it lacks any independent basis and, upon dismissal of the other claims, the 93A claim [**22] should expire accordingly. Defendants cite PMP Associates, Inc., v. Globe Newspaper Co., 366 Mass. 593, 599, 321 N.E.2d 915 (1975) for the proposition that a refusal to deal, without a showing of monopolistic purpose or concerted effort to hinder free trade, is not an unfair trade practice under G.L. c.93A, and is therefore not actionable.

Holmes attempts to distinguish PMP Associates but then cites it in support of the proposition that a Chapter 93A claim can stand on its own. Acknowledging the stated proposition, plaintiff argues that PMP Associates did not involve interference with the plaintiff's contract with a third party, but rather a straightforward refusal by the defendant to do business with the plaintiff. It suggests that PMP would be analogous to our case only if Go-Gro had sued Dana for refusing to do business with Go-Gro.

Plaintiff contends, moreover, that even if summary judgment were granted on all of Holmes' other claims, it would not be foreclosed from pursuing its claim under Chapter 93A, citing Schwanbeck v. Federal-Mogul Corp., 31 Mass. App. Ct. 390, 578 N.E.2d 789 (1991). In Schwanbeck, after entering judgment for defendants [**23] notwithstanding the verdict on a contractual interference claim, the Massachusetts Appeals Court upheld judgment for plaintiff on the Chapter 93A claim:

Although we have concluded that Schwanbeck's common law claims are not soundly based, G.L. c. 93A, § 11 affords businessmen certain remedies that elude conventional definitions and categories.

13 Mass. App. Ct. 408 at 413 (quoting Doliner v. Brown, 21 Mass. App. Ct. 692 at 697, 489 N.E.2d 1036). See also, M. Gilleran, The Law of Chapter 93A, p. 149 (1989) (Chapter 93A violation may be shown by "unfair business torts including ... interference with contractual relations and malicious but otherwise lawful conduct").

Notwithstanding the general rule that a Chapter 93A violation can stand on its own and despite this Court's denial of defendants' motion for summary judgment on the counts for tortious interference, this Court concludes that Holmes has not alleged facts sufficient to sustain a claim under M.G.L. c. 93A. In Quaker State Oil Refining Corp. v. Garrity Oil Co. Inc., 884 F.2d 1510, 1513 (1st Cir.1989), the First Circuit Court of Appeals confirmed the "rascality standard" required to sustain such a claim. It held [**24] that "the objectionable conduct must attain a level of rascality that would raise an eyebrow of someone inured to the rough and tumble world of commerce." (citing *Levings [*361] v. Forbes & Wallace, Inc.*, 8 Mass. App. Ct. 498, 396 N.E.2d 149 (1979)). Here, even if Holmes were to succeed on its claim for tortious interference with contractual relations, there is no evidence (nor even allegations) that defendants have committed acts so unfair or deceptive as to warrant recovery under Chapter 93A.

This Court concludes that a reasonable jury could not find that the actions of the defendants were so unfair or deceptive as to rise to the level of rascality required to support a claim for violation of the Consumer Protection Act. Defendants' statements to Go-Gro, even if proved at trial, can not be found to "raise the eyebrows" of an experienced supplier of household fixtures, "inured to the rough and tumble of the world of commerce." See Ahern v. Scholz, 85 F.3d 774, 799 (1st Cir.1996)(overruling district court's award under Chapter 93A based upon a manager's "commercially unreasonable" deductions because, despite manager's knowing breach of contract, there was insufficient rascality [**25] to rise to the level of a violation of Chapter 93A.) Defendants' motion for summary judgment on the Chapter 93A will, therefore, be allowed.

6. Unjust Enrichment Claim

Defendants argue that the remedy of unjust enrichment is not available to a party with an adequate remedy at law. Ben Elfman & Son, Inc., v. Criterion Mills, Inc., 774 F. Supp. 683, 687 (D.Mass.1991). They also assert that the relief sought by plaintiff is both unprecedeted and illogical because the conventional measure of damages in interference claims is the plaintiff's lost profits. Defendants point out that in only one reported case involving a claim for interference with contractual relations were unjust enrichment damages awarded, National Merchandising Corp. v. Leyden, 370 Mass. 425, 348 N.E.2d 771 (1976). In that case defendant hired former employees of plaintiff to supervise and manage its telephone directory cover business in willful violation of noncompete agreements and a consent decree for which the court awarded plaintiff 10% of the defendant's gross sales made by persons under the consent decree stressing that such sales were all "tainted".

Even assuming arguendo that Holmes [**26] has no remedy at law, to obtain "unjust enrichment" damages from Dana based upon its profits for lamp sales, Holmes would have to establish that those profits resulted from the alleged interference as was the case in National Merchandising. Here Holmes cannot establish such a causal nexus. As the holding of National Merchandising suggests, in the "interference with contract" context, disgorgement has been awarded only with respect to profits that the defendant would not have earned but for the interference.

Although damages for unjust enrichment may be available in a case such as National Merchandising, they are not available here. If it were to prevail at trial on its claim of tortious interference with contractual relations, Holmes would have an adequate remedy at law, i.e. a claim for lost profits. Moreover, even if there were no such legal remedy available to plaintiff, it would be unable to establish that Dana's profits on the sale of commodity lamps (something Dana had done successfully for ten years before Holmes entered the market) resulted from the interference. Summary judgment will therefore be entered for defendants on plaintiff's claim for unjust enrichment.

[**27] B. Defendants' Motion to Strike Testimony of Danny Lavy

Danny Lavy's testimony, submitted by Holmes in the form of Lavy's affidavit, dated November 6, 1995, and his deposition, taken on June 14, 1996, provides, in large part, the basis for Holmes' RICO and antitrust claims against defendants. Defendants allege that Lavy is the sole source of the allegations set forth in paragraphs 22 and 24 of Plaintiff's Amended Complaint, that "Dana and Katz had warned and threatened Lau and Go-Gro not to sell Go-Gro's products to Elite Classics [Lavy's company]" and that "Dana ... and Katz, exerted great pressure on Handing Co., Ltd. [another Asian manufacturer] not to sell its products to Elite." Defendants move to strike Lavy's testimony not only because he has no first-hand knowledge of any acts done by the defendants that pertain [*37] to those allegations but also because Lavy's testimony is hearsay.

While acknowledging that Lavy's testimony may be suspect, this Court declines to rule on its admissibility. Even if Lavy's hearsay testimony regarding statements made by the defendants to third parties were admissible and fully considered by this Court, Holmes has failed to meet its burden [**28] with respect to its antitrust and RICO claims to survive defendant's summary judgment motion and defendants' motion to strike will, therefore, be denied as moot.

ORDER

For the foregoing reasons,

1. defendants' motion to strike the testimony of Danny Lavy is DENIED as moot;
2. defendants' motion for summary judgment with respect to the count for tortious interference with contractual relations is DENIED; and
3. defendants' motion for summary judgment with respect to the counts for violation of the federal antitrust law, violation of the Civil RICO statute, violation of M.G.L. c. 93A and for unjust enrichment is ALLOWED.

So ordered.

Nathaniel M. Gorton

United States District Judge

Date: March 19, 1997

---

End of Document

In re Independent Serv. Orgs. Antitrust Litiq.

United States District Court for the District of Kansas

March 19, 1997, Decided ; March 19, 1997, FILED

CIVIL ACTION No. MDL-1021

Reporter

964 F. Supp. 1454 *; 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6671 **

IN RE: INDEPENDENT SERVICE ORGANIZATIONS ANTITRUST LITIGATION; This Document Applies To: CSU Holdings, Inc., et al. v. Xerox Corp. (D. Kan. No. 94-2102-EEO)

Disposition: [**1] Defendant's motion for summary judgment on its willful patent infringement counterclaims (Doc. # 362) denied. Defendant's motion for summary judgment on plaintiffs' antitrust claims (Doc. # 410) denied.

Core Terms

---

patent, summary judgment, infringement, misuse, competitors, markets, patent misuse, counterclaims, monopoly, license, prices, geographic, copier, printer, antitrust, patent infringement, anti trust law, patent holder, products, contends, immunity, antitrust liability, sufficient evidence, settlement, customers, invention, domestic, rights, antitrust violation, antitrust claim

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1[] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Summary judgment is appropriate if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). A factual dispute is material only if it might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

964 F. Supp. 1454, *1454L 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6671, **1

Evidence > Weight & Sufficiency

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN2 [blue downward arrow] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

The moving party in a summary judgment motion bears the initial burden of showing that there is an absence of any genuine issue of material fact. The inquiry as to whether an issue is genuine is whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to the jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law. An issue of fact is genuine if the evidence is sufficient for a reasonable jury to return a verdict for the nonmoving party. This inquiry necessarily implicates the substantive evidentiary standard of proof that would apply at trial. Once the moving party meets its burden, the burden shifts to the nonmoving party to demonstrate that genuine issues remain for trial as to those dispositive matters for which it carries the burden of proof. The nonmoving party may not rest on his pleadings but must set forth specific facts.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN3 [blue downward arrow] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

The court must view the record in the light most favorable to the parties opposing the motion for summary judgment. In a response to a motion for summary judgment, a party cannot rely on ignorance of facts, on speculation, or on suspicion, and may not escape summary judgment in the mere hope that something will turn up at trial. The mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment. Where the nonmoving party fails to properly respond to the motion for summary judgment, the facts as set forth by the moving party are deemed admitted for purposes of the summary judgment motion.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > Manufacture, Sale & Use

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Burdens of Proof

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

**HN4** [blue downward arrow] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

To prevail on a defense of patent misuse, an alleged infringer must establish that the patent holder has used its patent to secure an exclusive right or limited monopoly beyond the scope of the patent in contravention of public policy. A patent holder's conduct may constitute patent misuse without rising to the level of an antitrust violation. An antitrust violation generally will establish misuse.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

**HN5** [blue downward arrow] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Licenses

A patent holder can refuse to license a patented product without being guilty of patent misuse. 35 U.S.C.S. § 271\(d\)\(4\). Although the patent statute does not specify any exceptions to this general rule, courts traditionally have recognized that patent holders cannot use their patent to justify anticompetitive conduct beyond the limit or scope of the patent grant.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

**HN6** [blue downward arrow] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

The right to refuse to sell a patented invention is not absolute even within the market of the patented work.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

**HN7** [blue downward arrow] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

Power gained through some natural and legal advantage such as a patent, copyright, or business acumen can give rise to antitrust liability if a seller exploits his dominant position in one market to expand his empire into the next market.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

**HN8** [blue downward arrow] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

964 F. Supp. 1454, *1454L 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6671, **1

Antitrust liability may arise when a patent or copyright holder uses its rights to expand its reach into other markets not within the scope of the patent or copyright.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

HN9 [blue icon] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

No patent owner shall be deemed guilty of misuse by reason of having refused to license or use any rights to the patent. 35 U.S.C.S. § 271\(d\)\(4\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Bad Faith

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

HN10 [blue icon] Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse, Bad Faith

A finding of misuse is precluded only if the patent infringement suit is brought in good faith.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A natural monopolist that acquired and maintained its monopoly without excluding competitors by improper means is not guilty of monopolizing in violation of the Sherman Act, and can therefore charge any price it wants.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

To establish damages for lost profits from other geographic markets, the alleged injured must establish that it both intended to and was prepared to expand its business. The "intent and preparedness" test was designed to permit excluded competitors to challenge their exclusion from a market without being first required needlessly to incur economic harm. Four factors should be considered in determining plaintiff's intention and preparedness to enter a new market: (1) plaintiff's background and experience in the proposed business, (2) affirmative action on plaintiff's part to engage in the proposed business, (3) ability to finance the business and purchase the necessary equipment and facilities, and (4) consummation of contracts. The court must determine whether standing (or injury-in-fact) is analyzed with respect to each geographic market or with respect to all geographic markets combined.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] Private Actions, Remedies

Before and after evidence of receipts and profits is a sufficient basis for a jury's computation of damages, particularly where the defendant's wrongful action prevented any more precise proof of damages.

Counsel: For CSU HOLDINGS INC, Case Number: 94-2102-EEO - USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: Eric D. Braverman, Employers Reinsurance Corporation, Overland Park, KS. P. John Owen, Lori R. Schultz, Morrison & Hecker, Kansas City, MO. Michael C. Manning, Morrison & Hecker, Phoenix, AZ. For COPIER SERVICES UNLIMITED, INC., Case Number: 94-2102-EEO - USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: Eric D. Braverman, (See above). P. John Owen, (See above), Lori R. Schultz, (See above). Michael C. Manning, (See above). For COPIER SERVICE UNLIMITED OF ST. LOUIS, INC., Case Number: 94-2102-EEO - USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: Eric D. Braverman, (See above). P. John Owen, (See above), Lori R. Schultz, (See above). Michael C. Manning, (See above). For ACQUISITION SPECIALISTS, INC, Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California - USDC for the District of Kansas 94-2502, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, San Francisco, CA. Maxwell M Blecher. For TECSPEC, INC, a Texas [**2] Corporation, Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas dba Atek, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For CONSOLIDATED PHOTO COPY, INC., a Virginia corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - UDDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For COPIER REBUILD CENTER, INC., a Maryland corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For CPO LTD, a California corporation. Case Number 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District Court of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For GRADWELL COMPANY, INC., an Alabama corporation. Case Number 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District Court of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For GRAPHIC CORPORATION OF ALABAMA, an Alabama corporation. Case Number 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District [**3] of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS EQUIPMENT, INC, a California corporation. Case Number 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District Court of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For LASER RESOURCES INC, an Iowa corporation, Case Number 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District Court of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For LASER RESOURCES OF MINNESOTA, INC., a Minnesota corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For LASER SOLUTIONS, INC, a California corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For LASER SUPPORT AND ENGINEERING, INC., a California corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the [**4] District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For MARATHON COPIER SERVICE, INC., a California corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For NATIONWIDE TECHNOLOGIES, INC., a Illinois corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For REPROGRAPHICS RESOURCES SYSTEMS, INC, an Iowa corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For RESOURCES SYSTEMS, INC, an Iowa corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). For SUNTONE INDUSTRIES, INC, a Florida corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. [**5] For TECHNICAL DUPLICATION SERVICES, INC, a California corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For X-TECH SYSTEMS INC, a California corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For XER-DOX INC., a California corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For XEROGRAPHIC COPIES SERVICES, INC., a Texas corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher.

For XEROX CORPORATION, Case Number: 94-2102-EEO - USDC for the District of Kansas and Case Number: 94-1285 USDC for the Northern District of California, defendant: Peter K Bleakley, Arnold & Porter, Washington, DC. Peter W Marshall, Xerox Corporation, Stamford, CT. Michael G. Norris, Norris, [**6] Keplinger & Logan, L.L.C., Overland Park, KS. C Larry O'Rourke, E Robert Yoches, Vincent P Kovalick, Leslie I Bookoff, Finnegan, Henderson, Farabow, Garrett & Dunner, Washington, DC.

For XEROX CORPORATION, counter-claimant: Peter K Bleakley, Arnold & Porter, Washington, DC. Peter W Marshall, Xerox Corporation, Stamford, CT. Michael G. Norris, Norris, Keplinger & Logan, L.L.C., Overland Park, KS. C Larry O'Rourke, E Robert Yoches, Vincent P Kovalick, Leslie I Bookoff, Finnegan, Henderson, Farabow, Garrett & Dunner, Washington, DC.

For CSU HOLDINGS INC, counter-defendant: Eric D. Braverman, Employers Reinsurance Corporation, Overland Park, KS. P. John Owen, Lori R. Schultz, Morrison & Hecker, Kansas City, MO. Michael C. Manning, Morrison & Hecker, Phoenix, AZ. For COPIER SERVICES UNLIMITED, INC., counter-defendant: Eric D. Braverman, (See above). P. John Owen, (See above), Lori R. Schultz, (See above). Michael C. Manning, (See above). For COPIER SERVICE UNLIMITED OF ST. LOUIS, INC., counter-defendant: Eric D. Braverman, (See above). P. John Owen, (See above), Lori R. Schultz, (See above). Michael C. Manning, (See above). For ACQUISITION SPECIALISTS, INC, counter-defendant: [**7] James A Hennefer, San Francisco, CA. For TECSPEC, INC dba Atek, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For CONSOLIDATED PHOTO COPY, INC., counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For COPIER REBUILD CENTER, INC., counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For CPO LTD, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For CREATIVE COPIER SERVICES, INC, counter-defendant: Jack M Bernard, Philadelphia, PA. For GRADWELL COMPANY, INC., counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For GRAPHIC CORPORATION OF ALABAMA, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS EQUIPMENT, INC, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For LASER RESOURCES INC, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For LASER RESOURCES OF MINNESOTA, INC., counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For LASER SOLUTIONS, INC, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For LASER SUPPORT AND ENGINEERING, INC., counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For MARATHON COPIER SERVICE, INC., counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For NATIONWIDE TECHNOLOGIES, INC., counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For REPROGRAPHICS [**8] RESOURCES SYSTEMS, INC, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For RESOURCES SYSTEMS, INC, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For SUNTONE INDUSTRIES, INC, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For TECHNICAL DUPLICATION SERVICES, INC, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For X-

TECH SYSTEMS INC, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For XER-DOX INC., counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For XEROGRAPHIC COPIES SERVICES, INC., counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above).

Judges: EARL E. O'CONNOR, United States District Judge

Opinion by: EARL E. O'CONNOR

Opinion

---

[*1456] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

This matter is before the court on defendant's motion for summary judgment on its willful patent infringement counterclaims (Doc. # 362) and defendant's motion for summary judgment on plaintiffs' antitrust claims (Doc. # 410). After careful consideration of the parties' briefs and oral argument on defendant's motion for summary judgment on plaintiffs' antitrust claims, the court is prepared to rule. For the reasons set forth below, both motions are denied.

Summary Judgment Standards

HN1 [↑] Summary judgment is appropriate "if the pleadings, [**9] depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c); accord Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986); Vitkus v. Beatrice Co., 11 F.3d 1535, 1538-39 (10th Cir. 1993). A factual dispute is "material" only if it "might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248.

HN2 [↑] The moving party bears the initial burden of showing that there is an absence of any genuine issue of material fact. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986); Hicks v. City of Watonga, 942 F.2d 737, 743 (10th Cir. 1991). Essentially, the inquiry as to whether an issue is genuine is "whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to the jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 251-52. An issue of fact is genuine if the evidence is sufficient for a reasonable jury to return [**10] a verdict for the nonmoving party. Id. at 248. This inquiry necessarily implicates the substantive evidentiary standard of proof that would apply at trial. Id. at 252.

Once the moving party meets its burden, the burden shifts to the nonmoving party to demonstrate that genuine issues remain for trial "as to those dispositive matters for which it carries the burden of proof." Applied Genetics Int'l, Inc. v. First Affiliated Sec., Inc., 912 F.2d 1238, 1241 (10th Cir. 1990); see also Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586-87, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986); Bacchus Indus., Inc. v. Arvin Indus., Inc., 939 F.2d 887, 891 (10th Cir. 1991). The nonmoving party may not rest on his pleadings but must set forth specific facts. Applied Genetics, 912 F.2d at 1241.

HN3 [↑] "We must view the record in the light most favorable to the parties opposing the motion for summary judgment." Deepwater Invs., Ltd. v. Jackson Hole Ski Corp., 938 F.2d 1105, 1110 (10th Cir. 1991). "In a response to a motion for summary judgment, a party cannot rely on ignorance of facts, on speculation, or on suspicion, and may not escape summary judgment in the mere [**11] hope [*1457] that something will turn up at trial." Conaway v. Smith, 853 F.2d 789, 793 (10th Cir. 1988). The mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 256. Where the nonmoving party fails to properly respond to the motion for summary judgment, the facts as set forth by the moving party are deemed admitted for purposes of the summary judgment motion. D. Kan. Rule 56.1.

Analysis

I. Defendant's Patent Infringement Counterclaims.

Defendant contends that it is entitled to summary judgment on its willful patent infringement counterclaims because (1) plaintiff has infringed on Xerox's patents for certain copier and printer replacement parts and (2) plaintiff's affirmative defenses to defendant's patent infringement counterclaims are invalid as a matter of law.

A. Factual Background.

Among the patents asserted by Xerox in its patent infringement counterclaim against CSU are several key copier and printer replacement parts, including fuser heat and pressure rolls, dicrotrons, and document handler belts. CSU often replaces these parts during the [**12] service and refurbishment of copiers and printers. In discovery, Xerox sought the production by CSU of representative copier and printer parts that CSU purchased from vendors other than Xerox. CSU produced seven parts, which are the subject of this motion. Each of the parts produced by CSU infringes Xerox's patents either literally or under the doctrine of equivalents.

The remaining facts presented in this section are uncontested by Xerox for purposes of this motion only.<sup>1</sup> In 1984, Xerox developed its first "parts policy," in which it declared it would not sell "parts which are unique to the "10" Series products in memory writers" to any Independent Service Organization ("ISO") unless the ISO also was an end-user of the product. In January 1987, the parts policy was expanded to apply to newer "9" Series models and all "10" Series copiers, plus all new Xerox products introduced after the effective date of the policy.

[**13] Xerox did not enforce its parts policy until early 1989. At that time, Xerox representatives decided that the only way to stop the competitive threat posed by ISOs, such as CSU, was to cut off the parts availability to these parties. In January 1989, Xerox tightened enforcement of its existing policies and cut off CSU's direct purchase of restricted parts from Xerox. Xerox also implemented an "on-site end-user verification" procedure when certain ISOs or their customers ordered parts from Xerox. The policy, which was implemented in June 1989, initially applied solely to the six most successful ISOs, including CSU.

As a result of Xerox's parts policies, CSU did not have an assured source of supply of parts necessary to service Xerox copiers and printers. CSU used parts cannibalized from used Xerox equipment, parts obtained from other ISOs, and parts purchased through a limited number of customers. CSU also obtained parts from Rank Xerox, a majority-owned European affiliate of Xerox, for approximately one year until Xerox forced Rank Xerox to stop selling parts to CSU and other ISOs.

CSU claims that Xerox also decided to use its intellectual property rights as a weapon to defeat ISO [**14] competition. Xerox made its legal counsel an integral part of this corporate strategy. CSU claims that Xerox used its legal counsel to threaten and/or bring patent and copyright infringement suits against ISO competitors.

In 1994, Xerox settled an antitrust lawsuit brought by a class of ISOs in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Texas (the "R&D Litigation"). CSU [*1458] opted out of the R&D settlement on the same day it filed the instant action against Xerox. Pursuant to the R&D settlement, Xerox agreed to suspend its restrictive parts policy for a period of six and one-half years. The settlement also compelled Xerox to license diagnostic software, an essential component for service, for four and one-half years.

---

<sup>1</sup> Xerox claims that many of these facts are irrelevant to the instant motion because (1) Xerox has a lawful right to refuse to license or sell its patented parts and (2) some of the facts do not pertain specifically to the patents at issue in this motion. The court has resolved both issues against Xerox, see infra section I.C., and therefore finds that the facts outlined in this section are relevant to the instant motion.

After the R&D settlement, Xerox intensified its efforts to use price as a weapon to defeat ISO competition in the service market. Xerox knew that if it must sell parts and licensed software to ISOs, it could achieve the same effect as not selling the product by charging exorbitant prices for those products. Xerox intentionally set the prices of its patented parts at high levels to act as a weapon against ISOs and to maintain Xerox's monopoly [**15] of the service market.

Xerox charges ISOs markups of as much as 2,000% or more on its parts. Xerox does not charge its customers who also service their own machines ("self-servicers") the same parts prices it charges ISOs. For example, ISOs are charged approximately four times as much as self-servicers for some parts.

Xerox explicitly set the price of its patented parts, not to recoup its development costs, but to force ISOs to raise the prices they charge customers. Xerox's goal of its pricing strategy was to eliminate ISO competition and capture 100% of the service market. Xerox used its control over the prices of parts and diagnostic software to exclude ISOs in the service market or to maintain its supra-competitive prices over its parts.

B. Xerox's Affirmative Case of Patent Infringement.

As noted above, Xerox has presented evidence that CSU has infringed Xerox's patents either literally or under the doctrine of equivalents. CSU conceded in its opposition brief that "Xerox has lawful patents" and that "CSU's use of certain parts constitutes a form of facial infringement." CSU confirmed at the pretrial hearing on March 13, 1997, that it did not contest that CSU's use of [**16] certain parts constitutes infringement of Xerox's patents. In addition, CSU has offered no evidence to refute the evidence of infringement presented by Xerox in support of its summary judgment motion.

Pursuant to Rule 56\(d\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the court finds that the following facts exist without substantial controversy and thus will be deemed established at trial of this action:

CSU has infringed Xerox's patents either literally or under the doctrine of equivalents by CSU's use of the 97X0 fuser pressure roll, 97X0(w/ MOD V) fuser heat roll, 97X0(w/o MOD V) fuser heat roll, 1090 family fuser heat roll, 1090 family dicrotron w/ dag coating, 1090 family dicrotron w/o dag coating, and 1065 document handler belt. Xerox has lawful patents for each of these parts registered as U.S. Patent No. 4,149,797, No. 4,196,256, No. 4,272,179, No. 4,373,239, No. 4,314,006, No. 4,585,322, and No. 4,258,258.

Although CSU has conceded that its use of certain parts constitutes infringement of Xerox's lawful patents, CSU claims that it has valid defenses of patent misuse, estoppel, and laches, which preclude summary judgment. The above factual findings are subject [**17] to CSU's defenses to be presented at trial.

C. CSU's Patent Misuse Affirmative Defense.

CSU claims that Xerox misused its patents by attempting to use its patents over certain copier and printer parts to create or maintain a monopoly in the copier and printer service market. In sum, CSU maintains that Xerox has attempted to thwart ISO competition in the service market by (1) refusing to license its patented products or setting the license fee at an exorbitant price, and (2) using its intellectual property rights, including its assertion of a counterclaim for patent infringement in the instant action.

HN4 To prevail on a defense of patent misuse, an alleged infringer must establish that the patent holder has used its patent to secure an exclusive right or limited monopoly beyond the scope of the patent in contravention of public policy. See Morton Salt Co. v. G.S. Suppiger Co., 314 U.S. 488, 492, 86 L. Ed. 363, 62 S. Ct. 402 (1944). A patent holder's [*1459] conduct "may constitute patent misuse without rising to the level of an antitrust violation." Senza-Gel Corp. v. Seiffhart, 803 F.2d 661, 668 (Fed. Cir. 1986); see Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 140, [**181] 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 (1969). An antitrust violation, however, generally will establish misuse.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> An alleged infringer also must establish a sufficient nexus between the patent holder's alleged misconduct and the patents at issue in the litigation. See Kolene Corp. v. Motor City Metal Treating, Inc., 440 F.2d 77, 84-85 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 404 U.S.

Although a firm generally can refuse to deal with its competitors, "such a right is not absolute; it exists only if there are legitimate competitive reasons for the refusal." [**19] Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 483 n.32, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\) (citing Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 597, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 \(1985\)). On the other hand, the patent statute provides that HN5 a patent holder can refuse to license a patented product without being guilty of patent misuse. See 35 U.S.C. § 271\(d\)\(4\). Although the patent statute does not specify any exceptions to this general rule, courts traditionally have recognized that patent holders cannot use their patent to justify anticompetitive conduct beyond the limit or scope of the patent grant. See Zenith, 395 U.S. at 136 ("But there are established limits which the patentee must not exceed in employing the leverage of his patent to control or limit the operations of the licensee."); Brulotte v. Thys Co., 379 U.S. 29, 33, 13 L. Ed. 2d 99, 85 S. Ct. 176 \(1964\) ("Absent any overriding unlawful conduct, 'a patent empowers the owner to exact royalties as high as he can negotiate with the leverage of that monopoly.'") (emphasis added); Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Stiffel Co., 376 U.S. 225, 230, 11 L. Ed. 2d 1\*\*201 661, 84 S. Ct. 784 \(1964\) ("The patent monopoly may not be used in disregard of the antitrust laws."); United States v. Line Material Co., 333 U.S. 287, 308, 92 L. Ed. 701, 68 S. Ct. 550 \(1948\) ("Possession of a valid patent or patents does not give the patentee any exemption from the provisions of the Sherman Act beyond the limits of the patent monopoly."); see also 3 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law P 704 (1978) ("a patent is a species of property whose use and disposition are no more immune from antitrust scrutiny than other property"). "Surely, a § 2 violation will have occurred where, for example, the dominant competitor in a market acquires a patent covering a substantial share of the same market that he knows when added to his existing share will afford him monopoly power." See SCM Corp. v. Xerox Corp., 645 F.2d 1195, 1208 \(2d Cir. 1981\), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1016, 72 L. Ed. 2d 132, 102 S. Ct. 1708 (1982). Thus, HN6 the right to refuse to sell a patented invention is not absolute even within the market of the patented work.

In this case, CSU alleges that Xerox used its various patents for copier and printer parts to exclude competitors in the service [**21] market, which CSU contends is beyond the scope of the patented inventions. The Supreme Court "has held many times that HNT power gained through some natural and legal advantage such as a patent, copyright, or business acumen can give rise to [antitrust] liability if 'a seller exploits his dominant position in one market to expand his empire into the next [market]'." Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 479 n.29 (quoting Times-Picayune Publ'g Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 611, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 \(1953\)). The Supreme Court's statement in Eastman Kodak immediately followed the Court's rejection of a proposal to grant per se antitrust immunity to manufacturers competing in the service market. The Supreme Court consistently has found that:

the public policy which includes inventions within the granted monopoly excludes from it all that is not embraced in the invention. It equally forbids the use of the patent to secure an exclusive right or limited [*1460] monopoly not granted by the Patent Office and which it is contrary to public policy to grant.

Morton, 314 U.S. at 492. Courts emphasize that HN8 antitrust liability may arise when a patent or copyright holder [**22] uses its rights to expand its reach into other markets not within the scope of the patent or copyright. See Atari Games Corp. v. Nintendo of Am., Inc., 897 F.2d 1572, 1576 \(Fed. Cir. 1990\) (patent); Data Gen. Corp. v. Grumman Sys. Support Corp., 36 F.3d 1147, 1187 \(1st Cir. 1994\) (copyright); see also Edward B. Marks Music Corp. v. Colorado Magnetics, Inc., 497 F.2d 285, 290-91 \(10th Cir. 1974\) (finding by negative implication that a bad faith effort, contrary to the spirit of copyright and antitrust law, to enforce one's copyright is condemned by the Sherman Act), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1120, 42 L. Ed. 2d 819, 95 S. Ct. 801 (1975).<sup>3</sup> "When a patent owner uses his patent rights not only as a shield to protect his invention, but as a sword to eviscerate competition unfairly, that owner may be found to have abused the grant and may become liable for antitrust violations when sufficient power

---

886, 30 L. Ed. 2d 169, 92 S. Ct. 203 \(1971\). Xerox's parts policies applied to "10" Series products in memory writers, "9" Series models, "10" Series copiers, plus all new Xerox products introduced after January 1987. Further, CSU has offered evidence that many of Xerox's policies applied to all patented and copyrighted products. CSU's evidence of patent misuse certainly is related to the specific patents that are the subject of Xerox's infringement counterclaim.

<sup>3</sup> Indeed, this court previously found that "an exercise of rights under a copyright can lead to antitrust liability." In re Independent Serv. Orgs. Antitrust Litig., 910 F. Supp. 1537, 1543 \(D. Kan. 1995\).

964 F. Supp. 1454, *1460-997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6671, **22

in the relevant market is present." Atari, 897 F.2d at 1576. A finding of antitrust liability against Xerox would support CSU's patent misuse defense, which in turn would preclude Xerox's recovery on its patent infringement counterclaims. See Senza-Gel, 803 F.2d at 668 n.10; [**23] Kobe, Inc. v. Dempsey Pump Co., 198 F.2d 416, 422-24 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 344 U.S. 837, 97 L. Ed. 651, 73 S. Ct. 46 (1952).

Xerox, relying on section 271\(d\)\(4\) of the patent statute, maintains that it has an absolute right to refuse to license or sell patented works to its competitors, regardless of its intent or the anticompetitive effects in other markets. The Patent Reform Act of 1988 added subsection 271(d)(4), which provides that Hn9 no patent owner shall be deemed guilty of misuse by reason of having "refused to license or use any rights to the patent." 35 U.S.C. § 271\(d\)\(4\). The Supreme Court traditionally has interpreted the language of section 271 in light of the relevant doctrines "as they had developed prior to Congress' attempt to codify the governing principles." Dawson Chem. Co. v. Rohm & Haas Co., 448 U.S. 176, 187, 65 L. Ed. 2d 696, 100 S. Ct. 2601 (1980). The Supreme Court also has emphasized that any exceptions to the patent misuse doctrine codified in section 271 should be construed "in light of this nation's historical antipathy to monopoly and of repeated congressional efforts to preserve and foster competition." Deepsouth Packing Co. v. Laitram Corp., 406 U.S. 518, 530, 32 L. Ed. 2d 273, 92 S. Ct. 1700 (1972).

A close look at the legislative history of section 271\(d\)\(4\) reveals that this exception merely codified existing case law regarding patent misuse and did not grant patent holders absolute immunity from the antitrust laws. Representative Kastenmeier stated that "codification of the 'refusal to use or license' as not constituting patent misuse is consistent with the current caselaw and makes sense as a matter of public policy." 134 Cong. Rec. H10646, H10648 (Oct. 20, 1988). Representative Kastenmeier cited two cases in the legislative history as support for the amendment. Neither case supports the proposition that a patent holder may use its patent to create or enforce a monopoly in a market separate from the patented invention. [**25] See SCM, 695 F.2d at 1203-06; Continental Paper Bag Co. v. Eastern Paper Bag. Co., 210 U.S. 405, 426-30, 52 L. Ed. 1122, 28 S. Ct. 748 (1908). Both cases at most stand for the general principle that a patent holder can exclude competitors within the market of the patented invention (i.e. horizontal competitors). Indeed, Representative Kastenmeier stated that "the underlying policy for this [misuse] doctrine has been an effort by the courts to prevent a person who has obtained a Government granted right to exclude competition from overreaching the scope of the patent." 134 Cong. Rec. at H10647. The amendment adding section 271\(d\)\(4\) apparently only reaffirmed this policy. The statutory amendment did not alter the traditional principle that a patent holder cannot use its patent to acquire or maintain a [*1461] monopoly in a market separate from the patented invention. Courts also continue, even after passage of section 271\(d\)\(4\), to follow the same general policy underlying the patent misuse doctrine. Most importantly, courts have not granted patent holders per se immunity from the antitrust laws based on their right to refuse to license a product. See [Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at \[\*\*26\] 479 n.29](#); see also Servicetrends, Inc. v. Siemens Medical Sys., Inc., 870 F. Supp. 1042, 1056 \(N.D. Ga. 1994\) ("As a general proposition, Siemens AG's lawful patent does give it the right to refuse to sell or license the patented device.") (emphasis added).

This court simply cannot accept Xerox's proposition that patent and copyright holders can never be guilty of misuse based on their unilateral refusal to sell or license a product. There are limited circumstances where such conduct may give rise to an antitrust violation and accordingly provide the basis for a patent or copyright misuse defense. See Image Technical Servs., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2386, 1996 WL 101173, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 28, 1996) (although "caselaw supports the general proposition that patent or copyright holders are not required to sell their protected products in order to avoid antitrust liability," that principle is not applicable because "Kodak's [lawful] refusal to sell its protected parts is connected with an illegal parts policy adopted to further monopolistic ends"); see also Data General, 36 F.3d at 1187 ("exclusionary conduct can include a monopolist's unilateral refusal to license a [**27] copyright"); Bell Atlantic Bus. Sys. Servs., Inc. v. Hitachi Data Sys. Corp., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15531, 1995-2 (CCH) Trade Cases P 71,258, 1995 WL 798935 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1995) ("a material factual dispute exists over whether Hitachi Data's refusal to sell or license its copyrighted diagnostics and manuals constitutes unlawful exclusionary conduct"); United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 (1919) ("in the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly," the Sherman Act does not restrict a firm's right to refuse to sell its product).

The history of the Eastman Kodak case also supports the proposition that a firm's unilateral refusal to sell or license its products may give rise to antitrust liability in certain circumstances. There, the district court originally granted Kodak's motion for summary judgment on plaintiff's section 2 Sherman Act claim, finding that "Kodak's unilateral refusal to sell its parts to plaintiffs does not violate § 2." Image Technical Servs., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17218, 1988 WL 156332, at *4 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 18, 1988). The Ninth Circuit reversed the district court, stating that the district court found that Kodak [**28] had no duty to deal with its competitors. We agree with the district court's statement of this general rule; however, we believe that there are material issues of fact concerning whether Kodak falls within one of the exceptions to it. A monopolist may not refuse to deal with a competitor in an exclusionary attempt to impede competition without a legitimate business reason. In the same spirit, a monopolist may not retaliate against a customer who is also a competitor by denying him access to a facility essential to his operations, absent legitimate business justifications.

Image Technical Servs., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 903 F.2d 612, 620 (9th Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). The Supreme Court affirmed the Ninth Circuit's ruling, again stating that the right to refuse to sell to competitors is not absolute. See Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 483 n.32.

Xerox requests this court to read the patent statute (section 271(d)(4)) in a vacuum, without reference to prior caselaw that it codifies and without reference to the antitrust laws. In essence, Xerox suggests that an unlawful end (monopolization of the service market) cannot be accomplished by lawful means (refusal to sell [**29] or license its patented and copyrighted products). This proposition has been rejected in almost every area of the law, including antitrust law. See Eastman Kodak, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2386, 1996 WL 101173, at *2; Kobe, 198 F.2d at 424 (although defendant's actions standing alone were not in themselves unlawful, these actions may be considered as giving effect to an unlawful scheme to monopolize).

[*1462] The court finds that there are genuine issues of material fact regarding CSU's patent misuse defense to Xerox's infringement counterclaims precluding summary judgment in favor of Xerox. CSU has presented evidence that Xerox has used its patent rights for equipment and parts to acquire and/or maintain its monopoly power in the service market. Xerox maintains that all of its alleged practices were reasonably within the patent grant and, therefore, cannot constitute misuse. For purposes of this motion, Xerox does not even address whether there are separate markets for parts and service. Xerox, in effect, has conceded that its policies regarding its patented parts have helped it exclude competitors in the service market. Assuming that there are separate markets for parts and service, which the court must assume [**30] for purposes of this motion, there is sufficient record evidence for a fact finder to conclude that Xerox improperly attempted to expand the scope of its patent grant for parts to exclude competitors in the service market.<sup>4</sup>

Xerox also contends that prosecution of its infringement counterclaims cannot constitute patent misuse. Again, Xerox relies on the patent statute, which precludes a finding of misuse when the patent holder seeks "to enforce his patent rights against infringement." 35 U.S.C. § 271(d)(3). HN10 A finding of misuse is precluded only if the patent infringement suit is brought in good faith. See Glaverbel Societe Anonyme v. Northlake Marketing & Supply, Inc. 45 F.3d 1550, 1558 (Fed. Cir. 1995) (a lawsuit brought in bad faith and with an improper purpose may constitute patent misuse or a violation [**31] of the antitrust laws); W. L. Gore & Assocs. v. Carlisle Corp., 529 F.2d 614, 625 (3d Cir. 1976) ("an infringement suit brought in good faith does not constitute patent misuse"); Kobe, 198 F.2d at 425 (patent holder may be guilty of misuse if the real purpose of the infringement action is to further an existing monopoly); Conceptual Eng'g Assocs., Inc. v. Aelectronic Bonding, Inc., 714 F. Supp. 1262, 1269 (D.R.I. 1989) (although section 271 provides that a patent owner has the right to enforce his patent, section 271 does not condone bad faith conduct).

---

<sup>4</sup> Of course, if there is only one market for parts and service, Xerox has a much stronger argument that it may exclude competitors for service without improperly expanding the scope of its patent protection.

Xerox, relying on the Noerr-Pennington doctrine,<sup>5</sup> argues that its prosecution of its patent and copyright infringement counterclaims against CSU is immune from antitrust liability. See Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 56-60, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 (1993) ("PRE"). Xerox claims that its subjective intent in bringing its infringement counterclaims is irrelevant. In PRE, the Supreme Court held that a copyright infringement suit was immune from antitrust liability unless the defendant could establish that the suit was objectively baseless. The [**32] Supreme Court stated that the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail. Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation.

Id. at 60.

In this case, CSU relies on Xerox's subjective intent in bringing its infringement counterclaims against CSU as a basis for its misuse defense. CSU has presented evidence that Xerox's prosecution of its infringement counterclaims in this action is a logical extension of its alleged scheme [**33] to monopolize the service market. Based on the present record, the court cannot find that evidence of Xerox's intent in prosecuting its infringement counterclaims in this action is precluded as a matter of law. First, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine provides antitrust immunity, not patent or copyright misuse [*1463] immunity. As noted before, a party's actions may rise to the level of patent or copyright misuse without constituting an antitrust violation. See Zenith, 395 U.S. at 140; Senza-Gel, 803 F.2d at 668. Second, CSU argues that Xerox's filing of its infringement counterclaims is only one part of its alleged scheme to exclude ISOs such as CSU from the service market. Although the filing of Xerox's infringement counterclaims alone may be insufficient to sustain a finding of misuse, CSU has presented sufficient additional evidence of an unlawful scheme to monopolize the service market to preclude summary judgment on CSU's misuse defense. See generally W.L. Gore, 529 F.2d at 625 (viewing both isolated acts and totality of acts before determining validity of patent misuse defense).

Xerox also claims that, to the extent a refusal to sell constitutes misuse, such misuse [**34] was purged by Xerox's termination of its parts policy in April of 1994 pursuant to a settlement agreement in the R&D litigation. See Senza-Gel, 803 F.2d at 668 n.10 ("The successful patent misuse defense results in rendering the patent unenforceable until the misuse period is purged."). CSU argues that Xerox's agreement in the R&D settlement does not purge its misuse because (1) Xerox agreed only to make parts available temporarily, until the year 2000, (2) Xerox continues to charge ISOs prices that are astronomical and intentionally designed to eliminate or reduce ISO competition in the service market while Xerox charges its other customers much lower prices, and (3) Xerox continues to use its intellectual property rights over its patented products and copyrighted materials, such as pursuing its counterclaims in the instant action, as leverage to eliminate ISO competition in the service market. The court finds that CSU has presented sufficient evidence to raise issues of material fact as to whether Xerox has purged its alleged misuse. The record evidence at this point indicates at most that Xerox purged one of its alleged misuses in April 1994.<sup>6</sup>

[**35] II. Plaintiffs' Antitrust Claims.

Xerox moves for summary judgment on CSU's antitrust claims alleging that (1) CSU has not suffered antitrust injury because its alleged injury is due to Xerox's lawful refusal to sell patented parts and copyrighted software, and (2)

<sup>5</sup> Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961); United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965).

<sup>6</sup> Xerox also seeks a ruling that CSU's infringement of Xerox's patent was willful. The court need not address this issue or the validity of CSU's defenses of estoppel and laches based on the court's finding above that CSU's patent misuse defense cannot be resolved as a matter of law.

CSU cannot prove any damage for lost profits because it cannot show that it intended to and was prepared to expand to new geographic markets.

A. Factual Background.

From 1984 through 1987, CSU was a competitor of Xerox for the sale and service of Xerox copiers and printers in Kansas City, Missouri. On October 15, 1987, CSU was purchased by The Lyon Group, Inc., a venture capital investment group. CSU sought to expand its base from Kansas City. In 1988, CSU expanded to Lawrence, Kansas. On August 11, 1988, CSU decided to expand to two major cities in 1989 -- St. Louis as the first expansion city, followed by either Dallas/Fort Worth or Chicago. CSU began discussions with several Chicago based ISOs, but it decided to defer expansion to Chicago until 1990. In 1988, CSU also considered Indianapolis and Pittsburgh as expansion cities but ultimately rejected both cities as candidates. On October 19, 1988, CSU [**36] refined its expansion plan to include both St. Louis and Dallas in 1989 and Chicago in 1990. By the end of 1988, CSU's expansion plan was as follows:

Calendar Year	Expansion City
1989	Two - St. Louis and Dallas/Fort Worth
1990	Two - Chicago plus another city
1991	Two or three cities
1992	Three or more cities
1993	Three or more cities
1994	Three or more cities
1995	Three or more cities

On January 23, 1989, CSU opened operations in St. Louis.

With respect to Dallas, in 1988, CSU negotiated with an individual regarding opening [*1464] an office, but the negotiations terminated because the individual's operation was not entirely copiers. In early 1989, CSU negotiated with a potential customer that had a substantial volume of previously leased high volume Xerox copiers in Dallas. CSU also contacted a Xerox service technician and agreed to hire the individual as a service manager for CSU's proposed office in Dallas.

On March 30, 1989, Xerox announced that it would not sell CSU parts for products restricted under Xerox's parts policy. On April 4, 1989, Xerox cancelled CSU's subscriptions to service manuals. Shortly thereafter, CSU abandoned its plans to [**37] expand to Dallas. CSU did not expand to any other domestic markets until 1994.

In May 1994, as the result of a settlement of a class action brought by a number of ISOs (CSU opted out of the settlement of that action) against Xerox, Xerox agreed to begin selling parts once again to ISOs, including CSU. CSU expanded to three cities in 1994, four cities in 1995, and one in 1997.

CSU contends that Xerox's parts policy thwarted or delayed its efforts to expand to a number of cities between 1989 and 1995. The following is a summary of CSU's damage calculations:

City	Estimated Expansion Date	Actual Expansion Date
Chicago	Oct. 1990	None
Milwaukee	Apr. 1993	None
Minneapolis	Oct. 1993	None
Louisville	Apr. 1994	None
Memphis	Aug. 1994	None
Cincinnati	Dec. 1994	None
Nashville	Aug. 1995	None

City	Estimated Expansion Date	Actual Expansion Date
Charlotte	Dec. 1995	None
Dallas	Oct. 1989	June 1994
Wichita	Apr. 1990	Oct. 1994
Houston	Oct. 1991	Dec. 1994
Oklahoma City	Apr. 1991	Apr. 1995
Atlanta	Apr. 1995	Nov. 1995
Austin	Apr. 1992	Dec. 1995
San Antonio	Aug. 1992	Dec. 1995
Denver	Dec. 1992	Feb. 1997

B. A Refusal To Sell Patented Parts And Copyrighted Software May Give Rise To [**38] An Antitrust Violation.

Xerox first contends that CSU has not suffered antitrust injury because its alleged injury is attributable to Xerox's lawful refusal to sell patented parts and copyrighted software. The court essentially has addressed this argument above with respect to CSU's patent misuse affirmative defense. The court incorporates that discussion by reference here.

C. Antitrust Liability Based on Pricing Of Parts.

Xerox seeks partial summary judgment on CSU's claim for antitrust damages arising from Xerox's alleged use of parts overcharges as an exclusionary device. Xerox contends that it has the right to charge as high a price as it sees fit. This argument is closely related to Xerox's argument that it can refuse to license a patented or copyrighted work because a patent or copyright holder could set the license fee so high that the fee effectively amounts to a refusal to sell. The court therefore incorporates by reference its discussion above of CSU's patent misuse affirmative defense.

Again, Xerox is correct that as a general principle HN11 "[a] natural monopolist that acquired and maintained its monopoly without excluding competitors by improper means is [**39] not guilty of 'monopolizing' in violation of the Sherman Act, and can therefore charge any price it wants." *Blue Cross & Blue Shield United of Wisc. v. Marshfield Clinic*, 65 F.3d 1406, 1413 \(7th Cir. 1995\) (emphasis added, citations omitted), cert. denied, 134 L. Ed. 2d 233, 116 S. Ct. 1288 (1996). Pricing strategies, however, can be subject to antitrust scrutiny in certain circumstances. For example, in *Eastman Kodak Co. of New York v. Southern Photo Materials Co.*, 273 U.S. 359, 71 L. Ed. 684, 47 S. Ct. 400 \(1927\), Kodak unsuccessfully attempted to purchase plaintiff's business which competed with various Kodak-owned dealers in the same geographic area. *Id. at 368-69*. Kodak then refused to sell its goods to plaintiff at a dealers' discount and instead charged plaintiff the retail prices at which the goods were sold by other Kodak-owned dealers. The Court held that the issue of whether Kodak's pricing of goods was in furtherance of a purpose to monopolize was [*1465] properly submitted to the jury. *Id. at 375*.

In addition, Xerox's alleged discriminatory pricing pattern against ISOs alone may be sufficient to support an antitrust violation. See [*Peelers Co. v. Wendt*, **\[\*\*40\]** 260 F. Supp. 193 \(W.D. Wash. 1966\)](#). In *Peelers*, the court found that food packers who are required by a patentee owner of processing machinery to pay substantially higher lease rates for use of such machinery than are paid for the use of identical machinery by their competitors selling food processed by the machinery in the same relevant market, necessarily have greater expense for machinery rental than their competitors and in that particular the ability of the disfavored food packer lessees to compete in the relevant market may be diminished.

*Id. at 197*.

Xerox cannot single out the pricing of its parts to CSU from CSU's other antitrust allegations. Rather, Xerox's pricing scheme must be viewed in light of all of CSU's allegations of Xerox's anticompetitive conduct and attempt to monopolize the copier and printer service markets. Xerox, for the most part, has ignored CSU's contention that Xerox has used the price of its patented parts and copyrighted software as a weapon to acquire and/or maintain a monopoly over service. Xerox simply responds that it has an absolute right to price its products as it sees fit. On the other hand, CSU argues that Xerox's pricing [**41] policy in effect amounted to a refusal to sell, which is illegal when the refusal is used to expand a monopoly from one market to another. CSU also alleges that Xerox charged ISOs significantly higher prices for parts than other customers in an attempt to eliminate ISO competition in the service market. Finally, CSU alleges that the actual licensing agreements entered into by Xerox excluded many competitors (ISOs) in the service market. CSU has presented sufficient evidence on all these points to preclude summary judgment in favor of Xerox.

D. Proof That CSU Intended To And Was Prepared To Expand To New Markets.

Xerox also moves for summary judgment on CSU's antitrust claims arguing that CSU has failed to establish standing to bring its claims. In particular, Xerox contends that CSU cannot prove that it intended to and was prepared to expand to new geographic markets, an essential element of plaintiff's case for lost profits.

CSU claims that Xerox's anticompetitive conduct thwarted expansion of its business to a number of metropolitan areas in the United States. HN12<sup>7</sup> To establish damages for lost profits from these other geographic markets, CSU must establish that it both intended [**42] to and was prepared to expand its business. See *Great Western Directories, Inc. v. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co.*, 63 F.3d 1378, 1389 \(5th Cir. 1995\), superseded in part on other grounds, *74 F.3d 613 \(5th Cir. 1996\)*; *Curtis v. Campbell-Taggart, Inc.*, 687 F.2d 336, 338 \(10th Cir.\), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1090, 74 L. Ed. 2d 937, 103 S. Ct. 576 \(1982\); *Martin v. Phillips Petro. Co.*, 365 F.2d 629, 633 \(5th Cir.\), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 991, 17 L. Ed. 2d 451, 87 S. Ct. 600 \(1966\). The "intent and preparedness" test was "designed to permit excluded competitors to challenge their exclusion [from a market] without being first required needlessly to incur economic harm." *Fleer Corp. v. Topps Chewing Gum, Inc.*, 501 F. Supp. 485, 504 \(E.D. Pa. 1980\), rev'd on other grounds, *658 F.2d 139 \(3d Cir. 1981\)*, cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1019, 72 L. Ed. 2d 137, 102 S. Ct. 1715 (1982). The Tenth Circuit has identified four factors to consider in determining plaintiff's intention and preparedness to enter a new market: (1) plaintiff's background and experience in the proposed business, (2) affirmative action on plaintiff's part to engage in the proposed business, (3) ability [**43] to finance the business and purchase the necessary equipment and facilities, and (4) consummation of contracts. *Curtis*, 687 F.2d at 338; see *Martin*, 365 F.2d at 633-34.

The court must determine first whether standing (or injury-in-fact) is analyzed with respect to each geographic market or with [*1466] respect to all geographic markets combined.<sup>7</sup> In most cases discussing the antitrust standing issue, the defendant's alleged exclusionary conduct is related to a specific product or geographic market. For example, in the Supreme Court case of *Zenith*, 395 U.S. 100, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 \(1969\), the Court analyzed the standing issue separately for three geographic markets, apparently because there was different alleged exclusionary conduct (patent pools in that case) in each of the various markets. Here, CSU does not claim that Xerox's conduct in a specific geographic market prevented expansion. Rather, CSU alleges that Xerox's conduct prevented all domestic expansion of its business. Xerox's alleged conduct is the same for each geographic market. In these circumstances, the appropriate inquiry for purposes of standing is whether CSU intended to and was prepared to expand [**44] its domestic operation. The precise number of cities CSU would have expanded to and the profits for each city are questions of the amount of damages, not the fact of injury.

CSU's burden to establish compensable injury under the antitrust laws "is satisfied by its proof of [**45] some damage flowing from [defendant's actions]; inquiry beyond this minimum point goes only to the amount and not the fact of damage." *Zenith*, 395 U.S. at 114 n.9. CSU must establish only that the illegality is "a material cause of the injury; a plaintiff need not exhaust all possible alternative sources of injury in fulfilling his burden of proving compensable injury under § 4." Id.

<sup>7</sup> In resolving the standing issue, some courts have drawn the distinction between "expansion of a present business into a new market" and "growth in an ongoing business." *Heattransfer Corp. v. Volkswagenwerk, A.G.*, 553 F.2d 964, 986 \(5th Cir. 1977\), cert. denied, *434 U.S. 1087, 55 L. Ed. 2d 792, 98 S. Ct. 1282 \(1978\)*. "The line to be drawn between expansion into new areas and growth in established ones is not easily defined and one that must be determined from the facts of each case." Id. Even if the court applied this standard and accepted Xerox's contention that CSU is truly expanding into a "new" area, the court still must address whether the "new" area is all domestic expansion or expansion into 16 different geographic areas.

CSU certainly has presented sufficient evidence that it intended to and was prepared to expand to a number of domestic markets from 1989 through 1995. CSU had adequate background and experience in the copier and printer service business to support expansion into new geographic markets. In addition, there is record evidence that plaintiff had the ability to finance expansion of its business into other geographic markets. Further, CSU has presented evidence of its expansion plans before Xerox's alleged anticompetitive conduct and CSU's record of expansion after most of Xerox's conduct ended. On the other hand, CSU has presented very little evidence of affirmative steps it took or contracts it consummated for a number of specific geographic markets.

Although CSU has been rather inarticulate in [**46] stating its damage theory, the court concludes that CSU, in effect, is arguing that Xerox's alleged conduct precluded CSU from further expansion within the domestic copier and printer service market. Under this theory, CSU need only show that it intended to and was prepared to expand its business in the domestic market, but was precluded from doing so because of Xerox's conduct. Although at this point the court has some concerns regarding CSU's evidence and theory of lost profits,<sup>8</sup> the court finds that there is sufficient evidence for a jury to infer that CSU intended to and was prepared to expand [*1467] its business in the domestic market by opening new locations in various cities. See Zenith, 395 U.S. at 114-25 (where defendant was an established organization with a long history of successfully excluding competitors, "the injury alleged by Zenith was precisely the type of loss that the claimed violations of the antitrust laws would be likely to cause. The trial court was entitled to infer from this circumstantial evidence that the necessary causal relation between the [defendant's] conduct and the claimed damage existed."); *Neumann v. Vidal, 228 U.S. App. D.C. 345, 710 F.2d [**47] 856, 858-60 (D.C. Cir. 1983)* (factors relating to plaintiff's intention and preparedness to enter the market should have been submitted to the jury); William Inglis & Sons Baking Co. v. ITT Continental Baking Co., Inc., 668 F.2d 1014, 1051 (9th Cir. 1981) (jury may infer that plaintiff's antitrust injury was caused by defendant), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 825, 74 L. Ed. 2d 61, 103 S. Ct. 57, 103 S. Ct. 58 (1982); Cable Holdings of Georgia, Inc. v. Home Video, Inc., 572 F. Supp. 482, 491-92 (N.D. Ga. 1983) (whether plaintiff was prepared to expand to a new geographic market is a jury issue).

[**48] CSU requests the jury to infer that expansion to the various metropolitan areas would have been consistent with its corporate philosophy and historical expansion efforts both before and after Xerox's alleged anticompetitive conduct. Although the actual names of a number of the cities may be speculative, the fact of injury is reasonably certain. CSU has presented evidence that Xerox specifically sought to exclude CSU from the entire domestic copier and printer service market by Xerox's enforcement of its parts policy, along with other related conduct. This evidence strongly suggests that CSU indeed has suffered some injury as a result of Xerox's alleged conduct. See D&S Redi-Mix v. Sierra Redi-Mix & Contracting Co., 692 F.2d 1245, 1249 (9th Cir. 1982) ("Where, as here, defendants have acted with intent to eliminate competition, the proof of resulting injury need not be overwhelming."). Xerox's stated goal to capture 100% of the service market by eliminating ISOs is precisely the injury CSU alleges in this case.

Xerox claims that CSU's decision not to enter the various markets may have been motivated by a number of other factors unrelated to Xerox's conduct (such as the availability [**49] of competent management employees and the presence of other ISOs in the geographic market) and thus Xerox's conduct cannot be the proximate cause of CSU's injuries. CSU has presented sufficient evidence to preclude summary judgment on this issue. Although there may have been several factors which impacted CSU's decision to expand, it is for a jury to determine if Xerox's

<sup>8</sup> For example, CSU has presented no direct evidence that it intended to enter the Charlotte, Louisville, Memphis, and Nashville markets. CSU took no affirmative steps towards expansion into these markets and has not yet expanded to any of these cities. According to CSU's damage calculation, CSU projected to expand to Louisville in April 1994, Memphis in August 1994, Atlanta in April 1995, Nashville in August 1995, and Charlotte in December 1995. CSU claims that it considered Charlotte, Louisville, Memphis, and Nashville as expansion candidates (as "spoke" cities) from its Atlanta hub office. CSU actually expanded to Atlanta in October 1995 but it has not expanded to any of the other four cities. CSU's actual practice of expansion appears to be inconsistent with its projected expansion dates for each market and CSU's "hub and spoke" theory of expansion.

964 F. Supp. 1454, *1467-997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6671, **49

conduct was the proximate cause of CSU's failure or delay in expanding to new markets. See Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U.S. 555, 566, 75 L. Ed. 544, 51 S. Ct. 248 \(1931\).

Many of Xerox's arguments as to CSU's expansion plans to particular geographic markets are more properly raised at trial as to the proximate cause and amount of CSU's damages, not the fact of injury. CSU certainly has presented sufficient evidence at this point as to the amount of damages to preclude summary judgment. "There is a clear distinction between the measure of proof necessary to establish the fact that [plaintiff has] sustained some damage and the measure of proof necessary to enable the jury to fix the amount." Story, 282 U.S. at 562; see Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251, 264, 1\*\*501 90 L. Ed. 652, 66 S. Ct. 574 \(1946\). In addition, the Supreme Court repeatedly has accepted a lesser degree of certainty as to the amount of damages in antitrust cases because of the uncertainties of the marketplace compared to other types of injuries such as property damage or personal injuries. See J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 566, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442, 101 S. Ct. 1923 \(1981\); Zenith, 395 U.S. at 123. This rule is based primarily on the principle that a wrongdoer should not be able to insist that the amount of damages be measured with exactness and precision when he is responsible for the damages. J. Truett, 451 U.S. at 1\*\*1468 566-67; Bigelow, 327 U.S. at 264; Story, 282 U.S. at 563. "The most elementary conceptions of justice and public policy require that the wrongdoer shall bear the risk of the uncertainty which his own wrong has created." Bigelow, 327 U.S. at 264. Although a jury cannot rely on pure speculation and guesswork in determining the amount of damages, a jury is allowed to act upon probabilities and inferences as well as direct proof. See Story, 282 U.S. at 564 (citation omitted). "It will be enough if the evidence shows [**51] the extent of damages as a matter of just and reasonable inference, although the result be only approximate." Id. at 563.

A jury could infer from the record evidence that CSU would have expanded to a city of the size and profit potential as the cities identified in CSU's damage calculation. CSU has presented evidence of its expansion plan in 1989, its corporate philosophy regarding expansion, and its record of expansion both before and after Xerox enforced its parts policies. The Supreme Court has held that such HN13 before and after evidence of receipts and profits is a sufficient basis for a jury's computation of damages, particularly where the defendant's wrongful action prevented any more precise proof of damages. See Bigelow, 327 U.S. at 266; Eastman Kodak, 273 U.S. at 376-77; Independence Tube Corp. v. Copperweld Corp., 691 F.2d 310, 330 \(7th Cir. 1982\), rev'd on other grounds, 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\); Heattransfer, 553 F.2d at 986. Although CSU's claim of lost profits rests on several assumptions, resolution of the reasonableness of the assumptions underlying a plaintiff's damage theory is the traditional responsibility of the [\[\*52\]](#) jury. See Lehrman v. Gulf Oil Corp., 500 F.2d 659, 668 \(5th Cir. 1974\), cert. denied, 420 U.S. 929, 43 L. Ed. 2d 400, 95 S. Ct. 1128 \(1975\); Autowest, Inc. v. Peugeot, Inc., 434 F.2d 556, 566-67 \(2d Cir. 1970\). CSU has presented sufficient evidence in support of its assumptions, which form the basis of its lost profits claim to preclude summary judgment.

E. CSU's Losses Attributable To Exdos.

In May 1991, CSU purchased Exdos in part to take advantage of an order of the Canadian Competition Tribunal requiring Xerox Canada to sell parts to Exdos. CSU contends that Xerox's enforcement of its parts policy forced CSU to acquire Exdos in an attempt to secure a reliable parts source. CSU lost approximately $ 1,000,000 through its operation of Exdos. CSU sold Exdos in 1995.

Xerox contends that CSU cannot prove as a matter of law that Xerox's conduct caused Exdos' losses. CSU concedes that Exdos had managerial and operating weaknesses which may have contributed to Exdos' losses. Yet, CSU claims that it never would have been exposed to those managerial and operating weaknesses but for Xerox's failure to make parts available in the United States. CSU's chain of causation is [\[\*53\]](#) somewhat attenuated and does seem to mix inappropriately the concepts of a "but for" cause and a proximate cause. Despite these concerns, the court finds that CSU has presented sufficient evidence at this stage for a jury to conclude that Xerox's conduct was the proximate cause of at least some of Exdos' losses.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that defendant's motion for summary judgment on its willful patent infringement counterclaims (Doc. # 362) is denied.

964 F. Supp. 1454, *1468Â¹997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6671, **53

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that defendant's motion for summary judgment on plaintiffs' antitrust claims (Doc. # 410) is denied.

Dated this 19th day of March, 1997, at Kansas City, Kansas.

EARL E. O'CONNOR

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

Anti-Monopoly v. Hasbro, Inc.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

March 26, 1997, Decided ; March 31, 1997, FILED

94 Civ. 2120(LMM)

Reporter

958 F. Supp. 895 *; 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3775 **; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,849

ANTI-MONOPOLY, INC., Plaintiff, - against- HASBRO, INC., TOYS "R" US, INC. and K MART CORPORATION, Defendants.

Disposition: [**1] Hasbro's motion for summary judgment dismissing AMI's Second Amended Complaint granted. Hasbro's motion for judgment on pleadings dismissing AMI's secondary-line Robinson-Patman Act claims granted. Other pending motions dismissed as moot.

Core Terms

---

retailers, board game, games, prices, market power, antitrust, manufacturer, relevant market, discounts, smaller, Monopoly, volume, toy, sales, products, factual support, summary judgment, anti trust law, market share, competitor, consumer, purposes, state law claim, anticompetitive, possesses, practices, predatory, antitrust claim, instant motion, profit margin

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

HN1 [] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

958 F. Supp. 895, *895L<sup>1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3775, **1</sup>

Summary judgment should be granted only where the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). All facts, inferences, and ambiguities must be viewed in a light most favorable to the nonmovant. The mere existence of some alleged factual dispute will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment; the requirement is that there be no genuine issue of material fact."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Market power is not a prerequisite to all § 1 Sherman Act claims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN3[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Market power is the ability to raise price significantly higher than the competitive level by restricting output. Market share is frequently reflective of market power, and thus a showing that a defendant possesses a large share of a well-defined market is usually sufficient to demonstrate market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

HN4[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The relevant inquiry for market definition is whether a hypothetical union of all producers of the product or products in the putative market would possess significant power over price. If so, then the product or products comprise a relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN5[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

The relevant market for antitrust purposes is determined by the choices available to the consumer. The rule for market definition is that commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes make up that "part of the trade or commerce," monopolization of which may be illegal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN6[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

958 F. Supp. 895, *895L¶ 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3775, **1

Market power comes from the ability to cut back the market's total output and so raise price.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Environmental Law > Solid Wastes > Disposal Standards

HN7 [down] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Where barriers to entry into the relevant market are low, a defendant's large market share may not accurately reflect market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN8 [down] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A determination of whether a defendant lacks market power in the relevant market is usually a question of fact, not law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN9 [down] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Experts are not always essential to defining the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

HN10 [down] Standing, Clayton Act

To recover damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act, an antitrust plaintiff must show that it has antitrust standing. To determine whether the plaintiff has antitrust standing, a court must evaluate the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them. A number of factors are relevant to a determination of antitrust standing, including the nature of the plaintiff's injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

**HN11** [blue document icon] Private Actions, Standing

A plaintiff's theory which lacks factual support, and is indirect, speculative, and tenuous fails to support antitrust standing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

**HN12** [blue document icon] Private Actions, Standing

Antitrust injury, a necessary component of antitrust standing, is injury of the type the antitrust laws are intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

**HN13** [blue document icon] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Absent predatory pricing, an antitrust plaintiff cannot complain that its competitor's prices are too low.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Pricing

**HN14** [blue document icon] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

To sustain a claim for predatory pricing, a plaintiff must prove (1) that a defendant's prices are below an appropriate measure of the defendant's costs; and (2) that the defendant had a dangerous probability (or a reasonable prospect under the Robinson-Patman Act) of recouping its investment in below-cost prices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

**HN15** [blue document icon] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

The element of conspiracy to monopolize under § 2 of the Sherman Act requires concerted action. Concerted action means a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN16[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A manufacturer and its distributors have legitimate reasons to exchange information about the prices and the reception of their products in the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Rule Components > Nonverbal Conduct

HN17[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

A lack of factual support is fatal to an antitrust plaintiff's conspiracy claims.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Pendent Claims

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

HN18[] Removal, Specific Cases Removed

When all bases for federal jurisdiction are eliminated from a case so that only pendent state claims remain, a federal court should ordinarily dismiss the state claims.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

HN19[] Commercial Interference, Contracts

To state a claim for tortious interference with business advantage, a plaintiff must show: (1) business relations with a third party; (2) defendants' interference with those business relations; (3) defendants acted with the sole purpose of harming the plaintiff or used dishonest, unfair, or improper means; and (4) injury to the relationship.

Counsel: For ANTI-MONOPOLY, INC., plaintiff: Carl E. Person, New York, NY.

For HASBRO, INC., defendant: Dennis P. Orr, Shearman & Sterling, NY, NY. Gary L. Reback, Susan Abouchar Creighton, Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, Palo Alto, CA. Steven A. Maddox, Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, Palo Alto, CA.

Judges: LAWRENCE M. McKENNA, U.S.D.J.

Opinion by: LAWRENCE M. McKENNA

Opinion

---

[*897] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

MCKENNA, D.J.

Family board game manufacturer Anti-Monopoly, Inc. ("AMI") commenced this antitrust action against its competitor, Hasbro, Inc. ("Hasbro"), alleging, among other things, violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, §§ 3 and 7 of the Clayton Act, the Robinson-Patman Act, and state law.<sup>1</sup> Hasbro [*898] moves for summary judgment, pursuant to Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, to dismiss AMI's Second Amended Complaint. Hasbro also moves for partial judgment on the pleadings to dismiss AMI's secondary-line Robinson-Patman Act claims.<sup>2</sup> [**3] [**2] For the reasons set forth below, Hasbro's motions are granted and AMI's Second Amended Complaint is dismissed in its entirety. The other motions pending before the Court are either disposed of in this Memorandum and Order or are dismissed as moot.<sup>3</sup>

I. Factual Background

A. The Rise and Fall of Anti-Monopoly

In 1973, AMI introduced Anti-Monopoly into the marketplace, a board game in which "players broke up monopolies by bringing antitrust suits against monopolists." (Anspach Decl., 7-15-96, PP 1, 16.) AMI sold over 400,000 Anti-Monopoly games in the United States between 1973 and 1976, despite the concession of AMI's founder and president, Ralph Anspach, that the subject matter of the game was not well understood by the public. (Id. at PP 16, 16a; Person Decl., 7-15-96, Ex. C6.)

In 1976, AMI was temporarily enjoined from using the word "Monopoly" in the title of its game on the ground that it infringed the mark owned by Parker Brothers for its popular board game, Monopoly. [**4]<sup>4</sup> In 1982, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals concluded that the word "Monopoly" as applied to board games had become generic and invalidated Parker Brothers' trademark registration. *Anti-Monopoly v. General Mills Fun Group, Inc.*, 684 F.2d 1316, 1326 \(9th Cir. 1982\), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1227, 103 S. Ct. 1234, 75 L. Ed. 2d 468 (1983). During the period of the injunction, AMI continued to sell Anti-Monopoly under a different name.

---

<sup>1</sup> Toys "R" Us, Inc. ("TRU") and K Mart Corporation ("Kmart") have settled their dispute with AMI and are no longer defendants in the action. AMI alleged other violations of the antitrust laws that were dismissed in an earlier Memorandum and Order of the Court. See *Anti-Monopoly, Inc. v. Hasbro, Inc.*, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16355, 1995 WL 380300 \(S.D.N.Y. 1995\).

<sup>2</sup> Prior to the completion of discovery, Magistrate Judge Peck, who oversaw discovery in this action, stayed AMI's apparently onerous discovery requests relating to AMI's secondary-line Robinson-Patman Act claims to allow Hasbro to move before this Court for judgment on the pleadings to dismiss those claims. See Opinion and Order of Magistrate Judge Peck, dated March 6, 1996. Because the Court grants Hasbro's motion, the issue of discovery relating to those claims is now moot. The remainder of discovery is complete.

<sup>3</sup> In addition to the above motions, AMI moves for summary judgment as to liability on certain of its antitrust claims and Hasbro moves for sanctions claiming that AMI's motion is frivolous. Because the Court grants Hasbro's motion dismissing AMI's Second Amended Complaint in its entirety, AMI's motion is denied. Hasbro's motion for sanctions is also denied.

<sup>4</sup> For a brief history of the board game Monopoly and the trademark litigation, see *Anti-Monopoly v. General Mills Fun Group, 611 F.2d 296, 299-300 \(9th Cir. 1979\)*.

In 1977, before the Ninth Circuit's decision was rendered, AMI introduced a second board game, which Anspach describes as an "upgrade" of the board game Monopoly. (Anspach Decl., 7-15-96, P 16b.). Precluded from using "Monopoly" in the board game's title, AMI called the game "Choice." (Id.) In 1983, after Parker Brothers' trademark was invalidated and the injunction against using "Monopoly" was lifted, AMI changed the name of Choice to Anti-Monopoly [**5] II. (Id. at P 16c.) In 1987, believing that consumer confusion between Anti-Monopoly and Anti-Monopoly II was harming sales of the latter, "completely different," game, Anspach caused AMI to cease the production of the original game and remove the "II" from the name of the latter game. (Id. at P 17; Person Decl., 7-15-96, Ex. C6.) It is sales of the second Anti-Monopoly game which AMI claims have been harmed by Hasbro's allegedly anticompetitive conduct.<sup>5</sup>

According to AMI's records, Choice sold 2,557 units in the United States in 1980 and 1,939 units in 1981. After Choice's name was changed to Anti-Monopoly II, the game's United States sales increased from 1,416 units in 1983 to 12,648 units in 1986 to its peak of 42,218 units in 1989. (Person Decl., 7-15-96, Ex. C6.) In 1990, the year Anti-Monopoly (formerly Anti-Monopoly II) was [*899] dropped by the mass retailers, including TRU and Kmart, AMI sold only 3,400 units of Anti-Monopoly, and has since not [**6] sold more than 3,000 units in any year. (Id.; Anspach Decl., 7-15-96, P 51.) TRU and Kmart stopped selling Anti-Monopoly because, in the opinion of their game buyers, it lacked consumer appeal. (Boyle Decl. P 2; Christensen Decl. P 5.) In 1995, the most recent statistic available, AMI sold only 460 units of Anti-Monopoly in the United States.

Parker Brothers, presently a subsidiary of Hasbro, bought the trademark to Anti-Monopoly, and licensed it back to AMI. (See Person Decl., 7-15-96, Ex. Q5.) After AMI's prior distributorship agreement with Elite Games Group expired, AMI approached Hasbro with a "proposition" for Hasbro to market Anti-Monopoly through its subsidiary, Milton Bradley, which Hasbro refused. (Anspach Decl., 7-15-96, PP 57, 59-60.) Perhaps the explanation for this lawsuit is Hasbro's refusal to market Anti-Monopoly. Anspach claims that "the present market share (and power) of Hasbro gives it a better chance of success than if a board game were marketed by another manufacturer. Accordingly, from a business standpoint, there is an element of guarantee inherent in Hasbro's monopolistic position." (Id. at P 48.) After Hasbro rejected AMI's "proposition," AMI [**7] commenced this antitrust action. (Id. at P 60.)

B. The Board Game Industry

A picture of the board game industry in the United States is difficult to discern from the parties' papers. AMI's papers are replete with conclusory statements and lack organization and coherence. Hasbro's papers, in contrast, strategically omit any comprehensive discussion of the board game industry apparently because Hasbro contends that the relevant market in this case consists of portions of the "toy and game" industry in which Hasbro's market share is far more limited. Despite this difficulty, for the purposes of the instant motions, the Court is able to conclude the following when the facts are viewed in the light most favorable to AMI.

Hasbro possesses approximately 70% of the games and puzzles market, which constitutes approximately 14% of the total toy industry. (Person Decl., 7-15-96, Ex. L2.) Family board games, the putative relevant market in this case, is a subset of those products included in the games and puzzles market.

AMI defines family board games as "non-strategy board games, in which players move tokens on a board surface, and the games are suitable for players at least 7-8 [**8] years old and are targeted for group play which does not exclude the 7 or 8 to 18 year age group." (Second Am. Compl. PP 12, 15.) AMI has not supplied facts to show that the market statistics on which it relies are based on this narrow definition. The president of NPD Group, Inc. ("NPD"), which compiled the market data, confirmed that NPD "provides no formal definitions for the categories contained in its reports." (Roth Decl. P 5.) Because Hasbro's own documents relate its large share of the non-electronic game industry, and because the Court can resolve the pending motions without defining the precise contours of the relevant market, the Court will assume for the purposes of the instant motions that family board games refer to a discrete class of products.<sup>6</sup>

---

<sup>5</sup> AMI also produces a third board game, Star Peace.

[**9] According to a toy industry report, five mass retailers -- TRU, Wal-Mart, Kmart, Target, and Kay Bee/Toy Works -- accounted for more than 50% of the dollar sales in the toy and game industry in 1994. TRU possessed the largest retail share of toy and game sales with approximately 20% of 1994 sales. (Harrington Decl. Ex. 13, at 23; Ordover Decl., 6-12-96, PP 45-49; see also Anspach Decl., 2-28-96, P 13.) Regarding games, the record indicates that Hasbro "owns" almost 55% of the items sold in Kmart and TRU, and over 70% of the items sold in Wal-Mart and Target. The percentage [*900] of Hasbro games sold in Kay Bee/Toy Works is not apparent from the record.

Hasbro, which includes such well-known manufacturers as Milton Bradley and Parker Brothers, is the dominant producer of family board games in the United States based on NPD-compiled statistics. Some of the historically more popular board games distributed by Hasbro include: Monopoly, Life, Risk, Scrabble, Outburst, Pictionary, and Trivial Pursuit. (See Hasbro, Inc. 1994 Annual Report, Harrington Decl. Ex. 5.) NPD statistics indicate that Hasbro sells 70.3 percent of the family board games sold in the United States, and sold the five [**10] best-selling games in the first half of 1993. (Person Decl., 7-15-96, Exs. I2 & B6.) As of June 1993, Tyco was apparently the next largest family board game manufacturer in the United States with less than 10 percent of the market. (Id. Ex. I2.) Other market participants include Pressman Games and a number of smaller manufacturers.

The parties agree that it is neither difficult nor expensive to manufacture a new board game, but disagree as to whether it is easy to enter the board game market. (Second Am. Compl. P 15(D); Harrington Decl. Ex. 6, at 2; Orbannes Decl. P 26; Wilson Decl. P 4.) Hasbro concedes that the mere ability to manufacture a board game does not guarantee its success. Of 42 games introduced by Parker Brothers and Milton Bradley in 1991 only 21 were still being offered for sale by 1994. (Orbanes Decl. P 31.) Moreover, board games sold by the mass merchants are much more likely to garner large volumes of sales in the short term than those sold only in regional department stores or individual toy and game stores.

An independent manufacturer has a number of choices when it decides to introduce a new game. The most common method is to license the game to one of the [**11] major manufacturers, such as Hasbro. (Hersch Decl. P 6.) An independent manufacturer may also choose to market its game directly to retailers, bearing the attendant costs and risks. (Hersch Decl. P 7.) The mass retailers are less likely to accept a game for sale if it doesn't promise substantial sales in a short period of time. (Orbanes Decl. P 26; Christensen Decl. P 2.) This reluctance makes it more difficult for smaller manufacturers, with less capital for national advertising, to place their games in the mass retailers. However, a manufacturer can successfully launch a game through smaller retail stores, such as local department stores and independent game stores. Examples of games that achieved national success by first approaching smaller retail stores include Pictionary, Scruples, and Mindtrap. (Orbanes Decl. P 27.)

C. Hasbro's Purported Anti-Competitive Acts

AMI's various antitrust claims are premised on the same facts, which the Court concludes fall into two general categories.<sup>7</sup> First AMI claims that certain Hasbro discounts and promotions available to mass retailers, such as <sup>6</sup> In addition, AMI proposes a relevant submarket, which it coins "monopoly-type family board games" and defines as "family board games based on some of the monopolistic features of real estate and/or public utilities, including the payment of rents to owners or users thereof." (Second Am. Compl. P 12.) Because AMI has failed to provide factual support for this alleged submarket, the Court will not consider it.

<sup>7</sup> In addition to the facts based on deposition testimony and sworn declarations, AMI has submitted purported expert opinions based on a long litany of "assumed" facts, which were prepared by AMI's counsel. (See Person Decl. Exs. C, D, E, F, G, I.) In these assumed facts, AMI asked its experts to accept as true, among other things: (1) AMI's alleged market definition; (2) the allegations of Hasbro's illegal pricing practices and their anticompetitive effects contained in AMI's complaint; (3) the "fact" that Hasbro's prices are predatory; and (4) the "fact" that Hasbro and TRU conspired to refuse to deal with Anti-Monopoly in

TRU, are purportedly not available to smaller retailers, and are thus discriminatory. Second, [**12] AMI claims that certain Hasbro practices, including volume discounts that benefit the mass retailers, discourage those retailers from purchasing non-Hasbro games, such as Anti-Monopoly, and thus harm competition. Much of AMI's alleged evidence focuses on innuendo based on communications between Hasbro and TRU, and/or vague inferences from ambiguous documents and testimony.

[**13] 1. Retailer Discrimination

AMI claims that Hasbro discriminates against smaller retailers in favor of the mass retailers, such as TRU. According to AMI, it is harmed by this discrimination because [*901] smaller retailers cannot compete with the mass retailers, which causes them to go out of business and provides fewer stores in which to sell Anti-Monopoly.

The nature of this alleged discrimination includes offering the mass retailers promotional and advertising discounts of which smaller retailers are unaware (see, e.g. Person Decl., 7-15-96, Exs. M3, U3, I4, J4; Person Decl., 3-1-96, PP 5-7, 11-19; Canfield Decl. PP 3-12; Goldstein Decl. PP 4-12); supplying only the mass retailers with personnel to stock their shelves (Hall Dep. 150-54; see also Person Decl., 4-5-96, Ex. AA; Goldstein Decl., 2-15-96, P 11); and providing the mass retailers with a preview of Hasbro's product line before it is introduced to the other retailers (see Hall Dep. 38-45; Canfield Dep., 1-4-96, PP 13, 15-16).

Although AMI has supplied the Court with numerous documents referring to Hasbro discounts or promotions, the Court notes that AMI has failed to provide context to the documents by explaining [**14] the nature or conditions of the discounts. Thus, although AMI claims that Hasbro's discounts are discriminatory, it is difficult for the Court to conclude that they are, based on the inadequate information before it. However, some small retailers have indicated in sworn declarations that discounts available to the mass retailers are not available to them. Liberally construing the evidence in AMI's favor, the Court will assume for the purposes of the instant motions that some of Hasbro's discounts and promotions discriminate against smaller retailers in favor of the mass retailers.

2. Other Hasbro Practices

In addition to Hasbro's allegedly discriminatory policies outlined above, AMI complains about a number of other Hasbro practices. AMI claims that Hasbro refuses to sell only its "hot" games to retailers, instead conditioning the sale of such "hot" items on the purchase of more poorly performing items. (Hosea Dep. 89-92; Wilson Dep. 73.) According to E. David Wilson, president of Hasbro's Games Group, allowing a retailer to purchase only the "cream of the crop" would be "harmful for our business." (Wilson Dep. 72.)

AMI also claims that Hasbro has conspired with certain mass [**15] retailers to fix the prices of Hasbro's board games by negotiating TRU's profit margin. (Person Decl., 3-1-96, P 3, Person Decl., 4-5-96, PP 11-13, 22.) AMI's alleged evidence of this price fixing scheme includes the testimony of Jill Hall, a board game buyer for TRU. According to Hall, TRU approaches Hasbro when TRU has excess inventory of games in order to negotiate a markdown, or discount price, which allows TRU to sell its remaining inventory on the unpopular product at a lower price while still turning a profit. (Hall Dep. 73-75, 218-21.) Although some smaller board game manufacturers did not receive similar markdowns from Hasbro for their remaining inventories, apparently some did. (See Canfield Decl., 1-4-96, P 3; Person Decl., 4-5-96, Exs. S, U, & V.) Other than these negotiated markdowns, there is no evidence suggesting that TRU and Hasbro negotiated TRU's profit margins. Hasbro was apparently aware of TRU's profit margins, however, because it notified TRU that it thought TRU's prices were too high in correspondence referring to those profit margins. (Person Decl., 4-5-96, Ex. BB.)

AMI also complains about Hasbro's volume discounts on the ground that they discourage the [**16] mass retailers from purchasing Anti-Monopoly. (See Person Decl., 3-1-96, P 5; Person Decl., 3-1-96, Exs. E, M.) The percentage exchange for discriminatory discounts. Needless to say, the Court does not accept these unsupported and assumed facts as true for the purposes of the instant motions.

---

of Hasbro's volume discount increases as the quantity of Hasbro items purchased increases. AMI offers a hypothetical example to explain how it has been harmed by Hasbro's volume discounts. TRU, AMI theoretically explains, forgoes the purchase of Anti-Monopoly for fear that profitable sales of Anti-Monopoly will cut into TRU's sales of Hasbro products, which will reduce the percentage of TRU's volume discount. Because, according to AMI, the loss of even a small percentage increase in volume discount on the entire line of Hasbro's products carried by TRU far exceeds TRU's potential profit on Anti-Monopoly, it would not make economic sense for TRU to carry Anti-Monopoly. (Person Decl., 3-1-96, P 5.) For similar reasons, AMI claims that a number of Hasbro discounts are anticompetitive. (See Person Decl., 3-1-96, PP 12-17; Person Decl., 4-5-96, [*902] PP 30-38.) AMI has provided no factual support for its theory.

II. Discussion

A. Standard of Review

HN1 Summary judgment should be granted only where "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, [**17] and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 56(c); Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986). All facts, inferences, and ambiguities must be viewed in a light most favorable to the nonmovant. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). "The mere existence of some alleged factual dispute . . . will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment; the requirement is that there be no genuine issue of material fact." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247-48, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986).

B. Market Power

Although market power is not an essential element of all of AMI's claims -- see K.M.B. Warehouse Dist., Inc. v. Walker Mfg. Co., 61 F.3d 123, 129 (2d Cir. 1995) HN2 (market power is not a prerequisite to all § 1 Sherman Act claims) -- to sustain most of its claims, AMI must show that Hasbro possesses market power in the putative relevant [**18] market, family board HN3 games. Market power is "the ability to raise price significantly higher than the competitive level by restricting output." Ball Memorial Hospital, Inc. v. Mutual Hospital Ins., Inc., 784 F.2d 1325, 1331 (7th Cir. 1988) (Easterbrook, J.); see also Phillip E. Areeda et al., Antitrust Law, Volume IIA, P 501 (1995) [hereinafter "Antitrust Law"]. Market share is frequently reflective of market power, and thus a showing that a defendant possesses a large share of a well-defined market is usually sufficient to demonstrate market power. See K.M.B. Warehouse, 61 F.3d at 129 ("market share may be a proxy for market power"); Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 452, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992) (Kodak's possession of "nearly 100% of the parts market and 80% to 95% of the service market, with no readily available substitutes," was sufficient to withstand Kodak's summary judgment motion).

1. Market Definition

HN4 The relevant inquiry for market definition is whether a hypothetical union of all producers of the product or products in the putative market would possess significant power over price. If so, then the [**19] product or products comprise a relevant market. See Antitrust Law, Volume IIA, P 533c; Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission, Horizontal Merger Guidelines, at 10-11 (April 2, 1992). In the instant case, the question is whether a hypothetical union of all producers of family board games would possess significant power over the price of family board games. If so, then family board games is the relevant market. If a hypothetical union of all producers of family board games would not possess significant power over price, that is, if consumers would purchase alternate products rather than pay the inflated price for family board games, then family board games defines the market too narrowly. The products to which the consumer would turn in light of the more expensive games would also be part of the relevant market.

The Supreme Court has recognized that HNS<sup>15</sup> "the relevant market for antitrust purposes is determined by the choices available" to the consumer. Kodak, 504 U.S. at 481-82 (citing Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. 2 at 19); Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 \(1962\). The Court set the standard for market definition [\[\*\*20\]](#) in United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 \(1956\). "No more definite rule can be declared than that commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes make up that 'part of the trade or commerce', monopolization of which may be illegal." Id. at 395.

In the instant case, the parties have submitted various analyses to support their respective [\[\*903\]](#) definitions of the relevant market. The reason is clear. If family board games were accepted as the relevant market, then, because there is some evidence that Hasbro possesses approximately 70% of that putative market, Hasbro's market share would evidence market power. In contrast, if Hasbro were correct that family board games compete with a "cluster" of toys and games, then the relevant market would include products manufactured by toy powerhouse Mattel, Inc., among others, and Hasbro's share of the relevant market, according to Hasbro's expert, would be less than 25%, too low to evidence market power. See Ortho Diagnostic Systems, Inc. v. Abbott Laboratories, Inc., 920 F. Supp. 455, 473-74 \(S.D.N.Y. 1996\) (citing [Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, \[\*\*21\] 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\)](#)).

To satisfy its burden relating to market definition, AMI has submitted the expert declarations and cross-elasticity reports of Ralph Anspach, AMI's president, and that of economist C. Daniel Vencill.<sup>8</sup> In these reports, Anspach and Vencill conclude, based on their respective analyses of NPD data, that family board games comprise a relevant antitrust market because they have "low interchangeability with other games such as adult games, puzzle games, standard games, family action games, and strategy games." (Vencill Report, 7-14-96, at 4; Anspach Decl., 7-15-96, at P 66.) Hasbro's expert, Janusz A. Ordover, finds numerous computational and conceptual flaws with AMI's experts' analyses, leading him to comment that they "would receive a failing grade if submitted by a graduate student in my industrial organization classes at NYU." (Ordover Report, 8-7-96, at P 1.) Ordover's analysis concludes that the relevant market consists of toy and game "clusters," which are based on the price of the item and certain demographic characteristics of the intended user.

[\[\*\*22\] 2. Barriers To Entry](#)

Even were AMI's market definition accepted for the purposes of the instant motions, large market share is not dispositive of a determination of market power. HNG<sup>16</sup> "Market power comes from the ability to cut back the market's total output and so raise price." Ball Memorial Hospital, 784 F.2d at 1335. In other words, even if family board games constituted the relevant market, and even if Hasbro possessed 70% of that market, Hasbro would not have market power if it could not significantly raise price by restricting output.

<sup>8</sup> Hasbro objects to these documents on two grounds: (1) they violate Rule 26 because they were first submitted in response to Hasbro's summary judgment motion; (2) Magistrate Judge Peck precluded Vencill and Anspach from offering any opinions in this case other than those based on the assumed facts they relied on in their initial Rule 26(a)(2) expert reports. (Hasbro Reply Mem. 8-9.)

Hasbro is simply incorrect that AMI's expert submissions violate Magistrate Judge Peck's order. The substance of that order was to preclude AMI's experts from using certain information produced by Hasbro to supplement their expert analyses. (Harrington Decl. Ex. 1, at 26-29.) However, the Vencill and Anspach declarations explicitly indicate that they are based on independently acquired information; not information produced by Hasbro. (Vencill Decl., 7-14-96, P 14; Anspach Decl., 7-15-96, P 13.) While Hasbro may be correct that these expert analyses violate Rule 26, Hasbro has not shown that it is prejudiced by their submission because it admittedly possessed the information upon which AMI relied for its own reports.

HN7 [↑] Where barriers to entry into the relevant market are low, a defendant's large market share may not accurately reflect market power. See United States v. Waste Management, Inc. 743 F.2d 976, 983 (2d Cir. 1984); Ball Memorial, 784 F.2d at 1335. In Waste Management, the government challenged the acquisition by Waste Management, Inc. ("WMI"), a solid waste disposal company, of a competitor in the Dallas area. If allowed, the merger would have resulted in WMI controlling 48.8% of a certain category of the waste disposal business in the Dallas area, sufficient to constitute prima facie evidence that the merger was illegal. Waste [**23] Management, 743 F.2d at 976. Declining to find that the merged company would possess market power, the Second Circuit recognized that "entry into the relevant product and geographic market by new firms or by existing firms in the Fort Worth area is so easy that any anti-competitive effect of the merger [*904] before us would be eliminated more quickly by such competition than by litigation." Id. at 983; see also Antitrust Law, Volume IIA, Section 4C.

Hasbro, relying on recent market participants, claims that barriers to entry into the family board game market are low, precluding a finding that it has market power. Hasbro points out that a common trade magazine publishes the names of companies and individuals who can assist in the development, production, and marketing of a new game, indicating that even a manufacturer with little experience in the industry could introduce a game. (Orbanes Decl. P 26.) In addition, the president of Hasbro's Games Group, E. David Wilson, claims, and AMI does not dispute, that most successful games in recent years were introduced by small independent game manufacturers. (Wilson Decl., 6-12-96, PP 3-4.) Wilson cites as examples, Mindtrap, Advertising, [**24] Where in the World is Carmen San Diego?, Brain Quest, Pictionary, and Trivial Pursuit. (Id.; see also Angel Decl. PP 5-9 (development of Pictionary); Hesch Decl. P 8 (development of Out of Context); Ware Decl. PP 3-13 (development of Trivial Pursuit).)<sup>9</sup>

[**25] AMI does not refute Hasbro's historical data, but contends in conclusory fashion that "the current board game market is rigged against potential non-Hasbro-developed staples getting a foothold in the market. Therefore, the frequency of success of new games becoming staples cannot be determined on the basis of past history." (Anspach Decl., 7-15-96, at P 45). It further claims that a successful competitor must be able to place its games in the mass retailers, which requires substantial capital investment for marketing and advertising. (AMI Oppos. Mem. 10; Second Am. Compl. P 15(D); Harrington Decl. Ex. 6, at 2; Anspach Decl., 7-15-96, PP 32-33.) AMI also points out that the attendant risk associated with introducing a new game discourages new entrants.

The Court notes that AMI's evidence relating to barriers to entry is nonspecific and largely speculative, while Hasbro's evidence is based on actual market participants. Unrebutted evidence that actual competitors have entered the market is a strong indicator that Hasbro lacks market power. See Antitrust Law, Volume IIA, PP 420b, 422c. This follows because these new entrants provide a check on Hasbro's ability to charge monopoly [**26] prices or otherwise exercise market power. In the face of Hasbro's evidence that most of the recent, successful board games have been introduced by small, independent game manufacturers, AMI has failed to set forth facts to show that barriers to entry into the putative family board game market are high.

Nevertheless, the Court need not resolve the pending motions HN8 [↑] by finding that Hasbro lacks market power in the relevant market, which in any event is usually a question of fact, not law. Sunshine Cellular v. Vanguard Cellular Sys., 810 F. Supp. 486, 493 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) (citing Jennings Oil Co. v. Mobil Oil Corp., 539 F. Supp. 1349, 1352 (S.D.N.Y. 1982)). Indeed, HN9 [↑] experts are not always essential to defining the relevant market. See

<sup>9</sup> Hasbro also claims that the nature of the competition among toy and game retailers negates a finding of market power. Hasbro explains that the top five retailers in the toy and game industry in the United States sell approximately 50% of all toys and games. TRU, the largest of these retailers, sells approximately 20% of all toys and games. (Harrington Decl. Ex. 13.) According to Hasbro, TRU is so powerful that the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") claims TRU was able to stop Hasbro from selling its products to various customers, including warehouse clubs. (Hasbro Mem. 8; Harrington Decl. Ex. 14, PP 4-7.)

The record does not allow the Court to draw the inferences necessary to conclude that competition in the retail business for games restricts Hasbro's ability to control prices in the putative family board game market. First, Hasbro cites to information for the broader toy and game industry. Thus, the record does not sufficiently establish who the retail players are in the family board game market nor their effect on Hasbro. Second, even if the FTC complaint upon which Hasbro relies for its claim, were sufficient to show that TRU was able to restrain the quantity of Hasbro sales to TRU's retail competitors -- which it is not -- it still would not show that TRU sufficiently restrains Hasbro's ability to control prices on the games sold to TRU or other retailers.

United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384 U.S. 546, 549, 16 L. Ed. 2d 765, 86 S. Ct. 1665 (1966) (government need not prove "by an army of expert witnesses what [*905] constitutes a relevant 'economic' or 'geographic' market"). Thus, the Court assumes, for the purposes of the instant motions, that Hasbro has market power in the family board game market.

C. Antitrust Standing

HN10 [↑] To recover damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act an antitrust plaintiff [**27] must show that it has antitrust standing. Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983). To determine whether AMI has antitrust standing, the Court must "evaluate the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them." Id. at 535. In Associated General, the Supreme Court recognized a number of factors relevant to a determination of antitrust standing, including the nature of plaintiff's alleged injury. Id. at 538.

1. Alleged Discrimination

AMI has not clearly articulated how it is injured by Hasbro's allegedly discriminatory practices. To the extent that Hasbro charges smaller retailers more for Hasbro games than it charges the mass retailers, AMI is benefitted because it can more easily place Anti-Monopoly in these smaller retailers. To the extent AMI claims that Hasbro charges the mass retailers too little, its claim is simply one for predatory pricing and not for discrimination. (See Anspach Decl., 2-28-96, PP 15-23.)

AMI's argument appears to rely on the fact that the retail market for family board games is [**28] being consolidated by a few mass retailers. Because this consolidation is causing the smaller retailers to go out of business, AMI allegedly cannot succeed by selling to only the smaller retailers. The Court notes that if AMI's theory of injury to small retailers based on Hasbro's allegedly unjustified discriminatory conduct were correct, it is somewhat curious that the small retailers have not instituted an action on their own behalf. Moreover, AMI has not provided factual support for its claim that the purported retailer consolidation is related to the Hasbro practices about which AMI complains.

The Court finds that HN11 [↑] AMI's theory lacks factual support, and in any event is too indirect, speculative, and tenuous to support antitrust standing. See Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 230-31, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578 (affirming summary judgment where facts do not support plaintiff's theory); Associated General, 459 U.S. at 545-46 (recognizing that the tenuous and speculative nature of the relationship between alleged antitrust violation and injury, and the existence of more direct victims, weigh heavily against a finding of antitrust [**29] standing).<sup>10</sup>

Because AMI lacks antitrust standing to pursue its discrimination claims, the Court grants Hasbro's motion for summary judgment as to all of AMI's claims to the extent they allege that Hasbro discriminated against smaller retailers in favor of the mass retailers.

2. Pricing Practices

<sup>10</sup> Hasbro correctly points out that, under the Robinson-Patman Act, a secondary-line violation would occur if game retailers, that is, Hasbro's customers, suffered antitrust injury because of Hasbro's alleged price discrimination. See Best Brands Beverage, Inc. v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 842 F.2d 578, 583-84 (2d Cir. 1987). In contrast, a primary-line injury refers to injury to Hasbro's competitors, such as AMI. Id. AMI does not have antitrust standing to pursue the alleged secondary-line claims of Hasbro's customers. For that reason, Hasbro's motion for judgment on the pleadings to dismiss AMI's secondary-line Robinson-Patman Act claims is granted.

HN12[] Antitrust injury, a necessary component of antitrust [**30] standing, is "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977); Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 110 n.5, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986). HN13[] Absent predatory pricing, an antitrust plaintiff cannot complain that its competitor's prices are too low. In Atlantic Richfield, the Court explained:

[*906] When a firm, or even a group of firms adhering to a vertical agreement, lowers prices but maintains them above predatory levels, the business lost by rivals cannot be viewed as an "anticompetitive" consequence of the claimed violation. A firm complaining about the harm it suffers from nonpredatory price competition "is really claiming that it [is] unable to raise prices." . . . This is not antitrust injury; indeed, "cutting prices in order to increase business is the very essence of competition."

Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 337-38, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990) (citations omitted).

HN14[] To sustain its claim for predatory [**31] pricing, AMI must prove (1) that Hasbro's prices are below an appropriate measure of Hasbro's costs; and (2) that Hasbro had a dangerous probability (or a reasonable prospect under the Robinson-Patman Act) of recouping its investment in below-cost prices. Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 222-24. AMI has not provided factual support for either element of a below-cost pricing antitrust claim. Instead, AMI theorizes that Hasbro can achieve instant recoupment by pricing Monopoly below cost. Hasbro allegedly achieves this instant recoupment when the consumer enters TRU to buy Monopoly, but then decides to buy another Hasbro product. (Anspach Decl., 4-3-96, PP 19, 27-31.) AMI's factually unsupported theory is not sufficient to support a claim. Id. at 230-43.

To the extent that AMI claims that Hasbro's discounts and other promotional allowances cause its prices to be too low, AMI has failed to show that it has suffered antitrust injury. This is true regardless of the statute under which AMI's antitrust claims are based. Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 340; see also Cargill, 479 U.S. at 116 (holding that plaintiff must show predatory pricing under § 7 of the Clayton Act); Brooke [**32] Group, 113 S. Ct. at 2587 (holding that predatory pricing claim under both § 2 of Sherman Act and under the Robinson-Patman Act require plaintiff to show that its competitor's prices are below an appropriate measure of the competitor's costs).

D. Hasbro Has Not Violated the Antitrust Laws

To the extent that AMI might have antitrust standing, it has failed to provide factual support for its allegations of anticompetitive conduct. For example, AMI has failed to support its § 2 claim for conspiracy to monopolize or its § 1 claim alleging a "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy" in restraint of trade with evidence of concerted action. See Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984) (recognizing that independent action is not proscribed under § 1); Volvo North America Corp. v. Men's Int'l Professional Tennis Council, 857 F.2d 55, 74 (2d Cir. 1988) (recognizing that HN15[] element of conspiracy to monopolize under § 2 requires concerted action). Concerted action means "a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement." American Tobacco Co. v. United States, [**33] 328 U.S. 781, 810, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946).

AMI apparently claims that, because TRU discusses its profit margin with Hasbro when it negotiates certain wholesale discounts, including post-sale markdowns to reduce inventory, there is evidence of concerted action. The Court does not agree. In Monsanto, the Supreme Court recognized that HN16[] "[a] manufacturer and its distributors have legitimate reasons to exchange information about the prices and the reception of their products in the market." Monsanto Co., 465 U.S. at 762. The Court cautioned against drawing an inference of a price fixing agreement from ambiguous evidence. Id. at 763.

Calling the evidence ambiguous would be generous. AMI has not pointed to any exhibits or non-hearsay testimony to support its claim that Hasbro had an express or implied agreement to fix prices with TRU or any other retailer. HN17[] A lack of factual support is fatal to AMI's conspiracy claims. See Schwimmer v. Sony Corp. of America, 677 F.2d 946, 953-54 (2d Cir.) (plaintiff failed to introduce sufficient facts from which an inference of agreement to discourage transshipping [*907] could be drawn), cert. denied, [459 U.S. 1007, 74 L. Ed. 2d 398, \[\*\*34\] 103 S. Ct. 362 \(1982\)](#).

The distinct and significant problem with all of AMI's antitrust claims is that they lack factual support in the record. Accordingly, all of AMI's antitrust claims are dismissed.

E. State Law Claim

HN18[] "When all bases for federal jurisdiction have been eliminated from a case so that only pendent state claims remain, the federal court should ordinarily dismiss the state claims." Baylis v. Marriott Corp., 843 F.2d 658, 665 \(2d Cir. 1988\) (citing United Mine Workers of America v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 725, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218, 86 S. Ct. 1130 \(1966\)). The Court is not convinced that all bases for federal jurisdiction relating to AMI's state law claim have been eliminated. On the face of the complaint it appears that there is complete diversity between AMI and Hasbro, and thus the Court may still have federal jurisdiction over AMI's state law claim. (Second Am. Compl. PP 4, 5.)

In any event, the Court believes that in this case, in which AMI has entirely failed to provide factual support for both its federal and state law claims, allowing AMI to pursue its state law claim in state court would be a waste of the resources expended to resolve the [*35] parties' dispute. Discovery is complete, and Hasbro has properly moved for summary judgment to dismiss AMI's one state law claim for tortious interference with business advantage. The Court will also resolve this aspect of Hasbro's motion.

HN19[] To state a claim for tortious interference with business advantage, "a plaintiff must show (1) business relations with a third party; (2) defendants' interference with those business relations; (3) defendants acted with the sole purpose of harming the plaintiff or used dishonest, unfair, or improper means; and (4) injury to the relationship." Purgess v. Sharrock, 33 F.3d 134, 141 \(2d Cir. 1994\). AMI has not set forth any particular business relation with which Hasbro interfered; nor has it set forth any facts that Hasbro intended to harm AMI; nor has it set forth facts to show that Hasbro used dishonest, unfair, or improper methods to compete with AMI. Accordingly, AMI's state law claim is dismissed with prejudice.<sup>11</sup>

[**36] III. Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, Hasbro's motion for summary judgment dismissing AMI's Second Amended Complaint is granted. The Court also grants Hasbro's motion for judgment on the pleadings dismissing AMI's secondary-line Robinson-Patman Act claims. The other pending motions are disposed of in the above Memorandum and Order or are dismissed as moot. The Clerk is directed to enter judgment dismissing the Second Amended Complaint.

SO ORDERED

Dated: New York, New York

<sup>11</sup> The Court also notes that, under New York state law, the failure to provide argument on a point at issue constitutes abandonment of the issue. See Bombard v. Central Hudson Gas & Electric, 205 A.D.2d 1018, 614 N.Y.S.2d 577, 580 (3d Dep't 1994); see also Ortho Pharmaceutical Corp. v. Cosprophar, Inc., 828 F. Supp. 1114, 1129 \(S.D.N.Y. 1993\) (recognizing that parties failure to address claim raised in adversary's papers may indicate abandonment), aff'd, 32 F.3d 690 \(2d Cir. 1994\). AMI failed to provide any argument opposing Hasbro's motion relating to AMI's state law claim, which provides an independent basis for dismissal.

March 26, 1997

LAWRENCE M. McKENNA

U.S.D.J.

---

End of Document

Rossi v. Standard Roofing

United States District Court for the District of New Jersey

March 26, 1997, Decided ; March 26, 1997, FILED

Civil Action No. 92-5377 (NHP)

Reporter

958 F. Supp. 976 *; 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3630 **; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,846

JOSEPH ROSSI, et al., Plaintiffs, v. STANDARD ROOFING, INC., et al, Defendants.

Disposition: [**1] Defendants' motions for summary judgment GRANTED; plaintiffs' Complaint DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

Core Terms

---

Roofing, products, manufacturers, distributors, conspiracy, alleges, prices, siding, competitors, conversations, antitrust violation, dealers, buying, northern, summary judgment, Sherman Act, horizontal, anti trust law, anticompetitive, concerted, rule of reason, own business, no evidence, complaints, unilateral, damages, per se violation, distributorship, antitrust, customers

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1[

The standard governing summary judgment motions is set forth in Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\), which provides in part: the judgment sought shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. A fact is material if it might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing substantive law.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

958 F. Supp. 976, *976L<sup>1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3630, **1</sup>

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN2 Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

The movant for summary judgment has the initial burden of identifying evidence that it believes shows an absence of genuine issues of material fact. When the nonmovant will bear the burden of proof at trial, the movant's burden can be discharged by showing that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmovant's case. If the movant establishes the absence of a genuine issue of material fact, the burden shifts to the nonmovant to do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to material facts. A party opposing summary judgment may not rest merely upon bare assertions, conclusory allegations or suspicions. The proof must amount to more than a scintilla of factual support for the plaintiff's theory of legal recovery.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN3 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Summary judgment is no longer looked upon as a disfavored procedural shortcut; rather, it presents the district court with the first opportunity to dispose of meritless cases. This is true even in antitrust cases, where motive and intent play leading roles, the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, and hostile witnesses thicken the plot.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Although it is not necessary that a Sherman Act plaintiff eliminate every possible independent justification by the manufacturer/distributor so that only evidence of concerted action remains in the record, plaintiff must at least produce evidence that tends to exclude the possibility of independent action by the manufacturer and distributor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 Sherman Act case. Conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. This is because mistaken inferences in such a context are especially costly and chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect. The evidence must be analyzed as a whole, and not taken piecemeal, in determining whether an inference of concerted action is supported. Plaintiffs in antitrust cases must be afforded the full benefit of their proof without tightly compartmentalizing the various factual components and wiping the slate clean after scrutiny of each.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

**HN6** Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Whether conduct violates the Act is determined on a case-by-case application of the Rule of Reason if it is not a per se case. In order to prove a claim brought under § 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must prove: (1) that the defendants contracted, combined or conspired among each other; (2) that the combination or conspiracy produced adverse anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the objects of and conduct pursuant to the contract or conspiracy were illegal; and (4) that the plaintiffs were injured as a proximate result of that conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

958 F. Supp. 976, *976L<sup>A</sup> 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3630, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 Vertical Restraints, Price Fixing

There are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use, and group boycotts are of this character. A per se case can also be established where there is a horizontal or vertical price fixing agreement. Although explicit agreement is not necessary to prove a Sherman Act conspiracy, a conspiracy is evident where there is joint and collaborative action which is pervasive in the initiation, execution, and fulfillment of the plan.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

The per se approach in a Sherman Act case is limited to cases in which firms with market power boycott suppliers or customers in order to discourage them from doing business with a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A manufacturer may sell its product to whomever it chooses. This, of course, is the touchstone of our free market economy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN10 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Where a manufacturer acts in response to dealer complaints, not in concert with them, that is unilateral action and is not a per se violation of the Sherman Act.

958 F. Supp. 976, *976L<sup>A</sup> 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3630, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN11[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

An explicit agreement is not necessary to prove a Sherman Act conspiracy. An agreement can be implied from the totality of the circumstances after considering the evidence as a whole. The evidence must reasonably tend to prove that the defendants had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Assignments & Transfers

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

HN12[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A unilateral decision of a single manufacturer to rearrange its distribution structure by limiting or increasing the number of its dealers or transferring the number of its dealers or transferring its business to different dealers does not violate the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN13[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Conduct that is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The antitrust laws are to be used as a shield against clearly anticompetitive activity, not as a rapier to avenge every hurt feeling a businessperson may feel that he has suffered at the hands of his competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN15[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

958 F. Supp. 976, *976L<sup>A</sup> 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3630, **1

Whether an unlawful conspiracy or combination is demonstrated should be judged by what the parties actually did rather than by the words they used.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN16[] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

A party may not rest upon bare assertions, conclusory allegations or suspicions to overcome a motion for summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN17[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A jousting match in the commercial arena is not sufficient to compel a finding of an antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN18[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

There is a presumption in favor of a rule of reason standard. A judicial gloss on § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 establishes the rule of reason as the prevailing standard of analysis. Under this standard of analysis, the finder of fact must weigh all of the given circumstances of a case in determining whether a restrictive practice must be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition. The touchstone of the rule of reason test is proof of anticompetitive effect, and the goal of antitrust law is the protection of interbrand, not intrabrand, competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN19[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A relevant product market is defined as those commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

**HN20** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To prove that a conspiracy or an agreement produced adverse, anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic market, the impact on the market is the key focus, rather than on the individual participants in the market. The antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

**HN21** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The plaintiff in a Sherman Act case bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

**HN22** Private Actions, Remedies

Damage claims in an antitrust case must be presented in a manner that is not based on guesswork or speculation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

**HN23** Private Actions, Remedies

Where a plaintiff in an antitrust case fails to present evidence that provides a sufficient basis for an award of damages, it cannot recover. An award of damages must be proved to the point where they can be determined by reasonable inference, not by speculation or guess. A court must be able to connect any damages to the conduct of the defendant.

Counsel: For Joseph Rossi, Rossi-Florence Corporation, Rossi Roofing, Inc., Plaintiffs: Joseph A. Dickson, Esq., CLEMENTE, DICKSON & MUELLER, P.A., Morristown, NJ. Harold E. Kohn, Joanne Zack, Michael J. Boni, KOHN, SWIFT & GRAF, P.C., Philadelphia, PA.

For Wood Fiber Industries, Defendant: Steven Richman, Esq., HERRICK, FEINSTEIN, Princeton, NJ. For Standard Roofing, Inc., William Higginson, The Estate of Robert Higginson, Joseph Licciardello, Defendants: Joel N. Kreizman, Esq., EVANS, OSBORNE, KREIZMAN & BONNEY, Little Silver, NJ. For Arzee Supply Corporation, Alvin Roth, Cary Roth, Defendants: Stuart Kuritsky, Esq., BURSIK, KURITSKY & GIASULLO, West Orange, NJ. For GAF Building Materials Corporation, Defendant: Sheldon M. Finkelstein, Esq., Shirley L. Berger, Esq., HANNOCH WEISMAN, Roseland, NJ. For Servistar Corporation, Defendant: Stephen F. Ban, Esq., Laurel S. Gleason, Esq., SPRINGER, BUSH & PERRY, Pittsburgh, PA.

Judges: NICHOLAS H. POLITAN, U.S.D.J.

Opinion by: NICHOLAS H. POLITAN

Opinion

---

[*977] LETTER OPINION*ORIGINAL ON FILE WITH CLERK OF THE COURT

Re: *Joseph Rossi, Rossi [*2] Florence Corp., and Rossi Roofing, Inc. v. Standard Roofing, Inc., et al.*

Civil Action No. 92-5377 (NHP)

Dear Counsel:

This matter comes before the Court on motions by defendants -- Standard Roofings, Inc., Arzee Roofing Supply Corp., GAF Corporation, Allied Roofing, Inc., Servistar Corp., Robert Higginson (deceased), William Higginson, Alvin Roth, Cary Roth, Joseph Licciardello, and Wood Fibre Industries, Inc. -- for summary judgment dismissing the Complaint of plaintiffs, Joseph Rossi, Rossi Florence Corp., and Rossi Roofing, Inc. Oral argument was heard on the motion on October 23, 1996, and the parties thereafter provided the Court with additional submissions. For the reasons outlined herein, defendants' motions are GRANTED.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Notwithstanding the voluminous nature of the parties' submissions in this case, the factual basis of the dispute is fairly straightforward, if somewhat lengthy.

Plaintiff Joseph Rossi ("Rossi") has been working in the roofing and siding distribution market in northern New Jersey ("North Jersey") since 1972. Plaintiffs Rossi-Florence Corp. ("Rossi-Florence") and Rossi Roofing, Inc., ("Rossi Roofing") are siding [*3] and roofing distributors that Joseph Rossi formed in North Jersey. They are no longer in business. [*978] For ease of reference, the entities that are plaintiffs in this action will be referenced as either "Rossi" or "plaintiff."

Defendants Standard Roofings, Inc., ("Standard") and Arzee Supply Corporation ("Arzee") are distributors of roofing and siding materials in North Jersey. Defendants GAF Corporation <sup>1</sup> ("GAF") and Wood Fiber Industries, Inc., ("Wood Fiber") are suppliers of roofing products in North Jersey. Defendant Servistar Corp. ("Servistar") is a buying group, with some roofing and siding distributors as members, doing business in northern New Jersey.

Defendant William Higginson is currently [*4] a shareholder and President of Standard; defendant Joseph Licciardello is Vice President of Standard; defendant Alvin Roth is a shareholder and the President of Arzee; defendant Cary Roth is Alvin's son and a branch manager at Arzee.

Standard employed Rossi from 1972 until he was terminated in September of 1988, at which time he was the manager of Standard's Cedar Knoll branch. The reasons for his discharge are in dispute. Rossi alleges that Standard fired him because he refused to obey Standard's request to cooperate with Arzee in setting prices. Standard claims that Rossi was fired because of his poor work performance, Standard's high payroll expense (which it attributed to Rossi), Rossi's personal expenses charged to Standard, his concentration on his extraneous business ventures to the detriment of Standard, and the failure of the Cedar Knolls branch to achieve profits commensurate with its sales.

---

<sup>1</sup> GAF was Standard's major supplier of roofing products in the 1980s. Standard was also GAF's major customer in New Jersey and one of its top five customers nationwide. Standard bought over $ 7.7 million worth of GAF product from GAF in New Jersey in 1989, substantially more than any other customer in New Jersey.

Immediately after Standard fired Rossi, he began planning to open his own roofing and siding distributorship at a building he owned, which was located adjacent to Standard and on the same block as Arzee. Because of his employment at Standard, Rossi had knowledge about off-invoice, volume [**5] and nonvolume confidential rebates that some distributors get from many of the manufacturers in the roofing and siding industry. These rebates are periodic credits against purchases that the manufacturer issued to the distributors. Rossi alleges that distributors and suppliers feared that he would pass these rebates on to his customers, thereby lowering the prices of roofing and siding products in northern New Jersey.

Rossi believes that because of his past refusal to participate in price fixing, his aggressive pricing, and his potency as a competitor, Standard and Arzee, together with Allied, agreed to prevent Rossi from succeeding as a competitor in the northern New Jersey roofing and siding market. Additionally, Rossi contends that those defendants caused suppliers, including manufacturers, other distributors and buying groups to refuse to deal with Rossi-Florence, Rossi Roofing, and Joseph Rossi.

Rossi asserts that in late 1988 or 1989, representatives of various manufacturers informed him that distributors Standard, Allied, and/or Arzee pressured manufacturers not to deal with Rossi. Rossi alleges that he entered into a joint business venture with Richard Drosch, President [**6] of the Florence Corporation (a roofing, siding, and window distributorship located at Huntington, Long Island), because Florence Corporation already had product lines. Jon Bieselin, an employee of Drosch, also entered into the business arrangement. On December 1, 1988, the three incorporated the Rossi-Florence Corporation in the State of New Jersey.

Rossi proffers several statements by various persons to support his contention that defendants conspired to keep him out of business. Specifically, Rossi claims that Licciardello, Vice-President of Standard, visited him in December of 1988 at the new business location and informed him that, if he went into business, Standard and Arzee "would do anything they could . . . to keep him out of business." Additionally, a Standard employee testified that he heard Higginson state that Higginson intended to stop Rossi from competing against him.

[*979] Moreover, plaintiff contends that sometime in January of 1989, Bud Krusa of GAF called Drosch and told him that GAF would not sell to Rossi-Florence in New Jersey because GAF had sufficient distribution in the area. Plaintiff purports that Drosch responded to Krusa's statement by stating that he would [**7] sell GAF product from Florence Corporation to Rossi-Florence. Plaintiff maintains that Krusa then threatened Drosch by stating that GAF would no longer sell to Florence in Long Island if he sold GAF products to Rossi-Florence.

Plaintiff asserts that subsequent to Krusa's threat, a similar incident occurred in 1988 in connection with Certainteed, a major siding supplier to both Drosch's Long Island corporation and Arzee. Plaintiff alleges that Drosch received a call from Al Roth of Arzee in December of 1988. During that conversation, Roth allegedly asked Drosch if he was opening a distributorship with Joe Rossi in North Jersey. When Drosch responded affirmatively to that question, Al Roth then stated that he was not happy about it and threatened to open a distributorship in Long Island if Drosch followed through with the Rossi-Florence distributorship.

In January of 1989, Drosch informed Rossi that he wanted to withdraw from Rossi-Florence because he believed that their corporation would not have the necessary product lines to succeed and that the available substitute products would not suffice. He also told Rossi that he was worried that if he moved forward with their joint [**8] venture, his own business in Long Island would be endangered. Joe Rossi and Drosch then reached an agreement whereby Rossi would return $ 65,000 to Drosch and Bieselin and discontinue use of the Florence name.

After the breakup of Rossi-Florence, Rossi Roofing was incorporated in New Jersey on February 2, 1989, with Joe Rossi and Georgia Rossi as the corporate directors. Rossi Roofing obtained a $ 900,000 bank credit line, which was guaranteed by Joe and Georgia Rossi. In March of that same year, Anthony Lipari invested in Rossi Roofing with the intention that he would be a 50% shareholder.

Rossi Roofing was able to buy vinyl siding and roofing products from the Bird Corporation, a manufacturer. However, Rossi contends that he was unable to buy roofing product from Celotex, another manufacturer that supplied Standard, Arzee, and Allied. The representative of Celotex said that he could not sell to Rossi because it would not be allowed by his boss.

Though Rossi Roofing was able to directly secure products from some manufacturers, for example, Gold Bond and Bird, it was unable to get products from some other manufacturers. Manufacturers including Certainteed, Wolverine and Wood Fiber [**9] refused to sell their products to Rossi Roofing. Rossi contends that the manufacturers refused to deal with him because of pressure exerted on them by defendant distributors. Because Rossi Roofing was unable to purchase the products it wanted directly from manufacturers, it attempted and actually succeeded in buying some of them through other distributors.

In March of 1989, Rossi Roofing purchased GAF product from Passaic Metals, a roofing and siding distributor in North Jersey. After learning this, Bill Higginson of Standard called his competitor, Frank Gurtman, the President of Passaic Metals, and threatened to open a branch near Passaic Metals and put him out of business if Gurtman continued to sell to Rossi. Shortly thereafter, Gurtman explained to Rossi that he could not sell him product because he feared retaliation. However, Gurtman did sell some products to Rossi Roofing after Rossi convinced him to do so.<sup>2</sup>

Rossi also bought GAF [**10] product from DiNaso & Sons, a roofing and siding distributor located in Staten Island. Plaintiff purports that DiNaso's GAF salesmen visited DiNaso & Sons during 1989 and asked them not to sell to Rossi. Despite their request, DiNaso sold GAF product to Rossi.

During the Spring of 1989, Rossi Roofing obtained GAF slatelines from DiNaso & Sons for a job that both Rossi Roofing and Standard [*980] were competing for on the James Street Commons Condominium project. Rossi Roofing sold the GAF slatelines roofing product to roofing applicator John Feher for the job. A Standard salesperson apparently learned from John Feher that he purchased GAF product through Rossi Roofing.

When Rossi Roofing attempted to purchase more slatelines for the James Street Common Condominium project from DiNaso, DiNaso told Rossi Roofing there would be a $ 1.00/sq increase in the price, as GAF had increased DiNaso's price for slateline. Thus, Rossi Roofing was unable to supply James Street Commons with the additional GAF slatelines it needed for subsequent buildings because of the increased price.

In July of 1989, Rossi Roofing entered into a Membership Agreement with the buying group Hardware Wholesalers, Inc. ("HWI"). [**11] Rossi Roofing joined HWI because it could not get the products Rossi Roofing needed directly from manufacturers.

On July 26, 1989, Rossi Roofing placed an order for GAF product with David Heine, Division Manager of Commodities at HWI. Part of the order was scheduled to be picked up the next day. When a Rossi Roofing employee went to pick up the partial order, he was advised by GAF Shipping Department employee Ken Rupert that his superior, District Sales Manager Bud Krusa, had decided that GAF would not release the order to Rossi Roofing.

Joe Rossi went with his attorney, Joseph Gioia, to the South Bound Brook Facility where the order was being held. After speaking with several HWI and GAF employees, Rossi then spoke to Krusa by the telephone. Krusa told Rossi, "I am not selling to you. The distribution is filled. GAF requires no other distributors." Rossi Roofing never obtained GAF product directly through GAF or through HWI. Instead it had to resort to buying the shingles from Strober Supply<sup>3</sup> at a marked-up price.

[**12] On August 4, 1989, Rossi Roofing went to the Celotex plant to pick up an order placed through HWI. Celotex failed to supply the order, stating that it was a mistake.<sup>4</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> Passaic did not sell Rossi any GAF products until September of 1989.

<sup>3</sup> Strober had already been called by GAF instructing them not to sell the shingles to Rossi Roofing.

<sup>4</sup> It is not clear whether plaintiffs are contending that this incident was caused by any of the defendants.

Another company of which Joe Rossi was a principal, Far Hills Lumber and Hardware Corporation, also known as L.V. Ludlow & Co. ("Far Hills"), joined the buying group Servistar on July 31, 1989. Rossi attempted to buy GAF product for Rossi Roofing through Far Hills and Servistar.

On August 2 and 3, 1989, Far Hills placed orders for GAF Timberlines through Servistar's Building Materials Department. Rossi had Far Hills place the GAF orders for the purpose of reselling the GAF product to Rossi Roofing. These orders were filled by GAF and resold by Far Hills to Rossi Roofing. After this transaction was completed, GAF employee Mary Lou Sperr heard that Rossi Roofing was connected to Far Hills.

Standard's Cedar Knolls/Morristown Branch Manager, [**13] Joseph Licciardello, also learned that Rossi Roofing had purchased GAF product from Far Hills. Jorge Esteves, a Standard employee, heard Licciardello state that "That's the last time we're going to be seeing any GAF across the street. They got the -- they were getting the loads through Ludlow [Far Hills], which is American Hardware [the prior name of Servistar]. That's how Joe Rossi was getting GAF and he's going to put an end to that. 'Never going to see another GAF load across the street.'"

On August 11, 1989, Far Hills placed another order of GAF product through Servistar. On August 14, 1989, a Servistar employee informed Far Hills that the GAF order would not be filled, and that GAF had cut Far Hills off from getting GAF product because of Joe Rossi's involvement with Far Hills.

Defendant Wood Fiber manufactures Structodek FS. Structodek FS is a product with a membrane attached which commercial roofers use to eliminate the need to lay a separate underlayment before applying a built-up bitumen-type roof over a rough surface. [*981] Joe Rossi asked Carl Loser of Wood Fiber to sell their products to Rossi Roofing. Loser told Rossi there was pressure from Allied and Standard not to [**14] sell to Rossi and that he did not think he could sell to Rossi Roofing.

Despite Loser's negative response to Rossi's request, Rossi Roofing ordered a trailer load of Structodek FS in June of 1989. Structodek gave Rossi Roofing a ship date of July 5th. On June 27, 1989, Carl Loser informed Rossi Roofing that they could not ship the material to him because it was in a difficult position.

At the end of Rossi Roofing's fiscal year, September 30, 1989, Rossi Roofing had lost approximately $ 350,000. Having been unable to buy GAF and other products, Rossi saw no possibilities of getting the products he needed to allow Rossi Roofing to succeed.

On December 18, 1989, Joseph Rossi, Rossi Roofing, and American Builders & Contractors Supply Co., Inc., ("ABC Supply") entered into an Asset Purchase Agreement pursuant to which ABC Supply agreed to purchase the assets of Rossi Roofing. The sale of Rossi Roofing's assets to ABC Supply occurred on January 8, 1990.

Joseph and Georgia Rossi were also sued on their personal guarantees for uncollected accounts receivables of Rossi Roofing by a number of Rossi Roofing's creditors. Joseph Rossi is still personally paying off the debt owed to the bank [**15] on the Rossi Roofing's line of credit.

On January 8, 1990, ABC opened its doors to the public and hired Joseph Rossi to manage the branch. The Morristown/Cedar Knolls location which Rossi managed for ABC did over $ 5.5 million in sales in 1990, its first year of operation. During 1993, the fourth and final year Rossi managed that location, the sales had increased to over $ 11 million.

On January 31, 1994, Jim Murray, ABC's District Manager, came to the Morristown/Cedar Knolls location and announced that ABC was selling that location to Bradco Supply. Consequently, Rossi later negotiated an agreement with Allied Building Supply. Allied opened a location on Rossi's property in 1994, committed to a lease, and employed Rossi as a manager of that location.

DISCUSSION

Summary Judgment

HN1 [↑] The standard governing summary judgment motions is set forth in Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\), which provides in pertinent part:

the judgment sought shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled [**16] to a judgment as a matter of law.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). A fact is material if it might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing substantive law. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 255, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\).

HN2 [↑] The movant has the initial burden of identifying evidence that it believes shows an absence of genuine issues of material fact. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 324, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 \(1986\). When the nonmovant will bear the burden of proof at trial, the movant's burden can be discharged by showing that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmovant's case. Id. at 325. If the movant establishes the absence of a genuine issue of material fact, the burden shifts to the nonmovant to do more than "simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to material facts." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\). A party opposing summary judgment may not rest merely upon "bare assertions, conclusory allegations or suspicions." Ness v. Marshall, 660 F.2d 517, 519 \(3d Cir. 1981\). The proof must amount to more than a [**17] "scintilla" of factual support for the plaintiff's theory of legal recovery. Advo, Inc. v. Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc., 51 F.3d 1191, 1197 \(3d Cir. 1995\).

HN3 [↑] Summary judgment is no longer looked upon as a disfavored procedural "shortcut"; rather, it presents the district court "with the first opportunity to dispose of meritless [**982] cases." Big Apple BMW, Inc. v. BMW of North Amer., Inc., 974 F.2d 1358, 1362 \(3d Cir. 1992\), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 912, 122 L. Ed. 2d 659, 113 S. Ct. 1262 (1993). "This is true even in antitrust cases, 'where motive and intent play leading roles, the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, and hostile witnesses thicken the plot.'" Id. (quoting Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting Sys., Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 473, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. 486 \(1962\)).

After oral argument in this matter, the Court requested that the plaintiff marshal the facts he maintains support his contention that there was an antitrust violation by the defendants in this case. The plaintiff was, in effect, given the opportunity to present what Judge Fullam, and subsequently Judge Mansmann, referred to in Big Apple as those "19 bits" of evidence tending [**18] to support an antitrust violation. See Big Apple, 974 F.2d at 1374 n.11.

Even after this opportunity, however, the plaintiff has failed to provide any evidence from which a reasonable inference may be drawn that defendants engaged in an antitrust violation. Plaintiff's evidence consists primarily of conclusory allegations or suspicions. HN4 [↑] Although it is not necessary that the plaintiff eliminate every possible independent justification by the manufacturer/distributor so that only evidence of concerted action remains in the record, plaintiff must at least produce "evidence that tends to exclude the possibility of independent action by the manufacturer and distributor." See Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 768, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464, reh'g denied, 466 U.S. 994, 80 L. Ed. 2d 850, 104 S. Ct. 2378 \(1984\).

HN5 [↑] Antitrust law limits the "range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588. More particularly, "conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Id. This is because "mistaken inferences [**19] in such a context 'are especially costly'" and "'chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect.'" Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. F. Schumacher & Co., 37 F.3d 996, 1001 \(3d Cir. 1994\) (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 594), cert. denied, 131 L. Ed. 2d 556, 115 S. Ct. 1691 (1995).

The evidence must be analyzed as a whole, and not taken piecemeal, in determining whether an inference of concerted action is supported. See Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 \(1962\). Plaintiffs in antitrust cases must be afforded the "full benefit of their proof without tightly compartmentalizing the various factual components and wiping the slate clean after scrutiny of each." *Id.* at 699.

Sherman Act Claims

HN6 [↑] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Whether conduct violates the Act is determined on a case-by-case application of the Rule of Reason if it is not a per se case. Business Elecs. Corp. I<sup>**201</sup> v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515, cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1005, 100 L. Ed. 2d 192, 108 S. Ct. 1727 \(1988\).

In order to prove a claim brought under section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must prove:

- (1) that the defendants contracted, combined or conspired among each other; (2) that the combination or conspiracy produced adverse anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the objects of and conduct pursuant to the contract or conspiracy were illegal; and (4) that the plaintiffs were injured as a proximate result of that conspiracy.

Tunis Bros. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d 715, 722 \(3d Cir. 1991\) (quoting Tunis Bros. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., 763 F.2d 1482, 1489 \(3d Cir. 1985\)). At the outset, the Court notes that there is some confusion regarding plaintiff's contention as to whether he is alleging that there was a horizontal or vertical restraint of trade. In plaintiff's motion papers, the contention is that the case is purely [\[\*983\]](#) one of horizontal refusal to deal with plaintiff. At oral argument, however, plaintiff's counsel conceded that there were various levels of parties [\[\*\*21\]](#) involved in the case, but still contended that this case is a group boycott that was generated at the horizontal level.

The allegations here are similar to those addressed in Big Apple, where it was held that the agreement between the dealers, even though the agreement included the manufacturer, was enough to make it a horizontal restraint. Big Apple, 974 F.2d at 1376. Because the Third Circuit has determined that a similar factual scenario represents a horizontal restraint, this Court will analyze the case sub judice in that vein.

The distinction is important, because plaintiff alleges that this case presents a per se violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. The Supreme Court has stated:

HN7 [↑] "There are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use," and . . . group boycotts are of this character.

United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 146, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 \(1966\) (quoting Northern [\[\*\*22\]](#) Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 \(1958\)). A per se case can also be established where there is a horizontal or vertical price fixing agreement.<sup>5</sup> See, e.g., Business Elecs., 485 U.S. 717, 723, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515. Although explicit agreement is not necessary to prove a Sherman Act conspiracy, a conspiracy is evident where there is "joint and collaborative action" which is "pervasive in the initiation, execution, and fulfillment of the plan." 384 U.S. at 143.

For example, in General Motors, a group of automobile [\[\*\*23\]](#) dealers had banded together to complain and force General Motors to put a stop to the practice of some dealers, who would resell their automobiles to discounters. General Motors was successful in persuading those dealers who were doing the selling to discounters to cease the practice. *Id. at 132-38*. The Supreme Court held that this concerted action by the group of dealers and General Motors was a per se violation of the Sherman Act. *Id. at 145*.

<sup>5</sup> There is no evidence that this case presents a price fixing per se case, and the Court finds that it is not a price fixing case. Although plaintiff alleges that he was present at a lunch where the conversation involved setting prices, there is no evidence that price fixing ever occurred with regard to the two defendants against whom this allegation is made. Such an allegation, standing alone, is not enough to propel this case into the range of a per se violation.

Similarly, in Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., the Supreme Court found a per se violation of the Act where "manufacturers and distributors of electrical appliances had conspired among themselves and with a major retailer . . . 'not to sell to Klor's or to sell to it only at discriminatory prices and highly unfavorable terms.'" 359 U.S. 207, 211, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 \(1959\).

The Supreme Court did, however, limit the application of the per se rule in a 1986 case. *Federal Trade Comm'n v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445, 106 S. Ct. 2009 \(1986\)*. Although it acknowledged its holdings in General Motors and Klor's, the Court determined that HN8 the per se approach should be "limited to cases [**24] in which firms with market power boycott suppliers or customers in order to discourage them from doing business with a competitor." *Id. at 458*. See also *Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 298, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 \(1985\)* (holding that the "mere allegation of a concerted refusal to deal does not suffice [as a per se violation] because not all concerted refusals to deal are predominantly anticompetitive").

In this matter, there is no evidence that GAF determined not to sell to plaintiff on the basis of complaints received from the defendants, either individually or in concert. Although it is clear (and defendants Arzee and Standard admit) that they often complained about plaintiff's propensity to offer lower prices to his customers, plaintiff presents no [*984] proof that GAF was approached by a group of the defendant distributors regarding plaintiff's pricing. Nor is there any proof in the record from which an inference can be drawn that this occurred.

More importantly, there is no proof that GAF made its determination not to sell to plaintiff based on anything but a valid business decision. The evidence is [**25] clear that GAF felt that it had adequate distribution. HN9 A manufacturer may sell its product to whomever it chooses. See, e.g., *Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761; Seaboard Supply Co. v. Congoleum Corp., 770 F.2d 367, 374 \(3d Cir. 1985\); Inter-City Tire & Auto Ctr. v. Uniroyal Inc., 701 F. Supp. 1120, 1124 \(D.N.J. 1988\)*, aff'd without opinion, 888 F.2d 1380 (3d Cir. 1989). This, of course, is the touchstone of our free market economy.

Additionally, complaints about pricing by competitors to a manufacturer are normal; such is the nature of the beast of commerce.<sup>6</sup> Such complaints "are natural -- and from the manufacturer's perspective, unavoidable -- reactions by distributors to the activities of their rivals." *Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763*. Even HN10 where a manufacturer acts in response to dealer complaints, not in concert with them, that is unilateral action and is not a per se violation of the Sherman Act. See, e.g., *Regency Oldsmobile, Inc. v. General Motors Corp., 723 F. Supp. 250, 263 \(D.N.J.\), aff'd, 888 F.2d 1380 \(3d Cir. 1989\)*.

[**26] As stated supra, HN11 an explicit agreement is not necessary to prove a Sherman Act conspiracy. An agreement can be implied from the totality of the circumstances after considering the evidence as a whole. The copious amount of documents filed in this matter do not contain any circumstantial or direct evidence, as set forth more fully below, that "reasonably tends to prove that the [defendants] had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." *Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764*.

Many of plaintiff's allegations of a conspiracy that are supported by deposition testimony are centered around several of the defendants discussing plaintiff's chances of success as a competitor. There are also comments by

<sup>6</sup> As Bud Krusa from GAF testified:

Q. And you don't recall whether or not any of those conversations Mr. Roth complained to you about Mr. -- any price that Mr. Rossi had on any particular job?

A. No different than anybody else complaining about the same thing, or Mr. Rossi calling about somebody else's prices. Everybody complained about everybody . . . .

competitors to plaintiff to the effect that he would "never make it" in his new business. Plaintiff also alleges that certain of the defendants would ask a GAF representative whether GAF was selling to plaintiff after he started his own business.

These allegations clearly do not allow this Court to infer that these conversations rose to the level of a conspiracy amongst any of the defendants. The inference to be drawn from the facts alleged by plaintiff [**27] in this matter is that certain of the defendants, particularly Standard and Arzee, had a strong aversion to Rossi and would protest anything that he did. But the missing link in the alleged conspiratorial chain is GAF. The conspiracy alleged is as to all defendants, yet no evidence has been adduced to allow this Court to draw the inference that GAF acted in concert with the other defendants.

Plaintiff has stated, both in his submissions to the Court and during oral argument, that Big Apple is directly on point in determining this matter. However, the factual scenario in Big Apple is completely different.<sup>7</sup> In Big Apple, there was "consistent evidence that BMW NA encouraged the Potamkins to acquire BMW dealerships, that the New York and Philadelphia dealers subsequently complained to BMW NA about the Potamkins, and that BMW NA later denied the Potamkins franchises giving allegedly pretextual reasons." 974 F.2d at 1365. There was evidence in that case of various meetings [**985] between representatives of BMW North America and the Potamkins.

[**28] Equally distinguishable is the Arnold Pontiac-GMC case. *Arnold Pontiac-GMC, Inc. v. General Motors Corp.*, 786 F.2d 564 \(3d Cir. 1986\). In that case, the plaintiff had an established business and there were a series of identifiable meetings and documents involving serious discussions with the defendant. *Id. at 568-71*. The dealer disapprovals arose after an initial meeting with the plaintiff and defendant to discuss whether the plaintiff had fulfilled all of the defendant's conditions for the new franchise. *Id. at 573-74*.

Here, GAF never promised or even made any overtures to Rossi that it would use him as a distributor of GAF products. It told him time and time again that distribution was filled. None of plaintiff's entities was ever an existing distributor of GAF products or products of the other manufacturer defendants. After leaving Standard, which did carry GAF products, Rossi attempted to start his own business. It was at that point that GAF maintained that it had adequate distribution in the area.

According to plaintiff, GAF supplied its roofing products to over twenty-five different distributors in New Jersey. HN12 A "unilateral decision of a single manufacturer [**29] to rearrange its distribution structure by limiting or increasing the number of its dealers or transferring the number of its dealers or transferring its business to different dealers does not violate the Sherman Act." *Seaboard*, 770 F.2d at 374.

Plaintiff can point to no evidence that would support its assertion that this was pretextual. Plaintiff had just started his business directly adjacent to Standard, an existing GAF distributor. An inference can certainly be drawn that because plaintiff was a start-up operation, with no "track record," GAF validly determined that it would not want to jeopardize its relationship with Standard.

Plaintiff does maintain that GAF began supplying ABC after he was told that GAF had adequate distribution, but the fact remains that ABC was an existing, national distributor of GAF products which opened in the area where plaintiff had his business. This HN13 conduct is as "consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." *Matsushita*, 475 U.S. at 588. Such a business decision to continue working with a nationally competitive distributor fails to rise to the [**30] level of an antitrust violation. HN14 The antitrust laws are to be used as a shield against clearly anticompetitive activity, not as a rapier to avenge every hurt feeling a businessperson may feel that he has suffered at the hands of his competitors.

<sup>7</sup> Perhaps the most important distinction between the case sub judice and Big Apple is that, in Big Apple, the denial of the franchise to the plaintiff meant that the plaintiff could not even open its business. Here, plaintiff was in business and was able to obtain alternate products from other manufacturers.

Parenthetically, GAF knew of Rossi's involvement with ABC during the time it continued to do business with ABC. If GAF and the other distributors had such a venomous animosity towards Rossi, it defies common sense that GAF, if it was participating in some sort of conspiracy, would sell to ABC's Cedar Knolls office if Rossi continued to be employed there. GAF certainly could have asserted its power and urged ABC to dismiss Rossi.

The Court therefore finds that there is no per se violation in this case. Moreover, the Court finds that there can be no inference drawn, looking at the evidence as a whole, that there was a conspiracy or agreement to prevent plaintiff from obtaining certain roofing products. It should be noted that although plaintiff alleges that "many manufacturers" refused to sell directly to plaintiff,<sup>8</sup> most of the proofs adduced by plaintiff are directed towards GAF. Such a bald allegation is clearly not enough for this [\[\*\*31\]](#) Court to infer that all of the referenced manufacturers were involved in any agreement with any other party or parties not to sell to Rossi.

[\[\*986\]](#) In concluding its analysis of the "agreement" prong of the test, the Court should note and address at this point the specific allegations made by plaintiff with regard to the defendants other than GAF. Many of the allegations are of unilateral comments made by one defendant to Rossi. HN15↑ "Whether an unlawful conspiracy or combination is demonstrated should be judged by what the parties actually did rather than by the words they used." Nichols Motorcycle Supply, Inc. v. Dunlop Tire Corp., 913 F. Supp. 1088, 1100 (N.D. Ill. 1995).

Although the Court will point out plaintiff's allegations separately as to each defendant for purposes of addressing them, the evidence is not being pigeonholed or "compartmentalized."<sup>9</sup> Rather, this method of dealing with the facts will alleviate any potential obfuscation of the issues. The Court has painstakingly reviewed this record, and the supplemental submissions, and has considered all allegations together.

Wood Fiber

Plaintiff alleges that Wood Fiber refused to sell to him because of pressure from distributors in the area, particularly Standard and Allied. What plaintiff actually testified to at his deposition was that from his conversations with Carl Loser, the Wood Fiber representative, he would "have to assume [\[\*\*33\]](#) by what he said to me that they were getting pressure, but he didn't say, hey, we are not going to sell you right at the first go round." Rossi Dep., T368-69, attached as Exhibit EE to Certification of Steven M. Richman ("Richman Cert.").

Plaintiff states that he has proffered evidence that the distributor defendants interfered with potential suppliers, including Wood Fiber. With respect to Wood Fiber, however, plaintiff testified that he did not know for a fact whether Licciardello or Higginson called Loser at Wood Fiber, nor did Loser specify what pressure was being exerted on him.

It is clear that plaintiff's suppositions are not enough to allow an inference that Wood Fiber was engaged in some sort of agreement or conspiracy with the other defendants to deny plaintiff the products he sought. It must be remembered that HN16↑ a party may not rest upon "bare assertions, conclusory allegations or suspicions" to overcome a motion for summary judgment. Ness v. Marshall, 660 F.2d 517, 519 (3d Cir. 1981).

Plaintiff has not presented any evidence which shows that Wood Fiber met, or otherwise conversed, with any of the other defendants in this matter. Plaintiff had not applied for credit [\[\*\*34\]](#) with Wood Fiber, a prerequisite to obtaining products directly from the company. Plaintiff merely speculates that some defendants were putting "pressure" on Wood Fiber, without ever particularizing what he means. Such "evidence" is woefully inadequate.

<sup>8</sup> In plaintiff's opposition brief, it is alleged that GAF, Wood Fiber, Celotex, Certainteed, Wolverine, Atlas, Johns Manville, Suprador, Hastings Aluminum, US Intec, Tamko, Karnak, Owens Corning, Vipco, and Nailite refused to sell product directly to plaintiff. Plaintiff only sued GAF, Certainteed, Wolverine, Nailite, and Wood Fibre. GAF and Wood Fiber are the only manufacturer defendants still remaining in the case.

<sup>9</sup> This is to lessen plaintiff's concerns that defendants, in filing separate summary judgment motions, are in effect asking this Court to review in isolation plaintiff's evidence with respect to each defendant.

Even if Wood Fiber determined not to sell to plaintiff based on other distributors' complaints about him, that reaction to criticism is not an antitrust violation.

Servistar

There is a substantial lack of evidence adduced by plaintiff with regard to his allegations that Servistar "joined the conspiracy" when it refused to compel GAF to provide materials to it for purchase by Ludlow/Far Hills, a member of its purchasing cooperative. Servistar has maintained that the reason it did not order a second load of GAF product for Ludlow/Far Hills (after having ordered a large first load, which plaintiff's trucking company picked up directly from GAF's facility) was because Ludlow/Far Hills had failed to submit all of the promised personal guarantees from the partners. Therefore, in connection with the "shelf stocking" order Ludlow/Far Hills was to place, this second GAF shipment would have exceeded the credit limit set by Servistar.

[**35] Even assuming as true plaintiff's assertion that Servistar was "pressured" by GAF not to sell to Ludlow/Far Hills because of Rossi's connection, such pressure or refusal by GAF does not allow an inference that Servistar joined any conspiracy, which the Court has found does not exist in this matter. Rossi [*987] has testified that he was told by an unidentified Servistar employee that GAF would not ship the product because it was for Rossi and because GAF had adequate distribution. Rossi also speculates that it was a Servistar decision not to sell him the product. Servistar, however, would be unable to override GAF's decision because GAF was the manufacturer and GAF had the roofing products. Servistar was, in effect, the alter ego of its members.

Plaintiff has adduced no evidence that Servistar had conversations with any of the distributor defendants in this matter; therefore, any involvement in the "horizontal" conspiracy alleged by plaintiff is nonexistent.

Standard Roofing, the Estate of Robert Higginson, William Higginson, and Joseph Licciardello

The evidence with regard to Standard is clearly the most particularized, perhaps due in large part to Rossi's previous employment [**36] relationship with Standard. Plaintiff alleges that he was terminated by Standard because of his refusal to "cooperate with his neighbors" in keeping prices level.<sup>10</sup> This termination occurred some two years before Rossi attempted to start his own business. The allegation of price fixing, moreover, makes very little economic sense, as plaintiff alleges only that Arzee and Standard were involved in the conversation. The roofing and siding market in northern New Jersey was very large. Common sense dictates that absent an agreement between most or all of the distributors, such an agreement to fix prices would be futile.

Furthermore, there is no proof as to actual price fixing. There is merely proof of conversations by and between certain competitors regarding prices. Plaintiff has testified that the market was [**37] incredibly competitive. It is axiomatic that this competition stimulates the urge to discover the prices being charged by one's competitors. Absent more tangible proof, this Court will not, and can not, make the vault to a conclusion of price fixing.

Plaintiff also points to statements made by Licciardello to the effect that he and Arzee would do anything they could to see Rossi's business fail. This unilateral statement by Licciardello does nothing to implicate any of the other defendants. Licciardello testified that he merely made the statement based on what he knew as the personal animosity felt by Arzee and Allied towards Rossi. HN17 A jousting match in the commercial arena is not sufficient to compel a finding of an antitrust violation. It is more than natural for competitors to discuss a third party's attempt to go into business. There is no proof presented of any concerted activity amongst Standard, Arzee and Allied.

Plaintiff next asserts that Standard tried to block his attempts at getting products from certain manufacturers. The evidence presented by plaintiff points to completely unilateral conduct by Standard. This Court requested that plaintiff marshal all of the facts revealing [**38] the concerted activity in this matter. Even the conversations between Standard and certain manufacturers, which did not rise to the level of concerted activity, were merely complaints by Standard with regard to Rossi's pricing strategies. Plaintiff points to evidence of conversations between Licciardello and representatives of Bird and Gold Bond where Licciardello complained about Rossi. Yet, these are two of the manufacturers who did sell to Rossi.

---

<sup>10</sup> Although it appears that plaintiff testified in another proceeding that he did not know why he was terminated from Standard, this Court will not engage in a credibility determination on summary judgment.

Plaintiff also alleges that Standard stopped purchasing from HiFinn after learning that HiFinn may have sold to Rossi. However, a distributor's decision to stop buying from a particular manufacturer is hardly evidence of a concerted activity. This is as far from concerted activity as one can get.

There is also evidence that Bill Higginson spoke with Francis Gurtman at Passaic Metals and threatened that if Passaic Metals sold to Rossi, Standard would open a business "right around the corner" and take all of Passaic Metal's customers. Licciardello called back shortly thereafter to apologize for Higginson, and Passaic Metals continued to do business with Rossi.

[*988] With regard to evidence of an agreement between GAF and Standard, the most [**39] that plaintiff can produce is conversations between Licciardello and Bud Krusa, GAF's representative, or some other person at GAF. These unilateral conversations are not evidence of a horizontal conspiracy, nor are they even evidence of a vertical conspiracy, because there is no evidence of price fixing.

One such conversation, related through supposition by a Standard employee, was a query as to where Rossi was getting GAF materials. Other testimony to which plaintiff points involves conversations between distributors as to Rossi's discounting. Licciardello admitted that he had discussions with Bob Schaab at Standard about whether Rossi was going to open up his own business, because they were concerned that Rossi would affect the pricing in the area and might take business away from Standard.

The Court fails to see the significance in plaintiff's reliance on this testimony and other testimony like it. Common sense dictates that Standard would be an ineffective business venture if it were not concerned with the pricing of its competitors. Such a concern is commonplace, and evidence of conversations regarding that concern are simply not at the level of an antitrust violation.

Plaintiff [**40] also points to testimony regarding certain rebate programs utilized by GAF and other manufacturers. There is no inference which can be drawn that these programs are in any way linked to some sort of horizontal boycott or conspiracy. There are also allegations that individuals from Standard and Arzee used to sit in cars near Rossi's business to "spy" on him, but the testimony upon which plaintiff relies only mentions Arzee employees. The three businesses were in the same general location on the same street. It is only natural that one or more of his competitors might have been observing his business to identify Rossi's customers. It is not proof of any antitrust violation.

Finally, plaintiff alleges that his bid for an expansion was opposed by Standard and Arzee. There is testimony regarding Licciardello and Cary Roth being at the planning board meeting, and Cary Roth questioning why his similar request for an expansion had previously been denied. Licciardello did not even speak at the meeting. Such an interest in an expansion of a neighboring property is natural, and no inference can be drawn that such opposition is violative of the antitrust laws.

Taking into account the entirety [**41] of the preceding evidence, it is clear that any unilateral activity in which Standard might have been involved did not rise to the level of an antitrust violation. Business is just that: business. The fact that Standard may have complained about Rossi's pricing or the way in which he did business is a natural occurrence in the world of commerce. If such complaints, even if made on a daily basis, were antitrust violations, no doubt the federal courts would be faced with a maelstrom of lawsuits.

Arzee, Alvin Roth, and Cary Roth

Plaintiff maintains that Arzee complained to GAF about plaintiff's pricing and that Alvin Roth was present at the lunch where Rossi alleges pricing was discussed while he was employed by Standard. In his allegations regarding Arzee, plaintiff cites to deposition testimony of Licciardello, which states that they were "going to be competitors and fight for every order." This testimony does nothing to implicate Arzee in any agreement.

Also, plaintiff alleges that Arzee and Standard fixed prices after he was "driven out of business." There is little of substance in these allegations, as much of the testimony amounts to supposition.

There is testimony [**42] that Arzee and Standard were "a nickel apart" on pricing for certain jobs. In a competitive industry, that nickel could very well mean the difference between getting a job and not getting a job. This "nickel" difference allows no inference of any agreement on prices. In fact, the same deponent said that Standard subsequently raised its prices.

Denise LeMattey, a Standard employee, testified that Licciardello called Cary Roth at Arzee to see why Arzee had quoted such a cheap price on a job. She also said that Arzee's prices were "around the same price" [*989] as Standard's. Later in her testimony, she said that, when asked whether she had ever discussed prices with a competitor: "Sometimes after a job is given out, if I run into a salesperson I would ask him, how could you quote that price?" LeMattey Dep., T23:14-21. Such curiosity is not an antitrust violation.

Rule of Reason Analysis

Having found no evidence from which a conspiracy or agreement can be inferred as to any of the defendants, this Court's inquiry could be halted at this point, as the first element of proving a Section 1 claim is lacking. More importantly, the Court's inquiry at this point is finished because plaintiff [**43] has pled only a per se case, and summary judgment on the antitrust claims could be granted for that reason alone.

For the sake of completeness, however, the Court will liberally construe plaintiff's pleadings and analyze the facts presented by plaintiff under the rule of reason because HN18 [↑] "there is a presumption in favor of a rule of reason standard." Business Elecs., 485 U.S. at 726 (stating that "departure from that standard must be justified by demonstrable economic effect, such as the facilitation of cartelizing, rather than formalistic distinctions").

From the beginning of this century, "a judicial gloss on Section 1 has established the 'rule of reason' as the prevailing standard of analysis." Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\). Under this standard of analysis, the finder of fact must weigh all of the given circumstances of a case in determining whether a restrictive practice must be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition. Id. The touchstone of the rule of reason test is proof of anticompetitive effect, and the goal of antitrust law is the protection of interbrand, not [**44] intrabrand, competition. Id. at 52.

The Court has already found that no agreement or conspiracy existed in this matter. Consequently, the next issue to be addressed under the rule of reason is the relevant product and geographic market. HN19 [↑] A relevant product market is defined as "those commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes." United States v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 \(1956\). The relevant product market in this matter is the entire market of roofing and siding materials. Plaintiff contends that GAF may be a "preferred" brand, but consumer preference is just that: a preference, and not a market. GAF is not so unique as to comprise its own "market." See, e.g., id.; Mogul v. General Motors Corp., 391 F. Supp. 1305, 1313 \(E.D. Pa. 1975\), aff'd without opinion, 527 F.2d 645 \(3d Cir. 1976\); see also R.D. Imports Ryno Indus., Inc. v. Mazda Distrib. \(Gulf\), Inc., 807 F.2d 1222, 1225 n.2 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 818, 98 L. Ed. 2d 38, 108 S. Ct. 75 (1987); Kingsport Motors, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 644 F.2d 566, 571 \(6th Cir. 1981\).

Plaintiff testified at his deposition [**45] that "there were approximately 30 roofing and siding distributors in North Jersey, not including the mass merchandisers, small lumberyards, you name it, hardware stores that might have roofing." J. Rossi Dep., Vol. I, T14:4-24. Additionally, it is agreed that the market in the "New Jersey/New York metropolitan area is probably one of the toughest, most competitive marketplaces in the country." See J. Rossi

Dep., American Builders & Contractors Supply Co., Inc. v. Rossi, T16:23-T17:1, attached as Exhibit 15 to Berger Cert.

The relevant market, to which the parties seemingly agree, is clearly the Northern New Jersey roofing and siding distributors market, and the relevant product market was the totality of the products in the roofing and siding line. The manufacturers of these products were numerous, as plaintiff readily admits. See J. Rossi Dep., Vol. I, T30:17-T31:1, T32:20-23; T33:17-18; T35:19-22; T37:8-11; T37:21-T38:5; T40:15-T44:5. The other manufacturers included Owens-Corning, Manville, Bird, Iko, Elk, Celotex, Tamko, US Intec, Georgia Pacific, CertainTeed, Genstar, Nord Bitumi, and Tarmac. See Expert Report of Dr. Adam B. Jaffe, attached [*990] as Exhibit A to Certification [**46] of Dr. Adam B. Jaffe, Exhibits 3 and 5.

HN20↑ To prove that a conspiracy or an agreement produced adverse, anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic market, the impact on the market is the key focus, rather than on the individual participants in the market. "The antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors." Brown Shoe v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962). Plaintiff has not shown what exactly were the adverse anticompetitive effects to the northern New Jersey product market.

In a recent Second Circuit case, the court had before it a plaintiff who filed suit alleging that various distributors had complained to the defendant about its plan to sell exhaust systems to the plaintiff. K.M.B. Warehouse Distrib., Inc. v. Walker Mfg. Co., 61 F.3d 123 (2d Cir. 1995).

The court affirmed the district court's granting of summary judgment for the defendants, stating that HN21↑ the plaintiff "bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market." Id. at 127.

The Second Circuit found that there was no [**47] appreciable effect on either interbrand or intrabrand competition by Walker's refusal to supply the plaintiff. The plaintiff could not, therefore, shoulder its initial requirement of proof. Although in K.M.B. the court determined that the restriction was a vertical one, the court's analysis under the rule of reason is instructive. Where, as here, the plaintiff is unable to establish that any adverse effect on competition occurred, the antitrust laws are not violated. Even though plaintiff alleges that GAF was a preferred product in the roofing market, such "isolated statements of preference are not a sufficient 'empirical demonstration concerning the [adverse] effect of the [defendants'] arrangement on price or quality.'" K.M.B., 61 F.3d at 128 (quoting Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 30 n.49, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984)).

In K.M.B., as here, there were many distributors of Walker (in this case GAF) products in the relevant geographic market. This provided for a fiercely competitive intrabrand market, and the GAF market in northern New Jersey also continues to be competitive. The fact that plaintiff was not permitted to compete [**48] in the market is not, alone, sufficient to show an adverse effect on intrabrand competition. More importantly, even though plaintiff was unable to get GAF products from GAF, he was able to carry, and indeed did carry, alternate products. The impact on the total interbrand market was therefore unaffected.

Plaintiff was able to get Wood Fiber products from sources other than the manufacturer, and did so on several occasions, reselling the product to its customer at a higher price. See Plaintiff's Admissions Nos. 1, 4, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, attached as Exhibit L to Richman Cert. Rossi also obtained GAF products from other sources, albeit at prices slightly higher than what he purchased them for when he was at Standard. Plaintiff was also able to acquire products directly from Bird and Gold Bond, two manufacturers.

There is, looking at a totality of the evidence presented by plaintiff, no inference which can be drawn that there was any adverse, anticompetitive effect in the relevant geographic and product markets. The market continues to be one of the most competitive in the country with regard to roofing and siding products. The fact that one competitor may not have been able to carry [**49] products from a few manufacturers does not, absent proof of some illicit agreement or conspiracy, equal the harm against which the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. Plaintiff was able to acquire products necessary to engage himself in the competitive atmosphere of the northern New Jersey roofing and siding market. Plaintiff points to no evidence that the availability of other brands of products or the price of those products were affected negatively. Builders and other craftspersons were able to purchase the materials they wished from any number of distributors, and plaintiff has not alleged that the prices of those products were affected. Because comparable goods at competitive prices were [*991] available in the market, there is no showing here of any anticompetitive effect. See, e.g., Tunis, 952 F.2d at 728.

The third part of the test -- that the object of and the conduct pursuant to any agreement or conspiracy was illegal -- is not met. Because the Court has determined, based upon a review of all of plaintiff's proffered evidence, that there was no agreement or conspiracy between or amongst any defendants in this matter, an analysis of this prong of the test would be repetitious.

[**50] The final question that need be answered is whether plaintiff was injured as a proximate result of any conspiracy. Even assuming, for this prong of the test only, that a conspiracy or agreement existed, plaintiff has pointed to nothing which would suggest that any business losses he sustained was related to any such agreement or conspiracy.

Plaintiff contends that he was injured in several ways.<sup>11</sup> First, he alleges that the defendants' actions prevented him from beginning operations of Rossi-Florence. Second, he alleges that Rossi Roofing suffered injuries because, during its entire time of operation, it was unable to obtain the roofing and siding materials it needed to compete.

[**51] These arguments are unsupported by the record. HN22 [↑] Damage claims must be presented in a manner that is not based on guesswork or speculation. See Malley-Duff & Assocs., Inc. v. Crown Life Ins. Co., 734 F.2d 133, 148 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1072, 83 L. Ed. 2d 505, 105 S. Ct. 564 (1984). Plaintiff's damages expert, Regan R. Rockhill, CPA, based his damages estimates on a host of assumptions, the most basic assumption being that "the most appropriate way to look at what Mr. Rossi would have done in operating his own business is that he would have essentially followed the business practices he had followed the prior 14 years while at Standard Roofings." Report of Regan R. Rockhill, attached as Exhibit P to Richman Cert., at 2.

The paradigm utilized by Rockhill amounts to nothing more than a "but for" damage model. Rossi had no experience in his own business. Rockhill never analyzed what products were needed to assure a successful distributorship, and there is no proof as to causation. Perhaps most importantly, Rockhill failed to engage in any analysis regarding the impact of any defendants in the case to determine what harm, if any, was caused by the alleged antitrust actions as opposed to other factors, [**52] such as Rossi's management style or general business conditions. Rockhill does not specify any products in his report, and he did not separate any damages attributable to Rossi-Florence and Rossi Roofing.

HN23 [↑] Where a plaintiff fails to present evidence which provides a sufficient basis for an award of damages, it cannot recover. An award of damages must be proved to the point where they can be determined by reasonable inference, not by speculation or guess. A court must be able to connect any damages to the conduct of the defendant. See Van Dyk Research Corp. v. Xerox Corp., 478 F. Supp. 1268, 1327-28 \(D.N.J. 1979\), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 905, 69 L. Ed. 2d 405, 101 S. Ct. 3029 (1981). See also Southern Pac. Com. Co. v. American Tel. & Tele. Co., 556 F. Supp. 825, 1090 \(D.D.C. 1983\), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1005, 84 L. Ed. 2d 380, 105 S. Ct. 1359 (1985) (holding that a "but for" damage model is "fatally deficient" where it provides "no basis for the Court to determine without speculation the amount of damage, if any, caused by any of the particular actions of the defendants").

For the reasons above, the Court finds that plaintiff's damages model is deficient as a matter [**53] of law.

<sup>11</sup> Although defendants have raised an issue regarding Joseph Rossi's individual standing as a plaintiff, the Court need not reach that issue. He acted at all times through his corporation, and he alleges that he was damaged by the inability of Rossi Roofing to get product. He also was allegedly damaged by his inability to utilize his own funds or obtain alternative financing after the failure of Rossi-Florence/Rossi Roofing. Because the Court has found that no antitrust violation exists, it will not engage in the standing analysis described by the Third Circuit in In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litigation, 998 F.2d 1144, 1165-66 \(3d Cir. 1993\).

CONCLUSION

Based upon the foregoing, the motions made by defendants -- Standard Roofings, [*992] Inc., Arzee Roofing Supply Corp., GAF Corporation, Allied Roofing, Inc., Servistar Corp., Robert Higginson (deceased), William Higginson, Alvin Roth, Cary Roth, Joseph Licciardello, and Wood Fibre Industries, Inc. -- for summary judgment dismissing plaintiff's Complaint are GRANTED. Plaintiff's Complaint is therefore DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

An appropriate Order accompanies this Letter Opinion.

NICHOLAS H. POLITAN

U.S.D.J.

ORDER

This matter, having come before the Court on motions by defendants -- Standard Roofings, Inc., Arzee Roofing Supply Corp., GAF Corporation, Allied Roofing, Inc., Servistar Corp., Robert Higginson (deceased), William Higginson, Alvin Roth, Cary Roth, Joseph Licciardello, and Wood Fibre Industries, Inc. -- for summary judgment dismissing the Complaint of plaintiffs, Joseph Rossi, Rossi Florence Corp., and Rossi Roofing, Inc.; and oral argument having been heard on the motion on October 23, 1996; and the parties thereafter having provided the Court with additional submissions; and for good cause shown, as more fully set forth [**54] in the accompanying Letter Opinion;

IT IS on this 26th day of March, 1997,

ORDERED that plaintiffs' Complaint be and is hereby GRANTED; and it is further

ORDERED that plaintiff's Complaint be and is hereby DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

NICHOLAS H. POLITAN

U.S.D.J.

---

End of Document

Rohlfing v. Manor Care

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

March 27, 1997, Decided ; March 28, 1997, DOCKETED

Case No. 96 C 3935

Reporter

172 F.R.D. 330 *; 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3779 **; 1997-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,875

JOHN ARNOLD ROHLFING, as executor of the estate of SAMUEL ROGERS TAYLOR, and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, v. MANOR CARE, INC., MANOR HEALTHCARE CORP., and VITALINK PHARMACY SERVICES, INC., Defendants.

Disposition: [**1] Defendant's motion to dismiss (15-1 & 43-1) granted in part and denied in part. Plaintiff's motion for class certification (38-1) granted in part and denied in part.

Core Terms

---

residents, pharmaceutical, subsidiary, predominate, enterprise, nursing home, facilities, defendants', fiduciary duty, conspiracy, prices, cases, Sherman Act, relevant market, common issue, plaintiffs', antitrust, Pharmacy, class certification, class action, misrepresentations, allegations, deceptive, omissions, products, purposes, fiduciary duty claim, member of the class, unity of interest, class member

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Adequacy of Representation

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Commonality

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Numerosity

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Typicality

HN1[] Responses, Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a) specifies four preliminary requirements that any proposed class must meet: One or more members of a class may sue or be sued as representative parties on behalf of all only if (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable, (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class,

(3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class, and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

HN2 Class Actions, Certification of Classes

Plaintiff bears the burden of showing that the proposed class meets the requirements for certification.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN3 Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

In evaluating a motion for class certification the court does not examine the merits of the case.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN4 Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

To meet the typicality requirement, the named plaintiff acting on behalf of the class must show that his claims arise from the same event or practice or course of conduct that gives rise to the claims of other class members and his or her claims are based on the same legal theory. This requirement is not particularly strict: it may be met even if there are factual distinctions between the claims of the named plaintiffs and those of other class members. Thus similarity of legal theory may control even in the face of differences of fact.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Members > Named Members

HN5 Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

The requirement that the named plaintiff be able to fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class, Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(4), has two distinct elements: (1) the named plaintiff cannot have antagonistic or conflicting claims with other members of the class; and (2) the named plaintiff and his attorneys must be able to prosecute the action vigorously.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN6 Prerequisites for Class Action, Predominance

The first requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(3\) is that the questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN7 Sherman Act, Claims

In order to prevail on a claim under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must prove three elements: (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) a resultant unreasonable restraint of trade in a relevant market; and (3) injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

HN8 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The theory of liability under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 requires plaintiffs to prove: (1) (defendants') possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > Fraud

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN9 Claims, Fraud

To state a civil Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., claim based upon mail fraud, a plaintiff must show: (1) an enterprise; (2) engaged in a pattern; (3) of racketeering activity; (4) which constituted a scheme to defraud; (5) involving use of the mails in furtherance of the scheme; and (6) the scheme proximately caused injury to plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > Fraud

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN10 [ ] Claims, Fraud

Courts have adopted two different approaches to the reliance requirement in Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., class action suits based on fraud. When the fraud was perpetrated in a uniform manner against every member of the class, such as when all plaintiffs received virtually identical written materials from defendants, courts typically hold that individual reliance questions do not predominate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN11 [ ] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

When the fraudulent conduct was not uniform with respect to all plaintiffs, such as when numerous oral misrepresentations are alleged or when claims are based on advertisements that may not have been seen by every plaintiff, courts treat individual reliance questions as predominating over the common Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., issues.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN12 [ ] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

To state a claim under the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act, 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. 505/1 et seq., plaintiffs must show: (1) that defendants engaged in a deceptive act or practice; (2) intent on defendants' part that plaintiffs rely on the deception; and (3) that the deception occurred in the course of conduct involving trade or commerce.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Fiduciary Responsibilities

Governments > Fiduciaries

HN13 [ ] Contract Interpretation, Fiduciary Responsibilities

A fiduciary duty exists in relationships where there is confidence reposed on one side and a resulting superiority and influence on the other.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN14 [ ] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

The final requirement imposed on class proponents by Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(3\) is a showing that a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN15 [] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

Dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) is improper unless it appears beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. For purposes of this motion, the court must take all of the well-pleaded factual allegations in the complaint as true, and construe them in the light most favorable to plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN16 [] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

In order to state a claim for monopolization or attempted monopolization under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, plaintiff must show that defendant possessed, or had a reasonable possibility of gaining possession of, monopoly power in a relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN17 [] Sherman Act, Claims

Plaintiff presenting a Sherman Act claim under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 bears the burden of alleging a relevant market.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN18 [] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\) provides that in all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting the fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

**HN19** [L] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

In Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., cases based on fraud, the plaintiff must, within reason, describe the time, place, and content of the mail and wire communications, and it must identify the parties to these communications.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

**HN20** [L] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

In evaluating the sufficiency of the pleadings, we bear in mind the purposes of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\): (1) protecting defendants' reputations; (2) preventing fishing expeditions; and (3) providing adequate notice to defendants.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

**HN21** [L] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

After an enterprise has been identified, a 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\) plaintiff must also allege that a "person" associated with the enterprise conducted or participated, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

**HN22** [L] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

It is clear that the continuity element of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., is satisfied where it is shown that the predicates are a regular way of conducting defendant's ongoing legitimate business or of conducting or participating in an ongoing and legitimate RICO enterprise.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > False Pretenses > Elements

**HN23** [L] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

To assert a claim under the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act, 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. 505/2, plaintiff must allege that defendants have committed "unfair or deceptive acts or practices." The statute indicates that such acts include, but are not limited to, any deception, fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation or the concealment, suppression or omission of any material fact, with the intent that others rely upon the concealment, suppression or omission.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Fiduciary Responsibilities

Governments > Fiduciaries

Torts > Intentional Torts > Breach of Fiduciary Duty > Elements

Torts > Intentional Torts > Breach of Fiduciary Duty > General Overview

HN24 Contract Interpretation, Fiduciary Responsibilities

In determining whether a fiduciary relation exists, a court must consider factors such as kinship, age disparity, health, mental condition, education, business experience, and the extent of reliance.

Contracts Law > Breach > General Overview

Governments > Fiduciaries

Torts > ... > Compensatory Damages > Types of Losses > Economic Losses

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Fiduciary Responsibilities

Torts > Intentional Torts > Breach of Fiduciary Duty > General Overview

HN25 Contracts Law, Breach

A fiduciary duty exists independently of any contract between parties, and so the economic loss doctrine is inapplicable to claims for breaches of fiduciary duties.

Counsel: For JOHN ARNOLD ROHLFING est Samuel Rogers Taylor, executor, plaintiff: Cathleen M. Combs, Daniel A. Edelman, James O. Lattner, Rick D. Young, Edelman & Combs, Chicago, IL.

For MANOR CARE INC, MANOR HEALTHCARE CORP, VITALINK PHARMACY SERVICES INC, defendants: James J. Casey, Amy Beth Manning, Scott Steven Becvar, Ross & Hardies, P.C., Chicago, IL. William O Bittman, Reed, Smith, Shaw & McClay, Washington, DC.

Judges: MARVIN E. ASPEN, United States District Judge

Opinion by: MARVIN E. ASPEN

Opinion

---

[*333] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

MARVIN E. ASPEN, Chief Judge:

Plaintiff John Rohlfing<sup>1</sup> has filed a five count complaint against Defendants<sup>2</sup> Manor Care, Inc., Manor Healthcare Corp., and Vitalink Pharmacy Services, Inc., alleging claims for antitrust violations, fraud, and breach of fiduciary duty. Rohlfing has filed a motion for class certification. The defendants, in addition to lodging objections to the class motion, have filed a motion to dismiss directed at every count of the complaint. For the reasons set forth below, [**2] each motion is granted in part and denied in part.

I. Background

3

[**3] Manor Care, Inc., owns a large network of nursing homes which provide a variety of services to their residents, ranging from "high acuity" (intensive) nursing care to custodial care and assisted living arrangements. See Compl. P 4. There are 179 Manor Care facilities located in 28 different states. See id. PP 4-5. Manor Care operates through a handful of subsidiary corporations. Manor Healthcare Corp. is a wholly-owned subsidiary which is responsible for operating the Manor Care facilities. See id. P4. Eighteen of these facilities, spread across 13 different states, obtain their pharmaceutical services from Vitalink Pharmacy Services, Inc. ("Vitalink"), in which Manor Care holds an 82.3% ownership interest. See id. PP 6-8. In addition to supplying residents with necessary pharmaceuticals, Vitalink also performs a number of consulting services for Manor Care residents, such as monitoring potential drug interaction problems and reviewing patients' drug administration records. See id. PP 9-10. Vitalink also provides similar services to nursing homes outside the Manor Care network, see id. PP 12-13, but despite this alternative source of revenue the company [*334] remains [**4] closely connected to Manor Care, on which it depends for a number of essential services, including tax services, legal services, accounting services, insurance, preparation of SEC filings, and access to credit. See id. PP 11, 14.

On June 2, 1995, Samuel Taylor entered the Manor Care facility located in Hinsdale, Illinois. See id. P 16. In order to gain entry, Taylor signed Manor Care's "Admission Agreement," which is a form contract provided by Manor Care to all prospective residents. See id. P 18. Among the many provisions in this contract is one pertaining to pharmaceutical services: it indicates that the facility has developed a number of policies and procedures regarding drug therapy, and that it has selected a "Designated Pharmacy" that is equipped to meet these requirements. See id. P 21. The prospective resident has the right to select a different pharmacy of his own provided that his choice is capable of complying with Manor Care's policies and procedures. See id. PP 21-22. The Manor Care pharmaceutical policy requires, among other things, that medications be individually sealed in a manner that is difficult, if not impossible, for most retail pharmacies [**5] to emulate. See id. PP 23-27.

For the Manor Care facility Taylor entered, the Designated Pharmacy was a Vitalink franchise. In an effort to persuade residents entering its facilities to select Vitalink as their pharmaceutical services provider, Manor Care provided them with a Vitalink brochure touting Vitalink's array of services. See id. PP 28-30. This brochure

<sup>1</sup> Rohlfing brings this case as the executor of the estate of Samuel Taylor, the individual who was the victim of the defendants' allegedly unlawful conduct. As it would be cumbersome to continually refer to "Taylor's estate" as the plaintiff, this opinion will frequently refer to Rohlfing as if he himself were the plaintiff in this action.

<sup>2</sup> This opinion will refer to the "defendants" (in the plural) because they are separate corporations, even though this usage is somewhat at odds with the fact that they are under common ownership. This stylistic decision should not be taken as a prejudgment of the question of whether these companies should be viewed as a single entity under the law. This question is critical to the antitrust and RICO claims, and is discussed in Part III, infra.

<sup>3</sup> With respect to both the motion for class certification and the motion to dismiss we are required to assume the truth of the allegations in the complaint. See Richmond v. Nationwide Cassel L.P., 52 F.3d 640, 644 (7th Cir. 1995) (motions to dismiss); Hardin v. Harshbarger, 814 F. Supp. 703, 706 (N.D. Ill. 1993) (motions for class certification). In accordance with this principle, this opinion will generally dispense with qualifying terms such as "allegedly" when describing the facts, but this should not be understood as indicating that we have made factual findings. Also, Rohlfing has filed an amended complaint in this case. Consequently, any references to "the Complaint" in this opinion are to the amended complaint.

represented that Vitalink's services would meet residents' needs at lower cost than other retail pharmacies. See id. In fact, the goods and services provided by Vitalink cost Manor Care residents substantially more than the prevailing retail price. See id. P 41. But notwithstanding the high prices, Taylor, like most other Manor Care residents, selected Vitalink as his Designated Pharmacy because he had no practical alternative: no other pharmacy was able and willing to comply with the strict packaging rules enforced at Manor Care facilities. See id. PP 32, 37-39. Taylor resided at Manor Care and received pharmaceutical services from Vitalink for a time, but is now deceased.<sup>4</sup>

[**6] Rohlfing, on behalf of Taylor's estate, now seeks to recover the excessive pharmaceutical fees Taylor was forced to pay as a result of the defendants' policies, plus damages and attorney's fees. Rohlfing claims that the defendants violated: (1) the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2; (2) the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq.; (3) the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act (ICFA), 815 ILCS 505/1 et seq.; and (4) the common law fiduciary duty owed by Manor Care to Taylor.

In addition to the claims on behalf of Taylor alone, Rohlfing has moved to certify a class of similarly situated persons who satisfy the following criteria: "(a) they signed an agreement with a Manor Care nursing home facility the same as or similar to [Taylor's]; (b) they chose the 'designated pharmacy' for provision of pharmaceutical services to them during their residency at the Manor Care nursing home facility; (c) the 'designated pharmacy' was Vitalink; and (d) the resident was charged by Manor Care and/or Vitalink for pharmaceutical goods and/or services provided by Vitalink." See Pl.'s Motion at 1. In accordance with Rule 23\(c\)\(1\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, [**7] we will first rule on this motion for class certification. Once we have determined whether a class should be certified on any or all of the claims, we will address the defendants' motion to dismiss.

II. Motion for Class Certification

A. Rule 23 Standard

HN1[] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23\(a\) specifies four preliminary requirements that any proposed class must meet: "One or more members of a class may sue or be sued as representative parties on behalf of all only if (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable, (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class, (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses [*335] of the class, and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\). If the numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy requirements are satisfied, then we must also decide whether the class qualifies under one of the three subsections of Rule 23\(b\). In the instant case, the plaintiff seeks certification under Rule 23\(b\)\(3\), which authorizes class actions where the "questions of law or fact common to the members [**8] of the class predominate over any questions affecting individual members, and [] a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(3\). HN2[] The plaintiff bears the burden of showing that the proposed class meets the requirements for certification. Retired Chicago Police Ass'n v. City of Chicago, 7 F.3d 584, 596 (7th Cir. 1993). HN3[] In evaluating a motion for class certification we do not examine the merits of the case. Id. at 598.

B. Specific Elements

The defendants do not contend that Rohlfing's proposed class is insufficiently numerous, which is understandable given that the class would include many thousands of current and former residents at Manor Care's various facilities. Nor does Manor Care assert that Rohlfing has failed to allege "questions of law or fact common to the class." See Rosario v. Livaditis, 963 F.2d 1013, 1017-18 \(7th Cir. 1992\) (stating that a common nucleus of operative fact is sufficient to satisfy the commonality requirement); Arenson v. Whitehall Convalescent & Nursing Home, 164 F.R.D. 659, 663-64 \(N.D. Ill. 1996\) (observing that claims arising out of standard [**9] documents or contracts present "a classic case for treatment as a class action" (quoting Haroco, Inc. v. American Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 121 F.R.D. 664, 669 \(N.D. Ill. 1988\)). The other elements, however, are contested by the defendants and we will discuss each in turn.

<sup>4</sup> The Complaint neglects to allege the date of Taylor's death or the duration of his stay at Manor Care. Although this deficiency is not fatal given the requirement that pleadings be liberally construed, see Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(f\), it should be corrected as soon as possible.

1. Rule 23(a)(3) -- Typicality

HN4[] To meet the typicality requirement, the named plaintiff acting on behalf of the class must show that his claims "arise from the same event or practice or course of conduct that gives rise to the claims of other class members and his or her claims are based on the same legal theory." Rosario, 963 F.2d at 1018 (quoting De La Fuente v. Stokely-Van Camp, Inc., 713 F.2d 225, 232 \(7th Cir. 1983\)). This requirement is not particularly strict: it may be met "even if there are factual distinctions between the claims of the named plaintiffs and those of other class members. Thus similarity of legal theory may control even in the face of differences of fact." De La Fuente, 713 F.2d at 232.

It is clear from Rohlfing's complaint that he is seeking relief under the same legal theories both for himself and for the class. The defendants contend, however, that there are two factual [**10] distinctions between Rohlfing's claims and those of many members of his proposed class. First, they argue that with respect to the fraud claims an individualized inquiry will be required in order to determine what oral representations were made to each class member regarding pharmaceutical purchases. See Def.'s Br. at 8. This argument is simply wrong: the plaintiffs' fraud claims are based upon identical written misrepresentations and omissions made by Manor Care in its Admission Agreement and in the Vitalink brochure. Any fraudulent statements made to Taylor were also made to all other class members. See Pl.'s Motion at 1. Second, the defendants contend that the varying prices for different pharmaceutical products in different parts of the country, in combination with the different pricing schedules of the various Manor Care facilities, will require individual analysis of each plaintiff's claim to determine (a) if they were damaged at all by the inflated prices, and (b) the extent of the damage. See Def.'s Br. at 8. But even if Rohlfing's injuries are quantitatively different from those of other members of the class, this does not mean that his claims are atypical. [**11] See De La Fuente, 713 F.2d at 232-33 (refusing "to require that each member of a class suffer precisely the same injury as the named class representatives" because "all members of the class were subject to the same allegedly unlawful practices"); United Nat'l Records, Inc. v. MCA, Inc., 99 F.R.D. 178, 181 \(N.D. Ill. 1983\) (finding typicality in an antitrust case even though the named plaintiffs' [*336] damages might differ quantitatively from those of other class members); see also Rosario, 963 F.2d at 1017 (certifying a class even though some class members may have suffered no damages at all). If and when this litigation reaches the stage of calculating damages, it may be impossible for the plaintiffs to continue proceeding as a class, but for liability purposes Rohlfing's claims clearly "have the same essential characteristics as the claims of the class at large." Retired Chicago Police Ass'n, 7 F.3d at 597 (quoting De La Fuente, 713 F.2d at 232).

2. Rule 23(a)(4)--Adequacy of Representation

HN5[] The requirement that the named plaintiff be able to "fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class," Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\)\(4\), has two distinct elements: (1) the [**12] named plaintiff cannot have antagonistic or conflicting claims with other members of the class; and (2) the named plaintiff and his attorneys must be able to prosecute the action vigorously. See General Tel. Co. v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 157 n.13, 72 L. Ed. 2d 740, 102 S. Ct. 2364 \(1982\); Retired Chicago Police Ass'n, 7 F.3d at 598. Manor Care argues that Rohlfing cannot meet the first requirement because "there is an inherent conflict between plaintiff's duty as executor of Mr. Taylor's estate . . . [and his] obligations to the class, including the obligation to spend estate assets to pay the costs of representation." See Def.'s Br. at 9. We do not discern any conflict here--the beneficiaries of Taylor's estate presumably want to prevail in this litigation just as much as the living class members--but even if we did, we think the alleged conflict is eliminated by the fact that plaintiffs' counsel is handling this case on a contingent fee basis, eliminating the need for Rohlfing to spend estate assets. See Pl.'s Reply Br. at 9.

The defendants also challenge the ability of the plaintiff and his attorney to prosecute this case vigorously because of the fact that Samuel [**13] Taylor, whose estate Rohlfing represents, has died. See Def.'s Br. at 9. They suggest that "the difficulties inherent in presenting a claim on behalf of a decedent"--such as proof problems regarding the existence of a fiduciary relationship or establishing what factual representations or omissions were made by the defendant--render Rohlfing an unfit representative. See id. We disagree. As discussed supra in Part II.B.1, Rohlfing proposes to prove his fraud claims by objective, written evidence, and we see no reason why the existence of a fiduciary duty between Taylor and Manor Care cannot be established despite his death. Thus, we find the defendants' concern to be unfounded, and conclude that Rohlfing and his attorneys are adequate representatives of the class they seek to certify.

3. Rule 23\(b\)\(3\)

a. predominance of common issues

HN6 [↑] The first requirement of Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) is that "the questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members." Manor Care contends that none of Rohlfing's four claims satisfy this requirement.

i. antitrust claims

Rohlfing's complaint seeks relief under both [§ \[\*\*14\]](#) 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Act. See Compl. P 60. HN7 [↑] In order to prevail on a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must prove three elements: (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) a resultant unreasonable restraint of trade in a relevant market; and (3) injury. See Denny's Marina, Inc. v. Renfro Productions, Inc., 8 F.3d 1217, 1220 (7th Cir. 1993). The defendants' belief that common issues will not predominate with respect to Rohlfing's § 1 claim is based on its assumption that "the market . . . is different in every state and within each area where Vitalink provides pharmaceutical services to Manor Care facilities." Def.'s Br. at 11. According to Manor Care, this means that individual issues will predominate because the questions of whether the various class members were damaged by the conspiracy must be determined locality-by-locality. See id. at 10-11.

We do not find Manor Care's argument persuasive. The weight of authority in antitrust cases indicates that the question of the existence of a conspiracy in restraint of trade is one that is common to all potential plaintiffs, and the importance of this question [*337] usually warrants treating them as a class. [**15] See, e.g., In re Infant Formula Antitrust Litig., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21981, No. MDL 878, 1992 WL 503465, at *6 (N.D. Fla. Jan. 13, 1992); Rios v. Marshall, 100 F.R.D. 395, 407 (S.D.N.Y. 1983); United Nat'l Records, Inc. v. MCA, Inc., 99 F.R.D. 178, 182 (N.D. Ill. 1983) ("As in virtually all national horizontal price fixing cases, the conspiracy here will predominate over individual issues such as damages."); Thillens v. Community Currency Exch. Assoc., 97 F.R.D. 668, 682 (N.D. Ill. 1983) ("The primary common issue is . . . the existence of a conspiracy . . . . Clearly that issue will predominate the litigation."). The fact that particular individuals may have suffered varying degrees of injury does not overcome this general proposition. See Arenson, 164 F.R.D. at 666; Rios, 100 F.R.D. at 408. If it is feasible to prove that the plaintiff class as a whole has been injured by the defendants' conspiracy, then the class may be certified even though individual damage questions remain to be resolved at a later stage of the proceedings. See De La Fuente, 713 F.2d at 232-33; Martino v. McDonald's System, Inc., 86 F.R.D. 145, 147-48 (N.D. Ill. 1980).

Our review of the plaintiffs' allegations [**16] leads us to believe that the question of fact of injury is susceptible of class treatment in this case. The conspiracy alleged here is a uniform, nationwide course of conduct by Manor Care and Vitalink toward all class members. See Compl. PP 58-62. The pharmaceuticals being supplied to Manor Care's patients are standardized products, the prices of which can easily be compared to those sold by competitors. See Pl.'s Reply Br. at 4 (suggesting statistical sampling). If Rohlfing can show that this conspiracy raised the prices of these products above a competitive level, injury to the whole class of purchasers may be presumed for purposes of class certification. See In re Workers' Compensation, 130 F.R.D. 99, 109 (D. Minn. 1990) (stating that a showing of injury "may be made on a class basis if the evidence demonstrates that the conspiracy succeeded in raising prices above the competitive level"); In re Alcoholic Beverages Litig., 95 F.R.D. 321, 327 (E.D.N.Y. 1982); In re Folding Carton Antitrust Litig., 88 F.R.D. 211, 215 (N.D. Ill. 1980) (collecting cases). On these facts, we find that it will be feasible for this court to determine if the plaintiff class was the [**17] victim of a conspiracy, and if its members collectively were injured thereby, and conclude that these common issues predominate over individual issues that may arise with respect to the Sherman Act § 1 claim.

Similar reasoning applies to plaintiffs' claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act. HN8[<sup>5</sup>] This theory of liability requires the plaintiffs to prove: "(1) the [defendants'] possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\). The question of whether Manor Care engaged in a "willful acquisition" of monopoly power is, like the question of whether it engaged in a conspiracy in restraint of trade, common to all members of the class because of its susceptibility to common proof or disproof. And even if Manor Care plans to introduce evidence that its market power varies from region to region, see Def.'s Br. at 12, at most this implies that it may become necessary to break the class into subclasses after the common [**18] question of "willful acquisition" has been resolved.<sup>5</sup> Cf. Martino, 86 F.R.D. at 148 (noting that factual variations by region may justify regional subclasses).

[**19] [*338] ii. RICO claims

HN9[<sup>6</sup>] To state a civil RICO claim based upon mail fraud, a plaintiff must show: (1) an enterprise; (2) engaged in a pattern; (3) of racketeering activity; (4) which constituted a scheme to defraud; (5) involving use of the mails in furtherance of the scheme; and (6) the scheme proximately caused injury to the plaintiff. See McDonald v. Schencker, 18 F.3d 491, 494 \(7th Cir. 1994\); see also Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 268, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532, 112 S. Ct. 1311 \(1992\) (requiring proximate cause with respect to injury). The issues regarding the behavior of the defendants are obviously common to all plaintiffs, but the defendants argue that individual issues will predominate with respect to (1) the existence of a scheme to defraud, because it will be necessary to determine what misrepresentations or omissions were made to each plaintiff, and (2) whether each plaintiff was proximately injured by relying on such misrepresentations.<sup>6</sup> See Def.'s Br. at 13. The very definition of the proposed class refutes the first part of defendants' argument: the class is expressly limited to persons who received or signed specific documents, Pl.'s [**20] Motion at 1, so no individualized proof will be needed regarding which misrepresentations were made to whom.<sup>7</sup>

With respect to the reliance argument, we agree with the defendants that plaintiffs presenting a RICO claim must prove that they relied on the defendants' fraudulent statements. See, e.g., [Caviness \[\*\*21\] v. Derand Res. Corp., 983 F.2d 1295, 1305 \(4th Cir. 1993\)](#); In re EDC, Inc., 930 F.2d 1275, 1280 \(7th Cir. 1991\) (requiring reasonable reliance in a civil RICO case). This principle, however, derives from RICO's requirement of proximately caused injury, not from the predicate offense of mail fraud. See 2 ARTHUR F. MATHEWS ET AL., CIVIL RICO LITIGATION § 8.04[B][1] (2d ed. 1992). HN10[<sup>8</sup>] Courts have adopted two different approaches to the reliance requirement in RICO class action suits based on fraud. When the fraud was perpetrated in a uniform manner against every <sup>5</sup> In a similar vein, the defendants also contend that it will have localized defenses to the plaintiffs' antitrust claims because many of its allegedly anticompetitive practices are required by particular state regulations. Conceivably such state law variations may eventually require the formation of subclasses as well, but not necessarily. The state regulations issue is intertwined with the central questions of whether Manor Care engaged in an illegal conspiracy or a "willfull acquisition" of monopoly power: to the extent Manor Care can prove that its practices arose from state regulatory schemes rather than an intent to achieve an anticompetitive objective, this tends to disprove the existence of a Sherman Act violation. Thus, the defendants' contentions regarding state law regulations are critical to the all the potential class members, regardless of the laws of their particular state.

<sup>6</sup> Manor Care also argues that individual issues will predominate with respect to the question of the degree of injury suffered by each plaintiff because of the scheme to defraud, but even if so, this does not preclude class certification on the question of liability for the same reasons set forth supra with respect to the antitrust claims.

<sup>7</sup> The complaint alleges no oral misrepresentations, which distinguishes this case from those cited by the defendants for the proposition that individualized proof of fraud is necessary. See Def.'s Br. at 13-14; cf. Arenson, 164 F.R.D. at 665 (finding that common questions predominated where written rather than oral misrepresentations were alleged).

member of the class, such as when all plaintiffs received virtually identical written materials from the defendants, courts typically hold that individual reliance questions do not predominate. See, e.g., Heastie v. Community Bank, 125 F.R.D. 669, 675 (N.D. Ill. 1989) (Aspen, J.); Smith v. MCI Telecomm. Corp., 124 F.R.D. 665, 679 (D. Kan. 1989); McMahon Books, Inc. v. Willow Grove Assocs., 108 F.R.D. 32, 38 (E.D. Pa. 1985); see also 2 MATHEWS ET AL., supra, § 8.04[B][1][a]. But HN11<sup>11</sup> when the fraudulent conduct was not uniform with respect to all plaintiffs, such as when numerous oral misrepresentations<sup>12</sup> are alleged or when claims are based on advertisements that may not have been seen by every plaintiff, courts treat individual reliance questions as predominating over the common RICO issues. See, e.g., Martin v. Dahlberg, Inc., 156 F.R.D. 207, 215-16 (N.D. Cal. 1994) ("The lack of evidence of the existence of a fixed set of written materials . . . prevents this Court from engaging in the kind of analysis which allowed the courts in cases such as Heastie . . . to find that individual issues of reliance did not predominate."); Elliott v. ITT Corp., 150 F.R.D. 569, 584-85 (N.D. Ill. 1992); Strain v. Nutri/System, Inc., 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17031, Civ. A. No. 90-2772, 1990 WL 209325, at *7-8 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 12, 1990).

In this case, the proposed class would only include persons who signed the Manor Care contract and who also received specific written statements regarding pricing at Vitalink pharmacies.<sup>8</sup> See Pl.'s Motion at 1. Thus, the [\[\*339\]](#) complaint here falls squarely into the 'common documents' category of cases where reliance questions do not predominate. In cases like this one, where the common documents include a contract to which every plaintiff is signatory, it is particularly sensible to<sup>13</sup> view reliance questions as secondary: by definition, parties to a contract are aware of and rely on the representations or omissions in the contract. Thus, we conclude that common questions predominate with respect to the RICO claim.

iii. ICFA claims

HN12<sup>14</sup> To state a claim under the ICFA, plaintiffs must show: (1) that the defendants engaged in a deceptive act or practice; (2) intent on the defendants' part that the plaintiffs rely on the deception; and (3) that the deception occurred in the course of conduct involving trade or commerce. See Adler v. William Blair & Co., 271 Ill. App. 3d 117, 648 N.E.2d 226, 233, 207 Ill. Dec. 770 (Ill. App. Ct. 1995). The plaintiffs<sup>15</sup> need not show that they actually relied upon the deception. See id.

Before we can decide whether common issues predominate with respect to the plaintiffs' ICFA claims, we must first resolve the threshold question of whether the ICFA even applies to the plaintiff class as a whole. There is a split of authority regarding the applicability of the ICFA to consumers who are not Illinois citizens. The defendants direct our attention to a line of cases holding that only Illinois consumers have standing to assert claims under the ICFA. See Endo v. Albertine, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4517, No. 88 C 1815, 1995 WL 170030, at *6 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 7, 1995); Swartz v. Schaub, 818 F. Supp. 1214, 1214 (N.D. Ill. 1993) (Shadur, J.). Rohlfing refers to contrary authority indicating that the ICFA may apply to non-resident plaintiffs who are injured by deceptive acts perpetrated in Illinois. See Martin v. Heinold Commodities, Inc., 117 Ill. 2d 67, 510 N.E.2d 840, 846-47, 109 Ill. Dec. 772 (Ill. 1987) (applying the ICFA to a class that included non-Illinois residents); see also Israel Travel Advisory Serv., Inc. v. Israel Identity Tours, Inc., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8744, No. 92 C 2379, 1993 WL 239051, at *7 (N.D. Ill. June 28, 1993) (applying<sup>16</sup> ICFA when there was "conduct committed in Illinois or directed at Illinois residents"), aff'd, 61 F.3d 1250 (7th Cir. 1995); Fry v. UAL Corp., 136 F.R.D. 626, 637 (N.D. Ill. 1991).

Even if we were to side with the authorities cited by Rohlfing, however, this would not lead us to conclude that the ICFA should have extraterritorial application in this case because the claims of the non-Illinois plaintiffs have little or no connection to Illinois. The facts here are meaningfully different from those in Martin, upon which the plaintiffs principally rely, see Pl.'s Reply Br. at 13. In Martin, a plaintiff class consisting of both Illinois and non-Illinois residents brought suit against an Illinois company that had served as broker for the plaintiffs in commodities transactions. See Martin, 109 Ill. Dec. at 773. The broker relationship had been established by a contract which <sup>8</sup>The Complaint alleges that all parties entering Manor Care facilities received these brochures, but the definition of the proposed class does not include receipt of the brochure as an element. For the sake of clarity--and because of the importance of the brochures to the fraud claims--receipt of the brochure should be added to the class definition.

---

allegedly contained deceptive statements. The Illinois Supreme Court elected to permit certification of the plaintiffs' claims under the ICFA, even with respect to the non-Illinois plaintiffs, but specifically predicated its decision on the following facts: (1) the contracts containing the deceptive [**26] statements were all executed in Illinois; (2) the defendant's principal place of business was in Illinois; (3) the contract contained express choice of law and forum selection clauses specifying that any litigation would be conducted in Illinois under Illinois law; (4) complaints regarding the defendant's performance were to be directed to its Chicago office; and (5) payments for the defendant's services were to be sent to its Chicago office. 510 N.E.2d at 847. In light of the overwhelming connection between Illinois and the claims of all the plaintiffs, the court concluded that the ICFA could apply to the whole class. See id.

In contrast to Martin, in this case there is virtually no connection to Illinois for those plaintiffs who are not Illinois residents.<sup>9</sup> [**28] The complaint contains no allegations [*340] regarding where the various "Admission Agreement" contracts were executed, but it seems reasonable to assume that they were executed at the various Manor Care facilities where each plaintiff planned to reside. The defendants are incorporated in Delaware; Manor Care's principal place of business is in Silver Spring, Maryland, while Vitalink's is in Naperville, Illinois. See [**27] Compl. P 89 & Ex. D. The contracts all contain an express choice of law provision indicating that the agreement shall be governed by "the laws and regulations of the state where the [Manor Care] facility is located." See Compl. Ex. A (clause 25). There are no indications in the contracts that persons seeking to enter a Manor Care facility outside of Illinois will have any contact whatsoever with the state of Illinois. On these facts, where the only connection with Illinois is the headquarters of one defendant, we conclude that the ICFA does not apply to the claims of the non-Illinois plaintiffs even under the broad application of the ICFA endorsed by Martin and other similar cases.<sup>10</sup> [**29] Thus, since the ICFA applies to just a small subset of the proposed class--those who were injured by conduct committed in Illinois, or whose injuries occurred there--common issues clearly do not predominate, and we decline to certify a nationwide class with respect to this claim.<sup>11</sup>

iv. fiduciary duty claims

---

<sup>9</sup> Though we need not reach this question given our interpretation of the ICFA, the near-complete lack of contact between the claims of the non-Illinois plaintiffs and Illinois might render it impossible for us to apply Illinois law to the claims of non-Illinois plaintiffs without violating the constitutional requirements of procedural due process. See Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Shutts, 472 U.S. 797, 821, 86 L. Ed. 2d 628, 105 S. Ct. 2965 \(1985\) (holding that the Due Process Clause forbids a forum state from applying its own law to every member of a class unless the state has a "significant contact or significant aggregation of contacts" to the claims asserted by each member of the plaintiff class, contacts 'creating state interests'" (quoting Allstate Ins. Co. v. Hague, 449 U.S. 302, 312-13, 66 L. Ed. 2d 521, 101 S. Ct. 633 \(1981\))).

<sup>10</sup> Perhaps in recognition of the fact that there is no other reason to apply the ICFA to the claims of the non-Illinois plaintiffs, the plaintiffs suggest that the defendants' fraud scheme "emanated" from Illinois. See Compl. P 76; Pl.'s Reply Br. at 11. We are not sure exactly what the import of this cryptic assertion is: the plaintiffs have not provided any justification for applying the ICFA to claims by non-Illinois parties merely because a scheme "emanated" from the minds of persons in Illinois. Even giving the broadest possible reading to Martin and its progeny, we think the ICFA cannot apply to claims by out-of-state parties unless the "deceptive act or practice" of which they complain was perpetrated in Illinois. We draw support for this view from an article on the applicability of the ICFA authored by Rohlfing's counsel. See Daniel A. Edelman, Applicability of the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act in Favor of Out-of-State Consumers, 8 LOY. CONSUMER L. REP. 27, 34 (1996) (concluding that the ICFA should apply to transactions in which an Illinois business injures consumers located in other states because it is "the fact that prohibited conduct takes place [in] Illinois [that] establishes that the state officials have an interest in regulating such conduct"). Here, the non-Illinois plaintiffs were injured by misrepresentations or omissions made outside of Illinois, so Illinois officials have no interest in regulating the conduct that injured them.

<sup>11</sup> For the Illinois residents included in the plaintiffs' proposed class, common issues clearly predominate with respect to the ICFA claim. The elements of an ICFA claim, as discussed supra, are all related to the conduct and intent of the defendants, and individual reliance on the deceptive acts is irrelevant. In the instant motion, however, plaintiffs have not requested certification of a class limited to Illinois residents for purposes of their ICFA claim.

As with the ICFA claims, the question of whether common issues predominate for the plaintiffs' fiduciary duty claims depends, at least in part, on the law applicable to the claims. Illinois applies the 'most significant relationship' test from the Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws in determining what law will apply to a fiduciary duty claim. See Koutsoubos v. Casanave, 816 F. Supp. 472, 475 (N.D. Ill. 1993) (Aspen, J.); see also Marberg v. Chancellor, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1558, No. 93 C 6739, 1994 WL 48600, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 16, 1994).<sup>12</sup> This test requires us to consider: [*341] (a) the place where the injury occurred; [*30] (b) the place where the conduct causing the injury occurred; (c) the parties' domiciles and places of business; and (d) the place where the parties' relationship is centered. See Miller v. Long-Airdox Co., 914 F.2d 976, 978 (7th Cir. 1990). In most cases, "the two most important [factors] are the place where the injury occurred and the place where the conduct causing the injury occurred." Id. In this case, the injury and the conduct causing it occurred in the state where each plaintiff resided and purchased pharmaceuticals during his or her time with Manor Care, and their respective relationships are centered in these various states. Thus, we conclude that each plaintiff's claim for breach of fiduciary duty will be governed by the law of the state of the Manor Care facility in which that plaintiff resided.

[**31] The application of 13 different states' laws<sup>13</sup> to the plaintiffs' fiduciary duty claims does not automatically mean that common issues will not predominate with respect to these claims, but it does place a burden on the plaintiffs to show that these laws are either identical in all relevant respects or capable of being categorized into a limited number of subgroups. See Castano v. American Tobacco Co., 84 F.3d 734, 741 (5th Cir. 1996) ("In a multi-state class action, variations in state law may swamp any common issues and defeat predominance."); Georgine v. Amchem Prods., 83 F.3d 610, 618 (3d Cir.), cert. granted, 136 L. Ed. 2d 297, 117 S. Ct. 379 (1996); Walsh v. Ford Motor Co., 257 U.S. App. D.C. 85, 807 F.2d 1000, 1016-17 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (Ruth Bader Ginsburg, J.) (class proponents must prove the absence of relevant variations in applicable state laws). Rohlfing has completely failed to carry this burden, providing us only with the conclusory assertion that the facts of the various plaintiffs' cases "satisfy the basic test for a fiduciary relationship under the law of all states." See Pl.'s Reply Br. at 12. But even if we assume that fiduciary duty law, in its broad outlines, [*32] is similar from state to state, it may be meaningfully different with respect to its nuances. Cf. In re American Med. Sys., 75 F.3d 1069, 1085 (6th Cir. 1996) (decertifying a class because of possible differences in the law of negligence from jurisdiction to jurisdiction); n re Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc., 51 F.3d 1293, 1300 (7th Cir. 1995) (same).<sup>14</sup> Rohlfing has given us no reason to believe that fiduciary duty law has fewer relevant nuances than the law of negligence. Moreover, the difficulty of applying 13 different states' laws is particularly great with respect to an issue like the fiduciary status of a nursing home vis-a-vis its patients, which most of the states have not yet addressed, see Pl.'s Reply Br. at 11 (conceding that "this is a relatively new issue").

[**33] In addition to the variety of applicable laws, the relative importance of common issues is further diminished by the fact that each plaintiff's fiduciary duty claim will turn on a crucial, individualized question of fact: his or her mental competence and degree of dependence during residence at a Manor Care facility. Cf. Georgine, 83 F.3d at 618 ("[Factual] differences, when exponentially magnified by choice of law considerations, eclipse any common issues in this case."). HN13↑ A fiduciary duty exists in relationships where "there is confidence reposed on one side and a resulting superiority and influence on the other." Davis v. Brickey, 397 Ill. 556, 74 N.E.2d 710, 715 (Ill. 1947); see also Swenson v. Wintercorn, 92 Ill. App. 2d 88, 234 N.E.2d 91, 97 (Ill. App. Ct. 1968) (a fiduciary must "act in good conscience and good faith and with due regard to the interests of the person reposing [] [*342] confidence").<sup>15</sup> It is certainly true that "many, if not most nursing home residents are in a vulnerable physical and/or mental state," Schenck v. Living Centers-East, Inc., 917 F. Supp. 432, 438 (E.D. La. 1996), which could place their caregivers in a position of confidence and [**34] influence. Like the other courts that have addressed this question, however, we are reluctant to stretch this generalization to the point of concluding that all nursing home residents are necessarily subject to the "superiority and influence" of their caregivers. See id. (concluding that despite the typical vulnerability of nursing home patients, it "requires factual development to determine if in this case [a] fiduciary duty was created"); Gordon v. Bialystoker Ctr., 45 N.Y.2d 692, 385 N.E.2d 285, 288, 412 N.Y.S.2d 593 (N.Y. 1978) (finding that a nursing home was a fiduciary for a resident based on testimony that the residents of that home were "dependent on the home 'to take care . . . of their very livelihood, their existence'"); Davis, 74 N.E.2d at 715 (finding that a nursing home was a fiduciary for a resident only after finding that she was "unable to serve herself in any way"). The potential variation in nursing home patients' competence and degree of dependence is especially significant for a massive operation like Manor Care, which services the entire spectrum of patient needs, from patients requiring round-the-clock skilled nursing care to those who require [**35] minimal assistance. See Compl. Ex. D at 3 (Manor Care's 10-K filing, describing its operations). Given this variety, we cannot assume that Manor Care had a relationship of "superiority and influence" with every member of the proposed class, and we conclude that an individualized inquiry will be required.

<sup>12</sup> We note that some of our colleagues have disagreed with our view in Koutsoubos that a breach of fiduciary duty should be viewed as a tort claim rather than a contract claim for choice of law purposes. See, e.g., Bankard v. First Carolina Communications, Inc., 1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17916, No. 89 C 8571, 1991 WL 268652, at *11 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 5, 1991) (applying contract choice of law principles to a fiduciary duty claim); T-Bill Option Club v. Brown & Co. Sec. Corp., 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8028, No. 88 C 8461, 1990 WL 103584, at *1 (N.D. Ill. July 2, 1990) (same). The application of contract or tort choice of law principles makes no difference in this case, however: both lead to the conclusion that the claims of the plaintiffs should be governed by the laws of the various states in which their Manor Care residences are located.

<sup>13</sup> We derive the number 13 from the fact that Vitalink operates at Manor Care facilities in 13 states. See Compl. P 7.

<sup>14</sup> To pick just one example of a potentially important nuance, Illinois law provides that a plaintiff making a fiduciary duty claim that does not rest on one of the traditional "per se" fiduciary relationships must establish the existence of a fiduciary relationship by "clear and convincing" evidence. See Burdett v. Miller, 957 F.2d 1375, 1382 (7th Cir. 1992). Do any of the other 12 states involved in this case impose a similar burden on plaintiffs? Rohlfing gives us no indication.

In sum, it appears that plaintiffs' fiduciary duty claims will be governed by a myriad of different laws, and their resolution will depend largely on the determination of an individualized inquiry into their degree of competence and dependence during their residency at Manor Care's facility. On these facts, we find that common issues do not predominate with respect to this claim, and plaintiffs' motion for class certification is denied.<sup>16</sup>

[**36] b. Superiority

HN14 [F] The final requirement imposed on class proponents by Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) is a showing that "a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(3\). Rule 23 lists a number of factors that might support a finding that a class could not meet this standard, but in this case the defendants focus on just one: whether "difficulties [are] likely to be encountered in the management of [the] class action." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(3\)\(D\). The defendants assert that this case will be unmanageable as a class action, see Def.'s Br. at 15-16, but they provide practically no explanation for this view other than the fact that the case may potentially involve "hundreds of thousands" of past and present Manor Care residents.<sup>17</sup> It is clear, however, that large class size alone is not an impediment to class certification. Cf. Appleton Elec. Co. v. Advance-United Expressways, 494 F.2d 126, 127 (7th Cir. 1974) (certifying a plaintiff class of "several million shippers"). A large class may actually militate in favor of class certification in some cases, since there may be fewer manageable "alternative" [**37] methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy.<sup>18</sup> See 1 HERBERT NEWBERG & ALBA CONTE, NEWBERG ON CLASS ACTIONS § 4.33 (3d ed. 1992) ("Ironically, as a class increases in size, the alternative [*343] methods for adjudicating the controversy become fewer.").

<sup>15</sup> This is the formulation employed by Illinois courts; obviously the 12 other states involved in this case may use different language.

<sup>16</sup> In contrast to plaintiffs' ICFA claim, the commonality problem is not eliminated by limiting the class to parties from Illinois: the key individualized fact question (degree of influence and superiority) still remains even if Illinois law applies to every plaintiff. Thus, the fiduciary duty claim will survive only with respect to the named plaintiff.

<sup>17</sup> The defendants' observation that "courts have frequently found nationwide classes inappropriate and unmanageable," see Def.'s Br. at 16, is both true and irrelevant; courts also frequently find nationwide classes to be appropriate, efficient, and manageable. The defendants make no attempt to explain why this case is more similar to the unmanageable cases than the manageable ones.

At this stage of the litigation, it appears that a class action would be manageable. There is no reason to believe that identifying and providing notice to potential class members will be unduly difficult or that intolerably large amounts of individual testimony will be required at trial.<sup>18</sup> Moreover, we do not see any realistic alternatives to class proceedings [**38] in this case. See In re Folding Carton Antitrust Litig., 88 F.R.D. 211, 216 (N.D. Ill. 1980) ("Manageability problems are significant only if they create a situation that is less fair and efficient than other available [alternatives]." (internal quotation marks omitted)). For a group this numerous, joinder or intervention by tens of thousands of individual claimants is likely to be more burdensome for the court than treating them as a class. See 7A CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT ET AL., FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 1779 (2d ed. 1986) ("If the interested parties are so numerous that their joinder or intervention would burden the court . . . a Rule 23(b)(3) action should be allowed."). And it is not reasonable to expect the individual plaintiffs in this case to bring their claims against the defendants independently: for many of them, especially those who resided at a Manor Care facility for a short period, the dollar value of their claims is likely to be very small, giving them little incentive to sue on their own. See id. ("Individual actions . . . may be an inferior alternative to the class action when the economics of the situation make it impossible for the aggrieved members [**39] to vindicate their rights by separate actions . . ."). Thus, for those claims where common issues predominate, we conclude that a class action will be manageable, and that a class is clearly the superior method in which to proceed.

C. Summary

Rohlfing's motion for class certification is granted with respect to the antitrust and RICO claims. For these claims, the class shall be limited to those persons meeting the criteria specified in Rohlfing's motion, with the additional requirement that the class include only those persons who received: (1) the Vitalink brochure identified in Exhibit D to the Complaint; or (2) a similar written representation that use of [**40] Vitalink's services would result in lower pharmaceutical costs. Rohlfing's motion for class certification is denied with respect to his ICFA claim and his fiduciary duty claim.

III. Motion to Dismiss

A. Rule 12(b)(6) Standard

HN15 [+] Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) is improper "unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957). For purposes of this motion, we must take all of the well-pleaded factual allegations in the complaint as true, and construe them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. See Richmond v. Nationwide Cassel L.P., 52 F.3d 640, 644 (7th Cir. 1995).

B. Specific Claims

19

[**41] 1. Antitrust Claims

---

<sup>18</sup> Individual testimony and evidence are likely to be necessary if the plaintiffs prevail on the liability issues and we are required to calculate damages. As we have already discussed, however, the potential need for individualized damages inquiries does not prevent class certification on the common questions of liability at this stage of the game.

<sup>19</sup> The disposition of the various claims addressed below will be binding on the classes certified supra in Part II. Thus, the disposition on the antitrust and RICO claims will affect all members of Rohlfing's proposed class who do not opt-out. The disposition of the ICFA and fiduciary duty claims affects only Rohlfing, since no class has been certified with respect to these claims.

a. Sherman Act § 1

The defendants argue that Rohlfing's claim alleging a conspiracy in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act must be dismissed because the defendants are legally incapable of engaging in a conspiracy. See Def.'s Br. at 6.<sup>20</sup> We agree. The seminal case on this [*344] topic is Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984), which held that because "the coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary must be viewed as that of a single enterprise for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act," id. at 771, these entities are legally incapable of "conspiring" together in violation of § 1, id. at 777. The Court reasoned as follows:

A parent and its wholly owned subsidiary have a complete unity of interest. Their objectives are common, not disparate; their general corporate actions are guided or determined not by two separate corporate consciousnesses, but one. They are not unlike a multiple team of horses drawing a vehicle under the control of a single driver. With or without a formal "agreement," the subsidiary acts for the benefit of the parent . . . . If a parent [*42] and a wholly owned subsidiary do "agree" to a course of action, there is no sudden joining of economic resources that had previously served different interests, and there is no justification for § 1 scrutiny.

Id. at 771. The Court refused, however, to consider whether and how this reasoning would apply to alleged conspiracies between a parent and a non-wholly-owned subsidiary, or between "sister" subsidiaries of a common parent corporation. See id. at 767.

Despite the limited nature of Copperweld's holding, lower courts have applied its "unity of interest" reasoning in other contexts. It is now clear that if a unity of interest exists between related corporations, such as parents and majority-owned subsidiaries or "sister" subsidiaries of a common parent, they are incapable of conspiring for [*43] purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act. See Siegel Transfer, Inc. v. Carrier Express, Inc., 54 F.3d 1125, 1135 (3d Cir. 1995); Williams v. I.B. Fischer Nevada, 999 F.2d 445, 447 (9th Cir. 1993); City of Mt. Pleasant v. Associated Elec. Coop., Inc., 838 F.2d 268, 276-77 (8th Cir. 1988); Hood v. Tenneco Texas Life Ins. Co., 739 F.2d 1012, 1015 (5th Cir. 1984). Such a unity of interest is very likely to be found when the parent owns a substantial majority of the subsidiary's stock. See 7 PHILLIP E. AREEDA, ANTITRUST LAW P 1467a (1986) (concluding that "majority ownership with its centralized power to control, whether or not apparently exercised in detail on a day-to-day basis, presumptively creates a single entity for antitrust purposes"). Even in cases where the parent's ownership interest is not strong, unity of interest may be established if the economic objectives of the corporations are interdependent or if the management of one company exerts almost complete control over the other. See, e.g., Siegel, 54 F.3d at 1135 (finding unity of interest where one corporation was an "inseparable part" of the other's management); Williams, 999 F.2d at 447 (finding unity [*44] of interest between a franchisor and franchisee).

In this case, we believe that Manor Care, Manor Healthcare, and Vitalink share a unity of interest. Manor Care owns 100% of Manor Healthcare, and also owns 82.3% of Vitalink. A number of courts have found a unity of interest based on very similar ownership arrangements. See, e.g., Coast Cities Truck Sales v. Navistar Int'l Transp. Co., 912 F. Supp. 747, 765 (D.N.J. 1995) (conspiracy impossible where parent owned 100% of one subsidiary and 70% of another); Bell Atlantic Bus. Sys. Servs. v. Hitachi Data Sys. Corp., 849 F. Supp. 702, 705 (N.D. Cal. 1994) (parent owned 100% of one subsidiary and 80% of another); Total Benefit Servs., Inc. v. Group Ins. Admin., Inc., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49, Civ. A. No. 92-2386, 1993 WL 15671, at *1-2 (E.D. La. Jan. 7, 1993) (parent owned 100% of one subsidiary and 85% of another); Viacom Int'l, Inc. v. Time, Inc., 785 F. Supp. 371, 374 n.6 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) (parent owned 100% of one subsidiary and 82% of another).<sup>21</sup> Rohlfing [*345] does not suggest, and we

---

<sup>20</sup> The defendants also present several other reasons for dismissing plaintiffs' § 1 claims, see Def.'s Br. at 2-5, but we need not address these given our resolution of the Copperweld argument.

<sup>21</sup> We are not persuaded by the two contrary cases cited by Rohlfing. First, in Tunis Bros. Co., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 763 F.2d 1482 (3d Cir. 1985), vacated on other grounds, 475 U.S. 1105, 89 L. Ed. 2d 909, 106 S. Ct. 1509 (1986), the Third Circuit found that a parent could conspire with a subsidiary in which it owned 79% of the equity stock, see id. at 1495 n.20. The court provided no explanation for this outcome, which seems particularly questionable given that the parent owned 100% of the subsidiary's cannot discern, any manner in which the interests of Manor Care and its subsidiaries might diverge. Even aside from the ownership relationship, Manor Care and Vitalink [**45] are to a certain extent interdependent: as discussed in the Background section supra, Manor Care provides a number of essential services for Vitalink. Consequently, we conclude that the defendants are legally incapable of conspiring with one another, and we will dismiss Rohlfing's claims under § 1 of the Sherman Act.

[**46] b. Sherman Act § 2

HN16 [↑] In order to state a claim for monopolization or attempted monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must show that the defendant possessed, or had a reasonable possibility of gaining possession of, monopoly power in a relevant market. See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 457-459, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 (1993); United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966). Thus, HN17 [↑] a plaintiff presenting a § 2 claim bears the burden of alleging a relevant market. See TV Communications Network v. Turner Network, 964 F.2d 1022, 1025 (10th Cir. 1992). Rohlfing's view is that the relevant market in this case is "the sale of pharmaceutical products to residents of Manor Care nursing home facilities." Compl. P 61; see also Pl.'s Br. at 5. At the motion to dismiss stage, our task is not to determine whether the facts support this market definition, but only to ascertain whether the law will permit a class definition of this sort. The defendants argue that the proposed market definition is legally inadequate because it is improper to define a market in terms of a single class [**47] of customers. See Def.'s Br. at 4. We agree.

A market is "composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced." United States v. E.I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 404, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956); see also 2A PHILLIP A. AREEDA ET AL., ANTITRUST LAW P 530a (rev. ed. 1995) (defining a market as "an arena within which significant substitution in consumption or production occurs"). A relevant market has two components: a product and a geographic region in which competition occurs. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320-21, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962). "In defining a market, one must consider [possible] substitution both by buyers and by sellers." See Blue Cross & Blue Shield United v. Marshfield Clinic, 65 F.3d 1406, 1410 (7th Cir. 1995). Professor Areeda elaborates on these themes as follows: "A properly defined market excludes other potential suppliers (1) whose product is too different . . . or too far away . . . and (2) who are not likely to shift promptly to offer defendant's customers a suitably proximate (in both product and geographic terms) alternative." [**48] 2A AREEDA ET AL., at P 530a. The defendants are therefore correct in their view that it is improper to define a market simply by identifying a group of consumers who have purchased a given product; rather, the market consists of the array of "interchangeable" products that those consumers confronted when making their product selection, plus those products which could quickly be supplied as interchangeable alternatives.

Given this background, for "the sale of pharmaceutical products to residents of Manor Care nursing home facilities" to constitute a legally cognizable market, plaintiff will eventually be required to prove--though for now he must merely allege--that there were no proximately available substitutes for Manor Care residents who were dissatisfied with the pharmaceutical services there. The complaint tries to allege a lack of available substitutes from the supply side, by suggesting that the defendants have conspired to establish [*346] "artificial barriers and restraints which prevent any competitor besides Vitalink from providing pharmaceutical services to residents of Manor Care nursing home facilities." Compl. P 62. But the complaint fails to address the demand side: from the [**49] face of the complaint, it is clear that a Manor Care resident who was dissatisfied with the service or prices provided by Vitalink could obtain a substitute by transferring to a different nursing home which did not utilize Vitalink.<sup>22</sup> See Compl. PP voting stock, see id. at 1486. Moreover, we think that Tunis's precedential value is limited in light of the Third Circuit's recent opinion in Siegel, a case cited supra in the text, which endorses a liberal application of the unity of interest test. Second, in Aspen Title & Escrow, Inc. v. Jeld-Wen, Inc., 677 F. Supp. 1477 (D. Or. 1987), the court found that a parent could conspire with subsidiaries in which it held 60% and 75% interests, see id. at 1486. Like Tunis, Aspen provides no explanation for why there was no unity of interest between the parent and the subsidiaries, and, also like Tunis, the value of Aspen has been undercut by a subsequent opinion of the same court. See Leaco Enters., Inc. v. General Elec. Co., 737 F. Supp. 605, 609 (D. Or. 1990) (precluding a conspiracy claim where a parent owned 91.9% of a subsidiary).

---

4-7 (indicating that Vitalink only operates at 18 out of 179 Manor Care facilities); see also Ex. A at 1 (admission agreement indicating that a resident may terminate residency without penalty on five days notice). There are many suppliers of skilled nursing care and pharmaceutical services besides Manor Care. See Compl. P 12 (approximately half of Vitalink's revenues come from non-Manor Care facilities); see also Compl. Ex. D at 8 (Manor Care's 10-K filing, noting that it "meet[s] competition in each locality" where it operates). Rohlfing does not suggest that there is anything unique about Manor Care facilities that would shield them from price competition with other "interchangeable" nursing facilities. Thus, the relevant market in this case cannot be limited to Manor Care facilities alone: it must be broad enough to encompass all nursing facilities whose services are "reasonably interchangeable" with those provided [**50] by Manor Care.

Rohlfing's attempt to avoid this conclusion by relying on Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992), is unavailing. Kodak was a [**51] controversy related to the sale of service and replacement parts for Kodak copiers and micrographic equipment. Independent service organizations (ISOs) brought antitrust claims against Kodak, alleging that by refusing to sell replacement parts to the ISOs Kodak was attempting to monopolize the "market" of repair service for Kodak copiers. See id. 504 U.S. at 455-56. Kodak argued that "as a matter of law, a single brand of a product or service can never be a relevant market." Id. at 481. The Court disagreed with this view:

The relevant market for antitrust purposes is determined by the choices available to Kodak equipment owners. Because service and parts for Kodak equipment are not interchangeable with other manufacturers' service and parts, the relevant market from the Kodak equipment owner's perspective is composed of only those companies that service Kodak machines.

Id. at 481-82 (emphasis added) (citation omitted).

Rohlfing argues that the situation here is identical, and that from a Manor Care resident's perspective, the relevant market for pharmaceutical services is composed only of those companies that service Manor Care residents. See Pl.'s Br. at [**52] 5. There is a fundamental problem with this analogy, however: the owners of Kodak equipment were "locked in" to their relationship with Kodak, which is not true of Manor Care residents. The Court noted that Kodak equipment is expensive, requiring a "heavy initial outlay," see id. at 477, but once acquired it has little resale value, see id. at 457. Consequently, Kodak equipment owners dissatisfied with the services or prices offered by Kodak's repair personnel could not terminate their relationship with Kodak without sacrificing their substantial investment in Kodak equipment. See id. at 476 ("If the cost of switching is high, consumers who already have purchased the equipment, and are thus 'locked in,' will tolerate some level of service-price increases before changing equipment brands."). But any dissatisfied Manor Care [*347] resident can terminate his or her relationship with Manor Care on five days notice without any apparent pecuniary loss. See Compl. Ex. A at 1. Hence, Manor Care residents are not "locked in" to their relationship with Manor Care, and are free to seek interchangeable substitutes for Manor Care's services in a way that Kodak equipment owners are not.

[**53] In sum, Rohlfing has failed to allege a relevant market because his proposed market--the sale of pharmaceutical products to residents of Manor Care nursing home facilities--improperly excludes interchangeable substitutes.<sup>23</sup> Because this is the only market that Rohlfing accuses the defendants of monopolizing or attempting <sup>22</sup> The plaintiff's only attempt to address demand-side substitutability is its argument that Manor Care patients were unable to find an interchangeable substitute at Manor Care. See Compl. P 64 (alleging that the defendants have "precluded plaintiff and other residents of Manor Care facilities from purchasing or obtaining medication at a competitive price"). Even if true, this argument is like a consumer going to McDonald's and complaining that the only hamburgers available for purchase are those prepared by McDonald's. This is perfectly true, at McDonald's. But any consumer who is not content with a McDonald's hamburger may leave and choose from a myriad of available alternatives. McDonald's refusal to sell Whoppers does not mean that it has monopolized a relevant market for hamburgers.

<sup>23</sup> We emphasize that for purposes of this motion to dismiss we are expressing no view on what the relevant market actually is: we are constrained by the principle that "proper market definition . . . can be determined only after a factual inquiry into the to monopolize, see Compl. P 61, Rohlfing has failed to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Accordingly, Rohlfing's claims under § 2 of the Sherman Act will be dismissed.

[**54] 2. RICO claims

The defendants have moved to dismiss Rohlfing's RICO claims on three separate grounds: (1) failure to comply with Rule 9\(b\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure; (2) failure to allege a RICO "enterprise;" and (3) failure to allege a "pattern" of racketeering activity. See Def.'s Br. at 8-15. We consider each argument in turn.

a. the particularity requirement

Rohlfing's RICO claims are predicated on acts of mail and wire fraud. See Compl. P 70. HN18<sup>18</sup> Rule 9\(b\) provides that "in all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting the fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\). HN19<sup>19</sup> In RICO cases based on fraud, "the plaintiff must, within reason, describe the time, place, and content of the mail and wire communications, and it must identify the parties to these communications." Jepson, Inc. v. Makita Corp., 34 F.3d 1321, 1328 (7th Cir. 1994); Graue Mill Dev. Corp. v. Colonial Bank & Trust Co., 927 F.2d 988, 992 (7th Cir. 1991). The allegations must be specific enough to provide the defendants with a general outline of how the alleged fraud scheme operated and of their purported role in the scheme. See [**55] Midwest Grinding Co. v. Spitz, 976 F.2d 1016, 1020 (7th Cir. 1992); Koulouris v. Estate of Chalmers, 790 F. Supp. 1372, 1374 (N.D. Ill. 1992) (Aspen, J.) (defendants need not be given a "pretrial memorandum containing all the evidentiary support for the plaintiff's case," but only "a brief sketch of how the fraudulent scheme operated, when and how it occurred, and the participants"). HN20<sup>20</sup> In evaluating the sufficiency of the pleadings, we bear in mind the purposes of Rule 9\(b\): (1) protecting the defendants' reputations; (2) preventing fishing expeditions; and (3) providing adequate notice to the defendants. See Vicom, Inc. v. Harbridge Merchant Servs., Inc., 20 F.3d 771, 777 (7th Cir. 1994).

Rohlfing's complaint undoubtedly meets the Rule 9\(b\) standard of specificity with respect to its allegations regarding the "time, place, and content of the mail and wire communications." The complaint alleges that Taylor, like all other members of the class, was given the allegedly fraudulent Vitalink brochure "immediately prior to" his admission to Manor Care. See Compl. P 30. The content of this brochure is set forth in the complaint, see id. P 28 & Ex. B, and the alleged misrepresentations [**56] and omissions in this document are clearly indicated, see id. PP 28, 40. The complaint explains that the U.S. mails were used in furtherance of this scheme because the allegedly inflated invoices for pharmaceuticals purchases were [*348] sent to Manor Care residents through the mail. See id. P 42.

The defendants' best argument that the complaint fails to meet Rule 9\(b\)'s specificity standard is that it fails to identify precisely which individuals made the misrepresentations and omissions to the various plaintiffs. Cf. Vicom, 20 F.3d at 777-78 (noting that because fair notice is the "most basic consideration" underlying Rule 9\(b\) . . . the plaintiff who pleads fraud must 'reasonably notify the defendants of their purported role in the scheme'). Although the defendants' argument has some force, we believe the complaint is sufficiently specific because the role of each corporate defendant in the scheme is reasonably clear. The allegedly fraudulent statements are contained in the corporate brochure authored by Vitalink, which was given to the plaintiffs by Manor Care along with their residence contract. These identical documents were given to every member of the plaintiff class, [**57] so we need not be concerned about the possibility of uncertainty regarding which employees said what to whom. At this stage of the game, we do not believe that the failure to identify particular employee participants<sup>24</sup> has denied the defendants 'commercial realities' faced by consumers." Kodak, 504 U.S. at 482. At the same time, the burden is on antitrust plaintiffs to allege a legally sufficient relevant market. Where the relevant market proposed by the plaintiff is not even alleged to encompass all interchangeable substitute products, the market is legally (rather than factually) insufficient, and a motion to dismiss is appropriate. See Lee v. Life Ins. Co., 23 F.3d 14, 18-19 (1st Cir. 1994) (indicating that inadequate allegations regarding the scope of the relevant market were a proper ground for dismissal under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\)); TV Communications Network v. Turner Network, 964 F.2d 1022, 1025 (10th Cir. 1992); Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 922 F. Supp. 1055, 1062 (E.D. Pa. 1996) (dismissing a § 2 claim for failure to allege a legally sufficient relevant market).

---

their right to be reasonably "appraised of the roles they each played in the scheme," 34 F.3d at 1329, so we conclude that Rohlfing's complaint passes muster under Rule 9\(b\).<sup>25</sup>

[**58] b. the "enterprise" and "person" requirements

The defendants' second objection to Rohlfing's RICO claims is that he has failed to allege an "enterprise" as the statute requires. See 18 U.S.C. §§ 1962\(a\), \(b\), \(c\); Richmond v. Nationwide Cassel L.P., 52 F.3d 640, 645 \(7th Cir. 1995\) ("A RICO complaint must identify the enterprise."). To this objection, the defendants append the related argument that Rohlfing has failed to allege a "person" distinct from the enterprise. See Haroco v. American Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 747 F.2d 384, 402 \(7th Cir. 1984\) (§ 1962(c) requires "some separate and distinct existence for the person and the enterprise"), aff'd, 473 U.S. 606, 87 L. Ed. 2d 437, 105 S. Ct. 3291 \(1985\). We disagree.

The statute defines an "enterprise" as any "individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact . . ." 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(4\). In elaborating on this statutory theme, the Seventh Circuit has characterized an enterprise as an "ongoing structure of persons associated through time, joined in purpose, and organized in a manner amenable to hierarchical or consensual decision-making."

[**59] Richmond, 52 F.3d at 644 (quoting Jennings v. Emry, 910 F.2d 1434, 1440 \(7th Cir. 1990\)). Rohlfing proposes a number of different enterprises, consisting of various combinations of the members of the "Manor Care corporate group consisting of Manor Care and all its subsidiaries." Compl. PP 66, 77. Under the plain language of the statute as well as the characterization in Richmond, these ongoing, structured, corporate entities clearly qualify as "enterprises."

The defendants focus most of their energies on arguing that plaintiffs have failed to allege a "person" engaged in "a pattern of racketeering" that is separate and distinct from the enterprise itself. See Def.'s Br. at 11-12. Even HN21 [↑] after an enterprise has been identified, a § 1962\(c\) plaintiff must also allege that a "person" associated with the enterprise conducted or participated, 'directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity.' Richmond, 52 F.3d at 646 (quoting § 1962\(c\)). The alleged "person" must be distinct from the enterprise itself, see Haroco, 747 F.2d at 402, and must participate in the conduct of the enterprise's affairs, [*349] not [\[\*\*60\]](#) just its own, see Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. 170, 113 S. Ct. 1163, 1173, 122 L. Ed. 2d 525 \(1993\). But Rohlfing's Complaint presents a number of legally sufficient persons under this standard: the Manor Care subsidiaries, and a number of individual (though as yet unidentified) executives in the Manor Care hierarchy. To pick just one possible permutation,<sup>26</sup> if the "enterprise" is defined as the "Manor Care corporate group," the Vitalink subsidiary would be a sufficient "person," since the Seventh Circuit has clearly indicated that subsidiary corporations are separate entities that "conduct the affairs" of their parent corporations. See Haroco, 747 F.2d at 402-03 ("[A] subsidiary corporation is certainly a legal entity distinct from its parent. . . . We think it virtually self-evident that a subsidiary acts on behalf of, and thus conducts the affairs of, its parent corporation."); Richmond, 52 F.3d at 646-47 (discussing Haroco); see also United States v. Robinson, 8 F.3d 398, 407 \(7th Cir. 1993\) (criminal RICO case holding that the owner of a corporation and the corporation itself are separate entities). Accordingly, we find that Rohlfing has adequately [\[\*\*61\]](#) alleged both an enterprise and a person.

<sup>24</sup> For the time being, Rohlfing has simply identified these employee defendants as "John Does 1-10." See Compl. P 75. Because the particular identities of these employees is a matter peculiarly within the knowledge of the corporate defendants, and because the allegedly fraudulent acts committed by these employees are clearly described, we believe this form of pleading is acceptable. Needless to say, after Rohlfing has had an opportunity to conduct discovery he will need to identify these individuals and their roles in the alleged fraud scheme with particularity.

<sup>25</sup> The defendants have also asserted Rule 9\(b\) as a reason to dismiss the ICFA claims in the complaint. For the reasons set forth above, we reject this argument.

<sup>26</sup> Understandably, Rohlfing elected not to commit itself to one particular enterprise/person combination in its complaint. Indeed, based on the allegations, a number of satisfactory enterprise/person combinations appear possible. There is no need for us to set forth more than one of these possibilities in the context of this motion to dismiss.

c. the pattern requirement

The defendants' final challenge to Rohlfing's RICO claims is that he has failed to allege a "pattern" of racketeering activity. The statutory definition of "pattern" is not of much assistance here: it merely indicates that a pattern "requires at least two acts of racketeering activity." 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(5\). A more fruitful source of guidance on this question is the Supreme Court's discussion in H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Tel. Co., 492 U.S. 229, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195, 109 S. Ct. 2893 \(1989\). The Court stated that "to prove a pattern of racketeering activity a plaintiff or prosecutor must show [**62] that the racketeering predicates are related, and that they amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity." Id. at 239. With respect to the continuity element,<sup>27</sup> the Court describes it as "both a closed- and open-ended concept, referring either to a closed period of repeated conduct, or to past conduct that by its nature projects into the future with a threat of repetition." Id. at 241. HN22 It is clear that the continuity element is satisfied "where it is shown that the predicates are a regular way of conducting defendant's ongoing legitimate business . . . or of conducting or participating in an ongoing and legitimate RICO 'enterprise.'" [Id. at 243. In light of H.J. Inc., the Seventh Circuit has applied a four-factor test to determine continuity, looking at: (1) the number and variety of the predicate acts and the length of time over which they were committed; (2) the number of victims; (3) the presence of separate schemes; and (4) the occurrence of distinct injuries. See J.D. Marshall Int'l, Inc. v. Redstart, Inc., 935 F.2d 815, 820 \(7th Cir. 1991\); United States Textiles, Inc. v. Anheuser-Busch Cos., 911 F.2d 1261, 1267-68 \(7th Cir. 1990\); [**63] Management Computer Servs., Inc. v. Hawkins, Ash, Baptie & Co., 883 F.2d 48 \(7th Cir. 1989\).

Under these principles, Rohlfing has certainly alleged a continuous program of racketeering activity by the defendants. The complaint indicates that the defendants' scheme to defraud Manor Care residents has been in place for at least four years, see Compl. P 69, perhaps going back as far as the date of Manor Care's acquisition of Vitalink in 1981, see id. PP 8, 36, and further alleges that the scheme will continue into the future absent judicial intervention, see id. P 69. As discussed supra with respect to the motion for class certification, the alleged number of victims is in the tens of thousands, perhaps several hundred thousand. Each of these victims suffered a distinct injury, depending on the amount they were [**64] overcharged for [*350] pharmaceutical services. Each resident was the victim of a separate act of fraud, since the fraudulent misrepresentations and omissions were made to each victim individually, immediately prior to their entry into a Manor Care facility. See id. P 30. A fair reading of the Complaint as a whole indicates that the practice of "coercing" residents to select Vitalink for their pharmaceutical services is a part of the "regular way of conducting defendant[s'] ongoing legitimate business[es]," H.J. Inc., 492 U.S. at 243. Even though all of the predicate acts appear to be related to one general "scheme," the other factors overwhelmingly indicate that the defendants' racketeering activity has been continuous. We conclude that a pattern has been alleged.

d. summary

Rohlfing's complaint meets the particularity requirements of Rule 9\(b\), and has adequately alleged a "pattern" and an "enterprise." As the defendants do not contend that Rohlfing's RICO pleadings were defective in any other way, the defendants' motion to dismiss the RICO claims is denied.

3. ICFA claims

HN23[ To assert a claim under the ICFA, Rohlfing must allege that the defendants have committed [**65] "unfair or deceptive acts or practices." 815 ILCS 505/2. The statute indicates that such acts include, but are not limited to, "any deception, fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation or the concealment, suppression or omission of any material fact, with the intent that others rely upon the concealment, suppression or omission." Id. The defendants contend that Rohlfing has failed to allege an ICFA violation because merely charging excessive prices for products or services does not amount to an "unfair or deceptive act or practice." See Def.'s Br. at 15. This argument misses the target by a wide margin. Rohlfing's allegation is not merely that he has been overcharged for pharmaceutical services, but that the defendants misrepresented the prices he would be charged by falsely claiming that their prices were lower than those of alternative suppliers. See Compl. PP 28-29, 41, 88a. The Complaint explicitly alleges that the omissions and misrepresentations made regarding relative prices were material, see id. P 88a, which is sufficient to state a claim under the ICFA. See Brown v. C.I.L., Inc., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4053, No. 94 C 1479, 1996 WL 164294, at *8 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 1, 1996); [**66] Dwyer v. American Express Co., 273 Ill. App. 3d 742, 652 N.E.2d 1351, 1356, 210 Ill. Dec. 375 \(Ill. App. Ct. 1995\).<sup>28</sup>

---

<sup>27</sup> The defendants do not argue that the alleged acts of racketeering activity are unrelated, so we need not discuss this element. See Def.'s Br. at 12-15 (discussing only continuity).

4. fiduciary duty claims

As discussed supra in Part II.B.3.a.iv, we believe that a fiduciary duty could exist between nursing homes and their residents under certain circumstances. To be specific, a fiduciary relationship would exist if: (1) the resident reposed confidence in the nursing home; and (2) the nursing home were found to be in a position of "superiority and influence" with respect to the resident as a result of this confidence. See Kolze v. Fordtran, 412 Ill. 461, 107 N.E.2d 686, 690 \(Ill. 1952\); Davis v. Brickey, 397 Ill. 556, 74 N.E.2d 710, 715 \(Ill. 1947\); see also Pommier v. Peoples Bank Marycrest, 967 F.2d 1115, 1119 \(7th Cir. 1992\) (applying Illinois law and stating that "the essence of a fiduciary relationship is that one party is dominated by the other"). HN24[↑] In determining whether a fiduciary relation exists, a court must consider factors such as: "kinship, age disparity, health, mental condition, education, business experience, and the extent of reliance." Pommier, 967 F.2d at 1119; Noah v. Enesco Corp., 911 F. Supp. 299, 303 \(N.D. Ill. 1995\). Rohlfing's pleadings clearly allege the required elements of confidence and influence. See Compl. PP 95-96.<sup>29</sup> [**68] Rohlfing also [*351] alleges that the defendants have breached their fiduciary duties by charging him excessive prices for pharmaceuticals. Cf. Quist v. Dorn, 301 Ill. App. 264, 22 N.E.2d 729, 732 \(Ill. 1939\) ("Courts of Equity will scrutinize with jealous vigilance the transactions between parties occupying fiduciary relations toward each other . . . ."). Thus, Rohlfing has properly alleged a claim for breach of fiduciary duty.<sup>30</sup>

The defendants argue that Rohlfing's claim is barred as a matter of law by the economic loss doctrine. See Def.'s Br. at 16. This doctrine generally holds that where the duty of a seller of goods or services arises under a contract, the seller may not sue for purely economic damages under a tort theory. See Congregation of the Passion v. Touche Ross & Co., 159 Ill. 2d 137, 636 N.E.2d 503, 513-14, 201 Ill. Dec. 71 \(Ill. 1994\) (collecting cases). The defendants [**69] argue that this rule precludes Rohlfing's fiduciary duty claim--which sounds in tort--because the relationship between Rohlfing, Manor Care, and Vitalink arose under a contract, and the complaint alleges only economic damages. This argument ignores an important limitation on the scope of the economic loss doctrine: "The economic loss doctrine does not bar recovery in tort for the breach of a duty that exists independently of a contract." Congregation of the Passion, 636 N.E.2d at 515; see also RTC v. KPMG Peat Marwick, 844 F. Supp. 431, 435 \(N.D. Ill. 1994\). HN25[↑] A fiduciary duty exists independently of any contract between parties, and so the economic loss doctrine is inapplicable to claims for breaches of fiduciary duties. See FDIC v. Miller, 781 F. Supp. 1271, 1277 \(N.D. Ill. 1991\) (holding the economic loss doctrine inapplicable to a claim for breach of fiduciary duty because fiduciary and contractual duties "are distinct and impose separate, independent obligations").

---

<sup>28</sup> The defendants also contend that their failure to disclose the relationship between Manor Care and Vitalink does not violate the ICFA because this fact is a matter of public record. See Def.'s Br. at 16. But even if so, this does not warrant dismissal of Rohlfing's ICFA claims; as discussed in the text, Rohlfing has properly alleged other deceptive statements and omissions.

<sup>29</sup> The defendants correctly observe that a party claiming the existence of a fiduciary duty where such a relationship does not exist as a matter of law (such as lawyer-client or principal-agent) must prove the existence of the relationship by clear and convincing evidence. See Pommier, 967 F.2d at 1119; Kolze, 107 N.E.2d at 690. This point will no doubt be highly relevant at trial or on a motion for summary judgment, but it is irrelevant with respect to this motion to dismiss: for now, Rohlfing must merely allege the fiduciary relationship, not prove it.

<sup>30</sup> We agree with the defendants' suggestion that Rohlfing cannot allege a breach of fiduciary duty based on the events surrounding the signing of the residency agreement and his selection of Vitalink as his provider of pharmaceuticals services. See Def.'s Reply Br. at 22. At the time of these events, prior to Taylor's residency at Manor Care, no confidence or influence could have been present since the parties were still dealing at arm's length. This has no impact, however, on Rohlfing's claim that after he took up residency at Manor Care he was overcharged for pharmaceuticals in violation of the defendants' fiduciary duty.

IV. Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, we will certify the class requested by the plaintiff (with changes as noted) for purposes of bringing a RICO claim against the defendants. Rohlfing's [*70] antitrust claims are dismissed with respect to all members of the class who do not opt-out. We decline to dismiss Rohlfing's ICFA and fiduciary duty claims, though these claims will proceed only on behalf of Rohlfing alone. It is so ordered.

MARVIN E. ASPEN

United States District Judge

Dated 3/27/97

---

End of Document

Credit Counseling Ctrs. of Am. v. National Found. for Consumer Credit

United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas, Dallas Division

April 1, 1997, Decided ; April 1, 1997, FILED; April 2, 1997, ENTERED ON DOCKET

Civil Action No. 3:94-CV-1855-D

Reporter

1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4957 *; 1997 WL 160180

CREDIT COUNSELING CENTERS OF AMERICA, Plaintiff-Counterdefendant, VS. NATIONAL FOUNDATION FOR CONSUMER CREDIT, INC., Defendant-Counterplaintiff, VS. CONSUMER CREDIT SERVICE OF SAN FRANCISCO, INC., et al., Intervenors-Counterplaintiffs.

Prior History: Credit Counseling v. National Found., 62 F.3d 395, 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 21284 (5th Cir. Tex., 1995)

Disposition: [*1] One motion for summary judgment denied and the other motion for summary judgment granted in part and denied in part.

Core Terms

trademark, consumer credit, summary judgment, counseling services, Counseling, antitrust claim, Counterplaintiffs, discovery, summary judgment motion, generic, genuine issue of material fact, preliminary injunction, unfair competition, continuance, requests, sham, infringement, Register, fanciful

Counsel: For CREDIT COUNSELING CENTERS OF AMERICA, plaintiff: Blake Allen Bailey, Attorney at Law, Vial Hamilton Koch & Knox, Dallas, TX USA. William Thomas Timmons, Attorney at Law, Kenneth Rudolph Matticks, Attorney at Law, Timmons & Kelly, Dallas, TX USA.

For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF SAN FRANCISCO INC, intervenor-plaintiff: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, Figari & Davenport, Dallas, TX USA. For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF GREATER DALLAS INC, intervenor-plaintiff: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF AUSTIN, intervenor-plaintiff: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF WEST FLORIDA INC, intervenor-plaintiff: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For COMMUNITY CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF UTAH INC, [*2] intervenor-plaintiff: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF SEATTLE INC, intervenor-plaintiff: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA INC, intervenor-plaintiff: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF OREGON INC, intervenor-plaintiff: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF GREATER DENVER INC, intervenor-plaintiff: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF EAST BAY, intervenor-plaintiff: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF GREATER NEW ORLEANS INC, intervenor-plaintiff: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney [*3] at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF SACRAMENTO INC, intervenor-plaintiff: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF ST LOUIS INC, intervenor-plaintiff: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For LUTHERAN SOCIAL SERVICES, intervenor-plaintiff: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF DES MOINES INC, intervenor-plaintiff: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF CENTRAL OHIO INC, intervenor-plaintiff: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above).

For NATIONAL FOUNDATION FOR CONSUMER CREDIT INC, defendant: Cole Bass Ramey, Attorney at Law, Crouch & Hallett, Dallas, TX USA. Vincent M Amberly, David Hagner Kuney & Krupin, Washington, DC USA.

For [*4] CREDIT COUNSELING CENTERS OF AMERICA, counter-defendant: William Thomas Timmons, Attorney at Law, Kenneth Rudolph Matticks, Attorney at Law, Timmons & Kelly, Dallas, TX USA. For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF GREATER DALLAS INC, counter-defendant: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, Figari & Davenport, Dallas, TX USA. For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF AUSTIN, counter-defendant: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF WEST FLORIDA INC, counter-defendant: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For COMMUNITY CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF UTAH INC, counter-defendant: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF SEATTLE INC, counter-defendant: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA INC, counter-defendant: [*5] Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF OREGON INC, counter-defendant: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF GREATER DENVER INC, counter-defendant: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF EAST BAY, counter-defendant: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF GREATER NEW ORLEANS INC, counter-defendant: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF SACRAMENTO INC, counter-defendant: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF ST LOUIS INC, counter-defendant: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For LUTHERAN SOCIAL SERVICES, counter-defendant: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF DES MOINES INC, counter-defendant: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above). For CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE OF CENTRAL OHIO INC, counter-defendant: Alan Stewart Loewinsohn, Attorney at Law, (See above), Julie Hathorn Roberson, Attorney at Law, (See above).

Judges: SIDNEY A. FITZWATER, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: SIDNEY A. FITZWATER

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

In this action involving trademark infringement, unfair competition, and antitrust claims, the court denies one motion for summary judgment and grants in part and denies in part the other motion for summary judgment. The court also defers consideration of part of one motion pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(f).

I

Plaintiff-counterdefendant Credit Counseling Centers of America ("CCCA") sued defendant-counterplaintiff National Foundation for Consumer Credit, Inc. ("NFCC") to obtain a declaratory judgment that NFCC's licensed name--CONSUMER [*7] CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE--is a generic expression and therefore unprotectable. NFCC counterclaimed on theories of federal trademark infringement, federal unfair competition, false representation, and false designation of origin, and a Texas-law claim for injury to business reputation and trade name.<sup>1</sup> CCCA and NFCC are competitors in the business of providing nonprofit credit counseling to individual consumers. CCCA began providing such services in 1988. NFCC has engaged in credit counseling since approximately 1963. NFCC has always identified its debt management services under the name and mark of CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE. NFCC has obtained registration on the Supplemental Register for the service mark CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE, and a trademark registration has been approved in the Principal Register.

[*8] Intervenors-counterplaintiffs ("Intervenors") are members in NFCC. They are licensed by NFCC to provide debt management advice and financial counseling services using NFCC's federally registered trademarks. Intervenors assert substantially similar claims against CCCA. In turn, CCCA alleges that Intervenors' trademark abuse and other activities violate §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

CCCA began advertising its services in telephone books and with directory assistance throughout the United States. CCCA's advertisements include the words "Consumer Credit Counseling" just prior to the name CCCA. NFCC and Intervenors argue that this use infringes their trademark rights because it confuses consumers who know NFCC's members by name as the CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE, and has resulted in a decline in business in some offices.

The court issued a preliminary injunction preventing CCCA from using the term "Consumer Credit Counseling" in this manner. The court entered the preliminary injunction based on the application and supporting materials filed by NFCC; CCCA did not file opposition materials. Based on the available evidence, the court determined that the term "Consumer Credit Counseling" [*9] was descriptive to suggestive and protectable because it had acquired secondary meaning. Mem. Op. at 4-7. The court held that NFCC had demonstrated a substantial likelihood of success on the merits and that a preliminary injunction should issue. The Fifth Circuit affirmed. Credit Counseling Ctrs. of Am. v. National Found. for Consumer Credit, Inc., 62 F.3d 395 (5th Cir. 1995) (per curiam) (affirmed on basis of district court opinion).

NFCC and Intervenors move for summary judgment on the issue of CCCA's liability for trademark infringement. Intervenors also move for summary judgment dismissing CCCA's antitrust counterclaim against them. CCCA requests that the court defer ruling on Intervenors' motion until they adequately respond to prior discovery requests. CCCA also requests that the court open a new discovery period.

II

To grant summary judgment on counterplaintiffs' trademark infringement claim, there cannot be a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE is eligible for protection, whether counterplaintiffs are the senior users, or whether there is a likelihood of confusion between the mark and CCCA's use. See [Brandtjen \[\*10\] & Kluge, Inc. v. Prudhomme](#), 765 F. Supp. 1551, 1564 (N.D. Tex. 1991) (Fitzwater, J.) (citing Union Nat'l Bank of Tex., Laredo, Tex. v. Union Nat'l Bank of Tex., Austin, Tex., 909 F.2d 839, 844 (5th Cir. 1990)).

---

<sup>1</sup> Counter-plaintiffs have requested summary judgment only on their trademark and unfair competition claims. The court need not address, therefore, whether summary judgment might be appropriate on their remaining claims.

To determine whether NFCC's mark is protectable, the court must analyze the strength of the mark. "The strength and distinctiveness of the mark adopted is a key consideration in deciding how much protection should be afforded to the mark." Minturn Advertising v. Hermsen Design Assocs., Inc., 728 F. Supp. 430, 432 (N.D. Tex. 1990) (Fitzwater, J.) (citing Amstar Corp. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 615 F.2d 252, 259 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 899, 66 L. Ed. 2d 129, 101 S. Ct. 268 (1980)).

Marks are categorized as generic, descriptive, suggestive, or arbitrary or fanciful. Union Nat'l Bank, 909 F.2d at 844. "These categories are not discrete, however, but instead describe points on a spectrum ranging from strong to weak." Worthington Foods, Inc. v. Kellogg Co., 732 F. Supp. 1417, 1433 (S.D. Ohio 1990). "[A] mark may fall within the hazy area between two categories." Id.

Fanciful and arbitrary marks are the strongest types of marks. [Little \[\*11\] Caesar Enters., Inc. v. Pizza Caesar, Inc.](#), 834 F.2d 568, 571 (6th Cir. 1987). "Arbitrary and fanciful terms or phrases are those which are either coined words or words which are not suggestive of the product or service." Union Nat'l Bank, 909 F.2d at 845. "A 'fanciful' mark is a combination of letters or other symbols signifying nothing other than the product or service to which the mark has been assigned. . . ." Worthington Foods, 732 F. Supp. at 1433 (quoting Little Caesar Enters., 834 F.2d at 571). Arbitrary "refers to ordinary words which do not suggest or describe the services involved." Union Nat'l Bank, 909 F.2d at 845. "The greatest protection extends to marks that are purely arbitrary or fanciful and bear no relation to the products or services sold under the mark." Minturn Advertising, 728 F. Supp. at 432.

A suggestive mark suggests, rather than describes, some particular characteristic of a good or service but requires the consumer to draw a conclusion as to the nature of the goods and services. Union Nat'l Bank, 909 F.2d at 845. It is entitled to a narrower range of protection than is an arbitrary mark. [Minturn Advertising, 728 F. Supp. at \[\*121\] 432](#). A descriptive term "identifies a characteristic or quality of the article or service." Union Nat'l Bank, 909 F.2d at 845. It is entitled to even less protection. See Soweco, Inc. v. Shell Oil Co., 617 F.2d 1178, 1183 (5th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 981, 67 L. Ed. 2d 816, 101 S. Ct. 1516 (1981). A generic mark is the weakest type on the spectrum. Worthington Foods, 732 F. Supp. at 1433. It is a term commonly used as the name or description of a kind of goods, and cannot be trademarked. Id.

Counterplaintiffs urge that CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE is protectable as a descriptive mark that has acquired secondary meaning. CCCA disputes this characterization, maintaining that the mark is instead generic and unprotectable.

The proper characterization of a mark is a question of fact. Zartanis v. Oak Grove Smokehouse, 698 F.2d 786, 793 (5th Cir. 1983). Although a statutory presumption is accorded counterplaintiffs' mark by reason of registration, "this presumption is rebuttable and may be overcome by establishing the generic or descriptive nature of the mark." <sup>2</sup> Id. (citations omitted). The appropriate test for genericness is whether the public [*13] perceives the term primarily as the designation of the article. Society of Financial Examiners v. National Ass'n of Certified Fraud Examiners, 41 F.3d 223, 227 (5th Cir. 1995) (citing Veterans Ass'n v. Blinded Veterans Found., 872 F.2d 1035, 1041 (D.C. Cir. 1989)).

CCCA has offered sufficient evidence that CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE is a generic term for a class of services to preclude summary judgment. CCCA presents a study conducted by Common Knowledge, Inc. for CCCA. The study concludes that the phrase "Consumer Credit Counseling" is commonly understood to be a generic term rather than a brand name. CCCA has also shown that the same or similar phrases are used generically by New Jersey, North Dakota, and Maryland in their public laws and by thirteen different telephone directory books. Although counterplaintiffs dispute the accuracy of the survey and the relevance of use of similar terms by other parties, [*14] the weight to be accorded this evidence is a matter for the trier of fact, not for the court in the context of summary judgment.

---

<sup>2</sup> Counterplaintiffs do not assert that their mark has obtained incontestible status.

This decision is not inconsistent with the court's earlier opinion granting a preliminary judgment, or the Fifth Circuit's opinion affirming on the basis of this court's opinion. The preliminary injunction is interlocutory and does not preclude the trier of fact from making other findings at a trial.<sup>3</sup> [*15] At the preliminary injunction stage, moreover, the court acts as trier of fact and is permitted to resolve disputed fact issues. In the context of a summary judgment motion, of course, the court is precluded from decided fact issues.<sup>4</sup>

III

Counterplaintiffs also request summary judgment on their unfair competition claim. "Unfair Competition is almost universally regarded as a question of whether the defendant is passing his goods or services as those of the plaintiff by virtue of substantial similarity between the two, leading to confusion on the part of potential customers." Boston Professional Hockey Ass'n, Inc. v. Dallas Cap & Emblem Mfg. Inc., 510 F.2d 1004, 1010 (5th Cir. 1975) (quoting Volkswagen Aktiengesellschaft v. Rickard, 492 F.2d 474, 478 (5th Cir. 1974)). Counterplaintiffs do not identify acts of unfair competition separate from CCCA's use of the term "Consumer Credit Counseling." In light of this court's determination that there is a genuine issue of material fact whether this term is generic, counterplaintiffs' motion for summary judgment on their unfair competition claim is denied.

IV

Intervenors move for summary judgment on CCCA's [*16] antitrust claims against them. CCCA asserts that Intervenors maintain their preeminent position in the "consumer credit counseling industry" by claiming trademark protection of the generic term CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE. CCCA avers that they did this to force smaller competitors to refrain from using a generic term that describes their activities.

A

Intervenors maintain that CCCA's antitrust claims must be dismissed under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. In the antitrust law context, the Supreme Court, in Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961), and United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965), established the constitutional immunity flowing from the right of petition. The Court later extended petitioning immunity to attempts to influence the judicial branch of government by way of litigation activities. California Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972). Litigation activities include threats of litigation. Coastal States Marketing, Inc. v. Hunt, 694 F.2d 1358, 1367 (5th Cir. 1983).

[*17] Noerr-Pennington applies to efforts to use the judicial process to protect trademarks. See Matrix Essentials v. Emporium Drug Mart, 988 F.2d 587, 594 (5th Cir. 1993). CCCA asserts, however, that Noerr-Pennington does not bar its claims because its allegations are not limited to trademark abuse and because the "sham litigation" exception applies.

Noerr-Pennington does not protect "sham litigation." See Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Inds, Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 56, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 (1993). In Professional Real Estate Investors the Supreme Court announced a two-part definition of "sham litigation." 508 U.S. at 60-61.

<sup>3</sup> See Credit Counseling Ctrs. of Am. v. National Found. for Consumer Credit, Inc., 62 F.3d 395 (5th Cir. 1995) (per curiam) ("[CCCA] must seek a hearing on the merits in which they may be able to convince the trier of fact that in truth and in fact what is being argued about is a generic terms and not protectable, and if it is protectable, that they have a right to use it under the fair use defense to the Lanham Act.").

<sup>4</sup> Because there is a genuine issue of material fact as to the mark's protectability, the court need not address the other elements of counterplaintiffs' trademark claim.

First, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail. Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation. Under this second part of our definition [*18] of sham, the court should focus on whether the baseless lawsuit conceals "an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor" through the "use of the governmental process --as opposed to the outcome of that process - as an anticompetitive weapon."

Id. (internal citations omitted).

CCCA argues that Intervenors' trademark claims were objectively baseless because the mark was not federally registered until after Intervenors filed suit, previous attempts to register CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE in the 1960's had resulted in the examiner's finding the term generic, others had accused Intervenors of trademark abuse, and the issue of the mark's protectability had never been fully litigated. While some of this evidence may call into question the ultimate merits of Intervenors' counterclaim, there is no genuine issue of material fact whether their trademark suit is "objectively basis." This court has issued an opinion granting NFCC's motion for a preliminary injunction on nearly identical trademark claims. The opinion was based, in part, on a determination that NFCC was likely to succeed upon its claims for trademark violations. The Fifth Circuit [*19] affirmed the decision based on this court's opinion. Although this court issued the opinion without benefit of an opposition response, the reasoning and evidence relied upon evince a sufficient level of objective merit to accord Noerr-Pennington insulation to the claims.

For the reasons set forth in the court's prior opinion and from the evidence presented in conjunction with this motion, it is clear that Intervenors' claims have some objective basis. A proper probable cause determination irrefutably demonstrates that an antitrust claimant has not proved the objective prong of the sham exception. Id. at 63. Summary judgment is therefore warranted on all of CCCA's antitrust claims based upon Intervenors' litigation efforts and threats of litigation to protect the mark CONSUMER CREDIT COUNSELING SERVICE.<sup>5</sup>

[*20] B

The court nevertheless agrees that CCCA's antitrust claim is not in all respects barred by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. CCCA's antitrust claim against Intervenors is based upon alleged trademark abuse and "other activities in restraint of trade." See plaintiff-counterdefendant's Ans. and Counterclaim against Intervenors at P 55. Intervenors maintain that the summary judgment evidence is too speculative to support antitrust claims aside from those precluded by Noerr-Pennington.

The court preterms decides whether CCCA's evidence is sufficient to withstand summary judgment. CCCA requests a Rule 56\(f\) continuance until Intervenors respond to interrogatories and document production requests served on them on July 15, 1996. The request is granted.

Rule 56\(f\) authorizes a continuance "should it appear from the affidavits of a party opposing the motion that the party cannot for reasons stated present by affidavit facts essential to justify the party's opposition. . . . The Rule is

---

<sup>5</sup> CCCA seeks leave to conduct additional discovery based on Intervenors' introduction of Noerr-Pennington issues into this case after the completion of the discovery period. The purpose of additional discovery would be to permit CCCA to obtain additional information about "the objective knowledge" of Intervenors as to the likelihood of success on the merits of their trademark claim and their "subjective intent" in filing this claim. See Decl. of Kenneth R. Matticks, Esq. at P 3. The court denies the request.

Evidence of the type requested would be unavailing. This court's ruling on the inapplicability of the sham exception depends neither on Intervenors' opinion of the strength of their claim nor on their subjective intent in bringing it. Instead, the court's opinion rests on an independent evaluation of the merit of Intervenors' trademark claim, as required by Professional Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 60-61. Additional discovery on these issues would therefore serve no purpose and CCCA's request is denied.

an essential ingredient of the federal summary judgment scheme, and provides a mechanism for dealing with the problem of premature summary judgment motions." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 [*21] U.S. 317, 326, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986). The continuance authorized by Rule 56(f) is a safe harbor built into the rules so that summary judgment is not granted prematurely. Union City Barge Line, Inc. v. Union Carbide Corp., 823 F.2d 129, 136 (5th Cir. 1987). To comply with the Rule, the party opposing summary judgment need only file the specified non-evidentiary affidavit, explaining why she cannot oppose the summary judgment motion on the merits. Id. A claim that further discovery or a trial might reveal facts of which the nonmovant is currently unaware is insufficient. Washington v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 839 F.2d 1121, 1123 (5th Cir. 1988). The party may not rely on vague assertions that additional discovery will produce needed, but unspecified facts, Union City, 823 F.2d at 137, but instead must identify a genuine issue of material fact that justifies the continuance pending further discovery. See Woods v. Federal Home Loan Bank Bd., 826 F.2d 1400, 1415 (5th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 959, 99 L. Ed. 2d 422, 108 S. Ct. 1221 (1988). A party seeking a continuance of a motion for summary judgment must demonstrate why he needs [*22] additional discovery and how the additional discovery will create a genuine issue of material fact. Krim v. BancTexas Group, Inc., 989 F.2d 1435, 1442 (5th Cir. 1993). He must show a genuine issue of material fact that requires postponement for discovery, see McCarty v. United States, 929 F.2d 1085, 1088 (5th Cir. 1991), and must present specific facts explaining its inability to make the substantive response required by Rule 56(e), see Solo Serve Corp. v. Westowne Assocs., 929 F.2d 160, 167 n.25 (5th Cir. 1991).

CCCA seeks time to gather evidence of monopolization and conspiracy, including accounting and tax information relevant to geographic markets and market share, license agreements, and the names of the members of the various governing boards of Intervenors. CCCA requested this evidence in interrogatories and requests propounded on July 15, 1996. Three months later, CCCA informed Intervenors in writing that their compliance was deficient. On February 12, 1996 the magistrate judge issued an order compelling the noncomplying Intervenors to respond fully, without objection, to CCCA's requests for information within 30 days. Because Intervenors have been dilatory in [*23] producing this relevant evidence of monopolization and conspiracy, CCCA's motion for a continuance is granted. Its summary judgment response shall be due 30 days after Intervenors comply with the magistrate judge's order, or 30 days from the date of this memorandum opinion, whichever is later. CCCA shall advise the court by letter once the due date for its response is calculable so that the court may internally calendar the remainder of the motion for decision.

SO ORDERED.

April 1, 1997.

SIDNEY A. FITZWATER

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

In re Circuit Breaker Litig.

United States District Court for the Central District of California

April 1, 1997, Decided ; April 1, 1997, Filed

No. CV 88-3012 CBM

Reporter

984 F. Supp. 1267 *; 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14232 **; 1997-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,878

IN RE CIRCUIT BREAKER LITIGATION

Disposition: [**1] Plaintiffs' motions for partial summary judgment against Defendants' antitrust and intentional interference counterclaims GRANTED. UL's motion to strike declarations of Richard Smith and Roy Weinstein DENIED.

Core Terms

---

circuit breaker, rebuilt, antitrust, present evidence, Sherman Act, reconditioned, claimant, certification, molded, manufacturing, no evidence, conspiracy, intentional interference, counterclaims, anti-competitive, lawsuits, summary judgment, customers, contacts, do business, indicates, Electric, testing, immune, induce, distributors, entities, products, prospective economic advantage, partial summary judgment

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Affidavits

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > Timing of Motions & Responses

**HN1** [] Supporting Materials, Affidavits

A party against whom a counterclaim is asserted may, at any time, move with or without supporting affidavits for a summary judgment in the party's favor as to all or any part thereof. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(b\). Summary judgment is appropriate if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

**HN2** [] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

In moving for summary judgment, the movant assumes no obligation to negate or disprove matters on which the opponent will have the burden of proof at trial. In order to demonstrate that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law, the moving party need only show the court that there is an absence of evidence to support an essential element of the nonmoving party's case. A failure of proof concerning an essential element of the nonmoving party's case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Scintilla Rule

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

**HN3** [] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

Once the moving party has demonstrated the complete absence of proof on an essential element of the other party's case, the burden shifts to the opponent to come forward with sufficient evidence for a reasonable jury to find in its favor on that element. In response, the opposing party must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\). The mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the opponent's position will be insufficient.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

984 F. Supp. 1267, *1267 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14232, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN4 [↓] Remedies, Damages

In order to withstand a motion for summary judgment, claimants seeking damages under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, must establish that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the opposing party entered into an illegal conspiracy that caused the claimants to suffer a cognizable injury. In addition, the claimants must also show more than a conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws; they must also show an injury to them resulting from the illegal conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN5 [↓] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Plaintiffs may discharge their initial summary judgment burden by proffering a plausible and justifiable alternative interpretation of its conduct that rebuts defendants' allegations of a conspiracy. If plaintiffs meet this initial burden, defendants must come forward with evidence that is capable of sustaining a rational inference of conspiracy and that tends to exclude the possibility that plaintiffs acted independently.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN6 [↓] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

While the inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts must generally be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing a motion for summary judgment, antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 case. Thus, conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. In other words, claimants must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed them.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

984 F. Supp. 1267, *1267A 997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14232, **1

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 Sherman Act, Claims

To prove a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a party must show the existence of a contract, combination or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. A violation of the Sherman Act consists of three elements: (1) an agreement or conspiracy among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) by which the person or entities intend to harm or restrain competition; and (3) which actually restrains competition. Even if a claimant can establish illegal conduct, a claimant must further show that it suffered injury as the result of that illegal conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

HN8 Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Right to Petition Immunity

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine provides broad protection from the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, for concerted efforts to influence the decisions of public officials. This protection extends to lobbying both the executive and legislative branch and to petitioning of administrative agencies and courts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN9 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

A party's immunity for its efforts to influence public officials is lost only if the party engages in "sham" petitioning. "Sham" petitioning is that which both: (1) is objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable petitioner could realistically expect success on the merits; and (2) conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor through the use of the governmental process, as opposed to the outcome of that process, as an anti-competitive weapon. When reviewing a claim of "sham" petitioning, a court must apply the two parts in succession. Only if a suit or petitioning activity is found to be objectively baseless, does the court proceed to examine the litigant's subjective intent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN10 Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine shields all communications with the government. A party's immunity for its efforts to influence public officials is lost only if it engages in "sham" petitioning. In order to deprive plaintiffs of immunity for their contacts with government entities, plaintiffs' contacts must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable petitioner could realistically expect success on the merits. Noerr-Pennington even precludes antitrust liability based on the use of false statements to persuade the government to act.

984 F. Supp. 1267, *1267 (1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14232, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN11 [] Horizontal Refusals to Deal, Boycotts

Group boycotts are treated as per se violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, only when the challenged activity would almost always tend to be predominantly anticompetitive.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN12 [] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

Activities that can constitute per se violations include price-fixing, group boycotts, tying arrangements, and horizontal territorial divisions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

**HN13** [blue document icon] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

To prevail on a § 1 violation under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, using the "rule of reason" test, a claimant must prove: (1) an agreement, conspiracy or combination among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) which is intended to harm or unreasonably restrain competition; and (3) which actually causes injury to competition, beyond the impact on the claimant, within a field of commerce in which the claimant is engaged, i.e., "antitrust injury." In addition, a claimant must show more than simply parallel behavior.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

**HN14** [blue document icon] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

Plaintiffs may discharge their initial summary judgment burden by proffering a plausible and justifiable alternative interpretation of its conduct that rebuts defendants' allegations of a conspiracy. If plaintiffs meet this initial burden, defendants must come forward with evidence that is capable of sustaining a rational inference of conspiracy and that tends to exclude the possibility that plaintiffs acted independently. However, antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 case. Thus, conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN15** [blue document icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Internally coordinated conduct between a corporation and an unincorporated division does not violate § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN16** [blue document icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

A standards-setting organization does not per se violate the antitrust laws by refusing to certify a product. Rather, the "rule of reason" test applies to such conduct. Under this test, the question is whether an antitrust defendant's conduct promotes competition or suppresses competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN17** [blue document icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

984 F. Supp. 1267, *1267 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14232, **1

To state a claim against a standard-making organization, a claimant must show either that it was barred from obtaining approval of its products on a discriminatory basis from its competitors, or that the conduct as a whole was manifestly anti-competitive and unreasonable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Nuclear Regulatory Commission

HN18 [L] Sherman Act, Claims

Under the "rule of reason" test, to establish a § 1 violation under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a claimant must show: (1) an agreement, conspiracy or combination among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) which is intended to harm or unreasonably restrain competition; and (3) which actually causes injury to competition, beyond the impact on the claimant, within a field of commerce in which the claimant is engaged, i.e., "antitrust injury." A claimant must prove that each antitrust defendant had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Eminent Domain Proceedings

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Professional Associations

HN19 [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

Attendance at trade association meetings and participation in trade association activities are not, in and of themselves, condemned or even discouraged by the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN20 [L] Sherman Act, Claims

Proving antitrust injury is important in a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 case. "Antitrust injury" is injury to competition, beyond the impact on the claimant, within a field of commerce in which the claimant is engaged. To establish antitrust injury, a claimant must show not merely injury to himself as a competitor, but rather injury to competition.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN21 [blue icon] Intentional Interference, Elements

To prevail on a claim of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, a claimant must provide evidence of: (1) an economic relationship between itself and third parties containing the probability of future economic benefit; (2) the defendant's knowledge of these relationships; (3) intentional, wrongful conduct on the part of the defendant designed to interfere with or disrupt the relationships; (4) actual disruption; and (5) resulting damage. The allegedly tortious conduct must be wrongful by some legal measure other than the fact of interference itself.

Counsel: For SQUARE D CO, plaintiff: David Steven Olson, Carlsmith Ball Wichman Case & Ichiki, Los Angeles, CA.

For SQUARE D CO, plaintiff: Robert E Currie, Latham & Watkins, Costa Mesa, CA.

For SQUARE D CO, plaintiff: Robert E Wagner, Alan L Barry, James J Jagoda, Amy J Gast, Wallenstein & Wagner, Chicago, IL.

For THE CONNECTICUT INDEMNITY COMPANY, intervenor: Holly A McNulty, Shield & Smith, Ann M Ghazarians, Hornberger Ghazarians & Brewer, Los Angeles, CA.

For INDUSTRIAL INDEMNITY COMPANY, intervenor: Brian E Brick, Arthur Paul Berg, Berg & Brick, La Canada, CA.

For HOME INSURANCE COMPANY, intervenor: Jean M Lawler, Murchison & Cumming, Los Angeles, CA.

For GULF INSURANCE COMPANY, intervenor: Paul D Loreto, Robert P Damone, Norby & Brodeur, Orange, CA.

For GENERAL CIRCUIT BREAKER & ELECTRIC SUPPLY INC, XAVIER CONTRERAS, defendants: Maxwell M Blecher, Donald R Pepperman, Blecher & Collins, Los Angeles, CA.

For GENERAL CIRCUIT BREAKER & ELECTRIC [**2] SUPPLY INC, XAVIER CONTRERAS, defendants: David Alan Huffaker, Alan H Stanfill, George Oakes, Throckmorton Beckstrom Oakes & Tomassian, Pasadena, CA.

For GENERAL CIRCUIT BREAKER & ELECTRIC SUPPLY INC, XAVIER CONTRERAS, defendants: Alan H Stanfill.

For GENERAL CIRCUIT BREAKER & ELECTRIC SUPPLY INC, XAVIER CONTRERAS, defendants: Becky V Christensen, Becky V Christensen Law Office, Glendora, CA.

For AC CIRCUIT BREAKER-ELECTRICAL SUPPLY, defendant: Steven L Smilay, Murchison & Cumming, Los Angeles, CA.

For AC CIRCUIT BREAKER-ELECTRICAL SUPPLY, JOE A CONTRERAS, defendants: Jeffrey Bradpiece, Torrance, CA.

For PANELBOARD SPECIALTIES WHOLESALE ELECTRIC INC, JAMIE CONTRERAS, defendants: George Oakes, Throckmorton Beckstrom Oakes & Tomassian, Pasadena, CA.

For PANELBOARD SPECIALTIES WHOLESALE ELECTRIC INC, JAMIE CONTRERAS, defendants: J Scott Bennett, Ray H Shatzer, Law Offices of J Scott Bennett, Lake Elsinore, CA.

For GENERAL CIRCUIT BREAKER & ELECTRIC SUPPLY INC, XAVIER CONTRERAS, counter-claimants: George Oakes, Throckmorton Beckstrom Oakes & Tomassian, Pasadena, CA.

For GENERAL CIRCUIT BREAKER & ELECTRIC SUPPLY INC, XAVIER CONTRERAS, counter-claimants: [**3] Alan H Stanfill.

For PANELBOARD SPECIALTIES WHOLESALE ELECTRIC INC, JAIME A CONTRERAS, counter-claimants: J Scott Bennett, Law Offices of J Scott Bennett, Lake Elsinore, CA.

984 F. Supp. 1267, *1267 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14232, **3

For MCCB INC dba Molded Case Circuit Breakers, RICARDO CONTRERAS aka Rick Contreras, counter-claimants: Ronald J Nessim, Bird Marella Boxer Wolpert & Matz, Los Angeles, CA.

For PENCON INTERNATIONAL INC dba General Magnetics/Electric Wholesale, GENERAL MAGNETICS/ELECTRIC WHOLESALE, counter-claimants: Michael J Emling, Michael J Emling Law Offices, Long Beach, CA.

For GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, counter-defendant: John S McGeeney, Leonard C Peterson, Paul Hastings Janofsky & Walker, Norman A Dupont, Shapiro Hinds & Mitchell, Los Angeles, CA.

For GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, counter-defendant: John B Stephens, Paul, Hastings, Janofsky & Walker, Costa Mesa, CA.

For GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, counter-defendant: Edward J Cummings, Jr, Edward J Cummings Jr Law Offices, Niskayuna, NY.

For GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, counter-defendant: Robert D Gilbert, General Electric, Fairfield, CT.

For GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, counter-defendant: Mansfield C Neal, Jr, Mansfield C Neal Law Office, Schenectady, [**4] NY.

For GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, counter-defendant: James P Flynn, James P Flynn Law Office, Plainville, CT.

For UNDERWRITERS LABORATORIES, counter-defendant: Jonathan D Fink, G Forsythe Bogeaus, Michael L Wachtell, Buchalter Nemer Fields & Younger, Los Angeles, CA.

For UNDERWRITERS LABORATORIES, counter-defendant: John J Verscraj, Francis J Higgins, Margaret A McGreal, Matthew A Phillips, Bell Boyd & Lloyd, Chicago, IL.

For WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC CORPORATION, counter-defendant: Joseph D Lee, Gregory P Stone, Marsha Hymanson, Ted G Dane, John C Ulin, David Carter Dinielli, Munger Tolles & Olson, Los Angeles, CA.

Judges: CONSUELO B. MARSHALL, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: CONSUELO B. MARSHALL

Opinion

---

[*1270] ORDER RE: PLAINTIFFS' MOTIONS FOR PARTIAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT AGAINST DEFENDANTS' ANTITRUST AND INTENTIONAL INTERFERENCE COUNTERCLAIMS, AND UL'S MOTION TO STRIKE THE DECLARATIONS OF SMITH AND WEINSTEIN

The matters before the Court, the Honorable Consuelo B. Marshall, United States [*1271] District Judge, presiding, are Plaintiffs' Motions for Partial Summary Judgment on Defendants' Antitrust and Intentional Interference for Prospective Economic Advantage Counterclaims, and UL's Motion [*5] to Strike the Declarations of Richard L. Smith and Roy Weinstein.<sup>1</sup> Upon consideration of the record, papers, and oral argument, the Court

---

<sup>1</sup>This Order encompasses the antitrust and intentional interference portions of the following motions: (1) Square D's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment of Defendants' Antitrust and Interference Counterclaims (filed 9/16/96); (2) UL's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on Defendants' Antitrust Claims (filed 9/16/96); (3) GE's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on Defendants' Antitrust Counterclaims (filed 9/16/96); (4) GE's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Against GMEW, GCB, and PBS (trade libel, defamation, and intentional interference with prospective economic advantage counterclaims) (filed 9/16/96); (5) Westinghouse's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment or, in the Alternative, for Summary Adjudication on Defendants' Antitrust Counterclaims and for Summary Adjudication of Issues on Defendants' Tortious Interference with Economic Advantage (filed 9/16/96); (6) UL's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment against PBS (Noerr-Pennington immunity) (filed 9/22/95); and (7) Plaintiffs' Motion to Strike the Declarations of Dr. Richard L. Smith and Roy Weinstein (filed 10/28/96).

issues the following Order, GRANTING partial summary judgment in favor of Plaintiffs' on Defendants' antitrust and intentional interference with prospective economic advantage counterclaims, and DENYING UL's Motion to Strike.

[**6] Background

Plaintiffs are Square D Company ("Square D"), General Electric Company ("GE"), Westinghouse Electric Corporation ("Westinghouse"), and Underwriters Laboratories, Inc. ("UL"). Defendants are Panelboard Specialties and Wholesale Electric, Inc., and Jaime Contreras ("PBS"), Pencon International d/b/a General Magnetics & Electric Wholesale, Inc., and the Estate of Charley Contreras ("Pencon/GMEW"), and General Circuit Breaker & Electric Supply, Inc., and Xavier Contreras ("GCB").

This litigation commenced in 1988, when Plaintiffs, three circuit breaker manufacturers and a certification agency, separately sued eleven circuit breaker reconditioning companies for trademark infringement and unfair competition. Since then, many of the cases have settled, and one case went to trial.<sup>2</sup> Defendants, the remaining circuit breaker reconditioners, have raised a number of affirmative defenses, and counterclaimed for, inter alia, antitrust violations under the Sherman Act and intentional interference with prospective economic advantage.

[**7] Plaintiffs brought motions for partial summary judgment against all three remaining Defendants on Defendants' antitrust and intentional interference counterclaims. The Court heard arguments on these motions on January 6, 1997.<sup>3</sup>

ANTITRUST DISCUSSION

Defendants allege that Plaintiffs violated the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 by "engaging in a continuing combination and conspiracy to unreasonably restrain trade and commerce in the sale and distribution of molded case circuit breakers and to eliminate secondary distributors of reconditioned molded case circuit breakers." (See, e.g., GCB 2d Am. Countercls. PP 9-19; PBS 2d Am. Countercls. PP 9-24; Pencon/GMEW 1st Am. Countercls. PP 11-25.)

According to Defendants, Plaintiffs conspired to suppress [**8] and eliminate competition of entities engaged in the sale and distribution of reconditioned molded case circuit breakers by:

- (1) filing in bad faith the lawsuits that constitute In re Circuit Breaker Litigation;
- (2) falsely disparaging Defendants and misrepresenting facts (including issues of safety) to government agencies in an effort to induce governmental entities to commence investigations into the sale of reconditioned molded case circuit breakers;
- [*1272] (3) forming, through the National Electrical Manufacturers Association ("NEMA"), a "Task Force on Rebuilt Circuit Breakers," to formulate means to eliminate competition in the reconditioned circuit breaker market;
- (4) preparing, distributing, and developing false or misleading ads, statements, press releases, and media articles about Defendants;
- (5) through NEMA, withdrawing a test standard applicable to molded case circuit breakers;
- (6) refusing to implement a UL standard for reconditioned circuit breakers; and
- (7) inducing third parties to cease doing business with Defendants.<sup>4</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> See In re Circuit Breaker Litigation, 852 F. Supp. 883 (C.D. Cal. 1994) (Circuit Breaker I), aff'd, 106 F.3d 894, 41 U.S.P.Q.2D \(BNA\) 1741 \(9th Cir. 1997\); In re Circuit Breaker Litigation, 860 F. Supp. 1453 (C.D. Cal. 1994) (Circuit Breaker II), aff'd, 106 F.3d 894, 41 U.S.P.Q.2D \(BNA\) 1741 \(9th Cir. 1997\).

<sup>3</sup> On July 10, 1996, the Court heard arguments on UL's September 22, 1995, motion for partial summary judgment against PBS on Noerr-Pennington immunity. The Court took that motion under submission, and incorporates its decision as to that motion in this Order.

[**9] I. Summary Judgment Law

HN1 [↑] "A party against whom a . . . counterclaim . . . is asserted . . . may, at any time, move with or without supporting affidavits for a summary judgment in the party's favor as to all or any part thereof." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(b\). Summary judgment is appropriate "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\).

HN2 [↑] In moving for summary judgment, the movant assumes no obligation to negate or disprove matters on which the opponent will have the burden of proof at trial. In order to demonstrate that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact" and that it is "entitled to judgment as a matter of law," the moving party need only show the Court that there is an absence of evidence to support an essential element of the nonmoving party's case. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 325, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 \(1986\). "A failure of proof concerning an essential element of the nonmoving party's case necessarily renders [**10] all other facts immaterial." Id. at 323.

HN3 [↑] Once the moving party has demonstrated the complete absence of proof on an essential element of the other party's case, the burden shifts to the opponent to come forward with sufficient evidence for a reasonable jury to find in its favor on that element. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 252, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\). In response, the opposing party "must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\). "The mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of [the opponent's] position will be insufficient . . ." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 252.

II. Summary Judgment in Sherman Act Cases

In Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585-86, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\), the Supreme Court held that, HN4 [↑] in order to withstand a motion for summary judgment, claimants seeking damages under § 1 of the Sherman Act "must establish that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether [the opposing party] entered into an illegal conspiracy that caused [the claimants] to suffer a cognizable injury. In addition, the claimants "must also show [**11] more than a conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws; they must [also] show an injury to them resulting from the illegal conduct." Id. at 586.

HN5 [↑] Plaintiffs may discharge their initial summary judgment burden by "proffering a 'plausible and justifiable' alternative interpretation of its conduct that rebuts [Defendants'] allegation[s] of a conspiracy." T.W. Elec. Serv., Inc. v. Pacific Elec. Contractors Ass'n, 809 F.2d 626, 632 \(9th Cir. 1987\). If Plaintiffs meet this initial burden, Defendants must come forward with evidence that is capable of sustaining a rational inference of conspiracy and that tends to exclude the possibility that Plaintiffs acted independently. American Ad Mgmt. v. GTE Corp., 92 F.3d 781 \(9th Cir. 1996\); [Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, \[\*1273\] 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\)](#).

HN6 [↑] While the inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts must generally be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing a motion for summary judgment, antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587-88. Thus, "conduct as consistent with permissible competition as [**12] with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Id. at 588 (citing Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\)). In other words, claimants "must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed [them]." Id.

<sup>4</sup>None of Defendants alleges all of these bases of liability. For instance, GCB does not allege that Plaintiffs developed and circulated false and misleading ads and press statements, and Pencon/GMEW does not include an abuse of process allegation. However, the Court addresses each of these bases as if pleaded by each Defendant against each Plaintiff.

III. Substantive Antitrust Law

HN7 To prove a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, Defendants must show the existence of a "contract, combination or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 1. A violation of the Sherman Act consists of three elements: "(1) an agreement or conspiracy among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) by which the person or entities intend to harm or restrain competition; and (3) which actually restrains competition." Sicor Ltd. v. Cetus Corp., 51 F.3d 848, 854 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 861, 133 L. Ed. 2d 111, 116 S. Ct. 170 (1995); City of Vernon v. Southern Cal. Edison Co., 955 F.2d 1361, 1365 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 908, 121 L. Ed. 2d 228, 113 S. Ct. 305 (1992); [**13] Eichman v. Fotomat Corp., 880 F.2d 149, 161 (9th Cir. 1989) (stating that restraint of trade evaluated under either per se or rule of reason test). Even if a claimant can establish illegal conduct, a claimant must further show that it suffered injury as the result of that illegal conduct. Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1443-44 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 987, 133 L. Ed. 2d 424, 116 S. Ct. 515 (1996).

IV. Noerr-Pennington Immunity From Antitrust Liability

HN8 The Noerr-Pennington doctrine provides broad protection from the Sherman Act for concerted efforts to influence the decisions of public officials. United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965). This protection extends to lobbying both the executive and legislative branch. Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 137-38, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961), and to petitioning of administrative agencies and courts, California Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972).

HN9 A party's immunity for its efforts to influence public officials [**14] is lost only if the party engages in "sham" petitioning. USS-Posco Indus. v. Contra Costa County Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council, 31 F.3d 800, 810 (9th Cir. 1994). "Sham" petitioning is that which both: (1) is objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable petitioner could realistically expect success on the merits; and (2) conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor through the use of the governmental process--as opposed to the outcome of that process--as an anti-competitive weapon. Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 60-61, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 (1993). When reviewing a claim of "sham" petitioning, a court must apply the two parts in succession. Only if a suit or petitioning activity is found to be objectively baseless, does the court proceed to examine the litigant's subjective intent. Id.; USS-Posco Indus., 31 F.3d at 811.

Defendants base part of their Sherman Act counterclaims upon (1) the filing of these lawsuits and (2) Plaintiffs' contacts with various government agencies that investigated Defendants in the late 1980s. (See GCB 2d Am. Countercls. [**15] P 15(c)-(d); PBS 2d Am. Countercls. P 19(c)-(d); Pencon/GMEW 1st Am. Countercls. P 21(3).) Both sets of activities are protected by Noerr-Pennington immunity.

A. Plaintiffs' Lawsuits

Defendants allege that Plaintiffs instituted in bad faith the lawsuits constituting In re Circuit Breaker Litigation for the "sole and exclusive purpose of restricting and eliminating [*1274] [Defendants'] ability to compete with the manufacturing [Plaintiffs] and causing prospective purchasers to boycott [Defendants'] products." (GCB 2d Am. Countercls. P 15(d); PBS 2d Am. Countercls. P 19(d).)

Plaintiffs demonstrate that the filing of the lawsuits constituting In re Circuit Breaker Litigation is immune from antitrust liability under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Plaintiffs demonstrate that the lawsuits do not constitute "sham" litigation in that they are not "objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable petitioner could realistically expect success on the merits." See Professional Real Estate Investors, [*1275] Inc., 508 U.S. at 60-61. Plaintiffs present evidence that:

1. Defendants admit to photocopying Plaintiffs' trademarks and admit to selling reconditioned products without [**16] labels on the products disclosing the condition of the products, which the Court finds supports a prima facie claim of trademark infringement and unfair competition under *Champion Spark Plug Co. v. Sanders, 331 U.S. 125, 129-30, 91 L. Ed. 1386, 67 S. Ct. 1136 \(1947\)*, and the Lanham Act;
2. Plaintiffs have obtained stipulated permanent injunctions against most of the original defendants in In re Circuit Breaker Litigation;
3. Plaintiffs obtained preliminary injunctions against all three Defendants;
4. The Justice Department issued criminal indictments against three of the original defendants for the same conduct at issue in In re Circuit Breaker Litigation, leading to 2 guilty pleas; and
5. The jury in the Westinghouse trial found that Pencon/GMEW, GCB, and PBS's relabelling practices violated the Lanham Act. See *In re Circuit Breaker Litigation \(Circuit Breaker I\), 852 F. Supp. 883, 891-92 \(C.D. Cal. 1994\)*, aff'd, *106 F.3d 894, 41 U.S.P.Q.2D \(BNA\) 1741 \(9th Cir. 1997\)*.

While the Court notes Defendants' success on their affirmative defenses in the Westinghouse trial against Westinghouse's claims of trademark infringement and unfair competition, the Court also finds that Plaintiffs' [**17] success thus far in this litigation indicates that the lawsuits are not "objectively baseless," which precludes a finding that In re Circuit Breaker Litigation constitutes "sham" petitioning. The district court in the Westinghouse trial noted that for the most part, defendants and Westinghouse agree that the jury necessarily made certain findings of fact. They agree that, in finding liability on both the § 1114 and § 1125 claims, the jury necessarily found: 1) that defendants sold reconditioned breakers bearing the Westinghouse mark; 2) that they did not designate them as 'reconditioned'; 3) that they did so without Westinghouse's consent; and 4) that this practice was likely to cause confusion.

*In re Circuit Breaker Litig., 852 F. Supp. 883, 887 \(C.D. Cal. 1994\)*, aff'd, *106 F.3d 894, 41 U.S.P.Q.2D \(BNA\) 1741 \(9th Cir. 1997\)*.

This evidence is sufficient for the Court to find as a matter of law that Plaintiffs' lawsuits are immune from antitrust liability under Noerr-Pennington. Because the Court may find as a matter of law that Plaintiffs' lawsuits are not objectively baseless, it need not reach the issue of Plaintiffs' subjective intent.

B. Plaintiffs' [**18] Contacts with Government Investigators and Agencies

Defendants also allege that Plaintiffs violated § 1 of the Sherman Act by inducing the government to "commence investigations into the purchase, use and installation of reconditioned circuit breakers by falsely disparaging such breakers and the companies distributing such breakers and by falsely suggesting catastrophic safety problems resulting from their use in order to create undue fear and alarm and to induce prospective purchasers to boycott [Defendants'] products." (See GCB 2d Am. Countercls. P 15(c); PBS 2d Am. Countercls. P 19(c); Pencon/GMEW 1st Am. Countercls. P 21(3).)

HN10  Noerr-Pennington shields all communications with the government. A party's immunity for its efforts to influence public officials is lost only if it engages in "sham" petitioning. *USS-Posco Indus., 31 F.3d at 810*. In order to deprive Plaintiffs of immunity for their contacts with government entities, Plaintiffs' contacts must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable petitioner could realistically expect success on the merits. *Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc., 508 U.S. at 60-61*. Furthermore, under Allied Tube [**19] & *Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 499-500, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497, 108 S. Ct. 1931 \(1988\)*, and Boone v. Redevelopment Agency of the City of San Jose, 841 F.2d 886, 894 (9th Cir. 1988), Noerr-Pennington even precludes antitrust liability based on the use of false statements to persuade the government to act.

It is undisputed that Plaintiffs, acting individually and through the National Electrical Manufacturers Association ("NEMA"), had contact with the Nuclear Regulatory Commission ("NRC") and other governmental organizations regarding rebuilt molded case circuit breakers. Defendants present evidence only in regard to Plaintiffs' effort to petition the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. The Court finds that Plaintiffs' contacts with the NRC and other governmental entities in 1988, to include the U.S. Department of Justice, the U.S. Department of Energy, NASA, and the U.S. Department of Defense, are immune from antitrust liability under Noerr-Pennington.

Plaintiffs present evidence that their contacts with the government in and around the institution of this lawsuit were reasonable in light of Plaintiffs' concerns about product safety, trademark infringement, [**20] and unfair competition. For instance, the evidence indicates that on March 4, 1988, NEMA considered "undertaking to have laws enacted to require that rebuilt equipment be labeled as rebuilt and/or certified by an independent testing laboratory." (GCB Ex. 5.) NEMA cited that its concern was "based on safety and/or market mis-representation issues." (GCB Ex. 5.) The evidence also indicates that in April 1988, Pacific Gas & Electric Company discovered that it had bought rebuilt Square D circuit breakers for installation at the Diablo Canyon nuclear power plant. The evidence indicates that Square D tested these circuit breakers and reported to the NRC that they were rebuilt. (GCB Ex. 22.) The NRC responded by launching an investigation into purchases of reconditioned circuit breakers by nuclear power plant licensees. In the course of its investigation, the NRC solicited from Plaintiffs advice and guidance as to issues regarding molded case circuit breakers. (GCB Ex. 9.)

The evidence indicates that the NRC issued a bulletin on June 18, 1988, regarding the potential problems presented by rebuilt molded case circuit breakers. (GCB Ex. 19.) NEMA commented on NRC Bulletin 88-10, and was critical [**21] of the NRC's proposed test program for rebuilt circuit breakers. (GCB Ex. 25.) On November 22, 1988, the NRC issued a formal version of its Bulletin, which disregarded in part the recommendations of UL and NEMA, requiring utilities to test circuit breakers that could not be traced to the original manufacturer. (GCB Ex. 26.) NEMA members believed that this standard did not appreciate the safety issues presented by rebuilt circuit breakers, and recommended further lobbying. (GCB Ex. 23.)

The Court finds that none of this evidence sustains Defendants' burden of demonstrating that Plaintiffs' contacts with the government constitutes "sham petitioning." The evidence indicates that Plaintiffs reasonably could have expected the government to have adopted strict inspection and testing standards for rebuilt molded case circuit breakers. There is no evidence that implies that the government was manipulated, no evidence that Plaintiff's lied to the government, and no evidence that Plaintiffs used false information in their petitioning activities.

Thus, the Court finds that Plaintiffs' contacts with the government in and around the institution of this lawsuit are protected by Noerr-Pennington [**22].

V. Liability for Non-Protected Activity

To prevail, Defendants must present evidence that their purported competitive injuries resulted from Plaintiffs' non-protected activities. MCI Communications Corp. v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 708 F.2d 1081, 1161 \(7th Cir. 1983\) ("If a plaintiff has suffered financial loss from the lawful activities of a competitor, then no damages may be recovered under the antitrust laws. It is a requirement that an antitrust plaintiff must prove that his damages were caused by the unlawful acts of the defendant.") (emphasis in original).<sup>5</sup> Defendants allege antitrust violations [*1276] that fall outside of the scope of Plaintiffs' protected petitioning activities. The Court addresses each allegation in turn.

[**23] A. Group Boycott

---

<sup>5</sup> The Court notes that the declarations of GCB and Pencor/GMEW's experts, Richard Smith and Roy Weinstein, do not account for injury that may have been caused exclusively by non-Noerr-Pennington protected activity. The Court also notes that PBS provides no evidence on the issue of antitrust injury to its business as a result of Plaintiffs' activities.

Defendants allege that Plaintiffs engaged in a "group boycott." HN11<sup>6</sup> Group boycotts are treated as per se violations of the Sherman Act only when the challenged activity "would almost always tend to be predominantly anticompetitive." Bhan v. NME Hospo., Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1411 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 994, 116 L. Ed. 2d 639, 112 S. Ct. 617 (1991);<sup>6</sup> NCAA v. Board of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 100, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 (1984) ("A per se rule is applied when the [agreed upon] practice facially appears to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output.") (internal quotations omitted).<sup>7</sup>

[**24] The Court finds that none of Plaintiffs' non-immune actions are the type that "always tend to be predominantly anticompetitive." Thus, the Court finds that Plaintiffs' non-immune activities do not constitute a group boycott.

B. Coercing Customers to Stop Doing Business with Defendants

Defendants also allege that Plaintiffs conspired to coerce Defendants' customers to stop doing business with Defendants in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. (See GCB 2d Am. Countercls. P 15(e); PBS 2d Am. Countercls. P 19(e); Pencon/GMEW 1st Am. Countercls. P 21(4).)

Because the Court finds that Plaintiffs' activities do not constitute a per se violation of the Sherman Act, the Court uses the "rule of reason" test in assessing the anti-competitive nature of Plaintiffs' non-immune activities. HN13<sup>8</sup> To prevail on a § 1 violation under the Sherman Act using the "rule of reason" test, a claimant must prove: "(1) an agreement, conspiracy or combination among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) which is intended to harm or unreasonably restrain competition; and (3) which actually causes injury to competition, beyond the impact on the claimant, within a field of commerce in [**25] which the claimant is engaged (i.e., 'antitrust injury')."Austin v. McNamara, 979 F.2d 728, 738-39 (9th Cir. 1992) (citing McGlinch v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 811 (9th Cir. 1988)). In addition, a claimant must show more than simply parallel behavior. Reserve Supply v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas, 971 F.2d 37 (7th Cir. 1992) (conscious parallel behavior by itself is not enough to support an antitrust conspiracy claim).

The gravamen of Defendants' allegations is that Plaintiffs acted in concert. Collective action is the linchpin of antitrust liability. It is settled law that independent business decisions not to deal with a party do not violate the Sherman Act. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984).

Defendants present no evidence of any concerted action on the part of Plaintiffs, through NEMA or otherwise, to induce or persuade customers or distributors to stop doing business with Defendants. They rely instead on inferences drawn from simultaneous attempts by the individual Plaintiffs to deal with either their distributors or their internal subdivisions. HN14<sup>9</sup> Plaintiffs may discharge their initial summary [**26] judgment burden by "proffering a 'plausible and justifiable' alternative interpretation of its conduct that rebuts [Defendants'] allegation[s] of a conspiracy."T.W. Elec. Serv., Inc. v. Pacific Elec. Contractors Ass'n, 809 F.2d 626, 632 (9th Cir. 1987). If Plaintiffs meet this initial burden, Defendants must come forward with evidence that is capable of sustaining a rational inference of conspiracy and that tends [**1277] to exclude the possibility that Plaintiffs acted independently. American Ad Mgmt. v. GTE Corp., 92 F.3d 781 (9th Cir. 1996); Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). However, "antitrust law" limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587-88. Thus, "conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Id. at 588 (citing Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984)).

<sup>6</sup> HN12<sup>10</sup> Activities that can constitute per se violations include price-fixing, group boycotts, tying arrangements, and horizontal territorial divisions.

<sup>7</sup> When this matter was originally filed in 1988, the law firm Munger, Tolles & Olson represented all four Plaintiffs, and filed nearly identical complaints on behalf of each Plaintiff. The Court finds that representation by one law firm is not grounds for antitrust liability. Lemelson v. Bendix Corp., 104 F.R.D. 13, 17-18 (D. Del. 1984).

In order to prevail, Defendants must first present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility of independent action. Because of [**27] the Noerr-Pennington protection afforded to Plaintiffs' petitioning activities, Defendants' evidence is limited to Plaintiffs' non-immune activities.

Defendants present evidence that Square D contacted its distributors in October 1988 and informed them of the lawsuit, Defendants' alleged activities, the preliminary and permanent injunctions obtained at the time, and Square D's intent to continue to investigate. (GCB Ex. 46.) Defendants present evidence that GE instituted a recall program on its circuit breakers in an effort to get GE circuit breakers that it had not rebuilt returned to it. (GCB Ex. 61.) The Court finds that this evidence does not sustain Defendants' burden and does not raise a genuine issue of material fact. Defendants provide no evidence that the other Plaintiffs knew about this recall program, nor evidence that they acted in concert with GE. Furthermore, this evidence is as consistent with legitimate business practice as it is with anti-competitive behavior, in that it exhibits a concern for liability and manufacturer warranty. Under such circumstances, it is reasonable for GE to have instituted a recall program to protect itself.

In order to prevail, Defendants [**28] must also present evidence that their customers and distributors were induced by Plaintiffs to stop doing business with Defendants. The Court finds that Defendants have not sustained their burden on this issue. Defendants present no direct testimony from customers or distributors. In fact, Defendants present no evidence whatsoever implicating UL in the alleged effort to dissuade Defendants' customers and distributors. Defendants rely on the testimony of Rene Contreras to support the proposition that Plaintiffs induced Defendants' customers to stop doing business with Defendants. (R. Contreras Decl.; GCB Ex. 28.) However, Rene Contreras' declaration is conclusory and lacks supporting evidence. In addition, evidence presented by Plaintiffs indicates that customers and distributors either did not stop doing business with Defendants (Heronemus Dep. at 94), made an independent decision to stop doing business with Defendants (Mitchell Dep. at 26-35; Tulloch Dep. at 84-85, 103-04, 113, 116), or were Plaintiffs' subsidiaries (i.e., GESCO (GE's subdivision) and WESTCO (Westinghouse's subdivision)).<sup>8</sup>

[**29] Thus, the Court finds that Defendants have not sustained their burden of demonstrating that Plaintiffs induced Defendants' customers to stop doing business with Defendants. The evidence indicates that Plaintiffs made reasonable, self-interested business decisions, or made decisions wholly within their own corporations not to buy rebuilt circuit breakers that could not be traced to the original manufacturers.

C. Refusing to Implement a UL Standard for Reconditioned Circuit Breakers

Defendants allege that UL's decision not to create a certification program for rebuilt molded case circuit breakers was made in concert with the other Plaintiffs and that it constitutes an illegal restraint of trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. (See, e.g., Pencon/GMEW 1st Am. Countercls. P 21(7).)

HN16 [↑] A standards-setting organization does not per se violate the antitrust laws by refusing to certify a product. Consolidated [*1278] Metal Prod. v. American Petroleum Inst., 846 F.2d 284, 292 (5th Cir. 1988). Rather, the "rule of reason" test applies to such conduct. Under this test, the question is whether an antitrust defendant's conduct "promotes competition or . . . suppresses competition." [**30] National Soc'y of Prof'l Eng'rs v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 691, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637, 98 S. Ct. 1355 (1978).

HN17 [↑] "To state a claim against a standard-making organization such as UL [a claimant] must show either that it was barred from obtaining approval of its products on a discriminatory basis from its competitors, or that the conduct as a whole was manifestly anti-competitive and unreasonable." ECOS Elec. Corp. v. Underwriters Labs.

---

<sup>8</sup> HN15 [↑] Internally coordinated conduct between a corporation and an unincorporated division does not violate § 1 of the Sherman Act. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 769, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984).

984 F. Supp. 1267, *1278 (1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14232, **30

Inc., 743 F.2d 498, 501 (7th Cir. 1984) (citing Eliason Corp. v. National Sanitation Found., 614 F.2d 126, 129 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 826, 66 L. Ed. 2d 29, 101 S. Ct. 89 (1980)), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1210, 84 L. Ed. 2d 327, 105 S. Ct. 1178 (1985).

1. UL's Decision Not to Create a Certification Program for Rebuilt Circuit Breakers was Neither Discriminatory or Unreasonable

Defendants allege that UL violated § 1 of the Sherman Act by not granting UL Listing to Defendants and by not creating a UL certification program for rebuilt circuit breakers. Defendants allege that UL made its decision in concert with and at the behest of the manufacturing Plaintiffs. It is undisputed that UL considered, but did not adopt a certification program for rebuilt molded case circuit breakers. It [**31] is undisputed that two Defendants applied for and were denied UL Listing.

UL is an organization that creates product standards and certifications. Products that meet UL's criteria are given a Listing. The Listing for molded case circuit breakers is UL 489. Since 1940, UL 489 has imposed a regimen of safety tests applicable to circuit breakers. According to UL, its safety certification system is premised on the testing of representative product samples. Midwest Plastic Fabricators, Inc. v. Underwriters Labs. Inc., 906 F.2d 1568, 1569-70 (D.C. Cir. 1990). It is undisputed that many of the tests required by UL 489 are destructive. (Vogeler Decl. PP 15-18.)

UL presents evidence that its decision not to adopt a standard for rebuilt circuit breakers was reasonable, non-discriminatory, and based entirely on technical feasibility. UL presents evidence that it could not formulate a program for rebuilt breakers because rebuilt circuit breakers are not uniformly reconstructed and, accordingly, are not able to be subjected to destructive or sample testing. UL presents evidence that there is no uniformity in the rebuilding process, and that Defendants recondition circuit breakers based upon [**32] "each individual circuit breaker's needs and the requests of the customer." (See GCB's Answers to GE's 2d Set of Interrogs.) UL also presents evidence that it could not trace the history of the parts used in the reconditioning process, because Defendants obtain their materials from "other than factory sources." (Contreras Letter, July 21, 1988, UL App. 190.) According to UL, this creates a problem, because UL considers destructive testing and traceability to be "two important parts of the [circuit breaker] program." (Vogeler Dep. at 127.)

In rebuttal, Defendants present no evidence that UL 489 discriminated against them in refusing to establish a certification program for rebuilt molded case circuit breakers. They present no evidence that UL 489 constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade because it cannot be used to certify rebuilt circuit breakers. Defendants also present no alternative test program that could satisfy UL's destructive testing requirement, nor present any evidence as to how their rebuilding procedures could fit within the sampling requirements of UL 489.

Thus, the Court finds that Defendants do not sustain their burden.

2. UL Adequately Considered a [**33] Rebuild Program

Defendants also allege that UL's decision not to adopt a standard or certification program for rebuilt circuit breakers was (1) done in concert with the manufacturing Plaintiffs, (2) abrogated UL's own process for establishing certification programs, and (3) was an illegal restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman Act.

[*1279] UL presents evidence that it acted alone and within its standard operating procedures in deciding against establishing a certification program for rebuilt molded case circuit breakers. UL admits that a reconditioning company requested a rebuild standard for circuit breakers. UL also admits that UL agreed to consider such a program. UL admits that in 1984 and 1988, the issue of a UL program for rebuilt molded case circuit breakers was discussed at meetings of the Industrial Advisory Council ("IAC"). (See PBS Ex. 17.)

However, UL presents evidence that it had its engineers evaluate the feasibility of such a program, and that UL decided that such a program was not feasible. (UL App. at 205-10.) UL also presents evidence that it uses IACs to help with its development of requirements, test methods, standards, and related product evaluation programs.

[**34] (UL App. at 236).<sup>9</sup> UL presents evidence, however, that it bases the technical requirements of its programs on information gathered from a number of sources. (UL App. at 236.) UL points out that there is no evidence that UL's engineering department ever approved a certification program for rebuilt molded case circuit breakers.

In addition, UL admits that it asked the manufacturing Plaintiffs if they were interested in a rebuilt circuit breaker program from UL. However, UL presents evidence that this is routine, because the manufacturers are the industry likely to be affected by such a certification. Furthermore, UL points out that Defendants present no evidence that the manufacturing Plaintiffs caused UL to not adopt a rebuilt program, nor that UL [**35] acted in concert with the manufacturing Plaintiffs when it made its decision not to adopt a rebuilt program.

Thus, the Court finds that Defendants do not sustain their burden of raising a genuine issue of material fact as to whether UL abrogated its own procedures in deciding against a rebuilt program against Defendants or that UL's decision was made in concert with the manufacturing Plaintiffs.

3. UL's Refusal to Implement Program Did Not Injure Defendants

Defendants allege that UL's decision not to adopt a standard or certification program for rebuilt molded case circuit breakers is anti-competitive. The Court disagrees. UL presents evidence that its standards apply to all circuit breakers, regardless of the manufacturer, and that its refusal to create a certification program for reconditioned circuit breakers applies to circuit breakers rebuilt by either Defendants or Plaintiffs. UL also presents evidence that it is not the sole certification agency operating in the market, and that it did not coerce or induce any customers into refusing to buy non-UL Listed products. Defendants could seek certification for their rebuilt circuit breakers from another organization.

Thus, [**36] the Court finds that Defendants do not sustain their burden of demonstrating injury to their businesses as a result of UL's decisions.

4. UL's Refusal to Implement Program Did Not Injure Market

In In re Appraiser Found. Antitrust Litig., 867 F. Supp. 1407, 1418 (D. Minn. 1994) (citing Greater Rockford Energy & Tech. v. Shell Oil, 998 F.2d 391, 404 (7th Cir. 1993)), aff'd, National Ass'n of Review Appraisers & Mortgage Underwriters, Inc. v. Appraisal Found., 64 F.3d 1130 (8th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1189, 134 L. Ed. 2d 779, 116 S. Ct. 1676 (1996), the court held that a claimant's failure to present evidence proving a causal connection between the alleged anticompetitive conduct and the antitrust claimant's injuries was sufficient to justify summary judgment. In this case, Defendants present no evidence that any injury resulted from UL's refusal to implement a certification program. In fact, neither of Defendants' experts addresses the impact of UL's decision on the market.

Thus, the Court finds that UL's decision not to adopt a standard for rebuilt circuit breakers does not violate the Sherman Act. Defendants did not sustain their burden of [*1280] presenting evidence that [**37] UL acted in concert with the other Plaintiffs, that UL discriminated against Defendants, that UL's decision was anti-competitive, or that UL's decision caused Defendants any injury.

D. Plaintiffs' Alleged Media Campaign

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs violated § 1 of the Sherman Act by "preparing, distributing, and developing false or misleading ads, statements, press releases and media articles." (See, e.g., PBS 2d Am. Countercls. P 19(f).) Their <sup>9</sup> IACs consist of technical experts who have a familiarity with UL and its programs. (UL App. at 236.) If UL were considering a program such as a rebuilt circuit breaker certification or standard, it is not unusual for UL to raise the issue with an appropriate IAC.

argument is identical to the argument that Defendants presented on their trade libel and defamation counterclaims. (See PBS 2d Am. Countercls. Counts 3 & 4.)<sup>10</sup>

[**38] The evidence shows that one Plaintiff(Square D) considered a publicity campaign (PBS Exs. 5-7), that articles were published in the press that quoted Plaintiffs and referred to some of the Defendants, and that Plaintiffs had the opportunity to review an article for "technical accuracy" prior to its publication. (PBS Ex. 11.) Based upon this evidence, the Court finds that Defendants do not sustain their burden of demonstrating that Plaintiffs acted in concert to prepare, distribute, or develop any media material in an anti-competitive manner.

Therefore, the Court finds that Defendants may not hold Plaintiffs liable for antitrust violations based upon allegations of trade libel or defamation to the extent that the Court has already ruled on them.

E. NEMA

Defendants allege that Plaintiffs violated § 1 of the Sherman Act by "forming, through NEMA, a 'Task Force on Rebuilt Breakers,' an organization to suppress and eliminate the competition of reconditioned molded case circuit breakers," and "through NEMA, withdrawing testing standards applicable to molded case circuit breakers." (Pencon/GMEW 1st Am. Countercls. P 21(2), (6).)

The National Electrical Manufacturers Association [**39] ("NEMA") is a trade association of which Westinghouse, GE, Square D, and other electrical manufacturers are members. UL is not a member of NEMA.

As stated above, HN18<sup>11</sup> under the "rule of reason" test, to establish a § 1 violation under the Sherman Act, a claimant must show: "(1) an agreement, conspiracy or combination among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) which is intended to harm or unreasonably restrain competition; and (3) which actually causes injury to competition, beyond the impact on the claimant, within a field of commerce in which the claimant is engaged (i.e., 'antitrust injury')." Austin v. McNamara, 979 F.2d 728, 738-39 \(9th Cir. 1992\) (citing McGlinchy v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 811 \(9th Cir. 1988\)). A claimant must prove that each antitrust defendant had a "conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 768, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\).

1. NEMA's Contacts with the Nuclear Regulatory Commission

In their opposition papers, Defendants allege that Plaintiffs, through NEMA, violated § 1 of the Sherman Act by undertaking to have [**40] laws enacted requiring labeling and certification for reconditioned circuit breakers. Plaintiffs do not dispute that NEMA petitioned government agencies, to include the NRC, on the issue of rebuilt circuit breakers. However, the Court finds that NEMA's contacts with the government are immune under Noerr-Pennington.<sup>11</sup>

2. For Forming NEMA's Task Force on Rebuilt Circuit Breakers

<sup>10</sup> The evidentiary cornerstone of Defendants' claim is the article by Arthur Freund, entitled Circuit Breakers--Boon or Bomb?, which appeared in EC&M magazine in June, 1989. The Court already found that this article was not actionable against any of the Plaintiffs on either trade libel or defamation grounds. (See Order, dated February 24, 1997 (granting summary judgment in favor of Plaintiffs on Defendants' trade libel and defamation counterclaims)). The Court also found that Defendants did not sustain their burden on the issue of conspiracy. (See Order, dated February 24, 1997.)

<sup>11</sup> See supra at 6-10 (discussing Noerr-Pennington immunity).

984 F. Supp. 1267, *1280 (1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14232, **40

Defendants also allege that the mere formation of the Task Force violates the Sherman Act. Defendants allege that the formation of the Task Force was motivated by [*1281] anticompetitive intentions to destroy competition in the rebuilt molded case circuit breaker market.

HN19 [Footnote] "Attendance at trade association meetings and participation in trade association activities are not, in and of themselves, condemned or even discouraged by the antitrust laws." Moore v. Boating Indus. Ass'n, 819 F.2d 693, 712 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 854, 98 L. Ed. 2d 115, 108 (**41) S. Ct. 160 (1984); Greater Rockford Energy & Tech. v. Shell Oil, 998 F.2d 391, 396-97 (7th Cir. 1993) (finding that common membership in trade association and standard-setting organization was not evidence of conspiracy); Consolidated Metal Prods., Inc. v. American Petroleum Inst., 846 F.2d 284 (5th Cir. 1988).

The Court finds that, even taking the evidence in a light most favorable to Defendants, Defendants have not raised a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the formation of the Task Force violates the Sherman Act.

The Court also finds that Defendants do not sustain their burden of demonstrating antitrust injury caused by the formation of NEMA's Task Force. Defendants present no evidence tying NEMA's Task Force to any changes in the market, and no evidence tying NEMA's Task Force to any of Defendants' individual business losses. The Court finds that the opinions and conclusions made by their expert witnesses, Smith and Weinstein, and the declarations submitted by their employees, such as Rene Contreras, do not support a causal connection between the NEMA Task Force, on the one hand, and any injuries to Defendants or the market generally, on the other. See In re (**42) Appraiser Found. Antitrust Litig., 867 F. Supp. at 1418.

3. NEMA's Rescission of AB-2

Finally, Defendants allege that Plaintiffs violated § 1 of the Sherman Act by acting through NEMA to rescind AB-2.

NEMA promulgated AB-2 in 1984. In January 1989, after the commencement of this litigation, NEMA voted to rescind AB-2. Plaintiffs argue that NEMA's rescission of AB-2 cannot give rise to antitrust liability because NEMA's decision was motivated by legitimate safety concerns and not an intent to injure competition. Defendants have not presented evidence that the rescission of AB-2 injured competition in the reconditioned circuit breaker market.

According to Plaintiffs, AB-2 was a field test intended to be used to verify the performance of circuit breakers that had been in service for some time. Plaintiffs present evidence that AB-2 was a non-binding "authorized engineering information," which "consists of explanatory data and other engineering information of an informative character not falling within the classification of a NEMA Standard or Suggested Standard for Future Design." (NEMA Standardization Policies and Procedures, GE Ex. 32.) Plaintiffs note that NEMA's standards (**43) and procedures do not carry the force of law, and NEMA has no means by which to coerce compliance with AB-2 or any other NEMA promulgation. Plaintiffs also present evidence that NEMA was concerned that reconditioning companies were using AB-2 as a certification test, and that the NRC had directed nuclear facilities to use the test to check their circuit breakers. (Heerlein Dep.; Baird Dep.)

The Court finds that the evidence submitted by Plaintiffs indicates that AB-2 was rescinded for legitimate technical reasons. The letters and deposition testimony focus on the issues of safety and manufacturer liability. Defendants present no evidence tending to show that AB-2 was rescinded for any reason other than NEMA's concern over safety.

In addition, Plaintiffs point out that Defendants present no evidence that they were injured by the rescission of AB-2, or that the market for reconditioned circuit breakers was in any way affected by the rescission of AB-2. There is no evidence that indicates that any Defendants advertised their products as AB-2 tested.

Based on the foregoing, the Court finds that the Plaintiffs' non-immune actions through NEMA do not constitute a violation of the Sherman (**44) Act.

III. Proving Antitrust Injury

The Ninth Circuit has stated that HN20 proving antitrust injury is important in a § 1 case. *Austin v. McNamara, 979 F.2d 728, 739 [*1282] (9th Cir. 1992)*. "Antitrust injury" is "injury to competition, beyond the impact on the claimant, within a field of commerce in which the claimant is engaged." Id. at 738. To establish antitrust injury, a claimant must show "not merely injury to himself as a competitor, but rather injury to competition." Id. at 739.

Defendants rely primarily on the declarations of two expert witnesses in an effort to sustain their burden as to antitrust injury. While the Court finds that these witnesses are qualified to provide expert testimony in an antitrust matter,<sup>12</sup> the Court does not believe that their testimony or findings are helpful to determining whether Plaintiffs' non-immune activities were anticompetitive or violative of the Sherman Act. First, the Court finds that their testimony is relevant only to Defendant GCB. Second, the Court finds that Defendants' experts' testimony is conclusory, and opines as to the ultimate fact at issue. This evidence does not assist the Court in assessing antitrust injury. [\[\*\*45\]](#) Third, the Court finds that the experts fail entirely to delineate between the injuries caused by Plaintiffs' immune activities and those activities not protected under the Noerr -Pennington doctrine.

Thus, the Court finds that Defendants have not sustained their burden of providing evidence of any "antitrust injury" that can be attributed to any of Plaintiffs' non-protected activities.

Antitrust Conclusion

Based upon foregoing, the Court finds that Defendants have not sustained their burden of showing that there exists a genuine issue of material fact as to any of their Sherman Act counterclaims. Thus, the Court grants Plaintiffs' motions for partial summary judgment against Defendants as to all of their antitrust counterclaims.

INTENTIONAL INTERFERENCE DISCUSSION

[\[\*\*46\]](#) In nearly identical language, Defendants counterclaim against Westinghouse, GE, and Square D for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage. (See PBS 2d Am. Countercls. PP 25-31; Pencon/GMEW 1st Am. Countercls. PP 45-51; GCB 2d Am. Countercls. PP 28-34.)<sup>13</sup> Defendants allege that the manufacturing Plaintiffs "induced and encouraged [distributors, contractors, industrial companies, and governmental entities] to cease doing business with or to significantly reduce the amount of business they do with [Defendants]." (GCB 2d Am. Countercls. P 31.) Defendants allege that Plaintiffs accomplished this "through threats of loss of distributorship, intimidation and false statements and other intentional conduct by employees, agents, managers, officers, and directors of [Plaintiffs]." (Pencon/GMEW 1st Am. Countercls. P 49.)

HN21 To prevail on a claim of intentional interference with prospective [\[\*\*47\]](#) economic advantage, a claimant must provide evidence of: (1) an economic relationship between itself and third parties containing the probability of future economic benefit; (2) the defendant's knowledge of these relationships; (3) intentional, wrongful conduct on the part of the defendant designed to interfere with or disrupt the relationships; (4) actual disruption; and (5) resulting damage. Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc., 11 Cal. 4th 376, 380 n.1, 902 P.2d 740 (1995). The allegedly tortious conduct must be "wrongful by some legal measure other than the fact of interference itself." Id. at 393.

Defendants have the burden of demonstrating that Plaintiffs' conduct is wrongful in an actionable sense. They do not sustain their burden. Defendants present no evidence that Plaintiffs engaged in non-Noerr-Pennington-protected wrongful conduct that caused Defendants injury. To the extent that Defendants' claims for intentional interference are based on conduct protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, such claims fail because the conduct cannot be found wrongful under a state tort law. Sessions [*1283] *Tank Liners, Inc. v. Joor Mfg., Inc.*, 17 F.3d 295, 301-02 [***481] (9th Cir. 1994) (where a party is shielded from liability under Noerr-Pennington for certain conduct, it cannot be liable for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage for that same behavior). Thus, Defendants must establish injuries stemming from a disruption of a relationship, not the filing of In re Circuit Breaker Litigation or Plaintiffs' other petitioning activities.

<sup>12</sup> The Court finds that the expert testimony of Smith and Weinstein is not objectionable under Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469, 113 S. Ct. 2786 (1993), and Federal Rule of Evidence 702.

<sup>13</sup> Pencon/GMEW counterclaims only against Westinghouse and GE. Pencon/GMEW settled its case with Square D.

To the extent that Defendants' claims for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage are based on allegedly defamatory statements, such claims also fail. *Blatty v. New York Times Co.*, 42 Cal. 3d 1033, 1045-48, 232 Cal. Rptr. 542, 728 P.2d 1177 (1986) (where basis of an intentional interference allegation is the injurious falsehood of a statement, no claim exists if the statements are true or if they do not specifically refer to the party seeking recovery). The Court granted partial summary judgment in favor of Plaintiffs on Defendants' trade libel and defamation counterclaims, and as such, these allegations cannot constitute the requisite independent "wrongful conduct" under Della Penna.

In addition, Defendants fail to sustain their burden as to the extent of [***49] their injuries suffered by Plaintiffs' non-protected and legal activities. Defendants present no evidence tying their injuries to conduct "wrongful by some legal measure other than the fact of interference itself." See *Della Penna*, 11 Cal. 4th at 393. While Defendants' experts testify that Plaintiffs' activities injured Defendants, they do not establish by evidence the requisite causal connection between Plaintiffs' non-immune activities and Defendants' injuries. Like the evidence presented in support of their antitrust claims, Defendants are not able to tie injuries to actions. They and their experts instead rely on generalizations. In order to withstand this motion for summary judgment, Defendants needed to present evidence tying non-protected activities to business losses. They have not done this.

Intentional Interference Conclusion

Based upon the foregoing, the Court finds that Defendants have not sustained their burden as to presenting evidence indicating (1) wrongful conduct or (2) injury. Thus, the Court grants partial summary judgment in favor of the Plaintiffs as to Defendants' counterclaims for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage.

[**50] CONCLUSION

Based upon the foregoing, the Court GRANTS Plaintiffs' motions for partial summary judgment against Defendants' antitrust and intentional interference counterclaims. The Court DENIES UL's motion to strike the declarations of Richard Smith and Roy Weinstein.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: 4/1/97

CONSUELO B. MARSHALL

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

DiscoVision Assocs. v. Disc Mfg.

United States District Court for the District of Delaware

April 3, 1997, Decided

Civil Action No. 95-21-SLR CONSOLIDATED Civil Action No. 95-345-SLR

Reporter

1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7507 *; 42 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1749 **

DISCOVISION ASSOCIATES, Plaintiff, v. DISC MANUFACTURING, INC., a Delaware Corporation, Defendant.
DISC MANUFACTURING, INC., Plaintiff, v. PIONEER ELECTRONIC CORP., PIONEER ELECTRONICS (USA), INC., PIONEER ELECTRONICS CAPITAL, INC., and DISCOVISION ASSOCIATES, Defendants.

Disposition: [*1] Pioneer Electronic Corp.'s, Pioneer Electronics (USA), Inc.'s, Pioneer Electronics Capital, Inc.'s, and DiscoVision Associates's motion to dismiss (D.I. 171) denied.

Core Terms

---

patents, alleges, technology, mastering, licensing, manufacturers, replication, markets, encoded, compact disc, monopolize, package, Sherman Act, competitors, tying arrangement, infringement, foreclosed, Cartwright Act, anticompetitive, continuation, horizontal, violations, antitrust claim, anti trust law, tactics, motion to dismiss, purchasers, antitrust, injection, molding

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN1 [] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

In ruling on a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b), motion to dismiss, the court will consider primarily the allegations contained in the complaint. The court, may also consider matters of public record, orders, items appearing in the record of the case, and exhibits attached to the complaint. The court must accept all factual allegations in the complaint as true. The court is also bound to give a plaintiff the benefit of every reasonable inference to be drawn from the complaint. The court must resolve any ambiguities concerning the sufficiency of the claims in favor of the plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN2 [] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

The court may dismiss a complaint only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN3 Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a) requires a short and plain statement of the claim showing the pleader is entitled to relief. Plaintiffs are not required to plead all their evidence in order to avoid a dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12.

Patent Law > US Patent & Trademark Office Proceedings > Continuation Applications > Priority

Patent Law > US Patent & Trademark Office Proceedings > Continuation Applications > General Overview

HN4 Continuation Applications, Priority

A continuation application is a patent application that is entitled to the filing date of an earlier parent application. 35 U.S.C.S. § 120. A patent issued from a continuation application benefits from the earlier filing date for the purpose of determining its validity in view of prior art. A continuation application is an application whose specification is the same as that of the parent application, but whose claims may be the same or different from those of the parent application.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

HN5 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

To form the basis of a 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, violation, conduct must be the type that actually monopolizes or dangerously threatens to do so.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act directs itself not against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN7 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The elements of the offense of monopolization are the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN8[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The elements of an attempted monopolization are exclusionary or anticompetitive conduct, a specific intent to monopolize, and a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power.

Patent Law > US Patent & Trademark Office Proceedings > Continuation Applications > General Overview

HN9[] US Patent & Trademark Office Proceedings, Continuation Applications

The Patent Act, which allows a patent applicant to file continuation applications, does not limit the number of applications. 35 U.S.C.S. § 120.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > Manufacture, Sale & Use

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

HN10[] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

A patent owner's right to license the patented invention is based on the Patent Act, 35 U.S.C.S. § 154, which grants a patent owner the right to exclude others from making, using, offering for sale, or selling its patented article or process during the life of the patent. 35 U.S.C.S. § 154.

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

Patent Law > ... > Utility Patents > Product Patents > Compositions of Matter

Patent Law > ... > Utility Patents > Product Patents > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Utility Patents > Product Patents > Machines

Patent Law > ... > Utility Patents > Product Patents > Manufactures

Patent Law > Utility Requirement > Proof of Utility

HN11[] International Commercial Arbitration, Arbitration

The patent laws grant a monopoly for any new and useful process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof for a varying term. 35 U.S.C.S. § 101.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

**HN12** [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The Sherman Act makes it a felony for every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize any part of trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

**HN13** [blue icon] Misuse of Rights, Patent Misuse Defense

If a patent holder seeks to expand the monopoly granted by the patent laws by misuse, agreement, or accumulation he may incur antitrust liability.

Patent Law > Ownership > Patents as Property

**HN14** [blue icon] Ownership, Patents as Property

The mere accumulation of patents, no matter how many, is not in and of itself illegal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

**HN15** [blue icon] Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

Under the Sherman Act, a tying arrangement is condemned if it can be shown that the tying arrangement foreclosed competition on the merits in the market for the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN16** [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Antitrust liability for a tying arrangement is usually determined under the per se rule. Per se liability may be found without inquiry into actual market conditions. The per se rule is only appropriate if the existence of forcing is probable. In the absence of per se liability, the antitrust plaintiff has the burden of proving that the tying arrangement unreasonably restrained competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN17** [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN18[] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN19[] Private Actions, Remedies

The injury requirement of the Sherman Act is established by the necessity of having to make a choice among alternatives each of which has an adverse economic or financial impact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

HN20[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

Agreements between competitors to allocate territories or customers in order to minimize competition are violations under the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN21[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Trust is defined by the California Cartwright Antitrust Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720 et seq., as a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons for any of the following purposes to create or carry our restrictions in trade or commerce, to make or enter into or execute or carry out contracts, obligations or agreements by which they agree to pool, combine, or directly or indirectly unite any interests that they may have connected with the sale of any article or commodity, that its price might in any manner be affected. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

HN22[] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

The California Unfair Competition Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., prohibits unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business practices. An unlawful business practice includes anything that can properly be called a business practice and that at the same time is forbidden by law.

Counsel: Kent A. Jordan, Esquire, Joseph R. Slights, III, Esquire, and Peter A. Pietra, Esquire, of Morris, James, Hitchens & Williams, Wilmington, Delaware. Attorneys for DiscoVision Associates, Pioneer Electronic Corp., Pioneer Electronics (USA) Inc., and Pioneer Electronics Capital, Inc. Of Counsel: John H. Shenefield, Esquire, Michael S. Kelly, Esquire, Scott A. Stempel, Esquire, Penelope M. Lister, Esquire, and Thomas J. Klotz, Esquire, of Morgan, Lewis & Bockius LLP, Washington, D.C. Stephen L. Sulzer, Esquire, Frederick S. Frei, Esquire, and Gary J. Rinkerman, Esquire, of Steptoe & Johnson LLP, Washington, D.C.

R.H. Richards, III, Esquire, of Richards, Layton & Finger, Wilmington, Delaware. Attorney for Disc Manufacturing, Inc. Of Counsel: James R. Blanchard, Esquire, Harold V. Johnson, Esquire, Thomas J. Filarski, Esquire, and Christopher M. Cavan, Esquire, of Brinks, Hofer, Gilson & Lione, Chicago, Illinois.

Judges: Sue L. Robinson, United States District Judge

Opinion by: Sue L. Robinson

Opinion

---

[**1751] MEMORANDUM OPINION

Date: [*2] April 3, 1997

Wilmington, Delaware

Sue L. Robinson, District Judge

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff DiscoVision Associates ("DiscoVision") filed Civil Action No. 95-21-SLR against defendant Disc Manufacturing, Inc. ("DMI") on January 17, 1995 alleging infringement of six DiscoVision patents relating to optical disc technology. (D.I. 1) Later that same day, DMI filed a complaint in the United States District Court for the Central District of California alleging violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, the California Cartwright Antitrust Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16720 et seq., and the California Unfair Competition Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200 et seq.. DMI's complaint names as defendants Pioneer Electronic Corporation ("Pioneer Japan"), Pioneer Electronics (USA), Inc. ("Pioneer USA"), Pioneer Electronics Capital, Inc. ("Pioneer Capital") (collectively referred to as "Pioneer") and DiscoVision. On July 13, 1995, DMI's antitrust complaint, Civil Action No. 95-345-SLR, was consolidated with DiscoVision's patent infringement action. (D.I. 42)

On September, 13, 1996, DMI sought permission from this court to file a First [*3] Amended and Supplemental Complaint. (D.I. 133) Pursuant to this court's order, DMI's First Amended and Supplemental Complaint ("amended complaint") was deemed filed on October, 17, 1996. (D.I. 133, 166). Presently before this court is Pioneer's and DiscoVision's motion to dismiss portions of DMI's antitrust claims and corresponding affirmative defenses pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\). (D.I. 171, 172) For the reasons stated below, the court will deny Pioneer's and DiscoVision's motion to dismiss.

II. BACKGROUND

This case involves optical discs, known as compact discs or "CD-ROM" discs ("CDs"). CDs can be "digitally encoded" to contain audio music or computer information. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 9) Digitally encoded "industry standard" CDs are made under the Philips/Sony standard.<sup>1</sup> (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 11) In order to mass produce CDs, a "master disc" must be made. The master disc is used to create "stampers" which are then used in commercial injection molding equipment to "replicate" or mass produce the desired CD. (D.I. 171 at 4 n.4) According to DMI, there are three distinct technology markets<sup>2</sup> relating to CDs: (1) an encoded CD technology market (i.e. [*4] a market for licenses under patents that cover industry standard CDs); (2) a CD replication technology market; and (3) a CD mastering technology market. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 9-11)

DMI is a Delaware corporation engaged in the manufacture and sale of CDs. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 2, 6) DMI has research and development operations (as well as a manufacturing facility) in Anaheim, California. [*5] (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 2, 7) DMI provides mastering services for other CD manufacturers by supplying them with "stampers" made from a master disc. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 10, 34) DMI is also attempting to make and sell CD mastering equipment of its own design. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 10, 34) DMI participates in the CD replication technology market as a purchaser and user of injection molding equipment which embodies CD replication technology. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 9) DMI participates in the CD mastering technology market as a manufacturer and seller of stampers made from master discs. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 10) Finally, DMI participates in the encoded CD technology market as a licensee of Philips/Sony, which enables DMI to produce industry standard CDs. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 11)

Pioneer Japan is a Japanese corporation and the parent company of Pioneer USA and Pioneer Capital. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 7) Pioneer Japan has its principal place of business in Tokyo, Japan. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 7) Pioneer USA and Pioneer Capital are Delaware corporations that are general partners in DiscoVision. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 8) [**1752] DiscoVision is a California partnership with its principal place of business in Irvine, California. [*6] (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 8)

DiscoVision owns and manages a patent portfolio of approximately 150 United States patents and 1,300 patents worldwide. (D.I. 172 at 4) Included in DiscoVision's patent portfolio are patents relating to CDs. (D.I. 172 at 4) DiscoVision also owns patents relating to optical disc players, mastering equipment, and replication equipment.

In its amended complaint, DMI alleges that DiscoVision participates in the CD replication technology market as the purported owner of the Holmes 4,185,955 patent and the Gregg 4,500,484 patent ("Gregg '484 patent"). (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 10) DMI alleges that DiscoVision participates in the CD mastering technology market as the purported owner of the Dakin 4,228,326 patent, the Somers 4,190,860 patent, the De Romana 4,499,569 patent, and the Wilkinson 4,337,538 patent. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 11) These patents allegedly cover equipment and processes for making master discs. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 11) DiscoVision participates in the encoded CD technology market as the purported owner of the Gregg 4,893,297 patent ("Gregg '297 patent"), the Gregg 4,819,223 patent ("Gregg '223"), the Bailey 5,003,526 patent ("Bailey '526 patent"), the Bailey [*7] 5,373,490 patent ("Bailey '490 patent), and the Bailey 5,375,116 patent ("Bailey '116 patent") (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 11) DMI claims that DiscoVision asserts that these patents cover digitally encoded CDs under the Philips/Sony CD standard. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 11)

According to DMI, DiscoVision has monopoly power in the encoded CD technology market. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 18) Specifically, DMI alleges that DiscoVision has licensed more than 80% of the CD manufacturers in the United

<sup>1</sup> Philips and Sony promulgated the industry standard for CDs. As a result, CD manufacturers must make CDs that substantially comply with the Philips/Sony standard. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 18)

<sup>2</sup> A technology market has been defined as a market consisting of "the intellectual property that is licensed (the 'licensed technology') and its close substitutes -- that is, the technologies or goods that are close enough substitutes significantly to constrain the exercise of market power with respect to the intellectual property that is licensed." 1 William C. Holmes, "Intellectual Property and Antitrust Law," § 5.06, 3.2.2. (Feb. 1996).

States under the Bailey and Gregg patents allegedly covering CDs made according to the Philips/Sony industry standard. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 17-18)

In its amended complaint, DMI alleges that DiscoVision and Pioneer are liable for violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2 (count I); violations of the California Cartwright Antitrust Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16720 et seq. (count II); and violations of the California Unfair Competition Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 17200 et seq. (count III). (D.I. 133, Ex. A) Counts II and III ("state claims") are based on the same allegations that form the basis for DMI's federal antitrust claims set forth in count I. Count I sets forth numerous [\*8] factual allegations regarding DiscoVision's anticompetitive conduct. Although count I does not specifically identify how the factual allegations of anticompetitive conduct relate to specific antitrust violations, DMI's brief opposing the motion to dismiss organizes the allegations of count I as follows.

According to DMI, DiscoVision monopolized or attempted to monopolize the technology markets for encoded CDs, CD replication equipment, and CD mastering equipment by committing the following acts: (1) fraudulently obtaining patents that allegedly cover technology in the encoded CD and CD replication technology markets;<sup>3</sup> (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 11-17); (2) asserting objectively baseless lawsuits for infringement of these patents against CD manufacturers; (3) abusing the Patent and Trademark Office's ("PTO") continuation application provisions and/or employing improper delaying tactics in the PTO; (4) coercing CD manufacturers into a package license agreement for DiscoVision's entire patent portfolio of approximately 150 U.S. patents; (5) engaging in a market allocation licensing practice by only requiring licenses for the use and not the sale of CD mastering and replication equipment; (6) entering into an agreement with Philips, Sony, and Nimbus to authorize the sale of CD mastering and replication [\*9] equipment without licenses from DiscoVision; and (7) improperly using its monopoly power in the encoded CD technology market to tie its patents in the encoded CD technology market to its patents relating to mastering and replication.

In its amended complaint, DMI sets forth specific allegations relating to DiscoVision's alleged acts of fraud before the PTO. During the prosecution of applications that led to the Gregg '484, 223, and '297 patents, DiscoVision is alleged to have purposefully withheld material prior art and made intentional misrepresentations to the PTO. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 13-15) DiscoVision is also alleged to have purposefully withheld material prior art during the prosecution of applications that led to the Bailey '526, '680, '490, and '116 patents. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 15-17)

[\*10] DMI alleges that DiscoVision abused the PTO's continuation application provisions and engaged in improper delaying tactics by [\*\*1753] "filing a serial stream of continuation applications" in connection to the applications that led to the Gregg and Bailey patents. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 21) DiscoVision also allegedly delayed the Gregg and Bailey patents through misrepresentation and misleading statements to the patent examiners, by withholding material prior art and other essential information from patent examiners, by filing amendments introducing prohibited new matter, and through other violations of the Patent Office regulations and obligations of honesty, candor, and good faith.

(D.I. 133, Ex. A at 23 P 27(c)) According to DMI, "the issuance of the Gregg patents filed in 1968, were improperly delayed for over twenty years." (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 21) The Bailey patents were also allegedly delayed for more than 13 years after the original application was filed in 1980. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 21) In 1993, DiscoVision is alleged to have added over 100 new claims for prosecution in connection with the Bailey application. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 21) DMI specifically alleges that "the Patent [\*11] Office explicitly stated that 'the only purpose' of a certain (DiscoVision) tactic 'was to delay the time at which the public would be entitled to the inventions['] free use.' [sic]" (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 21)

DMI alleges that the result of DiscoVision's "improper abuses of the patent system has been to obtain a large number of patents based on the same initial disclosure covering essentially the same subject matter." (D.I. 133, Ex.

<sup>3</sup> DMI's allegations of fraud relate to the prosecution of patent applications that resulted in the Gregg and Bailey patents which purportedly cover technology in the encoded CD and CD replication technology markets. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 10-11) In its brief, DMI alleges that the allegations of fraud relating to the Bailey patents supports its claim that DiscoVision monopolized or attempted to monopolize the CD mastering technology market as well. (D.I. 197 at 10)

A at 21) DMI alleges that DiscoVision obtained a large number of patents from a single patent application in order to coerce CD manufacturers into accepting DiscoVision's entire package of patents. According to DMI, DiscoVision coerces CD manufacturers into accepting the package license by charging a 2% royalty for the use of each patent individually while charging a 3% royalty for a license on DiscoVision's entire patent portfolio. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 22)

The allegation that DiscoVision coerces CD manufacturers into taking DiscoVision's package license is based on the following specific allegations:

- (1) DiscoVision makes it economically unreasonable to license a single patent. For example, a license under the seven asserted Gregg and Bailey [*12] patents would require a royalty rate of 14%, whereas a license under DiscoVision's entire portfolio is only 3%. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 28)
- (2) DiscoVision threatens and institutes infringement lawsuits (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 27)
- (3) DiscoVision exerts pressure on the customers of CD manufacturers to buy only CDs from a DiscoVision licensee. DiscoVision threatens infringement lawsuits against record labels, CD distributors, CD importers, and CD retail outlets unless these entities purchase CDs from a DiscoVision licensee. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 29)

The alleged result of these activities is to "hinder and foreclose competition in the replication and mastering technology markets by eliminating the incentive to design around [DiscoVision's] mastering and replication patents." (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 28)

The allegations relating to DiscoVision's market allocation licensing practice is based on the following specific allegations:

[DiscoVision] has adopted a policy of not licensing the sale of compact disc manufacturing apparatus, but has tacitly authorized manufacturers of compact disc mastering and injection molding equipment to sell their equipment to compact disc manufacturers. [*13] After the compact disc manufacturers are locked-in and heavily invested in the compact disc mastering and injection molding equipment, [DiscoVision] then seeks a per disc royalty on every disc manufactured using the purchased equipment. [DiscoVision] uses this market allocation practice in the compact disc replication technology market and the compact disc mastering technology market to illegally shift, and thereby magnify, royalty charges from equipment suppliers to equipment purchasers. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 22)

In connection with these allegations, DiscoVision is alleged to have entered into agreements with Philips, Sony, and Nimbus relating to the "tacitly" authorized sale of mastering equipment.<sup>4</sup> (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 25) According to DMI, DiscoVision's "tacitly authorized sale" tactic has the anticompetitive effect in the downstream compact disc manufacturers' product market of wrongfully increasing marginal costs per disc and thereby reducing output." (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 25) DMI alleges that the effect of DiscoVision's contracts with Philips, Sony, and Nimbus is "that these manufacturers have no incentive to design around [**1754] [DiscoVision's] patents because they are authorized [*14] by [DiscoVision] to sell the mastering equipment without interference by [DiscoVision]." (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 25) According to DMI, these allegations amount to "an agreement among horizontal competitors in the mastering technology market to divide the market and reduce competition in the market." (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 25) In a properly functioning market, DMI alleges, the mastering suppliers would have an incentive to design around DiscoVision's patents. DMI alleges that DiscoVision's agreements with these equipment suppliers have "essentially eliminated any incentive to innovate and design around [DiscoVision's] patents in the [CD] mastering technology market, and thereby harmed and foreclosed significant competition in the market by reducing output." (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 26)

DMI also alleges that DiscoVision tacitly authorized manufacturers of injection molding machines to sell those machines [*15] without requiring a license. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 26) The alleged effect of this conduct is that it enables DiscoVision "to suppress competition in the CD injection molding technology market and the mastering technology market by chilling the competitive incentive by such equipment manufacturers to innovate and design around DiscoVision's patents." (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 26)

---

<sup>4</sup> DMI alleges that Philips, Sony, and Nimbus are major suppliers of mastering equipment. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 25)

According to DMI, DiscoVision's "tacitly authorized sale" tactic in the CD mastering and replication technology markets creates and exploits market imperfections which injure CD manufacturers and purchasers. As a result of this tactic, CD manufacturers and purchasers are the only entities threatened with infringement lawsuits and excessive royalty demands. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 26) DMI alleges that CD manufacturers and purchasers are not as capable, informed, or motivated as the equipment manufacturers to evaluate DiscoVision's infringement charges or to design around DiscoVision's patents. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 26)

Finally, DMI alleges that DiscoVision "improperly uses its monopoly power in the encoded disc technology market to tie its patents in the encoded disc technology market to [its] mastering patents and replication [*16] patents as part of a package license." (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 27-30) DMI alleges that this "tying arrangement reduces and forecloses competition in the compact disc mastering and replication technology markets by eliminating the incentive to innovate and design around [DiscoVision's] patents in these markets." (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 30) DMI also alleges that this tying arrangement "improperly raises the cost of producing discs in the compact disc manufacturers' market." (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 30) The tying arrangement also allegedly discourages and/or forecloses CD manufacturers from licensing or obtaining mastering and replication equipment from other sources. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 30)

DMI's § 1 claims allege (1) an unlawful tying of encoded disc patents with mastering and replication patents, (2) a horizontal agreement to allocate customers in the mastering technology market, and (3) an unlawful contract intended to raise the costs of a competitor. (D.I. 197 at 11) DMI's allegations regarding the unlawful tying arrangement and the horizontal agreement are based on the same allegations used to support DMI's § 2 monopolization claims. DMI also alleges that DiscoVision has an agreement with [*17] Nimbus that requires DiscoVision "to sue DMI without reference to the merit of the suit." (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 30) DMI alleges that the purpose of this contract is to raise the cost of DMI as a competitor. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 30)

DMI alleges that DiscoVision acted in all circumstances with the specific intent to acquire and/or maintain monopoly power over the three technology markets, as well as the CD manufacturers' product market. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 35, 36) DMI alleges that there is a "dangerous probability that [DiscoVision] will successfully monopolize" these markets and that its activities have substantially injured competition. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 37) DMI claims that its business has been injured by DiscoVision's activities by forcing DMI to defend itself against DiscoVision's patent infringement suits. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 37)

III. DISCUSSION

A. Standard for Dismissal Under Rule 12(b)

HN1[↑] In ruling on a Rule 12(b) motion to dismiss, the court will consider primarily the allegations contained in the complaint. Pension Benefit Guar. Corp. v. White Consol. Indus., Inc., 998 F.2d 1192, 1196 (3d Cir. 1993). The court, however, may also consider matters of public [*18] record, orders, items appearing in the record of the case, and exhibits attached to the complaint. Id. The court must accept all factual allegations in the complaint as true. Cruz v. Beto, 405 U.S. 319, 322, 31 L. Ed. 2d 263, 92 S. Ct. 1079 (1972) (per curiam). The court is also bound to give a plaintiff the benefit of every reasonable inference to be drawn from the complaint. Retail Clerks Int'l Ass'n v. Schermerhorn, 373 U.S. 746, 10 L. Ed. 2d 678, 83 S. Ct. 1461 (1963). Additionally, the court [**1755] must resolve any ambiguities concerning the sufficiency of the claims in favor of the plaintiff. Hughes v. Rowe, 449 U.S. 5, 10, 66 L. Ed. 2d 163, 101 S. Ct. 173 (1980) (per curiam). HN2[↑] The "court may dismiss a complaint only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations." Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59, 104 S. Ct. 2229 (1984).

B. Pleading Requirements for Antitrust Claims

The level of specificity required in pleading antitrust claims is regulated by the same standards as other causes of action. Fusco v. Xerox Corp., 676 F.2d 332 (8th Cir. 1982); [*19] see also Wright & Miller, Federal Prac. & Proc. § 1228 (Civil 2d ed. 1990). HN3<sup>5</sup> Federal Rule 8(a) requires a "short and plain statement of the claim showing the pleader is entitled to relief." F.R.Civ.P. 8(a). Plaintiffs are not required to plead all their evidence in order to avoid a dismissal under Rule 12. Grid Systems Corp. v. Texas Instruments, Inc., 771 F. Supp. 1033, 1037 (N.D. Cal. 1991).

The parties dispute the manner in which the court should analyze DMI's "claims." DMI argues that "in approaching antitrust claims, the evidence must be analyzed as a whole, rather than in isolation." (D.I. 197 at 13) DiscoVision argues that the court should analyze "discrete antitrust claims independently." (D.I. 229 at 3) In arguing that the court should analyze "discrete antitrust claims," Pioneer and DiscoVision have moved to dismiss specific portions of DMI's amended complaint. (D.I. 229 at 3) Specifically, they have moved to dismiss DMI's allegations relating to DiscoVision's (1) abuses of the PTO's continuation applications, (2) delaying tactics in prosecuting patent applications, and (3) licensing practices, including DMI's tying claim. (D.I. 172 at 12-34) Based on the same arguments, [*20] Pioneer and DiscoVision also seek dismissal of DMI's corresponding state claims.<sup>5</sup>

C. DMI's § 2 Monopolization Claims

DMI has alleged that DiscoVision attempted to or has monopolized the three technology markets for encoded CDs, CD replication equipment, and CD mastering equipment. According to DMI, its monopolization claims are based on an "overall pattern of conduct." (D.I. 197 at 16) DiscoVision's alleged "pattern of conduct" to monopolize these three technology markets involves, inter alia, patent prosecution "abuses" and package licensing practices. DiscoVision is alleged to have "abused" the patent system by fraudulently [*21] procuring patents and filing numerous continuation applications.<sup>6</sup> DiscoVision's alleged package licensing practice involves (1) tying licenses in the encoded CD technology market to licenses in the CD replication and mastering markets and (2) a market allocation among horizontal competitors to license only the use of the CD replication and mastering equipment, rather than its sale.

HN5<sup>5</sup> To form the basis [*22] of § 2 violation, conduct must be the type that "actually monopolizes or dangerously threatens to do so." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 459, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 (1993). This is consistent with the overall purpose of HN6<sup>6</sup> the Sherman Act, which "directs itself not against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself." Id. at 458. HN7<sup>7</sup> The elements of the offense of monopolization are: "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 595 n.19, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-571, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966)). HN8<sup>8</sup> The elements of an attempted monopolization are: (1) exclusionary or anticompetitive conduct; (2) a specific intent to monopolize; and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 456. [*23]

Pioneer and DiscoVision argue that DMI's allegations relating to the filing of [*1756] numerous continuation applications and DiscoVision's licensing practices cannot, as a matter of law, form the basis of an antitrust violation.

---

<sup>5</sup> Pioneer and DiscoVision have also moved to strike the corresponding affirmative defenses in DMI's answer to DiscoVision's patent infringement suit. (D.I. 172 at 11 n. 10, 35) At this time, Pioneer and DiscoVision do not seek the dismissal of DMI's allegations relating to (1) fraudulent actions in the PTO and (2) objectively baseless infringement suits. (D.I. 172 at 11 n.9)

<sup>6</sup> HN4<sup>9</sup> A continuation application is a patent application that is entitled to the filing date of an earlier "parent" application. See 35 U.S.C. § 120. See, generally, Schwartz, "Patent Law and Practice," Federal Judicial Center (2d ed. 1995) at 19-21. A patent issued from a continuation application benefits from the earlier filing date for the purpose of determining its validity in view of prior art. "A continuation application is an application whose specification is the same as that of the parent application, but whose claims may be the same or different from those of the parent application." Id. at 20.

<sup>7</sup> They argue that any anticompetitive effect based on DiscoVision's continuation applications or its licensing practices is only attributable to DiscoVision's rights under the patent laws.<sup>8</sup> (D.I. 172 at 12, 20; D.I. 229 at 11, 13-14)

[*24] DiscoVision may lawfully exercise any rights it has under patent laws but, as DMI has argued, these rights are still subject to abuse and antitrust scrutiny. Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 601. (D.I. 197 at 18) As the Supreme Court stated in Aspen Skiing:

The word "right" is one of the most deceptive pitfalls; it is so easy to slip from a qualified meaning in the premise to an unqualified one in the conclusion. Most rights are qualified.

Id. (quoting Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 155, 96 L. Ed. 162, 72 S. Ct. 181 \(1951\)). The court recognizes that "there is an obvious tension between the patent laws and the antitrust laws" since "one body of law protects monopoly power while the other seeks to proscribe it." United States v. Westinghouse Electric Corp., 648 F.2d 642, 646 \(9th Cir. 1981\) (citing E. Bement & Sons v. Nat'l Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, 91, 46 L. Ed. 1058, 22 S. Ct. 747 \(1902\)). HN11 The patent laws grant a monopoly for "any new and useful process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof" for a varying term.<sup>9</sup> [*26] 35 U.S.C. § 101. HN12 Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it a felony [*25] for "every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize . . . any part of trade or commerce."<sup>10</sup> 15 U.S.C. § 2. Consequently, any anticompetitive effect giving rise to antitrust liability must extend beyond the anticompetitive effect implicit in the grant of a patent. See Simpson v. Union Oil Co. of Cal., 377 U.S. 13, 24, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 \(1964\) (stating that the "patent laws . . . are in pari materia with the antitrust laws and modify them pro tanto); see also USM Corp. v. SPS Technologies, Inc., 694 F.2d 505, 513 \(7th Cir. 1982\) (stating that patent licensing agreements are sometimes struck down under the antitrust laws upon proof of an anticompetitive effect beyond that implicit in the grant of the patent).

As DiscoVision recognizes, a patent holder may be liable under antitrust laws if he "seeks to do more than enjoy the exclusive rights granted by the patent laws." Westinghouse Electric Corp., 648 F.2d at 647. (D.I. 229 at 9) HN13 If a patent holder "seeks to expand the monopoly granted by the patent laws by misuse, agreement, or accumulation" he may incur antitrust liability. Id.

According to DMI, DiscoVision's numerous continuation applications "created delayed or 'submarine' type patent claims which purportedly cover digitally encoded compact discs under the Philips/Sony standard."<sup>11</sup> (D.I. 133, Ex.

<sup>7</sup> DiscoVision acknowledges that DMI's allegations of fraud are sufficient to state a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act. (D.I. 172 at 9, n.8)

<sup>8</sup> HN9 Section 120 of the Patent Act, which allows a patent applicant to file continuation applications, does not limit the number of applications. 35 U.S.C. § 120. HN10 A patent owner's right to license the patented invention is based on Section 154 of the Patent Act which grants a patent owner the "right to exclude others from making, using, offering for sale, or selling" its patented article or process during the life of the patent. 35 U.S.C. § 154.

<sup>9</sup> The GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade) implementing legislation altered the patent term from seventeen years from the date of issuance to the term that begins on the date the patent issues and ends twenty years from the date of the filing of the patent application or, under certain conditions, the date of an earlier filed applications that are referenced in the later filed application. See 35 U.S.C. § 154\(a\) and \(b\) \(Supp. 1996\) (As amended by Pub. L. No. 103-465); see generally Schwartz, Herbert, "Patent Law and Practice," Federal Judicial Center, at 86 (1995). The term may also be extended under certain conditions. See 35 U.S.C. §§ 155, 156, and 157 \(Supp. 1996\).

<sup>10</sup> DMI seeks treble damages for DiscoVision's antitrust violations pursuant to §§ 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act. 15 U.S.C. §§ 15, 26.

<sup>11</sup> Patents that remain "submerged" during a long ex parte examination process and then "surface" upon the grant of the patent have been labeled "submarine patents." A patent application may have a long examination period due to delays by the PTO and/or from continuation applications. A holder of a "submarine patent" may be able to demand high royalties from nonpatent

A at 23 P27(c)) DiscoVision is also alleged to have delayed the Gregg and Bailey patents by making misrepresentations and misleading statements to the patent examiners, withholding material prior art and other essential information, filing prohibited amendments, and committing other unspecified violations [**1757] before the PTO. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 23 P 27(c)) Because [*27] of these alleged tactics, DiscoVision was able to "obtain a large number of patents based on the same initial disclosure covering essentially the same subject matter." (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 21)

HN14↑

The court recognizes that the "mere accumulation [*28] of patents, no matter how many, is not in and of itself illegal." Automatic Radio Mfg. Co. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 339 U.S. 827, 834, 94 L. Ed. 1312, 70 S. Ct. 894 (1950), over ruled in part on other grounds by Lear, Inc. v. Adkins, 395 U.S. 653, 671, 23 L. Ed. 2d 610, 89 S. Ct. 1902 (1969). DMI's allegations, however, involve more than simply a complaint that DiscoVision has been accumulating "too many" patents. DMI has specifically alleged that DiscoVision committed fraud and misrepresentations in prosecuting its patents. DMI also alleges that DiscoVision committed these acts and filed continuation applications with the specific intent to monopolize or maintain its monopoly in the three CD technology markets. These allegations, if true, are sufficient to support the inference that DiscoVision's continuation applications had an anticompetitive effect beyond the grant of the patent. Consequently, the court finds that DMI's allegations relating to DiscoVision's continuation applications may form a basis for antitrust liability.

DMI's allegations relating to DiscoVision's package licensing practice involve the "submarine" patents that were allegedly obtained by fraud. By [*29] engaging in a package licensing practice with these fraudulently obtained patents, DiscoVision is alleged to have "created and exploited lock-in, information-deficit, and motivation deficit market imperfections in the compact disc injection molding technology and compact disc mastering technology markets to increase its market power leverage in those markets and to coerce purchasers and users to enter into licenses under the Gregg '297 and Bailey '526 and '680 patents as part of a package license." (D.I. 133 Ex. A at 22) Given that DMI alleges that DiscoVision fraudulently obtained some of the patents used in its package licensing practice, the court concludes DMI's allegations relating to package licensing may form a basis for antitrust liability. See Westinghouse Electric Corp., 648 F.2d at 647 (a monopoly based on a patent that was procured by fraud may violate the antitrust laws); see also USM Corp., 694 F.2d at 514 (7th Cir. 1982) (commenting that if the patent was procured by fraud there may be more reason to find an anticompetitive effect of the licensing agreement).

D. DMI's Tying Claim

DMI alleges that DiscoVision "ties" its licenses in the encoded CD technology [*30] market to licenses in the CD replication and mastering technology markets in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act.<sup>12</sup> [*31] Not all tying arrangements are condemned by the Sherman Act. Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 11, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984). HN15↑ Under the Sherman Act, a tying arrangement is condemned if it can be shown that the tying arrangement foreclosed competition on the merits in the market for the tied product. Id. at 21. A seller may be able to foreclose competition in the market for the tied product if it has "market power" to "force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market." Id. at 13-14. HN16↑ Antitrust liability for a tying arrangement is usually determined under the per se rule. Id. at 15-16. Per se liability may be found "without inquiry into actual market conditions." Id. at 15.<sup>13</sup> The per se rule "is only appropriate if the existence of holders who invested and used the technology not knowing that a patent would later be granted. In the GATT implementing legislation, Congress addressed the perceived problem of "submarine" patents by amending the patent term provision in the Patent Act. Pub. L. No. 103-465, codified at 35 U.S.C. § 154(a)(2). The amended section, however, does not apply to patentees of record as of June 7, 1995. Id.

<sup>12</sup> HN17↑ Section 1 of the Sherman Act states in part: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade . . . is declared illegal . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 1.

forcing is probable." "In the absence of per se liability," the antitrust plaintiff "has the burden of proving that" the tying arrangement "unreasonably restrained competition." Id. at 29.

Pioneer and DiscoVision argue that DMI's tying claim must be dismissed because it has not alleged and cannot allege that competition in the tied markets (i.e., CD replication and mastering technology markets) has been foreclosed. Pioneer and DiscoVision also argue that DMI's tying claim fails because DMI has not been injured by the tying agreement and because DMI fails to allege that the DiscoVision actually conditions the licensing of its encoded CD patents on the licensing of its other patents.

1. Foreclosure of competition

DMI has alleged that DiscoVision has market power in the encoded CD technology market by entering into package license agreements with more than 80% of the CD manufacturers. (D.I. 133, [*32] Ex. A at 17-18) According to DMI, "once a [CD] manufacturer has been forced to take a license [**1758] under [DiscoVision's] mastering and replication patents as part of a package, that manufacturer no longer has any incentive to design around [DiscoVision's] mastering and replication patents, and no longer has the incentive to obtain mastering or replication technology from another source." (D.I. 197 at 27) DMI also alleges that DiscoVision has further foreclosed "design around" competition in the CD mastering technology market through its "agreements with the mastering equipment suppliers such as Sony, Philips, and Nimbus" not to license the sale of mastering equipment. DMI argues that absent the tying arrangement, "DMI and other compact disc manufacturers would independently develop alternative technology or use the technology of the other competitors in the compact disc replication and mastering technology markets, such as Philips, Sony, or Nimbus." (D.I. 197 a 28-29)

Pioneer and DiscoVision point out that "DMI has failed to allege that there are any competitors who, because of the alleged tie, have failed to make a sale of competing technology." (D.I. 229 at 15) In citing Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2, 466 U.S. at 16, they argue that "DMI must allege that competitors of DiscoVision have been foreclosed from competing against DiscoVision in the injection molding (replication) and mastering technology markets." (D.I. 229 at 15) The Supreme Court in Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2, however, did not explicitly hold that foreclosure of competition must be established based directly on a showing that other competitors were foreclosed from making sales of the tied product. In Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2, the Court defined "foreclosure of competition" as imposing "restraints on competition" or as impairing "competition on the merits." Id. at 14. The Supreme Court also stated that: "Any effort to enlarge the scope of the patent monopoly by using the market power it confers to restrain competition in the market for a second product will undermine competition on the merits in that second market." Id. at 16.

Furthermore, the Supreme Court stated in Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Serv., Inc., that:

Legal presumptions that rest on formalistic distinctions rather than actual market realities are generally disfavored in antitrust [*34] law. This Court has preferred to resolve antitrust claims on a case-by-case basis, focusing on the "particular facts disclosed in the record."

504 U.S. 451, 466-467, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1992\) (citations omitted). According to DMI, the tying arrangement forecloses competition in the CD replication and mastering markets by reducing the incentive to design around DiscoVision's technology and by reducing the demand for alternative technologies. In making all reasonable inferences in DMI's favor, the court finds that DMI has sufficiently alleged that the tying arrangement forecloses competition in the CD replication and mastering technology markets.

<sup>13</sup> The per se rule has been adopted "in part to avoid a burdensome inquiry into actual market conditions in situations where the likelihood of anticompetitive conduct is so great as to render unjustified the cost of determining whether the particular case at bar involves anticompetitive conduct." Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2, 466 U.S. at 16 n.25 (citation omitted).

2. Injury requirement

Pioneer and DiscoVision argue that DMI was not injured by the alleged tying claim because it did not enter into the tying arrangement with DiscoVision. DMI alleges that it has been injured by DiscoVision's package licensing practices because it is "forced to defend itself against DiscoVision's objectively baseless patent infringement claims." (D.I. 197 at 30; D.I. 133, Ex. A at 37) DMI specifically alleges that DiscoVision attempted to coerce it into accepting the package license agreement by threatening to sue DMI. For example, [*35] DMI has alleged that:

38. [DiscoVision] has specifically directed its unlawful licensing scheme at DMI and DMI's customers. . . . [DiscoVision] has intimidated DMI's customers by threatening to institute infringement litigation unless these customers buy compact discs and stampers from a [DiscoVision] licensee.

41. [DiscoVision] filed but purposefully refrained from serving [a 1993 patent infringement complaint] as a coercive device to threaten infringement litigation. These tactics were part of [DiscoVision's] efforts to extract excessive royalty payments from DMI and to coerce DMI into accepting a license under [DiscoVision's] entire portfolio of patents. . . .

(D.I. 133, Ex. A at 32, 33)

HN18 [↑] Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides: "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 15 (emphasis added). DMI does not need to allege that it was injured directly by the tying arrangement. Wells Real Estate, Inc. v. Greater Lowell Bd. of Realtors, 850 F.2d 803, 815 \(1st Cir. 1988\). DMI has alleged that it has to defend itself against DiscoVision's law suit as [*36] a result of its refusal to accept the package license. Based on this allegation, the court finds that DMI has sufficiently alleged an injury in its business or property "by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 15.

[**1759] 3. Conditioning requirement

Pioneer and DiscoVision argue that DMI's allegations of "economic coercion" cannot, as a matter of law, "constitute the type of coercion that is cognizable under the Sherman Act. (D.I. 172 at 35) They argue that DMI's allegations of "economic coercion" are essentially a complaint about DiscoVision's royalty rates. According to Pioneer and DiscoVision, DMI has not and cannot allege that DiscoVision has expressly conditioned the availability of any of its patents to the license of any other patents.

The ability to compel a purchaser to do something he would not do in a competitive market is usually called "market power." Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2, 466 U.S. at 14-15. DMI has specifically alleged that DiscoVision has market power in the encoded CD technology market by licensing more than 80% of CD manufacturers. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 17-18) DMI also alleges that DiscoVision threatens prospective CD manufacturers [*37] as well as the manufacturers' customers with law suits unless they accept the package license. In accepting these allegations as true, the court finds that DMI has sufficiently alleged the type of coercion necessary to state a tying claim under the Sherman Act. See Dairy Foods, Inc. v. Dairy Maid Prod. Coop., 297 F.2d 805, 808 \(7th Cir. 1961\) (stating that HN19 [↑] the injury requirement is established by the "necessity of having to make a choice among alternatives each of which has an adverse economic or financial impact . . .").

E. DMI'S Market Allocation Claim

DMI alleges that DiscoVision has entered into agreements with Philips, Sony, and Nimbus that have the net result of being "an agreement among horizontal competitors in the mastering technology market to divide the market and reduce competition in the market." (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 25) According to DMI, DiscoVision's agreements with Philips, Sony, and Nimbus result in the "tacitly authorized sale" of mastering equipment to CD manufacturers. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 25) DMI alleges that this arrangement has "the anticompetitive effect in the downstream compact disc manufacturers' product market of wrongfully increasing marginal [*38] cost per disc and thereby reducing output."

(D.I. 133, Ex. A at 25) According to DMI, this arrangement has also "essentially eliminated" the horizontal competitors' "incentive to innovate and design around" DiscoVision's patents. (D.I. 133, Ex. A at 25)

Pioneer and DiscoVision argue that DMI's market allocation claim must be dismissed because DMI has failed to allege a conspiracy among horizontal competitors. (D.I. 229 at 18) They argue that DMI has failed to sufficiently allege facts showing that DiscoVision is a horizontal competitor of Philips, Sony or Nimbus. Furthermore, Pioneer and DiscoVision argue that DMI has failed to allege that any equipment manufacturer actually competes with DiscoVision's technology; that DMI has failed to allege that DiscoVision agreed not to manufacture mastering or replication equipment; and that DMI has failed to allege that any equipment supplier agreed not to license the relevant technology. (D.I. 229 at 19)

HN20[↑] Agreements between competitors to allocate territories or customers in order to minimize competition are violations under the Sherman Act. See, Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 49, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349, 111 S. Ct. 401 (1990). [*39] In determining whether DMI has plead sufficient facts to constitute a conspiracy claim by horizontal competitors, the court is mindful of the Supreme Court's warning that plaintiffs should be given the full benefit of their proof without tightly compartmentalizing the various factual components and wiping the slate clean after scrutiny of each . . . . "The character and effect of a conspiracy are not to be judged by dismembering it and viewing its separate parts, but only by looking at it as a whole."

Continental Ore v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 698-699, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962) (citations omitted). As stated above, DMI's factual allegations must be accepted as true and all reasonable inferences are to be drawn in its favor. Cruz, 405 U.S. 319, 31 L. Ed. 2d 263, 92 S. Ct. 1079; Schermerhorn, 373 U.S. 746, 10 L. Ed. 2d 678, 83 S. Ct. 1461. Given these principles, the court finds that DMI has sufficiently plead facts to establish a conspiracy among horizontal competitors.

F. DMI'S State Claims

In its amended complaint, DMI also sets forth violations of the California Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Cod, §§ 16720 [*40] et seq. ("Cartwright Act") (count II) and the California Unfair Competition Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200 et seq. ("Unfair Competition Act") (count III). As support for these claims, DMI relies entirely on the allegations used in its federal antitrust claims.

The Cartwright Act states: "Except as provided in this chapter, every trust is unlawful against public policy and void." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16726. HN21[↑] Trust is defined by the Cartwright Act as [**1760] a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons for any of the following purposes:

(a) To create or carry our restrictions in trade or commerce. . . .

(e) To make or enter into or execute or carry out contracts, obligations or agreements . . . by which they . . . agree to pool, combine, or directly or indirectly unite any interests that they may have connected with the sale of any . . . article or commodity, that its price might in any manner be affected.

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720. DMI does not address in either its amended complaint or its brief which claims specifically fall under the Cartwright Act. Like § 1 of the Sherman Act, the Cartwright Act "does not address unilateral conduct." [*41] Dimidowich v. Bell & Howell, 803 F.2d 1473, 1478 (9th Cir. 1986), modified, 810 F.2d 1517 (9th Cir. 1987); cf. State ex rel. Van de Kamp v. Texaco Inc., 46 Cal. 3d 1147, 252 Cal. Rptr. 221, 231-232, 762 P.2d 385 (Cal. 1988) (declining to directly address the issue but noting that there is no provision in the Cartwright Act that corresponds to § 2 of the Sherman Act). Combinations or conspiracies to monopolize "appear to fall within the general prohibitions of the Cartwright Act." Dimidowich, 803 F.2d at 1478. The Cartwright Act, however, does not expressly deal with monopolization or attempted monopolization claims. See id. (stating that no California statute deals with these claims). Consequently, the court finds that only DMI's § 1 claims can be properly brought under the Cartwright Act.

Claims based on the Cartwright Act are generally judged by the same standards as claims brought under the corresponding federal antitrust laws. See Texaco, 252 Cal. Rptr. at 232; Gianelli Distributing Co. v. Beck & Co., 172 Cal. App. 3d 1020, 219 Cal. Rptr. 203 (Cal. Ct. App. 1985). For the same reasons this court found that DMI has stated § 1 Sherman Act claims sufficiently [*42] to withstand a motion to dismiss, the court finds that DMI's § 1 claims properly state claims under the Cartwright Act.

HN22[] The Unfair Competition Act prohibits "unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business practices." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200 et seq. An unlawful business practice "includes 'anything that can properly be called a business practice and that at the same time is forbidden by law.' Samura v. Kaiser Found. Health Plan, Inc., 17 Cal. App. 4th 1284, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20, 24 (Cal. Ct. App. 1993) (citation omitted). Adequately plead violations of the Sherman Act are grounds for claims based on the Unfair Competition Act. Sunbelt Television v. Jones Intercable, Inc., 795 F. Supp. 333 (C.D. Cal. 1992). Since this court has found that DMI has sufficiently plead claims of the Sherman Act and the Cartwright Act, the court finds that DMI has properly plead claims under the Unfair Competition Act.

IV. CONCLUSION

The court finds that DMI has properly plead claims based on the Sherman Act, Cartwright Act, and the Unfair Competition Act. Consequently, the court shall deny Pioneer's and DiscoVision's motion to dismiss. An order consistent with this memorandum opinion [*43] shall issue.

ORDER

At Wilmington this 3d day of April, 1997, consistent with the memorandum opinion issued this same date;

IT IS ORDERED that Pioneer Electronic Corp.'s, Pioneer Electronics (USA), Inc.'s, Pioneer Electronics Capital, Inc.'s, and DiscoVision Associates's motion to dismiss (D.I. 171) is denied.

Sue L. Robinson

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

In re Independent Serv. Orgs. Antitrust Litiq.

United States District Court for the District of Kansas

April 8, 1997, Decided ; April 8, 1997, FILED, ENTERED ON THE DOCKET

CIVIL ACTION No. MDL-1021

Reporter

964 F. Supp. 1479 *; 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6672 **; 1997-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,900

IN RE: INDEPENDENT SERVICE ORGANIZATIONS ANTITRUST LITIGATION; This Document Applies To: CSU Holdings, Inc., et al. v. Xerox Corp. (D. Kan. No. 94-2102-EEO)

Disposition: [**1] Both motions granted in part and denied in part.

Core Terms

---

patent, infringement, misuse, antitrust, counterclaims, patent infringement, monopoly, patent holder, silence, license, prices, damages, products, summary judgment, antitrust claim, reconsideration, antitrust violation, unilateral, invention, estoppel, laches, anti trust law, matter of law, holder's, monopoly power, patent misuse, calculation, markets, reasons, rights

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Burdens of Proof

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN1 Misuse of Rights, Patent Misuse Defense

To prevail on a defense of patent misuse, an alleged infringer must establish a sufficient nexus between the patent holder's alleged misconduct and the patents at issue in the litigation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Burdens of Proof

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

964 F. Supp. 1479, *1479L 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6672, **1

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

HN2 Pleadings, Counterclaims

A defendant is not precluded from recovery on its patent infringement counterclaims based on the plaintiff's general evidence of "misuse in the air." The plaintiff bears the burden of establishing the requisite nexus between the patents at issue and the alleged misuse.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

HN3 Defenses, Bad Faith Enforcement

The patent statute, 35 U.S.C.S. § 271\(d\)\(3\), precludes a finding of misuse when the patent holder seeks to enforce his patent rights against infringement. A finding of misuse is precluded, however, only if the patent infringement suit is brought in good faith.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN4 Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

An infringement suit is immune from antitrust liability unless the defendant can establish that the suit is objectively baseless. For the sham exception under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine to apply, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail. Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

HN5 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

There is no principled reason to distinguish the "sham" exception under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine from the "bad faith" exception under 35 U.S.C.S. § 271\(d\)\(3\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

964 F. Supp. 1479, *1479L 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6672, **1

HN6 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Whether applying Noerr as an antitrust doctrine or invoking it in other contexts, evidence of anticompetitive intent or purpose alone cannot transform otherwise legitimate activity into a sham.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

HN7 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

A patent holder's access to the courts is immunized unless his lawsuit is (1) objectively meritless and (2) brought in an attempt to interfere directly with the business of his competitor.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Burdens of Proof

Torts > ... > Duty > Affirmative Duty to Act > General Overview

Torts > ... > Standards of Care > Appropriate Standard > Objectivity

HN8 Infringement Actions, Burdens of Proof

The test of due care is whether, under all the circumstances, a reasonable person would prudently conduct himself with any confidence that a court might hold the patent invalid or not infringed. The duty of due care normally requires that a potential infringer obtain competent legal advice before infringing or continuing to infringe. The failure to obtain legal advice, however, is not determinative and constitutes only one factor in the willfulness determination.

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Burdens of Proof

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Burdens of Proof

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN9 Inequitable Conduct, Burdens of Proof

To establish estoppel in the patent infringement context, the alleged infringer must establish that (1) the patent owner, through conduct, positive statement, or misleading silence, represented to the infringer that its business would be unmolested by claims of infringement, (2) the alleged infringer relied on this communication, and (3) the infringer would be materially prejudiced if the patent owner is allowed to proceed with its infringement action.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN10 Infringement Actions, Defenses

Silence alone is not sufficient affirmative conduct to give rise to estoppel in the patent infringement context. Rather, estoppel can be established by silence only if other factors are present.

964 F. Supp. 1479, *1479L 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6672, **1

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN11 [] Infringement Actions, Defenses

An infringer cannot assert reliance on the patent owner's silence if the infringer did not even know of the potential patent problem.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN12 [] Infringement Actions, Defenses

A successful laches defense bars damages only for conduct occurring prior to the filing of the lawsuit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN13 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

To establish monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must prove that (1) the defendant possessed monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the defendant willfully acquired or maintained that monopoly power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

HN14 [] Infringement Actions, Exclusive Rights

The patent statute, 35 U.S.C.S. § 154, allows a patent holder to exclude others from manufacturing, selling, or using his inventions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

HN15 [] Intellectual Property, Misuse of Rights

See 35 U.S.C.S. § 271\(d\)\(4\).

964 F. Supp. 1479, *1479L 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6672, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > Manufacture, Sale & Use

HN16 [blue icon] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Licenses

The heart of the patentee's legal monopoly is the right to invoke the state's power to prevent others from utilizing his discovery without his consent. Of course, a patent holder cannot use his patent to justify anticompetitive conduct beyond the limit or scope of the patent grant. There are established limits which the patentee must not exceed in employing the leverage of his patent to control or limit the operations of the licensee. The patent monopoly may not be used in disregard of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Claims > Claim Language > Duplication & Multiplicity

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

There is no prohibition from lawfully using a patent to acquire a monopoly in more than one relevant antitrust market. In other words, a single "patent monopoly" can be used to secure multiple "economic monopolies," that is, monopolies in more than one relevant antitrust market. The boundary of a patent monopoly is to be limited by the literal scope of the patent claims. The patent system, which antedated the Sherman Act by a century, is not an "exception" to the antitrust laws, and patent rights are not legal monopolies in the antitrust sense of that word.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

HN18 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Where a patent has been lawfully acquired, subsequent conduct permissible under the patent laws cannot trigger any liability under the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

964 F. Supp. 1479, *1479L 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6672, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

HN19 [💡] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Licenses

The patent statute, 35 U.S.C.S. § 271\(d\)\(4\), states that the unilateral refusal to license or use a patent shall not constitute misuse and shall not be deemed an illegal extension of the patent right.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Remedies > Damages > Increased Damages

HN20 [💡] Intellectual Property, Misuse of Rights

A patent holder can continue to exercise his patent's exclusionary power even after achieving commercial success. To allow the imposition of treble damages based on what a reviewing court might later consider, with the benefit of hindsight, to be too much success would seriously threaten the integrity of the patent system. The result should be no different whether a patent holder's success (achieved by conduct expressly sanctioned by the patent statute) impacts one or more relevant antitrust markets.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN21 [💡] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

A demand for a price which is so high as to preclude acceptance of a license offer is, after all, not appreciably different from a refusal to license upon any terms.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Royalties

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN22 [💡] Conveyances, Royalties

A patent empowers the owner to exact royalties as high as he can negotiate with the leverage of that monopoly.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN23 [blue icon] Conveyances, Licenses

The right to license a patent, exclusively or otherwise, or to refuse to license at all, is "the untrammeled right" of the patentee.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN24 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Price Discrimination

There is no antitrust prohibition against a patent owner's using price discrimination to maximize his income from the patent.

Counsel: For CSU HOLDINGS INC, Case Number: 94-2102-EEO - USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: Eric D. Braverman, Employers Reinsurance Corporation, Overland Park, KS. P. John Owen, Lori R. Schultz, Morrison & Hecker, Kansas City, MO. Michael C. Manning, Morrison & Hecker, Phoenix, AZ. For COPIER SERVICES UNLIMITED, INC., Case Number: 94-2102-EEO - USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: Eric D. Braverman, (See above). P. John Owen, (See above), Lori R. Schultz, (See above). Michael C. Manning, (See above). For COPIER SERVICE UNLIMITED OF ST. LOUIS, INC., Case Number: 94-2102-EEO - USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: Eric D. Braverman, (See above). P. John Owen, (See above), Lori R. Schultz, (See above). Michael C. Manning, (See above). For ACQUISITION SPECIALISTS, INC, Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California - USDC for the District of Kansas 94-2502, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, San Francisco, CA. Maxwell M Blecher. For TECSPEC, INC, a Texas Corporation, Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas dba Atek, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, [**2] (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For CONSOLIDATED PHOTO COPY, INC., a Virginia corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - UDDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For COPIER REBUILD CENTER, INC., a Maryland corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For CPO LTD, a California corporation. Case Number 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District Court of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For GRADWELL COMPANY, INC., an Alabama corporation. Case Number 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District Court of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For GRAPHIC CORPORATION OF ALABAMA, an Alabama corporation. Case Number 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS EQUIPMENT, [**3] INC, a California corporation. Case Number 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District Court of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For LASER RESOURCES INC, an Iowa corporation, Case Number 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District Court of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For LASER RESOURCES OF MINNESOTA, INC., a Minnesota corporation. Case Number 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For LASER SOLUTIONS, INC, a California corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For LASER SUPPORT AND ENGINEERING, INC., a California corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For MARATHON COPIER SERVICE, INC., a California corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 [**4] - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For NATIONWIDE TECHNOLOGIES, INC., a Illinois corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For REPROGRAPHICS RESOURCES SYSTEMS, INC, an Iowa corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For RESOURCES SYSTEMS, INC, an Iowa corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). For SUNTONE INDUSTRIES, INC, a Florida corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For TECHNICAL DUPLICATION SERVICES, INC, a California corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District [**5] of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For X-TECH SYSTEMS INC, a California corporation. Case Number 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For XER-DOX INC., a California corporation. Case Number 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher. For XEROGRAPHIC COPIES SERVICES, INC., a Texas corporation. Case Number: 94-1285 - USDC for the Northern District of California. 94-2502 USDC for the District of Kansas, plaintiff: James A Hennefer, (See above). Maxwell M Blecher.

For XEROX CORPORATION, Case Number: 94-2102-EEO - USDC for the District of Kansas and Case Number: 94-1285 USDC for the Northern District of California, defendant: Peter K Bleakley, Arnold & Porter, Washington, DC. Peter W Marshall, Xerox Corporation, Stamford, CT. Michael G. Norris, Norris, Keplinger & Logan, L.L.C., Overland Park, KS. C Larry O'Rourke, E Robert Yoches, Vincent P Kovalick, Leslie I Bookoff, Finnegan, Henderson, Farabow, Garrett & Dunner, [**6] Washington, DC.

For XEROX CORPORATION, counter-claimant: Peter K Bleakley, Arnold & Porter, Washington, DC. Peter W Marshall, Xerox Corporation, Stamford, CT. Michael G. Norris, Norris, Keplinger & Logan, L.L.C., Overland Park, KS. C Larry O'Rourke, E Robert Yoches, Vincent P Kovalick, Leslie I Bookoff, Finnegan, Henderson, Farabow, Garrett & Dunner, Washington, DC.

For CSU HOLDINGS INC, counter-defendant: Eric D. Braverman, Employers Reinsurance Corporation, Overland Park, KS. P. John Owen, Lori R. Schultz, Morrison & Hecker, Kansas City, MO. Michael C. Manning, Morrison & Hecker, Phoenix, AZ. For COPIER SERVICES UNLIMITED, INC., counter-defendant: Eric D. Braverman, (See above). P. John Owen, (See above), Lori R. Schultz, (See above). Michael C. Manning, (See above). For COPIER SERVICE UNLIMITED OF ST. LOUIS, INC., counter-defendant: Eric D. Braverman, (See above). P. John Owen, (See above), Lori R. Schultz, (See above). Michael C. Manning, (See above). For ACQUISITION SPECIALISTS, INC, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, San Francisco, CA. For TECSPEC, INC dba Atek, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For CONSOLIDATED PHOTO COPY, INC., counter-defendant: [**7] James A Hennefer, (See above). For COPIER REBUILD CENTER, INC., counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For CPO LTD, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For CREATIVE COPIER SERVICES, INC, counter-defendant: Jack M Bernard, Philadelphia, PA. For GRADWELL COMPANY, INC., counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For GRAPHIC CORPORATION OF ALABAMA, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS EQUIPMENT, INC, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For LASER RESOURCES INC, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For LASER RESOURCES OF MINNESOTA, INC., counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For LASER SOLUTIONS, INC, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For LASER SUPPORT AND ENGINEERING, INC., counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For MARATHON COPIER SERVICE, INC., counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For NATIONWIDE TECHNOLOGIES, INC., counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For REPROGRAPHICS RESOURCES SYSTEMS, INC, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For RESOURCES SYSTEMS, INC, counter-defendant: James A

Hennefer, (See above). For SUNTONE [**8] INDUSTRIES, INC, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For TECHNICAL DUPLICATION SERVICES, INC, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For X-TECH SYSTEMS INC, counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For XER-DOX INC., counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above). For XEROGRAPHIC COPIES SERVICES, INC., counter-defendant: James A Hennefer, (See above).

Judges: EARL E. O'CONNOR, United States District Judge

Opinion by: EARL E. O'CONNOR

Opinion

---

[*1482] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

This matter is before the court on defendant's motion for reconsideration of the order denying summary judgment on copyright infringement (Doc. # 581) and defendant's motion for reconsideration or certification pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292\(b\) of the order denying summary judgment on patent infringement and antitrust claims (Doc. # 583). After careful consideration of the parties' briefs and evidentiary materials and oral argument on the motions, the court is prepared to rule. For the reasons set forth below, both motions are granted in part and denied in part.

Defendant has included a supplemental statement of facts with its motion for reconsideration of the court's order regarding patent infringement [**9] and antitrust claims. Given the additional factual issues raised in the motion, as well as some legal arguments that were not briefed specifically in the previous summary judgment motion, the court will construe defendant's motion as a renewed motion for summary judgment on patent infringement and antitrust claims or in the alternative certification of the court's March 19, 1997, order. The standards relating to summary judgment motions previously were set forth in the court's March 19, 1997, memorandum & order. The court incorporates that discussion by reference here.

I. Xerox's Renewed Motion For Summary Judgment On Its Patent Infringement Counterclaim.

A. Factual Background.

For purposes of this opinion, the following is a brief summary of the material facts that are uncontested or deemed admitted, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56 and District of Kansas Rule 56.1.

This court previously found that CSU infringed Xerox's lawful patents either literally or under the doctrine of equivalents by CSU's use of the 97X0 fuser pressure roll, 97X0(w/MOD V) fuser heat roll, 97X0(w/o MOD V) fuser heat roll, 1090 family fuser heat roll, 1090 family dicrotron [**10] w/ dag coating, 1090 family dicrotron w/o dag coating, and 1065 document handler belt. Mar. 19, 1997, Mem. & Order at 7.

Xerox seeks damages for CSU's infringement of patents since 1994 when Xerox filed its counterclaim. CSU has submitted an expert report with respect to its antitrust claims which identifies parts overcharge damages for the twenty-six most frequently purchased parts by CSU. Four of the twenty-six parts are among the patented parts at issue in Xerox's motion for summary judgment on its patent infringement counterclaims. From 1993 through 1997, the total overcharge calculated by CSU for these four parts is negative $ 43,429. The other three patented parts at issue in Xerox's patent infringement counterclaim are not included as part of CSU's damage calculation and CSU has offered no evidence to establish that it was overcharged for these parts.

B. CSU's Patent Misuse Defense.

1. Nexus Between Patents At Issue And Misuse.

HN1[] To prevail on a defense of patent misuse, an alleged infringer must establish a sufficient nexus between the patent holder's alleged misconduct and the patents at issue in the litigation. See Riker Laboratories, Inc. v. Gist-Brocades N.V., [\[\*11\] 205 U.S. App. D.C. 64, 636 F.2d 772, 777 \(D.C. Cir. 1980\)](#); Kolene Corp. v. Motor City Metal Treating, Inc., 440 F.2d 77, 84-85 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 886, 30 L. Ed. 2d 169, 92 S. Ct. 203 (1971); McCullough Tool Co. v. Well Surveys, Inc., 395 F.2d 230, 238-39 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 925, 21 L. Ed. 2d 261, 89 S. Ct. 257 (1968). Xerox [*1483] has offered additional factual support for its contention that CSU has failed to establish this requisite nexus. This additional evidence is properly considered with respect to Xerox's renewed motion for summary judgment on its patent infringement counterclaims.

Xerox sues only for infringement of its patents after it changed its parts policy in 1994 as a result of the R&D settlement. CSU claims that Xerox continued to misuse its patents after the R&D settlement by charging exorbitant prices for those products in an effort to eliminate ISO competition in the service market. CSU has failed to come forward with any evidence to substantiate this allegation with respect to the seven patented parts at issue.

As part of its antitrust case, CSU claims parts overcharge damages for only four of the seven patented [\[\*12\]](#) parts at issue. According to CSU's expert, the total "overcharge" from 1993 through 1997 for these four parts is negative $ 43,429. For two of the four parts, CSU pays less today than it claims is a "reasonable" price. For three of the four parts, CSU paid less than a reasonable price at some point in time between 1993 and 1997. For the remaining part, CSU pays approximately $ 46 for the part while it claims that the reasonable price is approximately $ 27. CSU has failed to prove that this price differential is sufficient to constitute misuse. Thus, with respect to the record evidence of the patented parts at issue, CSU actually paid near or less than a reasonable price for the parts.<sup>1</sup>

[\[\*13\]](#) CSU claims that the omission of the other three patented parts from its damage calculation does not mean that the parts were not priced intentionally by Xerox to exclude competition. Yet, CSU has not offered any evidence of the actual price it paid for the three patented parts not included in its damage calculation.

HN2[] Xerox is not precluded from recovery on its patent infringement counterclaims based on CSU's general evidence of "misuse in the air." Kolene, 440 F.2d at 84. CSU bears the burden of establishing the requisite nexus between the patents at issue and the alleged misuse. Despite two opportunities, CSU has failed to come forward with any evidence to establish that Xerox's pricing of the seven patented parts at issue constitutes misuse. CSU argues that its damage calculation is conservative and that what it characterizes as a "reasonable price from Xerox" is often higher than the prices charged by third parties. CSU simply attempts to blur the fact that it has not offered any evidence that Xerox charged (or CSU paid) exorbitant prices for the seven patented parts at issue. The only record evidence on this point is the report of CSU's expert, which establishes that three [\[\*14\]](#) of the seven parts are not included in CSU's parts overcharge calculation and that CSU paid less than what it characterizes as a reasonable price for the other four parts combined over the relevant time period. As for Xerox's prices, the evidence establishes that for all infringing parts as a whole, Xerox's prices are on average only 3% higher than the price CSU claims to be reasonable. The court finds that this evidence is insufficient as a matter of law to sustain CSU's patent misuse defense.

The parties have argued in their briefs whether the seven patented parts were included in Xerox's pre-1994 parts policy. To the extent any of the seven patented parts were included in Xerox's prior parts policy and arguably could constitute misuse, such misuse has been purged by the availability of patented parts since 1994 and CSU's ability to purchase the various parts at prices near or below what it characterizes as a "reasonable" price. CSU has failed to establish that Xerox misused its patents under the standard [\[\*1484\]](#) of misuse that the court articulated in its March 19, 1997, memorandum and order.

<sup>1</sup> It is immaterial whether CSU purchased these parts at less than a reasonable price from Xerox or third parties. In either case, CSU cannot establish that Xerox's high prices were exclusionary and therefore constitute misuse. In addition, CSU has failed to come forward with specific evidence to establish its suppliers of each of the various patented parts (Xerox or third parties) and the price it pays for those parts. Even if the court reviewed what Xerox charged for the seven patented parts, rather than what CSU paid, the record evidence establishes that Xerox's prices as a whole were approximately 3% higher than what CSU claims is a reasonable price. This evidence is insufficient as a matter of law to establish patent misuse.

Even if CSU could establish the requisite nexus between the patents at issue and the alleged [**15] misuse, the court finds below that Xerox's unilateral refusal to sell or license its patented parts (or pricing the products at "unreasonable" prices) cannot constitute misuse. See infra part II.

2. Filing Of Infringement Action As Misuse.

CSU also claims that Xerox's filing of its counterclaims in the instant action constitutes patent misuse. The court previously held that CSU's defense was not precluded as a matter of law because (1) the Noerr-Pennington<sup>2</sup> doctrine provides antitrust immunity, not patent or copyright misuse immunity, and (2) evidence of Xerox's intent in prosecuting its infringement counterclaims when viewed together with CSU's other evidence may constitute misuse. Mar. 19, 1997, Mem. & Order at 18. Based on the parties' supplemental briefing and further consideration of the parties' original briefing, the court finds that the filing of Xerox's patent infringement counterclaims cannot constitute misuse as a matter of law.

[**16] HN3[↑] The patent statute precludes a finding of misuse when the patent holder seeks "to enforce his patent rights against infringement." 35 U.S.C. § 271(d)(3). A finding of misuse is precluded, however, only if the patent infringement suit is brought in good faith. See Glaverbel Societe Anonyme v. Northlake Mktg. & Supply, Inc., 45 F.3d 1550, 1558-59 (Fed. Cir. 1995). As this court noted previously, the Supreme Court has held HN4[↑] that an infringement suit is immune from antitrust liability unless the defendant can establish that the suit is objectively baseless. See Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 56-60, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 (1993) ("PRE"). In discussing the sham exception under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the Supreme Court has stated that the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail. Only if challenged [**17] litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation.

Id. at 60.

CSU effectively concedes that Xerox's patent infringement counterclaims cannot be characterized as objectively baseless. CSU also does not contest that Xerox's filing of its infringement counterclaims alone is insufficient to sustain a finding of misuse. On the other hand, CSU argues that Xerox's subjective intent in bringing its counterclaims is relevant to its misuse defenses. Given the court's finding above that CSU has not established the requisite nexus between the patents at issue and the alleged misuse, the court finds that the filing of Xerox's counterclaims alone is insufficient to support a finding of misuse.

The court finds that HN5[↑] there is no principled reason to distinguish the "sham" exception under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine from the "bad faith" exception under 35 U.S.C. § 271(d)(3). In PRE, the Supreme Court stated that

HN6[↑] whether applying Noerr as an antitrust doctrine or invoking it in other contexts, we have repeatedly reaffirmed that evidence of anticompetitive intent or purpose alone cannot transform otherwise legitimate activity [**18] into a sham.

Id. at 59 (emphasis added); see Bill Johnson's Restaurants, Inc. v. N.L.R.B., 461 U.S. 731, 743-44, 76 L. Ed. 2d 277, 103 S. Ct. 2161 (1983) (analogizing Noerr's sham exception to the "improperly motivated" lawsuit standard under the National Labor Relations Act); Computer Assocs. Int'l, Inc. v. American Fundware, Inc., 831 F. Supp. 1516, 1523 (D. Colo. 1993) [*1485] (the Noerr-Pennington doctrine "is a constitutional, not an antitrust, doctrine.").

<sup>2</sup> See Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961); United Mine Workers of Am. v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965).

Indeed, the only authority offered by the parties on this point applied an identical analysis to determine whether a lawsuit constituted patent misuse or an antitrust violation. See Glaverbel, 45 F.3d at 1558-59.

In addition, the court finds that the same First Amendment principles which protect a patent holder from antitrust violations also should protect a patent holder from assertion of a misuse defense. In either case, a patent holder would be penalized for seeking the protection of the courts which is "among the most precious of the liberties safeguarded by the Bill of Rights." United Mine Workers of Am., Dist. 12 v. Illinois State Bar Ass'n, 389 U.S. 217, 222, 19 L. Ed. 2d 426, 88 S. Ct. 353 [**19] (1967). HN7 A patent holder's access to the courts therefore is immunized unless his lawsuit is (1) objectively meritless and (2) brought in an attempt to interfere directly with the business of his competitor. See PRE, 508 U.S. at 60-61. As noted above, CSU has not offered any evidence to establish that Xerox's patent infringement counterclaim could be characterized as objectively meritless. Indeed, the court has granted summary judgment in favor of Xerox on this claim. A finding of misuse based on the filing of Xerox's patent infringement counterclaim therefore is precluded as a matter of law.

The court previously did not resolve the issues of willfulness, estoppel, laches, and statute of limitations based on the court's finding that CSU's misuse defense could not be precluded as a matter of law. The court now will address those issues.

C. Willfulness Of CSU's Infringement.

Xerox claims that CSU's infringement was willful because CSU had actual notice of Xerox's patent rights yet failed to exercise its affirmative duty of due care. See Ryco, Inc. v. Ag-Bag Corp., 857 F.2d 1418, 1428 \(Fed. Cir. 1988\) (citation omitted). HN8 "The test [of due care] is whether, under all the [**20] circumstances, a reasonable person would prudently conduct himself with any confidence that a court might hold the patent invalid or not infringed." Id. The duty of due care "normally requires that a potential infringer obtain competent legal advice before infringing or continuing to infringe." Id. The failure to obtain legal advice, however, is not determinative and constitutes only one factor in the willfulness determination. Id.

CSU contends that it "consulted with its antitrust counsel and, based on their advice, has asserted a misuse defense in good faith." Xerox, relying on Lightwave Technologies, Inc. v. Corning Glass Works, 1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 543, 19 U.S.P.Q.2D \(BNA\) 1838 \(S.D.N.Y. 1991\), argues that CSU has failed to meet the requirements of due care as a matter of law. In Lightwave, the accused infringer obtained an opinion from its antitrust counsel that it had a "submissible antitrust case against Corning, and that a verdict for Lightwave on its antitrust claims would render the patent unenforceable." Id. at 1847. The jury found that the defendant had willfully infringed plaintiff's patents. The court refused to overturn the jury verdict, finding that [**21] "given the complexity of antitrust law, having a 'submissible antitrust case' is hardly a sound basis for proceeding with patent infringing activities." Id. at 1847-48. "Conclusory oral opinions do not discharge the duty of care." Id. at 1848. The court in Lightwave also found significant the fact that the accused infringer never articulated in clear, specific, and concrete terms its patent misuse claims and did not even raise the issue until the conclusion of the antitrust phase of trial. Id.

In this case, CSU timely raised the misuse defense and certainly articulated its misuse defense in response to Xerox's motion for summary judgment. In addition, the court is not aware of any case that requires an alleged infringer to receive advice from patent counsel, as opposed to antitrust counsel, in order to maintain a misuse defense in good faith. In fact, the misuse defense asserted in this case by CSU was based on an alleged antitrust violation. Therefore, antitrust counsel's advice was pertinent. Although counsel may not have predicted perfectly which patents Xerox would choose to enforce and whether the court ultimately would sustain the misuse defense, counsel's [*1486] advice [**22] was sufficient to raise an issue of fact as to whether CSU had a reasonable belief that it may not be liable to Xerox for patent infringement. The court accordingly denies Xerox's motion for summary judgment on the willfulness issue.

D. Estoppel.

HN9 To establish estoppel in the patent infringement context, the alleged infringer must establish that (1) the patent owner, through conduct, positive statement, or misleading silence, represented to the infringer that its business would be unmolested by claims of infringement, (2) the alleged infringer relied on this communication, and (3) the infringer would be materially prejudiced if the patent owner is allowed to proceed with its infringement action. See ABB Robotics, Inc. v. GMFanuc Robotics Corp., 52 F.3d 1062, 1063 (Fed. Cir.), cert. denied, 133 L. Ed. 2d 211, 116 S. Ct. 306 (1995); A.C. Aukerman Co. v. R.L. Chaides Constr. Co., 960 F.2d 1020, 1041-43 (Fed. Cir. 1992); Adelberg Laboratories, Inc. v. Miles, 921 F.2d 1267, 1272 (Fed. Cir. 1990). CSU contends that (1) Xerox has known since 1987 that CSU was obtaining parts from sources other than Xerox, (2) Xerox never indicated to CSU that Xerox believed CSU [**23] was infringing on its valid patents, and (3) CSU expanded into other cities before Xerox filed its counterclaims in reliance on Xerox's silence. Xerox does not dispute any of these facts for purposes of the instant motion.

964 F. Supp. 1479, *1486-997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6672, **22

The first element of estoppel applicable to this case involves the patent owner's "misleading silence." CSU points only to Xerox's silence without explaining how Xerox's silence was misleading. The Federal Circuit has held that HN10 [↑] "silence alone is not sufficient affirmative conduct to give rise to estoppel." Meyers v. Asics Corp., 974 F.2d 1304, 1308 (Fed. Cir. 1992) (citations omitted). Rather, estoppel can be established by silence only if other factors are present. See ABB Robotics, 52 F.3d at 1064 ("Misleading action by the patentee may be silence, if such silence is accompanied by some other factor indicating that the silence was sufficiently misleading to amount to bad faith."); A.C. Aukerman, 960 F.2d at 1042 ("plaintiff's inaction must be combined with other facts respecting the relationship or contracts between the parties to give rise to the necessary inference that the claim against the defendant is abandoned"). For example, a patent owner's [**24] silence may support an estoppel defense when the patent owner specifically objects to the alleged infringer's activities, but then remains silent for a long period of time before filing an infringement action. See Meyers, 974 F.2d at 1308-09; A.C. Aukerman, 960 F.2d at 1042. CSU has failed to show any alleged misconduct by Xerox besides its silence and, therefore, CSU's defense of estoppel cannot be supported.

CSU also cannot establish the second element of its defense, i.e., that it relied on Xerox's silence. HN11 [↑] An infringer cannot assert reliance on the patent owner's silence if the infringer did not even know of the potential patent problem. See A.C. Aukerman, 960 F.2d at 1042-43. CSU cannot claim that it relied on Xerox's silence regarding the seven patents at issue when CSU has not presented any evidence that it was aware of the patents and the potential infringement.

Finally, CSU has not established that it would be materially prejudiced by allowing Xerox to proceed because CSU has not shown that it took any actions in reliance on Xerox's silence. CSU claims without any evidentiary support that it expanded to two cities from 1987 through 1994 based on Xerox's silence. [**25] After Xerox filed its counterclaims in November 1994, CSU expanded to four cities in 1995 and one city so far in 1997. In light of CSU's expansion after Xerox filed its infringement counterclaims, CSU bears the burden of establishing that it would have altered its pre-November 1994 expansion if Xerox would have sued earlier. See Meyers, 974 F.2d at 1309. CSU has offered no evidence on this point. The record evidence suggests that CSU continued its expansion plans despite Xerox's filing of its infringement counterclaims. The court accordingly finds that CSU has presented insufficient evidence to establish that it took any actions in reliance on Xerox's silence. For each of the above reasons, the court grants summary [*1487] judgment in favor of Xerox on CSU's estoppel defense.

E. Laches

HN12 [↑] A successful laches defense bars damages only for conduct occurring prior to the filing of the lawsuit. See Adelberg, 921 F.2d at 1270 ("defense of laches bars the recovery of damages for any patent infringement occurring prior to the filing of the lawsuit"); A.C. Aukerman, 960 F.2d at 1041 ("laches bars damages for a patent defendant's pre-filing infringement but not for post-filing damages [**26] or injunctive relief"); Leinoff v. Louis Milona & Sons, Inc., 726 F.2d 734, 741 (Fed. Cir. 1984) (laches has "no effect on an action for post-filing damages or an injunction"). CSU contends that the laches doctrine is a defense to all damages and injunctive relief except for post-filing injunctive relief. Neither authority cited by CSU supports the proposition that post-filing damages are precluded by a successful laches defense. See Union Shipbuilding Co. v. Boston Iron & Metal Co., 17 F. Supp. 318 (D. Md.), aff'd, 93 F.3d 781 (4th Cir. 1996); Rajah Auto Supply Co. v. Belvidere Screw & Machine Co., 275 F. 761, 764 (7th Cir. 1921). In this case, Xerox seeks only damages accruing after the filing of its patent infringement counterclaims. Thus, CSU's defense of laches fails as a matter of law.

F. Statute Of Limitations.

Xerox originally moved for summary judgment on CSU's statute of limitations defense to Xerox's patent infringement counterclaims. CSU did not respond to Xerox's contentions. Xerox seeks only prospective relief for its patent infringement counterclaims and, therefore, the statute of limitations is not a bar to its claims. CSU's statute of limitations [**27] defense is invalid as a matter of law.

For the above reasons, the court grants summary judgment in favor of Xerox on its patent infringement counterclaim with respect to the seven parts identified in the court's March 19, 1997, memorandum and order. The only remaining issues on Xerox's patent infringement counterclaim, with respect to the seven patented parts previously referenced, are whether CSU willfully infringed Xerox's patents and the amount of damages.

II. Xerox's Renewed Notion For Summary Judgment On CSU's Antitrust Claims.

HN13↑ To establish monopolization under section 2 of the Sherman Act, CSU must prove that (1) Xerox possessed monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) Xerox willfully acquired or maintained that monopoly power "as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 480, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992) ("Kodak") (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966)). For purposes of this motion only, Xerox does not contest that it has monopoly [**28] power in the relevant parts and service markets. The disputed issues arise over whether Xerox's actions satisfy the conduct element of a section 2 claim. In particular, Xerox challenges the court's previous rulings that an antitrust claim may be based on (1) Xerox's refusal to sell patented products and (2) Xerox's pricing strategies relating to its patented products.<sup>3</sup>

A. Refusal To Sell Patented Products As An Antitrust Violation.

Xerox requests reconsideration or certification of the court's ruling that Xerox's refusal to sell its patented products may constitute an antitrust violation. This court in effect defined the scope of a patent holder's right to license or use its invention by the relevant antitrust market. This court's previously announced rule would limit a patent [**29] holder from using its patent to lawfully acquire a monopoly in more than one antitrust market. The court's ruling was based on CSU's evidence that Xerox leveraged its [*1488] monopoly power in the parts market to maintain or acquire its monopoly in the service market. Although CSU may have sufficient other evidence to support such a leveraging theory, the court finds now that Xerox's unilateral refusal to sell or license its patented parts cannot constitute patent misuse or unlawful exclusionary conduct under the antitrust laws.

HN14↑ The patent statute allows a patent holder to exclude others from manufacturing, selling, or using his inventions. 35 U.S.C. § 154. HN15↑ The patent statute also provides that "no patent owner otherwise entitled to relief for infringement . . . of a patent shall be denied relief or deemed guilty of misuse or illegal extension of the patent right by reason of his . . . refusal to license or use any rights to the patent." 35 U.S.C. § 271(d)(4) (emphasis added). HN16↑ "The heart of (the patentee's) legal monopoly is the right to invoke the State's power to prevent others from utilizing his discovery without his consent." SCM Corp. v. Xerox Corp., 645 F.2d 1195, 1206 (2d Cir. [**30] 1981) (quoting Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 135, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 (1969)), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1016 (1982); see United States v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 648 F.2d 642, 647 (9th Cir. 1981) (right to exclude others is the essence of the patent monopoly). Of course, a patent holder cannot use his patent to justify anticompetitive conduct beyond the limit or scope of the patent grant. See Zenith.

---

<sup>3</sup>The court notes that CSU's misuse and antitrust allegations regarding Xerox's refusal to sell and high pricing of its patented parts are based on the legal theory prohibiting monopoly leveraging. Kodak, 504 U.S. at 479 n.29.

395 U.S. at 136 ("But there are established limits which the patentee must not exceed in employing the leverage of his patent to control or limit the operations of the licensee."); Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Stiffel Co., 376 U.S. 225, 230, 11 L. Ed. 2d 661, 84 S. Ct. 784 (1964) ("The patent monopoly may not be used in disregard of the antitrust laws."). For example, a patent holder generally cannot grant licenses on the condition that royalties are paid on unpatented products. See, e.g., Zenith, 395 U.S. at 135.

HN17 [↑] There is no prohibition, however, from lawfully using a patent to acquire a monopoly in more than one relevant antitrust market. In other words, a single "patent monopoly" can be used to secure multiple "economic" [**31] monopolies," i.e., monopolies in more than one relevant antitrust market. See Dawson Chem. Co. v. Rohm & Haas Co., 448 U.S. 176, 221, 65 L. Ed. 2d 696, 100 S. Ct. 2601 (1980) ("The boundary of a patent monopoly is to be limited by the literal scope of the patent claims."); American Hoist & Derrick Co. v. Sowa & Sons, Inc., 725 F.2d 1350, 1367 (Fed. Cir.) ("The patent system, which antedated the Sherman Act by a century, is not an 'exception' to the antitrust laws, and patent rights are not legal monopolies in the antitrust sense of that word."), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 821, 83 L. Ed. 2d 41, 105 S. Ct. 95 (1984). If the court held otherwise, then a patent holder rarely could refuse to license his product without fear that he had not properly defined the relevant antitrust market or considered how the relevant market may be defined in the future. For example, if Xerox obtained a patent for a part that could be used in either a copier or a printer, and a jury determined that there were separate antitrust markets for copiers and printers, then Xerox could refuse to license its product in only one of the relevant antitrust markets.<sup>4</sup> We do not think Congress intended such [**32] limited patent protection or to require such perfect foresight by the patent holder in defining the relevant antitrust markets. A patent holder's rights should not fluctuate from day to day based on the changing relevant market definitions. Indeed, several courts have held that HN18 [↑] "where a patent has been lawfully acquired, subsequent conduct permissible under the patent" [*1489] laws cannot trigger any liability under the antitrust laws." SCM, 645 F.2d at 1206; see Miller Insituform, Inc. v. Insituform of North Am., Inc., 830 F.2d 606, 609 (6th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1064, 98 L. Ed. 2d 988, 108 S. Ct. 1023 (1988); Servicetrends, Inc. v. Siemens Medical Sys., Inc., 870 F. Supp. 1042, 1056 (N.D. Ga. 1994); see also Simpson v. Union Oil Co. of Cal., 377 U.S. 13, 24, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964) ("The patent laws which give a 17-year monopoly on 'making, using or selling the invention' are in pari materia with the antitrust laws and modify them pro tanto."); Data Gen. Corp. v. Grumman Sys. Support Corp., 36 F.3d 1147, 1187 (1st Cir. 1994) (recognizing, as part of copyright analysis, that section 271 of the patent statute may preclude all antitrust [**33] claims and counterclaims premised on a refusal to license a patent). Thus, a patent holder "retains the power to exclude others from manufacturing, using, and selling his inventions without running afoul of the antitrust laws." Miller, 830 F.2d at 609; see SCM, 645 F.2d at 1209.

[**34] CSU argues that a patent holder's unilateral refusal to sell is not legal when the patent holder exercises this right to extend its monopoly into another relevant antitrust market. Although a patent holder perhaps extends his "economic power" by this conduct, he has not expanded the scope of the patented "invention."<sup>5</sup> [**36] Indeed, HN19 [↑] the patent statute states that the unilateral refusal to license or use a patent shall not constitute misuse and shall not be deemed an "illegal extension of the patent right." 35 U.S.C. § 271(d)(4). The fact that Xerox has attempted to secure the full benefit of its "patent monopoly" by entering more than one market does not raise any antitrust concerns which have not already been considered and balanced by Congress in enacting the patent

<sup>4</sup> In addition, difficulties could arise if the relevant market definitions change over time. For example, the relevant market may include both parts and service at the time a patent holder researches and creates an invention for a copier part. A patent holder certainly would undertake his research with the expectation that he could exclude others from use of the invention in the relevant market which includes parts and service. If the relevant market changed after the patent holder marketed his invention so that parts and service became separate markets, then the patent holder's right to exclude would be severely diminished. In fact, the patent holder's right to exclude would be practically meaningless if the patent holder wanted to continue to compete in both markets.

<sup>5</sup> As Xerox correctly notes, "no patent states that it confers a monopoly in any relevant [antitrust] market. A patent only defines the invention. Because each use of that invention may be prevented by [the patent holder], the patent may have some anticompetitive effect in each market in which it is used [or not used]."

statute.<sup>6</sup> The Sixth Circuit has rejected the theory that a patent holder cannot realize the full value of its invention by entering more than one relevant antitrust market. See Miller, supra. The Sixth Circuit stated that apparently, appellants' point is that assuming both the position of licensor and of competitor with its licensees renders INA potentially liable for antitrust violations. INA has recognized [**35] this theory of appellants as charging "vertical integration," but persuasively argues that this theory is inapplicable to a patent monopolist. We agree. There is no adverse effect on competition since, as a patent monopolist, INA, from the start, had exclusive right to manufacture, use, and sell his invention.

Miller, 830 F.2d at 609; see Servicetrends, 870 F. Supp. at 1056 ("Although the Court need not decide the issue here, it appears that defendant is entitled to a so-called monopoly in the repair of its shocktube replacement part--a monopoly power that is inherent in its right to sell or refuse to sell the patented components."), amended on reconsideration, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15997, 1994 WL 776878 (N.D. Ga. Jun. 24, 1994) (finding as a factual matter that the individual component parts of the shocktube were not patented).

CSU's reliance (and this court's previous reliance) on the Supreme Court's statement in Kodak is misplaced. In Kodak, the Court stated that it "has held many times that power gained through some natural and legal advantage such as a patent, copyright, or business acumen can give rise to [antitrust] liability if 'a seller exploits his dominant position in one market to expand his empire into the next [market].'" Kodak, 504 U.S. at 479 n.29 (quoting Times-Picayune Publ'g Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 611, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. [**37] Ct. 872 (1953)). The Court's statement simply is not applicable where a patent holder, exercising [*1490] his unilateral right to refuse to license or use his invention, acquires a monopoly in two separate relevant antitrust markets. There is no unlawful leveraging of monopoly power when a patent holder merely exercises its rights inherent in the patent grant. In other words, Xerox did not exploit its dominant position in the parts market to obtain a monopoly in the service market. Rather, Xerox exploited its lawful patent to obtain a monopoly in both the parts and service markets. Xerox's power and right to exclude ISOs from the service market arose from its patented invention, not from its position in the parts market.

This court finds the Supreme Court's statement in Kodak inapplicable for other reasons as well. First, Kodak's refusal to sell patented parts was not at issue in the decision. The Supreme Court referred to patents only once to illustrate a method of lawfully acquiring monopoly power. We find nothing in Kodak which addresses the issue of whether a single patent can give its holder a monopoly in more than one antitrust market. Second, the statement in [**38] Kodak, as evidenced by the cases cited by the Court, applied to concerted and contractual activity and was in the context of a tying claim. See Data General, 36 F.3d at 1185-86 n.63 (citing footnote 29 of Kodak for the proposition that concerted or contractual behavior is prohibited and not even referring to the same footnote when addressing whether a copyright holder's unilateral refusal to sell its copyrighted products is lawful). In contrast, Xerox has unilaterally refused to sell its patented parts.<sup>7</sup>

CSU complains primarily because Xerox achieved too much success by exercising its rights inherent in the patent grant. Of course, [**39] HN20[] a patent holder can continue "to exercise his patent's exclusionary power even after achieving commercial success; to allow the imposition of treble damages based on what a reviewing court might later consider, with the benefit of hindsight, to be too much success would seriously threaten the integrity of the patent system." SCM, 645 F.2d at 1206. The court believes that the result should be no different whether a patent holder's success (achieved by conduct expressly sanctioned by the patent statute) impacts one or more relevant antitrust markets. See Miller, 830 F.2d at 609.

<sup>6</sup> Courts also have struck the same balance between the patent and antitrust laws. See, e.g., SCM, 645 F.2d at 1205-06. Under CSU's interpretation of Kodak, inventors would have very little incentive to develop products useful in more than one relevant antitrust market because they could not exclude competitors in more than one market (assuming the patent holder competes in both markets). To preclude patent holders from realizing the full value of their inventions by unilaterally excluding others seems to stand the patent law on its head.

<sup>7</sup> CSU also fails to explain why the court should assume that Xerox's monopoly over the parts market was created first and then used as leverage to gain a monopoly over the service market. It appears that Xerox's monopoly in both markets may have been created simultaneously. In any event, it was Xerox's refusal to license its patented parts that created both monopolies.

For the above reasons, the court grants partial summary judgment in favor of Xerox on CSU's antitrust claims. Xerox's unilateral refusal to sell or license its patented parts cannot give rise to antitrust liability. The court's ruling does not preclude a finding of antitrust liability against Xerox based on CSU's other allegations of exclusionary conduct.<sup>8</sup>

[**40] B. Pricing Of Products As An Antitrust Violation.

Xerox also seeks reconsideration or certification of the court's ruling that Xerox's pricing of its patented products at an unreasonably high price or in a discriminatory manner can constitute an antitrust violation. The court essentially has resolved the first issue by finding that Xerox's exercise of its unilateral right to refuse to sell or license its patented products cannot constitute an antitrust violation. HN21 [↑] A demand for a price which is "so high as to preclude acceptance of a license offer is, after all, not appreciably different from a refusal to license upon any terms." W. L. Gore & Assocs. v. Carlisle Corp., 529 F.2d 614, 623 \(3d Cir. 1976\). Thus, if Xerox could lawfully refuse to sell its patented parts, it certainly could price its parts at a price as high as it sees fit. See Brulotte v. Thys Co., 379 U.S. 29, 33, 13 L. Ed. 2d 99, 85 S. Ct. 176 \(1964\) HN22 [↑] ("A patent empowers the owner to exact royalties as high as he can negotiate with the leverage of that monopoly.").

[*1491] CSU also claims that Xerox charged higher prices to self-servicers (customers who self service their copiers and printers) than ISOs. Of course, [*41] inherent in Xerox's patent grant is the right to license its product to some and not to others. Westinghouse, 648 F.2d at 647 HN23 [↑] ("The right to license that patent, exclusively or otherwise, or to refuse to license at all is 'the untrammeled right' of the patentee.") (citation omitted). Thus, Xerox has the right to price its patented products at different prices to different customers. See USM Corp. v. SPS Technologies, Inc., 694 F.2d 505, 512-13 \(7th Cir. 1982\) (criticizing shrimp peeler cases and finding that HN24 [↑] "there is no antitrust prohibition against a patent owner's using price discrimination to maximize his income from the patent"), cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1107, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1334, 103 S. Ct. 2455 (1983); Westinghouse, 648 F.2d at 647. CSU has not pointed to any authority holding that a patent holder cannot charge different prices to customers for a patented product.<sup>9</sup>

[**42] For the above reasons, the court finds that Xerox's pricing of its patented parts cannot constitute exclusionary conduct under the antitrust laws.

III. Xerox's Motion For Reconsideration Of The Court's Copyright Summary Judgment Order.

Xerox seeks reconsideration of this court's order denying Xerox summary judgment on its copyright infringement counterclaims. Xerox claims that CSU has not provided any evidence to establish any misuse by Xerox pertaining to its copyrighted manuals. Although Xerox previously did not distinguish plaintiff's evidence regarding diagnostic software from manuals, the court finds no record evidence establishing that Xerox charged an unreasonable or even a high price for its operator and service manuals after Xerox resumed sale of its manuals in 1994. of course, CSU has presented evidence that Xerox refused to sell operator and service manuals prior to April 1994.

<sup>8</sup> Among these other allegations, CSU claims that Xerox refused to sell unpatented parts to ISOs, implemented burdensome procedures for customers ordering parts, threatened to impose enormous costs for customers switching service between ISOs and Xerox, and cut service prices in an effort to eliminate ISO competition.

<sup>9</sup> Even if price discrimination by a patent holder could be illegal under the antitrust laws, the court doubts that the evidence presented by CSU in opposition to Xerox's summary judgment motion is sufficient. CSU's only evidence of price discrimination is a contract between the Navy and Xerox which does not appear to be comparable to a contract between CSU and Xerox. In addition, the R&D settlement specifically prohibited Xerox from charging its self-servicers a lower price than ISOs.

The same principles under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine discussed earlier apply equally to CSU's claim that the filing of Xerox's copyright infringement counterclaims constitutes misuse. CSU has failed to establish that Xerox's counterclaims are objectively meritless. The court issued [**43] a preliminary injunction with respect to these copyright claims and has granted summary judgment in favor of Xerox on a large portion of its claims. CSU, therefore, is barred from asserting that the filing of Xerox's copyright infringement counterclaims can constitute misuse.

For the above reasons, the court grants summary judgment in favor of Xerox on CSU's misuse defense with respect to copyrighted manuals for the time period after April 1994.<sup>10</sup>

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that defendant's motion for reconsideration of the order denying summary judgment on copyright infringement (Doc. # 581) is granted in part and denied in part as discussed above.

IT IS FURTHER [**44] ORDERED that defendant's motion for reconsideration or certification pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) of the order denying summary judgment on patent infringement and antitrust claims (Doc. # 583) is granted in part and denied in part.

Dated this 8th day of April, 1997, at Kansas City, Kansas.

EARL E. O'CONNOR

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

---

<sup>10</sup> CSU filed a motion for discovery sanctions against Xerox on March 13, 1997. CSU claims that Xerox should be estopped from denying CSU's laches and statute of limitations defenses because of Xerox's discovery conduct. The court accordingly will defer consideration of the merits of these defenses until CSU's pending motion for sanctions is decided.

Wichita Clinic, P.A. v. Columbia/HCA Healthcare Corp.

United States District Court for the District of Kansas

April 8, 1997, Decided ; April 8, 1997, FILED

No. 96-1336-JTM

Reporter

1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5881 *; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,829

WICHITA CLINIC, P.A., Plaintiff, vs. COLUMBIA/HCA HEALTHCARE CORPORATION; and HCA HEALTH SERVICES OF KANSAS, INC., Defendants.

Disposition: [*1] Defendant's motion to dismiss (Dkt. No. 4) denied.

Core Terms

---

Clinic, market share, monopolization, monopoly, competitor's, hiring, anticompetitive conduct, anti trust law, monopoly power, antitrust, parties, physician's services, unfair competition, monopolistic, negotiations, probability, employees, markets, hospital service, antitrust claim, trade secret, alleges, complaint alleges, misappropriation, anticompetitive, confidentiality, courts, cases, letter of intent, Sherman Act

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN1[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

Under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, it is illegal for any person to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce. This section addresses either unilateral or joint action by a defendant. In contrast, § 1 of the Sherman Act focuses only on collusive or conspiratorial anticompetitive conduct between two or more parties. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. In order to prevail on a § 2 claim, plaintiff must show (1) relevant geographic and product markets; (2) specific intent to monopolize; (3) anticompetitive conduct in furtherance of an attempt to monopolize; and (4) a dangerous probability of success.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN2 Private Actions, Standing

The Sherman Act does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors. Where the injury alleged is so integral an aspect of the conspiracy alleged, there can be no question but that the loss was precisely the type of loss that the claimed violations would be likely to cause.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 Private Actions, Standing

A series of factors are relevant to the determination of standing under the Sherman Act, including the causal connection between the antitrust violations and plaintiff's injury; the defendant's intent; the nature of the plaintiff's injury; the directness or indirectness of the connection between the plaintiff's injury and the allegedly unlawful market restraint; the speculativeness of the plaintiff's damages; and the risk of duplicative recoveries or the danger of complex apportionment of damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN4 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The validity of a market is generally a fact question for the jury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN5 Actual Monopolization, Claims

Under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, a single firm's conduct is actionable only if it threatens actual monopolization of a market. The Sherman Act does not address all forms of unseemly business activity. If a party does not have monopolistic control over a market, its unfair business conduct implicates the attempt provision of the antitrust laws only if that conduct threatens to create a monopoly. The plaintiff must show that there was a dangerous probability the defendant would achieve monopoly status as the result of the predatory conduct alleged by the plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN6 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

The probability of a defendant successfully monopolizing a given market is typically evaluated by examining the defendant's share of the relevant market. Reformulated in terms of market share, the plaintiff must show that there was as dangerous probability that the defendant's conduct would propel it from a non-monopolistic share of the market to a share that would be large enough to constitute a monopoly for purposes of the monopolistic offense. The higher the firm's initial market share, the greater the likelihood that it will eventually gain monopolistic control over the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A high market share indicates that the defendant has the economic capacity to monopolize the market. However, while market share is relevant to the determination of the probable success of the attempted monopolization, market share by itself is insufficient to demonstrate market power. Proximity to monopolistic status is not enough; the defendant must also have the ability to propel itself to monopolistic control over the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN8 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Because market share statistics sometimes overestimate a firm's market power, the court must also consider the firm's capacity to commit the offense, the scope of its objective, and the character of its conduct. Factors relevant to determining dangerous probability include, but are not limited to, a defendant's market share, whether the defendant is a multimarket firm, the number and strength of other competitors, market trends, and entry barriers. Also relevant is the persistence of a firm's ability to profitably charge monopoly prices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN9 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Market share percentages may give rise to presumptions, but will rarely conclusively establish or eliminate market or monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN10 [L] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Both the size of the defendant's market share and the time it took to acquire it are factors to consider in determining a dangerous probability of successful monopolization.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11 [L] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

A violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, occurs only if the anticompetitive conduct also creates a dangerous probability a monopoly will be created in the secondary market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN12 [L] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, is conduct constituting an abnormal response to market opportunities. Predatory practices are illegal if they impair opportunities of rivals and are not competition on the merits or are more restrictive than reasonably necessary for such competition, if the conduct appears reasonably capable of contributing significantly to creating or maintaining monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN13 [L] Remedies, Damages

In order to show anticompetitive conduct, the plaintiff must show that an attempted monopolist's conduct threatened to create substantial and persistent changes in the marketplace may allow some unfair and potentially harmful methods of competition to go unpunished by the antitrust laws. But the antitrust laws are enacted for the protection of competition not competitors. The Sherman Act does not purport to afford remedies for all torts committed by or against persons engaged in interstate commerce. The triple damage sanction of the Clayton Act is too harsh a remedy for unfair methods of competition that only threaten to have a transitory impact on the market place.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN14 [ ] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Any anticompetitive effect must be of a lasting nature. The antitrust court must, therefore, insist on significant and more-than-temporary harmful effects on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Torts > Procedural Matters > Commencement & Prosecution > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN15 [ ] Sherman Act, Claims

Business torts by themselves and without proof of anticompetitive effect are insufficient to support a claim under the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > Definition of Employees

HN16 [ ] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

The hiring of a competitor's employees is anticompetitive within the meaning of the Sherman Act only where the talent is hired not to use it but to deny it to possible rivals.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Misappropriation

Trade Secrets Law > Civil Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > Unfair Competition

HN17 [ ] Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse, Misappropriation

Under Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-3326, the statutory protection against trade secret misappropriation expressly does not affect contractual remedies, whether or not based upon misappropriation of a trade secret.

Counsel: PLAINTIFF COUNSEL: Patrick J. Stueve, of Stinson, Mag & Fizzell, Kansas City, MO, Roger D. Stanton, of Stinson, Mag & Fizzell, Overland Park, KS.

DEFENSE COUNSEL: J. Eugene Balloun and David A. Rameden, of Shook, Hardy & Bacon, Overland Park, KS. Joe Rebein and Todd W. Ruskamp, of Shook, Hardy & Bacon, Kansas City, MO.

Judges: J. THOMAS MARTEN, JUDGE

Opinion by: J. THOMAS MARTEN

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

The present case arises from unsuccessful negotiations between plaintiff Wichita Clinic and defendants Columbia/HCA Healthcare Corporation and HCA Health Services of Kansas, Inc.<sup>1</sup> These negotiations were directed at creating an "integrated health care delivery system" in the Wichita/Sedgwick County area. Columbia operates Wesley Hospital, allegedly the largest hospital in the area. Wichita Clinic is the largest provider of primary physician care services in the same market. After the failure of negotiations, Columbia entered the physician services market directly, hiring a number of physicians from Wichita Clinic.

[*2] Wichita Clinic contends Columbia undertook these actions with the intent to monopolize health care services in the Wichita/Sedgwick County area and with the intent to drive it out of business. The clinic contends Columbia was able to take these actions by disclosing and misusing confidential information acquired during the course of negotiations. In addition to its claim of attempted monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, the clinic raises six state law claims: (1) tortious interference with contract; (2) tortious interference with business relations; (3) misappropriation of trade secrets in violation of K.S.A. 60-3320; (4) common law unfair competition; (5) breach of contract; and (6) fraud.

Columbia's pending motion to dismiss focuses primarily on the clinic's antitrust claim. HN1 Under Section 2, it is illegal for any person to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce." This section addresses either unilateral or joint action by a defendant. In contrast, Section 1 of the Sherman Act focuses only on collusive or conspiratorial anticompetitive conduct between two or more [*3] parties. 15 U.S.C. § 1.

In order to prevail on a Section 2 claim, plaintiff "must show (1) relevant geographic and product markets; (2) specific intent to monopolize; (3) anticompetitive conduct in furtherance of an attempt to monopolize; and (4) a dangerous probability of success." Multistate Legal Studies, Inc. v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal & Prof'l Public'n's, 63 F.3d 1540, 1550 (10th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 133 L. Ed. 2d 659, 116 S. Ct. 702 (1996). See also TV Comm. Network v. Turner Network Tel., 964 F.2d 1022, 1025 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 999, 121 L. Ed. 2d 537, 113 S. Ct. 601 (1992).

A. Standing

Columbia challenges Wichita Clinic's standing to present a claim of monopoly in the hospital services market based on a series of cases generally holding suppliers or distributors do not have standing to raise an antitrust complaint challenging defendant's conduct in a separate market. See, e.g., G.K.A. Beverage Corp. v. Honickman, 55 F.3d

---

<sup>1</sup> For convenience, the defendants will be identified herein as "Columbia."

762, 766 (2nd Cir. 1995); SAS of Puerto Rico v. Puerto Rico Tel. Co., 48 F.3d 39, 42 (1st Cir. 1995); Volasco Products v. Lloyd A. Fry Roofing, 308 F.2d 383 (6th Cir. 1962), cert. denied, 372 U.S. 907, 9 L. Ed. 2d 717, 83 S. Ct. 721 (1963).

Although Columbia's argument might otherwise appear to have some merit, as Wichita Clinic is not a hospital nor does it provide hospital services, controlling precedent prevents the court from dismissing the action for lack of standing. In Reazin v. Blue Cross, 899 F.2d 951 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 497 U.S. 1005, 111 L. Ed. 2d 752, 110 S. Ct. 3241 (1990), Blue Cross challenged Wesley's standing to bring the antitrust claim, since it was neither a consumer nor a competitor in the market of health care financing. The Tenth Circuit rejected this argument, after first noting the Supreme Court has specifically noted that HN2[<sup>1</sup>] "the statute does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors . . ." [Blue Shield v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540,] 472, 102 S. Ct. [2540,] 2544 (quoting Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 236, 68 S. Ct. 996, 1006, 92 L. Ed. 1328 (1948)). "Where the injury alleged is so integral an aspect of the conspiracy alleged, there can be no question but that the loss was precisely 'the type of loss' [*5] that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause." McCready, 457 U.S. at 479, 102 S. Ct. at 2548 (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, 429 U.S. [477,] 489, 97 S. Ct. [690,] at 697 [(1977)].

Reazin, 899 F.2d at 962.

The Reazin court explained that while Wesley was not a "direct participant" in health care financing, it was nonetheless a perceived competitor of Blue Cross, and the district court had expressly found it was this perception which motivated Blue Cross's conduct. "In any event," the Tenth Circuit concluded, "Wesley's claimed injuries were an 'integral aspect' of the conspiracy to restrain trade in the health care financing market. Indeed, Wesley was the direct victim of Blue Cross' actions." Id. at 963. Although this section of the opinion addresses Wesley's Section 1 conspiracy claim, the court indicated this same conclusion would apply to create standing for Wesley's Section 2 attempted monopoly claim. Id. at 973.

In a note, the Tenth Circuit summarized HN3[<sup>1</sup>] a series of factors relevant to the determination of standing, including the causal connection between the antitrust violations and plaintiff's injury; [*6] the defendant's intent; the nature of the plaintiff's injury; the directness or indirectness of the connection between the plaintiff's injury and the allegedly unlawful market restraint; the speculativeness of the plaintiff's damages; and the "risk of duplicative recoveries . . . or the danger of complex apportionment of damages."

Reazin, 899 F.2d at 962 n.15 (quoting Associated Gen'l Contractors v. California St. Coun. of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 544, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983)).

Here, the complaint alleges a direct causal connection between Columbia's conduct and the alleged injuries to the Wichita Clinic. The complaint alleges antitrust injury through damage to Wichita Clinic's market, and alleges the conduct reflects a specific intent to monopolize and damage Wichita Clinic. There has been no showing that a finding of standing will interfere with antitrust policy, create a risk of duplicate recoveries, or pose a risk of complicated apportionment. As a result, the court holds the clinic has standing to pursue its antitrust claim.

B. Relevant Geographic and Product Markets

There is a great deal of confusion in the complaint about which specific [*7] product markets and which geographic area Wichita Clinic contends Columbia has attempted to monopolize. In its response, the clinic narrows its claims down to "hospital services" market and "physician services" market alternatively in either the Wichita or Sedgwick County area. The court finds this is sufficient, since HN4[<sup>1</sup>] the validity of a market is generally a fact question for the jury. Syufy Enterprises v. American Multicinema, 793 F.2d 990, 994 (9th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1031, 93 L. Ed. 2d 830, 107 S. Ct. 876 (1987).

Although there are fleeting references throughout the complaint to other potentially applicable markets, e.g., managed health care services, the only markets expressly discussed by Wichita Clinic in its response to the motion to dismiss are the hospital and physician services market. Plaintiff has not attempted to support its suggestion that other markets might be implicated. Accordingly, the court will narrow the action by dismissing the complaint to the extent it would suggest the attempted monopolization of other, unclearly described markets. Further, the court will grant the motion to dismiss to the extent it seeks to premise a recovery on any [*8] market other than the hospital or physician services market in the Wichita/Sedgwick County area.

C. Dangerous Probability of Success

HN5 [↑] Under Section 2, a single firm's conduct is actionable only if it threatens actual monopolization of a market. *Spectrum Sports Inc. v. McQuillan*, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 255-256, 113 S. Ct. 884 \(1993\). The Sherman Act does not address "all forms of unseemly business activity. If a party does not have monopolistic control over a market, its unfair business conduct implicates the attempt provision of the antitrust laws only if that conduct threatens to create a monopoly." *Colorado Interstate Gas v. Natural Gas Pipeline*, 885 F.2d 683, 693 \(10th Cir. 1989\) (citing *Indiana Grocery v. Super Valu Stores*, 864 F.2d 1409, 1413 \(7th Cir. 1989\)). "The plaintiff must show that there was a dangerous probability the defendant would achieve monopoly status as the result of the predatory conduct alleged by the plaintiff." *Colorado Interstate Gas*, 885 F.2d at 693 (citing *Shoppin' Bag of Pueblo v. Dillon Co.*, 783 F.2d 159, 162 \(10th Cir. 1986\).

HN6 [↑] The probability of a defendant successfully monopolizing a given market is typically [*9] evaluated by examining the defendant's share of the relevant market. *Shoppin' Bag*, 783 F.2d at 161. Reformulated in terms of market share, the plaintiff must show that there was as dangerous probability that the defendant's conduct would propel it from a non-monopolistic share of the market to a share that would be large enough to constitute a monopoly for purposes of the monopolistic offense. The higher the firm's initial market share, the greater the likelihood that it will eventually gain monopolistic control over the market. *Id. at 162*.

*Colorado Interstate Gas*, 885 F.2d at 694.

HN7 [↑] A "high market share indicates that the defendant has the economic capacity to monopolize the market." *Id.* (citing *Shoppin' Bag at 162*). However, while market share is relevant to the determination of the probable success of the attempted monopolization, market share by itself is insufficient to demonstrate market power. *Reazin*, 899 F.2d at 967. "Proximity to monopolistic status is not enough; the defendant must also have the ability to propel itself to monopolistic control over the market." *Colorado Interstate Gas*, 885 F.2d at 694 (citations omitted).

Thus, HN8 [↑] because [*10] "market share statistics sometimes overestimate a firm's market power," *Id. at 695*, the court must also consider "the firm's capacity to commit the offense, the scope of its objective, and the character of its conduct." *Id. at 694*. "Factors relevant to determining dangerous probability include, but are not limited to, a defendant's market share, whether the defendant is a multimarket firm, the number and strength of other competitors, market trends, and entry barriers. *Multistate Legal Studies*, 63 F.3d at 1554 (citations omitted). Also relevant is the "persistence of a firm's ability to profitably charge monopoly prices." *Colorado Interstate Gas*, 885 F.2d at 695.

In *Colorado Interstate Gas*, the court stated: "While the Supreme Court has refused to specify a minimum market share necessary to indicate a defendant has monopoly power, lower courts generally require a minimum market share of between 70% and 80%. *Colorado Interstate Gas*, 885 F.2d at 694 n. 18 (citing 2 E. Kinter, *Federal Antitrust Law* § 12.6 (1980); Areeda & Turner, *Antitrust Law* P 803 [(1978)])".

Plaintiff relies in particular on the Tenth Circuit's decision in *Multistate Legal Studies* [*11] to establish standards for determining if Columbia has a "dangerous probability" of achieving monopoly status. In that case, the court stated: "Because we are talking about probabilities, it is not necessary for a defendant to already possess monopoly power in the target market; indeed, if it did, the offense would be monopolization, not attempt." *63 F.3d at 1554*. The court recognized the higher the market share, the greater the chances of eventual monopolization. Id. (citing Colorado Interstate Gas, 885 F.2d at 694). However, the court also stated, "No specific minimum market share is universally accepted." Id.

Wichita Clinic places an exuberant, probably overly expansive reading on this comment interpreting it to mean "there is no minimum share in the target market required for an attempted monopolization claim." (Pltf.'s Response at 26.) This is not what the Tenth Circuit said in Multistate Legal Studies; it said no specific minimum market share was "universally accepted," not that the courts imposed no minimum market share. As noted earlier, the Tenth Circuit noted in Colorado Interstate Gas that "lower courts generally require a minimum market share of between [*12] 70% and 80%."

Moreover, the comment in Multistate Legal Studies appears to be dicta. Immediately after its comment that no minimum market share is universally accepted, the court proceeded to state that the defendants had stipulated they had monopoly power in the full-service bar review market. The defendants were accused of leveraging this acknowledged monopoly to dominate the supplemental workshop. The defendants' share of this market rose from 2% to 70% of the market within a single year, while the plaintiff's share of the supplemental market dropped from 84% to 23% within the same time period.

However, the Multistate Legal Studies court does cite to two decisions in which claims were permitted to proceed even though the defendant had half or less of a particular market. See Fiberglass Insulators, Inc. v. Dupuy, 1986-2 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P67,316, No. 84-1244-1, 1986 WL 13356 (D.S.C. Sept. 30, 1986), denying summary judgment in a Section 2 claim where the defendant's share of the market increased from 5% to 51% in four years; and Indiana Grocery v. Super Valu Stores, 647 F. Supp. 254, 258 \(S.D. Ind. 1986\), where the trial court refused to dismiss an attempted monopolization claim which alleged [*13] that defendant used its extensive resources to enter a new market and obtain a 15% share within 18 months.

The most important case on the issue, and a stronger one for plaintiff's argument, is the Tenth Circuit's discussion in the antitrust action between Wesley Hospital and Blue Cross, Reazin v. Blue Cross, supra. In Reazin, the court noted the disagreement among the courts about the market share level and the evidentiary impact of that level in establishing an antitrust violation. "Courts have not completely agreed on whether a particular market share should be given conclusive or merely presumptive effect in determining market or monopoly power, or whether market share is only a starting point in the inquiry into market or monopoly power." Reazin, 899 F.2d at 967. After citing various cases setting different standards, the Reazin court also noted the comment in Colorado Interstate Gas that lower courts normally required a showing of 70-80% market share. Dismissing this comment as "dicta," the court stated:

We do not view Colorado Interstate Gas as establishing a firm market share percentage required before a finding of monopoly power can ever be [*14] sustained. We prefer the view that HNG[] market share percentages may give rise to presumptions, but will rarely conclusively establish or eliminate market or monopoly power.

Id. at 967-68.

In its reply, Columbia refers to a general "50% market threshold" which a plaintiff must demonstrate to show an antitrust violation. While there are certainly a number of decisions which have held the plaintiff failed to demonstrate a dangerous probability of success where the defendant had less than half a relevant market, e.g., Arthur S. Langenderfer, Inc. v. S.E. Johnson Co., 917 F.2d 1413, 1432 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 808, 116 L. Ed. 2d 29, 112 S. Ct. 51 (1990), there are also, as noted in Reazin, cases supporting a finding of a likelihood of monopoly even though the defendant has much less than half the market.

In the present case, as noted earlier, Wichita Clinic has identified two relevant markets as the grounds for finding a dangerous probability of success in monopolization. First, there is the market for hospital services. Second, there is the market for physician services.

The complaint is not a model of antitrust pleading. The court has cobbled together [*15] various comments made throughout the document to glean facts to support the antitrust claim. Read together, however, and extending to plaintiff the benefit of every inference, it is sufficient to set forth a claim under Section 2. The complaint alleges that "Wesley is the largest hospital in Wichita as well as in the State of Kansas." (Complaint P 5.) It alleges "there is only one other tertiary care hospital competing with Wesley in the Wichita area." (Id. at P 153.)

With regard to physician services, the complaint alleges Columbia took a "large percentage" of the Wichita Clinic's physicians. (Id.) It alleges Columbia's market strength "is even greater than the market share percentages indicate" because of the small size of other physician groups, which have little or no market power. (Id. at P 154.)

The complaint alleges Columbia enjoys profits twice the industry average (Id. at P 153.) It alleges entry barriers exist which prevent the entry of new competition in the physician and hospital services market. (Id. at PP 153-154.) Finally, the complaint alleges Columbia is "the world's largest hospital corporation" with "approximately $ 17.7 billion in revenues [*16]" in 1995 and net income of $ 961 million. (Id. at P 23.)

Taken together, these allegations allege size (both in terms of hospital market share and Columbia's general economic size), as well as additional economic barriers to entry and potential restraints on competition. As indicated in Multistate Legal Studies, HN10 both the size of the defendant's market share and the time it took to acquire it are factors to consider in determining a dangerous probability of successful monopolization. Here, Columbia's entry in the physician services market has occurred relatively quickly.

There are several alleged facts which place the strength of the plaintiff's claim in doubt, however. The complaint alleges Columbia hired 13 (or 20%) of Wichita Clinic's primary care physicians. If this remains true, Wichita Clinic has retained 80% of its primary care physicians. It may well be that, if anything, Columbia's entry into the primary care physician services market has increased competition, by taking market share away from Wichita Clinic without acquiring a monopoly for itself. Moreover, as discussed below, it is unclear how Columbia's alleged actions threaten competition (as opposed to the [*17] interests of a single competitor) any more than would have the joinder of Columbia and Wichita Clinic, which was the focus of the failed negotiations between the parties. It is not for the court, however, to determine the validity, or lack thereof, of the plaintiff's action at this point. At least in the context of a motion to dismiss, the complaint will survive under the relevant standards governing notice pleading.

One additional matter the court now addresses is the impact of the interconnection between the two markets. The clinic suggests even if Columbia does not have monopoly power in the physician services market, its use of anticompetitive conduct in connection with its monopoly of the hospital services market is sufficient to give rise to an antitrust claim. As the clinic notes (Pltf's. Response at 20 n. 10), there is a split of authority on the issue of whether anticompetitive conduct by a company with monopoly power in one market creates a Section 2 violation, when the conduct is directed against a plaintiff in another market where the defendant has no monopoly. In this court's view, the better rule is HN11 a Section 2 violation occurs only if the anticompetitive conduct also [*18] creates "a dangerous probability a monopoly will be created" in the secondary market. Alaska Airlines v. United Airlines, 948 F.2d 536, 549 (9th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 503 U.S. 977, 118 L. Ed. 2d 316, 112 S. Ct. 1603 (1992).

To support its leveraging argument, Wichita Clinic relies on the Tenth Circuit's decision in Multistate Legal Studies. There, however, plaintiffs claimed the defendants were "leveraging their monopoly power in a second market to gain a new monopoly in the target market." 63 F.3d at 1554 n. 13 (emphasis added). Merely alleging a monopoly in the hospital services market does not absolve the plaintiff from having to prove a dangerous probability of monopoly in the physician services market. However, this issue is not decisive here, since, as noted earlier, Wichita Clinic has standing under Reazin to challenge Columbia for anticompetitive conduct in the hospital services market.

D. Anticompetitive Conduct

The Sherman Act "was not enacted to police interstate transportation, or to afford a remedy for wrongs, which are actionable under state law, and result from combinations and conspiracies which fall short, both in their purpose and effect, [*19] of any form of market control of a commodity." Apex Hosiery v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 512, 84 L.

Ed. 1311, 60 S. Ct. 982 (1940). Accordingly, not all illegal or unfair competition violates the antitrust laws. The Tenth Circuit has stated:

HN12[] Anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct under section 2 is "conduct constituting an abnormal response to market opportunities. Predatory practices are illegal if they impair opportunities of rivals and are not competition on the merits or are more restrictive than reasonably necessary for such competition," if the conduct appears "reasonably capable of contributing significantly to creating or maintaining monopoly power."

Multistate Legal Studies, 63 F.3d at 1550 (quoting but omitting citations from Instructional Sys., 817 F.2d 639 at 649).

Columbia argues the various facts cited by Wichita Clinic constitute, at most, business torts which are not actionable under antitrust law. Columbia cites several cases where acts which may amount to unfair competition have nonetheless been held not to constitute a violation of the antitrust laws, since the acts did not damage competition. Thus, in Craig v. Sun Oil, 515 F.2d 221, 224 (10th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 829, 50 L. Ed. 2d 92, 97 S. Ct. 88 (1976), the court upheld an award of summary judgment against plaintiff's antitrust claim where the complaint "alleges only a business tort, if anything." Columbia also relies upon language in Northwest Power Products v. Omkar Industries, 576 F.2d 83, 89 (5th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1116, 59 L. Ed. 2d 75, 99 S. Ct. 1021 (1979), where the court noted that "there is no federal law of unfair competition" and that "it is the elimination of the competition, by fair means or foul, that is the concern of the antitrust law, and it is only the unfair method on which the law of unfair competition focuses."

The Tenth Circuit also addressed the necessity of showing anticompetitive conduct in Colorado Interstate Gas, 885 F.2d at 697 (footnote omitted). The court recognized the requirement HN13[] the plaintiff must show that an attempted monopolist's conduct threatened to create substantial and persistent changes in the marketplace may allow some unfair and potentially harmful methods of competition to go unpunished by the antitrust laws. But the Supreme Court, in a now oft quoted phrase, has stated [*21] "the antitrust laws . . . were enacted for the 'protection of competition not competitors.'" Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 97 S. Ct. 690, 697, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 1521, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1090, 97 S. Ct. 1099, 51 L. Ed. 2d 535 (1977). The Court has long recognized that the Sherman Act "does not purport to afford remedies for all torts committed by or against persons engaged in interstate commerce." Hunt v. Crumboch, 325 U.S. 821, 826, 65 S. Ct. 1545, 1548, 89 L. Ed. 1954 (1945). We believe the triple damage sanction of the Clayton Act is too harsh a remedy for unfair methods of competition that only threaten to have a transitory impact on the market place.

In the same decision, the court also quoted with approval from Professors Areeda and Turner to the effect that HN14[] any anticompetitive effect must be of a lasting nature:

[We] doubt that the torts and other activities described in this Paragraph would very often seriously impair the competitive opportunities of rivals in any significant or permanent way. We must beware [*22] of the inclination to condemn a monopolist on the basis of antisocial behavior that could possibly give him an improper advantage in the market. . . . The antitrust court must, therefore, insist on . . . significant and more-than-temporary harmful effects on competition.

Colorado Interstate Gas, 885 F.2d at 697 n. 26 (quoting and adding emphasis to Areeda & Turner P 737b).

Ultimately, the cases Columbia cites do not support its contention that ordinary business torts cannot constitute anticompetitive conduct for antitrust purposes. Rather, these cases simply establish that HN15[] business torts by themselves and without proof of anticompetitive effect are insufficient to support a claim under the Sherman Act. For example, Craig ultimately turns on the conclusion the plaintiff failed to demonstrate any impact from the defendant's actions on competition. 515 F.2d at 224. Similarly, in Northwest Power Products, the court upheld dismissal of the action because the plaintiff had failed to show the defendants' actions had "adversely affected competition." 576 F.2d at 90. The defendant had only 25% of the national market and faced a field of eight competitors, one of which [*23] was as large as the defendant. Although the plaintiff pointed to evidence the plaintiff's market share had been reduced as a result of defendant's actions, the court stressed "that argument mistakes competitors for competition." Id. at 91.

Similarly, in Mid-West Underground Storage v. Porter, 717 F.2d 493, 499 \(10th Cir. 1983\), the court held acts of unfair competition do not implicate the antitrust laws where there is "no showing that their conduct raised entry barriers, increased concentration, or otherwise led to the acquisition or exercise of market power."

In the present case, Wichita Clinic raises two potential forms of anticompetitive conduct on the part of Columbia. First, Columbia allegedly hired away from the clinic a number of its physicians. Second, Columbia allegedly misappropriated trade secrets to support its entry into the physician services market.

To the extent these actions occurred, and through their occurrence create a dangerous probability of monopolization, they may support the clinic's antitrust claim. However, the courts have examined more closely claims of anticompetitive hiring than other forms of anticompetitive conduct. The Tenth Circuit has [*24] observed "the hiring of a rival's employees is not ordinarily exclusionary, even when done by a monopolist." Midwest Underground, 717 F.2d at 496 (quoting 3 Areeda & Turner § 828b, at 323 (1978)).<sup>2</sup> Professors Areeda and Turner thus conclude that HN16[↑] the hiring of a competitor's employees is anticompetitive within the meaning of the Sherman Act only where the talent is hired "not to use it but to deny it to possible rivals." 3 Areeda & Turner, P 702b (1978).

This approach, which has found significant support in recent decisions, is grounded [*25] on the policy of supporting the freedom of employees to work where they wish. In International Distribution Centers v. Walsh Trucking, 812 F.2d 786, 795 n. 6 \(2d Cir. 1987\), the Second Circuit observed:

As a general policy matter, one firm's hiring of its competitor's employees does not present a "compelling case for antitrust intervention." 3 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law, P 702b at 109 (1978) (referring to monopolist's hiring of competitor's employees). A contrary analysis might constrict the freedom of employees to reap the full benefits of their abilities by discouraging them from moving to the employer offering the highest compensation, as well as by discouraging employers from bidding on a competitor's employees. Id.

See also Adjusters Replace-A-Car v. Agency Rent-A-Car, 735 F.2d 884, 894 \(5th Cir. 1984\) (concluding the hiring of a competitor's employees who would use their "skills and contacts" to create business for the new employer, even at the expense of the former employer, was not anticompetitive conduct within meaning of Sherman Act).

The Ninth Circuit has adopted a similar rule. In Universal Analytics v. MacNeal-Schwendler Corp., 914 F.2d 1256, 1258 \(9th Cir. 1990\) (per curiam), the court stated:

Unlawful predatory hiring occurs when talent is acquired not for purposes of using that talent but for purposes of denying it to a competitor. Such cases can be proved by showing the hiring was made with such predatory intent, i.e., to harm the competition without helping the monopolist, or by showing a clear nonuse in fact. Absent either of those circumstances, according to Professors Areeda and Turner, employment should not be held exclusionary.

---

<sup>2</sup> The clinic correctly notes there is some support for the conclusion that hiring can be predatory and anticompetitive. Perryton Wholesale v. Pioneer Distrib'ng, 353 F.2d 618 \(10th Cir. 1965\), cert. denied, 383 U.S. 945, 16 L. Ed. 2d 208, 86 S. Ct. 1202 \(1966\). However, as Columbia also correctly notes, the continued validity of the early Perryton decision is questionable. See Military Services Realty v. Realty Consultants, 823 F.2d 829, 831 \(4th Cir. 1987\).

See also Midwest Radio v. Forum Publishing, 942 F.2d 1294 (8th Cir. 1991) (applying rule and holding use of employees hired from competing radio station was not anticompetitive, where the workers were used to improve defendant station's performance in the market, and thus supported by valid business purpose).

In the present case, Wichita Clinic alleges Columbia's hiring of the clinic's physicians, at excessive salaries, was predatory in nature with the purpose of destroying the clinic's business. The court will allow the action to go forward, providing the clinic an opportunity to prove these allegations.

E. State Claims

As noted earlier, Wichita [*27] Clinic has also raised six state claims. In its motion to dismiss, Columbia targets three of these claims (trade secret misappropriation, common law unfair competition, and breach of contract), arguing that even if the antitrust claim is retained, the court should dismiss these elements of the case.

Columbia contends its right to use any confidential information was governed solely by the April 30, 1995 letter of intent. Thus, Columbia argues if its use of confidential information did not violate the letter of intent, its actions were neither breach of contract nor trade secret misappropriation nor unfair competition.

Columbia relies on paragraph 11 of the letter of intent, which provides:

This letter of intent incorporates and extends to April 30, 1995, the provisions as to confidentiality and exclusive dealings contained in the letter between the parties dated , 1994.

Columbia argues that under the terms of this provision, it no longer had an obligation to honor confidential information acquired from Wichita Clinic during the negotiations.

Wichita Clinic, however, cites the underlying August 23, 1994 agreement, which provides:

The parties recognize [*28] the necessity of exchanging information which is confidential or contains business or trade secrets of the disclosing party. In consideration of this agreement, the negotiations hereunder, and the mutual exchange of such information, the parties do hereby agree to refrain from disclosing in any manner the information received from each other to any third party. The parties further agree to keep confidential the existence and nature of the negotiations hereunder and to refrain from any disclosure thereof to third parties.

This agreement of confidentiality between the parties and the information exchanged by them shall survive the ninety-day exclusivity period herein contained, and shall continue in force and effect thereafter.

(Aug. 23, 1994 Agreement at 1-2; emphasis added.)

By its express terms, the 1994 agreement creates two obligations. First, the parties create an exclusive dealings agreement, under which neither party will conduct negotiations with a third party for the development of an integrated health care delivery system. By its terms, the exclusive dealings portion of the agreement was limited in duration, and would be in force for 90 days from the date of the [*29] agreement. Second, the parties agreed to maintain the confidentiality of information acquired during their negotiations. Unlike the exclusive dealings agreement, the confidentiality portion of the agreement is unlimited in scope.

In its reply, Columbia contends that consideration of the earlier 1994 agreement is barred under the parol evidence rule, citing Pizza Management v. Pizza Hut, 1989 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4624, No. 86-1664- C, 1989 WL 46253 (D. Kan. Apr. 14, 1989). The parol evidence rule bars consideration of prior agreements where the parties have subsequently entered into a binding, fully integrated agreement. Columbia's argument fails, however, since paragraph 11 of the letter of intent explicitly "incorporates" the earlier 1994 agreement.

The only reasonable construction of the letter of intent is that the "extension" provided by paragraph 11 applies only to the exclusive dealings portion of the agreement. The confidentiality portion of the agreement, which was already of unlimited duration, would not be affected by such an "extension."

Columbia also argues the court should dismiss the plaintiff's claims for statutory trade secret misappropriation and unfair competition. In this context, Columbia [*30] relies on the principle that "[a] party cannot have a tort duty when the party's same duties and rights are specified by contract."<sup>17</sup> Atchison Casting Corp. v. Dofasco, Inc., 889 F. Supp. 1445, 1461 (D. Kan. 1995) (quoting Nature's Share, Inc. v. Kutter Products, 752 F. Supp. 371, 385 (D. Kan. 1990)).

The court rejects Columbia's argument. <sup>17</sup> Under K.S.A. 60-3326, the statutory protection against trade secret misappropriation expressly "does not affect contractual remedies, whether or not based upon misappropriation of a trade secret." With regard to the unfair competition claim, it does not appear to be duplicative of the contract claim, since it includes the additional allegation that Columbia not only wrongfully disclosed confidential information, but it wrongfully used the information to support its anticompetitive actions as well.

IT IS ACCORDINGLY ORDERED this 8th day of April, 1997, that defendant's motion to dismiss (Dkt. No. 4) is hereby denied.

J. THOMAS MARTEN, JUDGE

---

End of Document